Preface

The two-volume set of the Arkansas Code of 1987 Annotated Court Rules contains rules of practice and procedure currently followed by the state and federal courts of Arkansas. Each set of rules is individually indexed. Rules have been edited for internal typographical consistency, but otherwise appear as promulgated by each court.

Original commentary to the Arkansas Rules of Criminal Procedure was drafted by Deputy Attorney General Frank B. Newell and Assistant Attorney General L. Scott Stafford. The 1987 unofficial supplementary commentary to the Rules of Criminal Procedure was prepared by Mr. Frank B. Newell; the conclusions stated are those of Mr. Newell, and the commentary has not been reviewed or approved by any state agency or court.

In some cases, rules, or their related commentaries, reporter's notes, etc., cite provisions of the obsolete Arkansas Statutes Annotated of 1947. These references can be translated easily by using Tables Volume A of the Code, beginning on page 79.

These volumes contain rules received by LexisNexis through October 6, 2022, for the state courts, the federal district courts, and the United States Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit.

Annotations are based on decisions of state and federal courts construing Arkansas law which will be printed in the following sources:

Rule 103. Rulings on evidence.

Rule 104. Preliminary questions.

Rule 105. Limited admissibility.

Rule 106. Remainder of or related writings or recorded statements.

Rule 101. Scope.

These rules govern proceedings in the courts of this State to the extent and with the exceptions stated in Rule 1101.

Publisher's Notes.

These rules were adopted by the Supreme Court of Arkansas as part of its ruling in Ricarte v. State, 290 Ark. 100, 717 S.W.2d 488 (1986) that the Uniform Rules of Evidence as enacted by Acts 1975 (Extended Sess., 1976), No. 1143, were invalid because they were adopted by an unlawful session of the legislature. An accompanying per curiam of October 13, 1986 read: "As explained in today's opinion in Ricarte v. State, — Ark. —, — S.W.2d — (Oct. , 1986) [290 Ark. 100, 717 S.W.2d 488 (1986)], the court under its statutory and rule-making authority adopts the Uniform Rules of Evidence as they are set forth in Act 1143 of 1975 (Extended Session, 1976). The Rules will be applicable as stated in Rule 1101. Rule 1102 is changed to read: "These rules shall be known as the Arkansas Rules of Evidence and may be cited as A.R.E. Rule —."

Acts 1975 (Extended Sess., 1976), No. 1143, as amended, was reenacted by Acts 1987, No. 876, and is codified as § 16-41-101 [repealed].

CASE NOTES

Adoption.

Under its own rule-making power and under existing statutory authority, the Supreme Court adopted the Uniform Rules of Evidence as the law in this state. Ricarte v. State, 290 Ark. 100, 717 S.W.2d 488 (1986).

Applicability.

The rules of evidence do not apply to revocation hearings. Russell v. State, 25 Ark. App. 181, 753 S.W.2d 298 (1988).

Evidentiary rules with respect to privileges apply to prosecutor's subpoenas as the functional equivalent of grand jury proceedings. Holt v. McCastlain, 357 Ark. 455, 182 S.W.3d 112 (2004).

Where an accident reconstructionist was hired by an attorney representing a driver who was involved in a car accident, the accident reconstruction report and testimony of the accident reconstructionist's employee were confidential, privileged communications that could not be subpoenaed. Holt v. McCastlain, 357 Ark. 455, 182 S.W.3d 112 (2004).

Rule 102. Purpose and construction.

These rules shall be construed to secure fairness in administration, elimination of unjustifiable expense and delay, and promotion of growth and development of the law of evidence, to the end that the truth may be ascertained and proceedings justly determined.

CASE NOTES

Inconsistent Statements.

When a party has made a statement at trial which is inconsistent with a statement made during settlement negotiations, the inference is that one of the statements is knowingly false; in such a situation, the mandate in this rule to interpret the rules so as to foster the values of "fairness" and "truth" requires the court to hold that prior inconsistent statements made in the course of settlement negotiations should be admitted for impeachment purposes. Missouri Pac. R.R. v. Arkansas Sheriff's Boys' Ranch, 280 Ark. 53, 655 S.W.2d 389 (1983).

Unjustifiable Delay.

A trial court is authorized to judiciously ex-

Rule 103. Rulings on evidence.

(a) Effect of Erroneous Ruling. Error may not be predicated upon a ruling which admits or excludes evidence unless a substantial right of the party is affected, and

(1) Objection. In case the ruling is one admitting evidence, a timely objection or motion to strike appears of record, stating the specific ground of objection, if the specific ground was not apparent from the context; or

(2) Offer of proof. In case the ruling is one excluding evidence, the substance of the evidence was made known to the court by offer or was apparent from the context within which questions were asked.

(b) Record of Offer and Ruling. The court may add any other or further statement which shows the character of the evidence, the form in which it was offered, the objection made, and the ruling thereon. It may direct the making of an offer in question and answer form.

(c) Hearing of Jury. In jury cases, proceedings shall be conducted, to the extent practicable, so as to prevent inadmissible evidence from being suggested to the jury by any means, such as making statements or offers of proof or asking questions in the hearing of the jury.

(d) Errors Affecting Substantial Rights. Nothing in this rule precludes taking notice of errors affecting substantial rights although they were not brought to the attention of the court.

CASE NOTES

Applicability.

Rebuttal witnesses' testimony regarding the fact that a criminal defendant carried a knife, although admitted in error, did not affect the substantial rights of defendant. Landrum v. State, 320 Ark. 81, 894 S.W.2d 933 (1995).

A proffer of evidence is governed by this rule. Williams v. State, 320 Ark. 211, 895 S.W.2d 913 (1995).

Where the trial court ruled as a matter of law that evidence of a controlled substance could not be admitted to prove DWI unless the information alleged intoxication by a controlled substance, no proffer of the evidence the State claimed was erroneously excluded was required to preserve the issue for appeal; subdivision (a)(2) of this rule does not apply to hearings limited to the construction of statutes as a matter of law. State v. Johnson, 326 Ark. 189, 931 S.W.2d 760 (1996).

Discretion of Court.

Where the trial court refused to strike the testimony of the defendant development company's president that he gave the plaintiff's husband, since deceased, permission to use the property, which was the subject of a quiet title action, in return for her husband's promise to keep the property clean, the trial court's refusal to strike was not an abuse of discretion since the dead man's statute was repealed, effective July 1, 1976, and the testimony of the president about his conversation with the plaintiff's husband was offered to prove that the statements were made, rather than to prove the truth of the statements. Mikel v. Development Co., 269 Ark. 365, 602 S.W.2d 630 (1980).

The granting or denial of a motion to strike the testimony of a witness after he has left the witness stand is a matter lying within the sound judicial discretion of the trial judge, whose exercise of that discretion will be set aside on appeal only when there has been an abuse of discretion. Mikel v. Development Co., 269 Ark. 365, 602 S.W.2d 630 (1980).

In an action to recover for personal injuries caused by an exploding tire, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in forbidding plaintiff's attorney, on redirect examination, from eliciting an explanation of an answer given by plaintiff to defendant's attorney concerning why and when plaintiff first hired legal counsel, inasmuch as defendant's attorney on cross-examination had questioned plaintiff's failure to present medical bills. Morton v. Wiley, 271 Ark. 319, 609 S.W.2d 322 (1980).

In a medical malpractice action, the court did not abuse its discretion under subsection (a) of this rule in excluding a physician's prior deposition from another case on relevancy grounds; whatever difficulties the physician might have encountered during the physician's early academic career and residency, the fact remained that the physician completed a surgical residency and was board certified in surgery when the physician operated on the patient. Milner v. Luttrell, 2011 Ark. App. 297, 384 S.W.3d 1 (2011).

It is the appellant's responsibility to demonstrate error. Powell v. State, 270 Ark. 236, 605 S.W.2d 2 (1980).

Relying on subsection (d) of this rule, the appeals court in Addington v. State, 2 Ark. App. 7, 616 S.W.2d 742 (1981) erroneously considered defendant's argument without an objection below because it affected a substantial right of the party; the procedural rules do not absolve the party at trial from making the appropriate objection as a prerequisite to appellate review. Friar v. State, 313 Ark. 253, 854 S.W.2d 318 (1993).

Although the trial court erred in refusing to allow appellant to call a witness during a hearing on appellee's petition for an order of protection against appellant, appellant failed to go forward and make any proffer of what the witness's testimony would have been as required by this rule; thus, the appellate court could not determine if any prejudice existed. Pablo v. Crowder, 95 Ark. App. 268, 236 S.W.3d 559 (2006).

Error Not Prejudicial.

Trial court did not err when it denied a party's request to proffer evidence, but noted that it would allow the proffer at a later time, because the party failed to establish that a delay in the proffer was prejudicial. Carlew v. Wright, 356 Ark. 208, 148 S.W.3d 237 (2004).

In a personal injury action filed by a truck passenger and his wife arising from a truck-train collision in which one theory of recovery was that the railroad allowed the crossing to be too overgrown with vegetation for vehicles to approach safely, the trial court's improper admission of evidence of a prior near miss at the railroad crossing, where the vehicle approached the tracks from the north and not the south like the passenger's truck, was not prejudicial because evidence of two other near misses from the south was properly admitted. Union Pac. R.R. Co. v. Barber, 356 Ark. 268, 149 S.W.3d 325, cert. denied, 543 U.S. 940, 125 S. Ct. 320, 160 L. Ed. 2d 249 (2004).

In a legal malpractice case, allegations of the barely questionable conduct of a small-town mayor did not affect his substantial rights at trial; there was no demonstration that the admission of such evidence warranted a reversal. Howard v. Adams, 2012 Ark. App. 562, 424 S.W.3d 337 (2012).

Errors Affecting Substantial Rights.

Where, in sentencing defendant for theft of property, it was alleged that he was subject to an extended term of imprisonment as a habitual offender under § 5-4-501, because of the statements of defendant, following his arrest, to a police officer giving a detailed account of prior felony convictions dating back to 1949, the use of the officer's testimony without evidence being offered as to whether or not defendant was represented by counsel on any of his seven prior convictions which may have made the convictions constitutionally infirm, clearly violated a substantial right of the defendant and constituted error under this rule, thus requiring a new trial. Addington v. State, 2 Ark. App. 7, 616 S.W.2d 742 (1981). But see Withers v. State, 308 Ark. 507, 825 S.W.2d 819 (1992).

Testimony that is merely cumulative cannot be thought to have had a substantial effect on the rights of the defendant. Snell v. State, 290 Ark. 503, 721 S.W.2d 628 (1986), cert. denied, 484 U.S. 872, 108 S. Ct. 202, 98 L. Ed. 2d 153 (1987).

Excluded evidence did not meet the requirement of substantiality. Daniels v. State, 293 Ark. 422, 739 S.W.2d 135 (1987); Phillips v. State, 293 Ark. 588, 739 S.W.2d 688 (1987).

An appellate court will not reverse for harmless error in the admission of evidence under subsection (a) of this rule. Freeman v. Freeman, 20 Ark. App. 12, 722 S.W.2d 877 (1987).

Subsection (d) of this rule is at best limited to evidentiary matters, and in any case does not impose an affirmative duty on the appellate courts to review such matters for the first time on appeal. Friar v. State, 313 Ark. 253, 854 S.W.2d 318 (1993).

Testimony that tended to show that defendant had cleaned himself up for court did not substantially affect defendant's rights. Gunter v. State, 313 Ark. 504, 857 S.W.2d 156, cert. denied, 510 U.S. 948, 114 S. Ct. 391, 126 L. Ed. 2d 339 (1993).

Arkansas did not, by its adoption of subsection (d) of this rule, adopt the plain-error rule, under which plain errors affecting substantial rights may be noticed on appeal although they were not brought to the attention of the trial court. Lovelady v. State, 326 Ark. 196, 931 S.W.2d 430 (1996).

Failure to Move for Mistrial.

Circuit court did not err in failing to grant a mistrial sua sponte when defendant failed to move for a mistrial after objecting to the prosecutor's examination of a witness; no exception applied to the general rule requiring a motion for mistrial, in addition to an objection. Baumann v. State, 2018 Ark. App. 564, 566 S.W.3d 494 (2018).

Failure to Object.

Where after deliberating in a murder trial for some time the jury returned and requested to hear parts of the accomplice's testimony over again, and neither the state nor the defense objected to the request, the defendant waived any objection he may have had to this procedure. Bly v. State, 267 Ark. 613, 593 S.W.2d 450 (1980).

Where, in a prosecution for capital murder, the trial court admitted as evidence a bullet fragment and an expended cartridge casing that were found by the defendant's aunt in the room where the victim's body was found, the failure of the state to ask the aunt to specifically identify the admitted items was not fatal to proving the chain of custody, since the testimony of the defendant's aunt and that of the police officer to whom she gave the fragment and casing showed that the casing was the same as that found by the defendant's aunt, and since the defendant did not specifically point out the defect in the chain on which the state sought to rely. Titus v. State, 268 Ark. 9, 593 S.W.2d 164 (1980).

Where record was completely silent as to nature of defense counsel's objections, appellate court could not find that trial court erred in overruling those objections. Powell v. State, 270 Ark. 236, 605 S.W.2d 2 (1980).

The trial court judge properly denied a pre-trial motion to suppress marijuana seized by officers under a search warrant, where the defendant asserted as grounds that the seizure was in violation of the fourth and fourteenth amendments to the United States Constitution since an allegation of a violation of the constitution is too vague to amount to a specific objection to the evidence as required by this rule. Nichols v. State, 273 Ark. 466, 620 S.W.2d 942 (1981).

Where the ground for an objection is not presented to the trial court, it cannot be raised on appeal. Davis v. State, 24 Ark. App. 152, 751 S.W.2d 11 (1988).

Error may not be predicated upon a ruling admitting evidence unless there is a timely, specific objection. Bohannon v. Underwood, 300 Ark. 110, 776 S.W.2d 827 (1989).

A constitutional issue will not be addressed on appeal if it was not brought to the trial court's attention for a ruling during trial or at some point prior to the entry of final judgment. Stewart v. Winfrey, 308 Ark. 277, 824 S.W.2d 373 (1992).

Where no objection whatever was made to the testimony of the rebuttal witnesses, the issue was not preserved for appeal. Shaver v. State, 37 Ark. App. 124, 826 S.W.2d 300 (1992).

Although a specific ground of objection need not be stated when the error is obvious from the context, that does not mean that no objection need be made. Thomson v. Littlefield, 319 Ark. 648, 893 S.W.2d 788 (1995).

Trial court did not err in allowing the assistant Attorney General to testify where the testimony came in without objection and without a motion to strike. Chequet Sys. v. Montgomery, 322 Ark. 742, 911 S.W.2d 956 (1995).

The court would reject the contention that the defendant did not have to make an objection to testimony by a witness that she heard the defendant threaten another person on the basis of the exception to the requirement of an objection to preserve an issue for the court's review under subsection (d) of this rule since the subsection does not impose an affirmative duty. Alexander v. State, 335 Ark. 131, 983 S.W.2d 110 (1998).

Subsection (d) of this rule is "negative, not imposing an affirmative duty"; thus, the failure to give an admonition to the jury is not prejudicial error where the instruction or admonition was not requested below. Buckley v. State, 349 Ark. 53, 76 S.W.3d 825, cert. denied, 537 U.S. 1058, 123 S. Ct. 633, 154 L. Ed. 2d 539 (2002).

In a drug trial, defendant's constitutional challenge based on the admission of evidence of subsequent drug offenses during the sentencing phase of the trial was not preserved for appellate review because defendant failed to make a proper, contemporaneous objection at trial. Crawford v. State, 362 Ark. 301, 208 S.W.3d 146 (2005).

Upon defendant's conviction for rape and second-degree battery, he argued that the admission of evidence of his prior alleged misconduct involving a minor during the sentencing phase of trial violated his rights under the Confrontation Clause; however, the error was not preserved for review because defendant did not raise an objection at trial. The Wicks exceptions to the preservation rule did not apply under subsection (d) of this rule. White v. State, 2012 Ark. 221, 408 S.W.3d 720 (2012).

Because appellant juvenile did not object the competency of the seven-year-old child victim to testify at the delinquency hearing on rape charges, his failure to do so precluded the issue from being reviewed on appeal. The Wicks exceptions to the contemporaneous-objection rule did not apply under subdivision (d) of this rule. J.W.H. v. State, 2013 Ark. App. 139 (2013).

Defendant was not entitled to relief for the alleged "termination" of her testimony because she did not object at trial, and subsection (d) of this rule did not allow defendant to pursue the issue on appeal. In any event, defendant could not show prejudice, since she was allowed to conclude her testimony as she wanted. Thacker v. State, 2015 Ark. App. 573, 473 S.W.3d 583 (2015).

Failure to Offer Proof.

In prosecution for theft, where defense counsel made no attempt to pursue questions concerning mistaken identity after court sustained objection to them and did not explain to court the defense of mistaken identity or proffer any evidence for the record to support an objection to the court's ruling, the court's ruling exclusion of questions concerning mistaken identity could not be considered error. Boykin v. State, 270 Ark. 284, 603 S.W.2d 911 (Ct. App. 1980).

The trial court did not err in refusing to permit the defendant to cross-examine a police officer with respect to any prior statements that the alleged rape victim may have made where the record showed that the defendant's attorney evidently chose not to pursue the subject, despite his opportunity to do so when the policeman was called on rebuttal and when the victim herself took the witness stand. Also, defendant's counsel neglected to make known to the trial court the substance of the anticipated evidence by proffer under the requirements of subdivision (a)(2) of this rule. Avery v. State, 15 Ark. App. 134, 690 S.W.2d 732 (1985).

Where there was no offer of proof as to the factual circumstances involved in the victim's conviction for hindering apprehension, the court was unable to determine whether the conviction should have been admissible. West v. State, 27 Ark. App. 49, 766 S.W.2d 22 (1989).

Failure to make an offer of proof precludes review of the issue on appeal under subdivision (a)(2) of this rule. National Bank of Commerce v. HCA Health Servs., 304 Ark. 55, 800 S.W.2d 694 (1990).

Where the trial court excluded the testimony of appellant's witness because appellant's supplemental answers to interrogatories had not been verified, appellant could not, on appeal, take issue with the exclusion where the appellant failed to make a proffer of the witness' testimony at trial. Abernathy v. Weldon, Williams & Lick, Inc., 54 Ark. App. 108, 923 S.W.2d 893 (1996).

Plaintiffs' failure to proffer evidence at trial precluded appellate review of trial court decision excluding the evidence. Duque v. Oshman's Sporting Goods — Servs., Inc., 327 Ark. 224, 937 S.W.2d 179 (1997).

The issue of whether the trial court erred in refusing to allow plaintiff to use the police report while cross-examining the investigating officer in relation to testimony of other witnesses had given at trial as to the traffic accident was procedurally barred on appeal because plaintiff made no proffer of the evidence that she sought to introduce through cross-examination of the officer. Martinez v. Wright, 94 Ark. App. 1, 223 S.W.3d 71 (2006).

Where a mother failed to proffer either the summary or the actual bills that she had received for the minor child's medical care, the appellate court was left with only the mother's testimony on the issue; accordingly, the appellate court deferred to the trial judge's superior position to determine the credibility of witnesses and the weight to be accorded to their testimony and affirmed the denial of the request for reimbursement of those expenses. Williams v. Nesbitt, 95 Ark. App. 79, 234 S.W.3d 343 (2006).

Appellate review of an injured plaintiff's contention that his medical bills were improperly excluded from evidence due to his failure to produce them until the evening before trial was precluded by the plaintiff's failure to make a proffer of the medical records and bills to the trial court as required by subdivision (a)(2) of this rule. Jennings v. Architectural Prods., 2010 Ark. App. 413, 375 S.W.3d 685 (2010).

Failure to proffer evidence so that an appellate court can see if prejudice has resulted from its exclusion precludes review of the evidence on appeal. Parkerson v. Brown, 2013 Ark. App. 718, 430 S.W.3d 864 (2013).

Trial court properly did not reopen a negligence action because the accident victim failed to proffer the evidence that the victim wished to have presented to prove causation of a plane crash. Gilbow v. Crawford, 2015 Ark. App. 194, 458 S.W.3d 750 (2015).

Grounds for Objection.

A party cannot change the grounds for objection on appeal. Walker v. State, 301 Ark. 218, 783 S.W.2d 44 (1990).

Where defendant had no objection to admission of photos of the bullets removed from deceased's body and a closeup shot of his abdomen to show his fatal wound, the specific ground for his objection to a photograph of the deceased's head and torso was not clear. Gidron v. State, 316 Ark. 352, 872 S.W.2d 64 (1994).

Murder defendant who had objected at trial under Ark. R. Evid. 613(b) to use of a witness's prior inconsistent statement could not, on appeal, change his grounds for objection to the rule that once a witness admits making a prior inconsistent statement and admits that it was false, the statement becomes inadmissible. Threadgill v. State, 74 Ark. App. 301, 47 S.W.3d 304 (2001), aff'd, 347 Ark. 986, 69 S.W.3d 423 (2002).

In an assault case, defendant preserved a jury selection error relating to the number of peremptory challenges under § 16-33-305 and the Sixth Amendment to the U.S. Constitution because the basis of defendant's motion was clear from the context and the arguments presented; however, no reversal or mistrial was required because defendant failed to raise an objection until after the trial had started, and there was no prejudice because the objectionable jurors did not participate in the verdict. Smith v. State, 90 Ark. App. 261, 205 S.W.3d 173 (2005).

Offer of Proof.

In order for the Supreme Court to find that certain evidence was improperly excluded by the trial court, the party offering such evidence must have made a proffer of the evidence under subdivision (a)(2) of this rule. Parker v. State, 268 Ark. 441, 597 S.W.2d 586 (1980).

Normally, the Supreme Court will not consider a point involving the exclusion of evidence when there was no proffer of excluded evidence because the court has no way of knowing the substance of the evidence; however, there is no need for a proffer where the substance of the offer was apparent from the context within which the questions were asked when the information is unavailable to the cross-examiner. Henderson v. State, 279 Ark. 435, 652 S.W.2d 16 (1983), aff'd, 284 Ark. 493, 684 S.W.2d 231 (1985).

Trial court erred in sustaining state's objection to question, and the Supreme Court would hold it to be reversible error, even though the defendant had made no proffer of evidence on the point, because the substance of the answer to the question objected to was apparent and because the information was not available to the defense counsel. Henderson v. State, 279 Ark. 435, 652 S.W.2d 16 (1983), aff'd, 284 Ark. 493, 684 S.W.2d 231 (1985).

Where, in prosecution for rape, the victim was unemployed and unmarried, the manner of support of the victim and her daughter was of no consequence, where an in-chambers proffer showed that the victim was supported by her fiancé. Johnson v. State, 290 Ark. 166, 717 S.W.2d 805 (1986).

This rule specifically provides that the trial court may control the form of the proffer and when proffer is to be made; there may be circumstances in which trial court is justified in rejecting a proffer. Jones v. Jones, 22 Ark. App. 267, 739 S.W.2d 171 (1987).

It was error to refuse to permit proffer of evidence. Jones v. Jones, 22 Ark. App. 267, 739 S.W.2d 171 (1987).

Trial court has very limited discretion to refuse to permit counsel to proffer evidence, but has great discretion in controlling form of proffer and time at which it is to be made. Sitz v. State, 23 Ark. App. 126, 743 S.W.2d 18 (1988).

Opportunity to make proffer was not denied. Sitz v. State, 23 Ark. App. 126, 743 S.W.2d 18 (1988).

Error may not be predicated upon a ruling that excludes evidence unless the substance of the evidence is proffered. Ross v. Moore, 25 Ark. App. 325, 758 S.W.2d 423 (1988).

After the trial court cut short defendant's attempt to cross-examine a witness, defendant's failure to make an offer of proof of what the testimony would have been precludes review of the issue on appeal under subdivision (a)(2) of this rule. Sheridan v. State, 313 Ark. 23, 852 S.W.2d 772 (1993).

Subdivision (a)(2) of this rule is not applicable to a hearing that was limited to the construction of a statute as a matter of law. Thus, where trial court did not make any evidentiary rulings, the Supreme Court reached the state's point of appeal. State v. Gray, 322 Ark. 301, 908 S.W.2d 642 (1995).

Proffered evidence of the victim's character, by testimony of specific instances of her prior violent conduct toward defendant, was not erroneously excluded where the proffered cross-examination testimony was not admissible under Evid. Rule 405, and beyond the scope of cross-examination under Evid. Rule 611. Solomon v. State, 323 Ark. 178, 913 S.W.2d 288 (1996).

In workers' compensation proceeding, although administrative law judge erred in denying employer the opportunity to proffer certain videotapes, such error was harmless where other records supported the finding, where employer did not obtain a ruling on the issue, and where videotapes were not authenticated. W.W.C. Bingo v. Zwierzynski, 53 Ark. App. 288, 921 S.W.2d 954 (1996).

A proffer is required for two reasons: first, so that the trial court may be aware of the nature of the evidence; and second, to enable the appellate court to decide whether the evidence should have been admitted and, if so, whether the error in excluding it may have been harmless. Lindsey v. State, 54 Ark. App. 266, 925 S.W.2d 441 (1996).

Counsel's offer of proof as to witness's anticipated testimony held to be sufficient to preserve the issue of the admissibility of that testimony for appeal. Cox-Hilstrom v. State, 58 Ark. App. 109, 948 S.W.2d 409 (1997).

Defendant's collateral argument, that cocaine evidence was relevant to show drug use on the part of the state's witness, was not preserved for review, given that defense counsel did not attempt to impeach any witness with this information and when the trial court sustained the state's objection to the question of the witness concerning drugs, defense counsel neither argued that the objection should be overruled nor proffered the testimony that he would have obtained if allowed to pursue another question, and without the proffer, for purposes of subdivision (a)(2) of this rule, the matter was not preserved. Randle v. State, 372 Ark. 246, 273 S.W.3d 482 (2008).

Where the patient alleged that a doctor and a medical center's nursing staff were negligent in connection with a fall she sustained while a patient at the medical center, the trial court denied the patient's proffered instruction that would have allowed the jury to consider the testimony of her physician expert on the standard of care for the nursing staff; the physician was never qualified as an expert on nursing. On review, the Supreme Court of Arkansas could not assess whether the circuit judge erred in refusing the proffered instruction because the patient did not proffer what testimony the physician expert would have given. Nelson v. Stubblefield, 2009 Ark. 256, 308 S.W.3d 586 (2009).

Without a proffer of evidence under subdivision (a)(2) of this rule, a defendant charged with the rape of his stepdaughter failed to preserve for appellate review his argument that evidence of his sexual relationship with his wife should have been admitted to show that she planted his semen in the child's bed and vagina. Brown v. State, 2012 Ark. 399, 424 S.W.3d 288 (2012).

In an adult-protective-services case in which the circuit court ordered that appellant be placed in the long-term protective custody of the State, appellant could not demonstrate prejudice from the court's ruling that she could not cross-examine a nurse as to any additional assets appellant might have had beyond those discussed during the nurse's testimony on direct examination because the nurse had already testified at length about appellant's finances; appellant stated that she had very little money; and appellant's attorney never proffered the testimony at issue. Brown v. Ark. Dep't of Human Servs., 2017 Ark. App. 67, 511 S.W.3d 895 (2017).

Defendant's failure to make a proffer of the excluded evidence precluded appellate review of the trial court's grant of the State's motion in limine to exclude evidence that the victim filed a civil lawsuit against the owners of an apartment complex where the rape occurred. The colloquy from the bench conference suggested that there were two lawsuits involving the apartment complex, but defendant failed to articulate to the circuit court the basis for the victim's suit against the apartment complex, the theory of liability she had pursued, or whether she had sought money damages; thus, defendant failed to apprise the circuit court of the relevance of the civil lawsuit. Sharp v. State, 2018 Ark. 274, 555 S.W.3d 878 (2018).

Because defendant failed to proffer the answers that he hoped to elicit on cross-examination, and because the answers were not otherwise apparent from the contradictory context, the appellate court was precluded from reviewing the issue of whether the circuit court abused its discretion in limiting defendant's cross-examination of the victim. Perkins v. State, 2019 Ark. 247, 582 S.W.3d 1 (2019).

Photographs.

In order to preserve an issue involving photographs for appeal, the appellant must make an offer of proof about who took the pictures, when they were taken, why they were taken, where they had been kept, how appellant obtained them, and the substance of the evidence a witness might have given about the pictures. Mosley v. State, 325 Ark. 469, 929 S.W.2d 693 (1996).

Substance of Evidence Known to Court.

Where a defendant in a battery prosecution attempted to introduce a psychiatrist's opinion testimony that the defendant was not a violent person only for the purpose of mitigation of punishment and not to show a character trait of nonviolence, the court's ruling that the testimony was not admissible was not erroneous under this rule since the substance of the evidence was not sufficiently made known to the trial court and was not apparent from the questions asked of the psychiatrist. Killman v. State, 274 Ark. 422, 625 S.W.2d 489 (1981).

In order for an appellate court to hold that testimony regarding an inconsistent statement was improperly excluded under Evid. Rule 613, appellant must have made a proffer of the evidence under this rule; where there was no proffer and the substance of the testimony was not apparent, the appellate court had no way of knowing whether the answer would have revealed an inconsistent statement. Patterson v. State, 318 Ark. 358, 885 S.W.2d 667 (1994).

Timely Objection.

Error cannot be predicated upon a ruling admitting evidence unless a timely objection is made stating the specific ground of objection if the ground is not apparent from the context. Pace v. State, 265 Ark. 712, 580 S.W.2d 689 (1979).

For the trial court to have committed reversible error, it must be said that timely and accurate objection was made, so that the trial court was given the opportunity to correct such error. Gustafson v. State, 267 Ark. 830, 593 S.W.2d 187 (Ct. App. 1979).

Where in a prosecution for possession of heroin, the defense counsel made a general objection to testimony about a pistol found in the defendant's car, the objection should have been sustained since it should have been apparent to the trial court that the weapon was not relevant to the offense charged and should not have been discussed before the jury. Philmon v. State, 267 Ark. 1121, 593 S.W.2d 504 (Ct. App. 1980).

In action against builder for damages for failure to construct house properly where report of percolation test was introduced into evidence over the general objection of the builder, builder could not now object to the introduction of such report on the grounds that it was hearsay and not a business record in the sense of Evid. Rule 803(6) since neither of these objections was made in the trial court, for error cannot be predicated on a ruling admitting evidence in the absence of a specific objection, if the specific objection was not apparent from the context. Enterprise Sales Co. v. Barham, 270 Ark. 544, 605 S.W.2d 458 (1980).

Where in an eminent domain proceeding brought by the State Highway Commission against the lessees in property from whom the commission had acquired a highway right-of-way, the commission made a timely and specific objection to the testimony of one of the lessee's witnesses concerning the profits made by the lessee from a business conducted on the leasehold property, the failure of the commission to have raised the objection at a pretrial conference did not preclude it from making the objection during the trial, and the profit testimony should not have been admitted. Arkansas State Hwy. Comm'n v. Lone Star Co., 4 Ark. App. 103, 628 S.W.2d 23 (1982).

Error cannot be predicated upon a ruling admitting evidence unless a timely objection is made stating the specific ground of objection if the ground is not clear from the context. Walt Bennett Ford, Inc. v. Brown, 283 Ark. 1, 670 S.W.2d 441 (1984).

Where defense attorney stated, before witness was called, that if the state asked the witness about statements made by the victim, the defendant objected on hearsay grounds, but defendant did not object to questions asked of the witness, nor renew or request a final ruling on his previous objection, then defendant did not move to strike the hearsay testimony, and failed to make a timely objection at trial as to the admission of the challenged statement, thus precluding defendant from raising this issue on appeal. Byrum v. State, 318 Ark. 87, 884 S.W.2d 248 (1994).

In order to be timely, an objection must be contemporaneous, or nearly so, with the alleged error; to preserve a point for appeal, a proper objection must be asserted at the first opportunity after the matter to which objection has been made occurs. Smith v. State, 330 Ark. 50, 953 S.W.2d 870 (1997).

Rule 104. Preliminary questions.

(a) Questions of Admissibility Generally. Preliminary questions concerning the qualification of a person to be a witness, the existence of a privilege, or the admissibility of evidence shall be determined by the court, subject to the provisions of subdivision (b). In making its determination it is not bound by the rules of evidence except those with respect to privileges.

(b) Relevancy Conditioned on Fact. Whenever the relevancy of evidence depends upon the fulfillment of a condition of fact, the court shall admit it upon, or in the court's discretion subject to, the introduction of evidence sufficient to support a finding of the fulfillment of the condition.

(c) Hearing of Jury. Hearings on the admissibility of confessions in criminal cases shall be conducted out of the hearing of the jury. Hearings on other preliminary matters in all cases, shall be so conducted whenever the interests of justice require or, in criminal cases, whenever an accused is a witness, if he so requests.

(d) Testimony by Accused. The accused does not, by testifying upon a preliminary matter, subject himself to cross-examination as to other issues in the case.

(e) Weight and Credibility. This rule does not limit the right of a party to introduce before the jury evidence relevant to weight or credibility.

CASE NOTES

Admissibility.

Whether an undercover agent who made arrangements with the defendant for a heroin sale was incapable of consenting to the taping of the conversation because he needed a "fix" and whether he was able to recognize the defendant's voice on the telephone were preliminary questions of fact about the admissibility of evidence which must be determined by the trial judge. Foxworth v. State, 263 Ark. 549, 566 S.W.2d 151 (1978).

An officer investigating an accident can give an opinion about the point of impact if properly qualified. Ferrell v. Southern Farm Bureau Cas. Ins. Co., 291 Ark. 322, 724 S.W.2d 465 (1987).

The judge, not the jury, makes the determination of admissibility of evidence and, once the judge makes that determination, it is a matter of argument of counsel as to the weight to be given that evidence. Jacobs v. State, 294 Ark. 551, 744 S.W.2d 728 (1988).

Evidence held admissible. Winters v. State, 301 Ark. 127, 782 S.W.2d 566 (1990).

Discretion of Court.

Under this rule, a trial court has discretion in determining the qualifications of a person to be a witness and in further determining the admissibility of evidence, providing the evidence is not inadmissible under some exclusionary rule. White v. Mitchell, 263 Ark. 787, 568 S.W.2d 216 (1978).

In view of first doctor's vast medical practice and his extensive association with medical institutions and general practitioners in communities comparable to second doctor, in terms of population, facilities, and the type of medical practice engaged in by the physicians therein, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in holding first doctor's testimony competent. White v. Mitchell, 263 Ark. 787, 568 S.W.2d 216 (1978).

The trial court properly decided the question of admissibility of the documentary evidence of prior convictions; the determination of whether the evidence of those convictions was admissible was not a question for the jury. Wright v. State, 17 Ark. App. 24, 702 S.W.2d 811 (1986).

The trial judge determines whether evidence is admissible, and on review, the appellate court will reverse the decision only if there is an abuse of discretion under subsection (a) of this rule. Marx v. State, 291 Ark. 325, 724 S.W.2d 456 (1987). See Farmers Bank v. Perry, 301 Ark. 547, 787 S.W.2d 645 (1990).

—Young Witnesses.

The trial court has broad discretion in determining the competency of young witnesses and exercise of that discretion will not be disturbed on appeal absent clear abuse or manifest error. A witness is competent if able to understand the obligation to tell the truth and the consequences of false swearing and if capable of receiving and retaining accurate impressions and communicating a reasonable statement of what has been seen, felt or heard. Barrett v. State, 23 Ark. App. 144, 744 S.W.2d 741 (1988).

Proof of Chain of Custody.

Where in a prosecution for capital murder, the trial court admitted as evidence a bullet fragment and an expended cartridge casing that were found by the defendant's aunt in the room where the victim's body was found, the failure of the state to ask the aunt to specifically identify the admitted items was not fatal to proving the chain of custody, since the testimony of the defendant's aunt and that of the police officer to whom she gave the fragment and casing showed that the casing was the same as that found by the defendant's aunt, and since the defendant did not specifically point out the defect in the chain on which the state sought to rely. Titus v. State, 268 Ark. 9, 593 S.W.2d 164 (1980).

Relevancy Conditioned on Fact.

Attempted implication of a witness as the actual murderer properly denied where the facts that the witness may have been abused and may have committed unrelated bad acts created no more than a reckless inference that he murdered the victims. Echols v. State, 326 Ark. 917, 936 S.W.2d 509 (1996), cert. denied, 520 U.S. 1244, 117 S. Ct. 1853, 137 L. Ed. 2d 1055 (1997).

Standard of Review.

Questions concerning the admissibility of evidence are matters of state law and are subject to review in federal court only when the alleged error infringed upon a specific federal constitutional right or was so grossly prejudicial that it fatally infected the trial and did not afford a litigant the fundamental fairness which is the essence of due process. Harris v. Norris, 864 F. Supp. 96 (E.D. Ark. 1994).

Statements of Coconspirators.

Statements of alleged coconspirators are inadmissible as hearsay unless they are vicarious admissions; the statements must be connected by other evidence which establishes the conspiracy independent of the statement, and the existence of the conspiracy must be independently proved before the jury is allowed to consider the statements but the trial court has discretion to vary the order of proof. Patterson v. State, 267 Ark. 436, 591 S.W.2d 356 (1979), cert. denied, 447 U.S. 923, 100 S. Ct. 3014, 65 L. Ed. 2d 1115 (1980).

Rule 105. Limited admissibility.

Whenever evidence which is admissible as to one [1] party or for one [1] purpose but not admissible as to another party or for another purpose is admitted, the court, upon request, shall restrict the evidence to its proper scope and instruct the jury accordingly.

CASE NOTESIllustrative Cases.

The trial court acted correctly, since it did not rule that defense counsel could not ask the witness whether she had made the statement that was attributed to her by the police report, but simply would not allow counsel to reveal what the report stated the witness had said until she had been asked whether she had made that statement. Lewis v. State, 41 Ark. App. 89, 848 S.W.2d 955 (1993).

Defendant's Sixth Amendment rights under the Confrontation Clause were violated when the testimony of a deceased company owner was received into evidence through the testimony of a police officer because the statements were testimonial in nature; they went to the core of the State's case on the issue of whether defendant was authorized to use a credit card. Moreover, when considering the testimony solely as an evidentiary matter, it was not admissible for any purpose, and no limiting instruction of any kind would have cured the error in admitting the testimony. Lee v. State, 102 Ark. App. 23, 279 S.W.3d 496 (2008).

Impeachment.

Although the witness's statement was inadmissible to prove the truth of the matter asserted, it was admissible for the purposes of impeachment. Harris v. State, 36 Ark. App. 120, 819 S.W.2d 30 (1991).

Instructions.

Where evidence was offered to show that a police officer merely acted on the description of the car given him but the testimony would have been inadmissible hearsay if offered for the truth of the matter asserted the court should have admonished the jury to limit its consideration of this evidence and the court erred in refusing to give the limiting instruction. Hamm v. State, 304 Ark. 214, 800 S.W.2d 711 (1990).

Trial judge's limiting instruction properly restricted challenged evidence to its proper scope. Crawford v. State, 309 Ark. 54, 827 S.W.2d 134 (1992).

Defendant did not request a limiting instruction that the license plate number could not be considered for the truth of the matter asserted but only for the purpose of explaining the officer's actions, and thus there was no reversible error. Chatfield v. State, 2013 Ark. App. 565 (2013).

Although the circuit court erred by failing to give a limiting instruction that a prior videotaped interview of defendant's cousin could not be considered substantive evidence, the appellate court's inquiry did not end there. There was no showing of prejudice that would justify reversal as the error was slight in light of the overwhelming evidence of defendant's guilt. Goshien v. State, 2020 Ark. App. 265, 601 S.W.3d 138 (2020).

Rebutting Inference of Negligence.

In a personal injury case which involved plaintiff being injured while helping defendant's employee to install a three-hundred-pound gear drive, it was proper for the court to allow the employee to testify that he and only one other man had manually installed gear drives "hundreds of times" previously, since plaintiff's case-in-chief fully developed the fact that hoisting equipment and additional farm hands were available to assist in the placement of the gear drive, so that the testimony was properly admitted under this rule for the single purpose of rebutting the inference that the defendants were negligent in not using additional men or equipment; moreover, such testimony did not allow the defendant to absolve himself of any negligence merely by proving that his conduct at the time of the accident was in conformity with their past practices. Sanders v. Wheaton, 273 Ark. 416, 619 S.W.2d 674 (1981).

Testimony of Coconspirators.

Arkansas Model Criminal Jury Instruction 201 essentially sets out the best rule in handling the admission of testimony of coconspirators. Patterson v. State, 267 Ark. 436, 591 S.W.2d 356 (1979), cert. denied, 447 U.S. 923, 100 S. Ct. 3014, 65 L. Ed. 2d 1115 (1980).

Statements of alleged coconspirators are inadmissible as hearsay unless they are vicarious admissions; the statements must be connected by other evidence which establishes the conspiracy independent of the statement, and the existence of the conspiracy must be independently proved before the jury is allowed to consider the statements but the trial court has discretion to vary the order of proof. Patterson v. State, 267 Ark. 436, 591 S.W.2d 356 (1979), cert. denied, 447 U.S. 923, 100 S. Ct. 3014, 65 L. Ed. 2d 1115 (1980).

Rule 106. Remainder of or related writings or recorded statements.

Whenever a writing or recorded statement or part thereof is introduced by a party, an adverse party may require him at that time to introduce any other part or any other writing or recorded statement which in fairness ought to be considered contemporaneously with it.

CASE NOTES

In General.

This rule is directed toward preventing a misleading impression that may be created by taking a statement out of context; the right to put in the remainder of a statement as part of the opponent's case is subject to the general principles of relevancy. This rule is not designed to make something admissible that should be excluded. Skiver v. State, 37 Ark. App. 146, 826 S.W.2d 309 (1992).

In a rape case, although the prohibition on the introduction of polygraph results in § 12-12-704 extended to the willingness or reluctance to be examined as evidence of consciousness of innocence or guilt, the state was not prohibited from introducing a redacted portion of an interview where defendant discussed taking the test; moreover, there was no requirement that the entire statement should have been admitted under Arkansas case law or this rule. Rollins v. State, 362 Ark. 279, 208 S.W.3d 215 (2005).

Admission of Prior Statement.

Where defense counsel on cross-examination quoted a part of witness's prior statement and the omitted portion of the statement was not explanatory of the part referred to on cross-examination, it was error to admit the entire statement since not only was the remainder of the prior statement unrelated to the issue of defendant's use of profane language which was raised on cross-examination, but the witness fully explained the reason for omitting profane words in her written statement when she testified. George v. State, 270 Ark. 335, 604 S.W.2d 940 (1980).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion by allowing the state to introduce the transcript of police interviews with the victim, which included parts of the statement that were not introduced by the state, because the defense expressly referred to selective portions of the interviews while attempting to show that the investigator coaxed or cajoled the victim into giving incriminating testimony; thus, the entire transcript of the two interviews were properly admitted to refute a charge of improper influence and to provide context. Hamm v. State, 365 Ark. 647, 232 S.W.3d 463 (2006).

Evidence.

In a divorce proceeding, the trial court did not err in violation of this rule when it admitted portions of the wife's journal into evidence because the evidence was admitted for the purpose of proving that the wife had an affair and was lying about it, and because there was no suggestion that the statements were taken out of context or that the rest of the journal would be relevant. Magee v. Magee, 2013 Ark. App. 108 (2013).

Text Messages.

Defendant had the same access to all of the texts between him and the victim, and the text that was read to the jury was the sole text that she provided to the police and that helped form the basis for the charge; as much context as possible was provided to the jury in light of the fact that the other texts were deleted, and there was no abuse of discretion on the trial court's part. Rodriguez v. State, 2014 Ark. App. 660, 449 S.W.3d 306 (2014).

ARTICLE II. JUDICIAL NOTICE

Rule

Rule 201. Judicial notice of adjudicative facts.

Rule 201. Judicial notice of adjudicative facts.

(a) Scope of Rule. This rule governs only judicial notice of adjudicative facts.

(b) Kinds of Facts. A judicially noticed fact must be one not subject to reasonable dispute in that it is either (1) generally known within the territorial jurisdiction of the trial court or (2) capable of accurate and ready determination by resort to sources whose accuracy cannot reasonably be questioned.

(c) When Discretionary. A court may take judicial notice, whether requested or not.

(d) When Mandatory. A court shall take judicial notice if requested by a party and supplied with the necessary information.

(e) Opportunity to be Heard. A party is entitled upon timely request to an opportunity to be heard as to the propriety of taking judicial notice and the tenor of the matter noticed. In the absence of prior notification, the request may be made after judicial notice has been taken.

(f) Time of Taking Notice. Judicial notice may be taken at any stage of the proceeding.

(g) Instructing Jury. The court shall instruct the jury to accept as conclusive any fact judicially noticed.

CASE NOTES

Adjudicative Facts.

Statute and regulations held not to constitute “adjudicative facts.” Lively v. State, 25 Ark. App. 198, 755 S.W.2d 238 (1988).

In a personal injury case, a trial court did not err in failing to take judicial notice of an alleged admission in summary judgment submissions by the premises owner that an accident occurred on the premises on the date in question, because whether the accident occurred there was clearly not an adjudicative fact that fell under the strictures of subsection (b) of this rule. Jennings v. Architectural Prods., 2010 Ark. App. 413, 375 S.W.3d 685 (2010).

Appeal.

This rule does not expressly limit the taking of judicial notice to the trial court; the Supreme Court may take judicial notice of facts which were not presented to the trial court. Houston v. State, 293 Ark. 492, 739 S.W.2d 154 (1987).

Where a party challenges the sufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict, the opposing party may not offer additional evidence on appeal by way of judicial notice for the purpose of bolstering the sufficiency of its evidence. Houston v. State, 293 Ark. 492, 739 S.W.2d 154 (1987).

County Seat for Venue Purposes.

Where a trailer containing drugs was described in a search warrant and by testimony of police officers as being south of Mountain Home, Arkansas, it was proper for the trial court to take judicial notice that Mountain Home is the county seat of Baxter County for purposes of establishing venue in the resulting criminal trial in Baxter County, since a fact may be judicially noticed which is generally known within the territorial jurisdiction of the trial court. Dodson v. State, 4 Ark. App. 1, 626 S.W.2d 624, cert. denied, 457 U.S. 1136, 102 S. Ct. 2966, 73 L. Ed. 2d 1355 (1982).

Discretion of Court.

It would appear that a fifth of Evan Williams Straight Bourbon Whiskey containing the unbroken federally affixed federal tax seal would fall within this rule, and since defendant did not request an opportunity to test the contents, it cannot be said that the trial court committed error in taking judicial notice that the fifth contained intoxicating liquor. Hughes v. State, 264 Ark. 723, 574 S.W.2d 888 (1978).

Given that the circuit court allowed the employee to question witnesses about the OSHA regulations and gave a jury instruction about them, it did not abuse its discretion by refusing to take judicial notice of the OSHA regulations under this rule. Patterson v. UPS, 102 Ark. App. 378, 285 S.W.3d 683 (2008).

Governmental Regulation.

Judicial notice may be taken of the Department of Health regulation, but the proper procedure is for the party relying on such judicial notice to aid the court or administrative law judge by calling attention to the regulation. St. Paul Ins. Co. v. Touzin, 267 Ark. 539, 592 S.W.2d 447 (1980).

A circuit court is within its bounds in taking judicial notice of a code of regulations duly promulgated under the Arkansas Administrative Procedures Act. Stein v. Lukas, 308 Ark. 74, 823 S.W.2d 832 (1992).

Even if the trial court already judicially knew the Arkansas Regulations for Alcohol Testing, then it was unnecessary for the court to take judicial notice of them or admit them into evidence; the trial court properly decided that the testimony of the police officers was sufficient to explain the requirements of the Regulations and whether they were complied with. Mhoon v. State, 369 Ark. 134, 251 S.W.3d 244 (2007).

When neighbors sued a landowner regarding the aerial application of pesticide to the landowner's land, it was not error to decline to take judicial notice of government publications about another chemical because the landowners did not show how that chemical related to the pesticide, including similar risks of drift. Wilson v. Greg Williams Farm, Inc., 2014 Ark. App. 334, 436 S.W.3d 485 (2014).

Interest Rates.

Even though there was no evidence presented on the question at trial, the court took judicial notice of the fact that interest rates were very high at that time, and also were high at the time of the Public Service Commission's decision on the rate of interest to be paid on refunds by the telephone company. Southwestern Bell Tel. Co. v. Arkansas Pub. Serv. Comm'n, 267 Ark. 550, 593 S.W.2d 434 (1980).

Judicial Notice of Evidence.

Where the only evidence, in an adverse possession case, of the date actual notice of adverse interest was communicated to defendant was based on judicial notice of a fact not raised at the trial court, the plaintiff failed to make out a prima facie case since such judicial notice of evidence is impermissible. Pascall v. Smith, 263 Ark. 428, 569 S.W.2d 89 (1978).

The court could not take judicial notice that the defendant's acts against his niece and brother in North Carolina were felonies in North Carolina so as to affirm a jury's finding of a “prior violent felony” as an aggravating circumstance in the prosecution of the defendant for murder. Greene v. State, 335 Ark. 1, 977 S.W.2d 192 (1998).

Trial court never refused to take judicial notice of the Arkansas Board of Acupuncture's rules and regulations because it was never asked to take judicial notice; instead, the alternative medicine practitioner and his school attempted to introduce a document into evidence and the trial court concluded that the copy was not properly admissible. Southern College of Naturopathy v. State ex rel. Beebe, 360 Ark. 543, 203 S.W.3d 111 (2005).

Consecutive sentences under § 5-4-403(a) were improper in a case where a trial judge relied upon the record of co-defendants and rejected a jury's recommendation of non-consecutive sentences; the trial court was not allowed to take judicial notice of the court records, as they were not introduced into evidence. Throneberry v. State, 102 Ark. App. 17, 279 S.W.3d 489 (2008), superseded, 2009 Ark. 507, 342 S.W.3d 269 (2009).

Record of a co-defendant's case cannot be considered at the sentencing phase of a defendant's separate trial if the co-defendant's record has not been introduced into evidence because judicial notice may not be taken of the record in a separate case. Throneberry v. State, 102 Ark. App. 17, 279 S.W.3d 489 (2008), superseded, 2009 Ark. 507, 342 S.W.3d 269 (2009).

Arkansas Workers' Compensation Commission did not err in failing to take judicial notice of an executed form AR-N because appellants failed to make their record on the issue at the initial hearing before the administrative law judge. St. Joseph's Mercy Med. Ctr. v. Redmond, 2012 Ark. App. 7, 388 S.W.3d 45 (2012).

In an armed robbery case, the circuit court did not abuse its discretion in refusing defendant's request to take judicial notice of estimated driving time obtained from Google Maps and instruct the jury of that information as a conclusive, adjudicative fact because the information could be reasonably disputed and thus was not a fact that could be judicially noticed; the Google Maps information obtained from the internet about the estimated driving time between defendant's alibi location and the crime scene did not tend to show the basis for the information, how it was independently obtained, or whether there was any incentive to ensure accuracy. Reed v. State, 2020 Ark. App. 49, 595 S.W.3d 391 (2020).

There was no merit to the argument that the State failed to prove that defendant was a felon in possession of a firearm because the State failed to introduce a sentencing order from any prior felony; the circuit court took judicial notice of its file reflecting defendant's guilty plea and conviction of theft by receiving. Mathis v. State, 2021 Ark. App. 49, 616 S.W.3d 274 (2021).

Medical Reference Book.

The Physician's Desk Reference is a manual found in physicians' offices, pharmacies, and attorneys' offices, and is universally recognized as having reasonably indisputable accuracy. Thus, under this rule, judicial notice of the book might be taken for some purposes at the appellate and trial levels. West v. Searle & Co., 305 Ark. 33, 806 S.W.2d 608 (1991).

Judicial notice of warnings appearing in the Physician's Desk Reference was declined where the plaintiff was never given the opportunity to be heard on the propriety of taking judicial notice, and where the reference book was periodically modified, such that it was not clear that the warnings offered as evidence were of the same date as those to which the defendant physician referred. West v. Searle & Co., 305 Ark. 33, 806 S.W.2d 608 (1991).

It was a definite mistake to find that the administering of melatonin was a basis for determining that the children were dependent-neglected, because the record was devoid of any evidence related to melatonin, i.e., its uses, dosage, side effects, etc., and the trial court had no basis in fact for finding melatonin use to be harmful to children. Johnson v. Ark. Dep't of Human Servs., 2012 Ark. App. 244, 413 S.W.3d 549 (2012).

Unfounded Accusations.

As the father's assertions were little more than unfounded accusations, the court declined to take judicial notice of them. Henson v. Ark. Dep't of Human Servs., 2014 Ark. App. 225, 434 S.W.3d 371 (2014).

ARTICLE III. PRESUMPTIONS

Rule

Rule 301. Presumptions in general in civil actions and proceedings.

Rule 302. Applicability of federal law in civil actions and proceedings.

Rule 303. Presumptions in criminal cases.

Rule 301. Presumptions in general in civil actions and proceedings.

(a) Effect. In all actions and proceedings not otherwise provided for by statute or by these rules, a presumption imposes on the party against whom it is directed the burden of proving that the nonexistence of the presumed fact is more probable than its existence.

(b) Inconsistent Presumptions. If presumptions are inconsistent, the presumption applies that is founded upon weightier considerations of policy. If considerations of policy are of equal weight neither presumption applies.

CASE NOTESDesigned Concealment.

Where the provision in an antenuptial agreement is disproportionate to the means of the intended husband, a presumption of designed concealment is raised, which throws the burden upon those claiming in his right to prove that there was full knowledge on the part of the intended wife of all that materially affected the

Rule 302. Applicability of federal law in civil actions and proceedings.

In civil actions and proceedings, the effect of a presumption respecting a fact which is an element of a claim or defense as to which federal law supplies the rule of decision is determined in accordance with federal law.

CASE NOTESIn General.

Questions concerning the admissibility of evidence are matters of state law and are subject to review in federal court only when the alleged error infringed upon a specific federal constitutional right or was so grossly prejudicial that it fatally infected the trial and did not afford a litigant the fundamental fairness which is the essence of due process. Harris v. Norris, 864 F. Supp. 96 (E.D. Ark. 1994).

Rule 303. Presumptions in criminal cases.

(a) Scope. Except as otherwise provided by statute, in criminal cases, presumptions against an accused, recognized at common law or created by statute, including statutory provisions that certain facts are prima facie evidence of other facts or of guilt, are governed by this rule.

(b) Submission to Jury. The court is not authorized to direct the jury to find a presumed fact against the accused. If a presumed fact establishes guilt or is an element of the offense or negatives a defense, the court may submit the question of guilt or of the existence of the presumed fact to the jury, but only if a reasonable juror on the evidence as a whole, including the evidence of the basic facts, could find guilt or the presumed fact beyond a reasonable doubt. If the presumed fact has a lesser effect, the question of its existence may be submitted to the jury provided the basic facts are supported by substantial evidence or are otherwise established, unless the court determines that a reasonable juror on the evidence as a whole could not find the existence of the presumed fact.

CASE NOTES

In General.

In an action to recover for personal injuries, the testimony of an orthopedic specialist that he had been notified by a reviewing committee of the state medical society that his charges were three times the maximum charge of the average orthopedist was relevant to the credibility of the specialist's assertion that his bill for treatment of the plaintiff was reasonable. Hubbard v. Sharpe, 261 Ark. 829, 552 S.W.2d 21 (1977).

Evidence is relevant if the item of evidence reasonably shows that a fact is slightly more probable than it would appear without the evidence. Dooley v. Cecil Edwards Constr. Co., 13 Ark. App. 170, 681 S.W.2d 399 (1984).

Under this rule, evidence need only have any tendency to make the existence of any fact that is of consequence to the determination of the action more probable or less probable than it would be without the evidence. Pyle v. State, 314 Ark. 165, 862 S.W.2d 823 (1993), cert. denied, 510 U.S. 1197, 114 S. Ct. 1306, 127 L. Ed. 2d 657 (1994).

Defendant's proffered testimony of false allegations against him showed nothing more than the fact that the victim's sister had lied about defendant in the past and it was not probative of the issue of the victim's veracity or her bias or prejudice against defendant; defendant failed to connect the dots between the proffered evidence and the charges against him such that his theory was speculative at best. Martin v. State, 354 Ark. 289, 119 S.W.3d 504 (2003), writ denied, Martin v. Norris, No. CR 02-128, 2007 Ark. LEXIS 357 (Ark. June 7, 2007).

Although defendant had been accused but not yet convicted of forgery, evidence that defendant was out on bond when he committed residential burglary and theft of property provided proof of his character and was relevant to the jury's determination of an appropriate punishment; the jury need not have learned of the details of defendant's bond requirements to understand that the fact that defendant was out on bond when he committed the new crimes said something about his character. Helms v. State, 92 Ark. App. 79, 211 S.W.3d 53 (2005).

How the advocate's other court appointed special advocate cases were resolved did not have any tendency to make the existence of any fact that was of consequence to the determination of the mother's parental rights more or less probable; it was not relevant evidence under this rule or Ark. R. Evid. 402, it was inadmissible, and the trial court did not abuse its discretion in excluding it, and this adverse evidentiary ruling could not create a meritorious issue on appeal. Williams v. Ark. Dep't of Human Servs., 2013 Ark. App. 534 (2013).

It was necessary to determine if the child would be safe if she remained in her father's home, and the testimony by the investigator about the injuries the brother suffered that caused his removal from the home was relevant to the termination hearing. Calahan v. Ark. Dep't of Human Servs., 2013 Ark. App. 508, 429 S.W.3d 372 (2013).

Absent Witness.

Where defendant claimed he was coerced into not reporting the crime because of threats by the codefendant, but where the evidence of duress did not bear on the issue of defendant's guilt or innocence of the offense charged but, rather, bore only upon why defendant had not reported the crime, and there was no assertion made that defendant was coerced into committing the offense, codefendant's absence as a witness was not prejudicial and at most harmless error. McGuire v. State, 265 Ark. 621, 580 S.W.2d 198 (1979).

Activity Before and After Arrest.

Appellant complained of the ruling permitting evidence about his behavior before and at the time of his arrest over his Ark. R. Evid. 403 objection, but the court found the evidence was relevant and more probative than prejudicial, given that (1) the evidence was admissible to show when and how appellant was taken into custody, and (2) appellant appeared as if he was going to flee; the evidence about what happened before and after appellant's arrest was relevant to inform the jury of all the facts that surrounded the crimes and to show consciousness of guilt. Caery v. State, 2012 Ark. App. 583 (2012).

Admissible Evidence.

Where in a prosecution for possession of marijuana with intent to deliver and delivery, all the bags were seized at the same place and time, defense counsel did not object to the chain of custody, and nothing in the record suggested that anyone substituted something other than marijuana in the untested bags, the fact that only four of the nine bags seized were tested was of no consequence since the trial judge could conclude from the representative sampling and testing that the remaining bags also consisted of marijuana. Crossno v. State, 15 Ark. App. 341, 692 S.W.2d 626 (1985).

Evidence of pandering to prurient interests in the creation, promotion, or dissemination of material is relevant in determining whether the material is obscene. Oglesby v. State, 299 Ark. 403, 773 S.W.2d 443 (1989).

Where there was evidence that defendant scaled a chain-link fence adjacent to the building he attempted to enter illegally and was apprehended within that enclosure, the trial judge did not abuse his discretion in admitting items found along the chain-link fence adjacent to the building a few days later, into evidence for the consideration of the jury. Ward v. State, 35 Ark. App. 148, 816 S.W.2d 173 (1991).

In prosecution for capital murder and first-degree battery by poison, trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the bottle of rat poison. Weaver v. State, 324 Ark. 290, 920 S.W.2d 491 (1996).

In a medical malpractice action brought after her husband died from surgery, evidence that a wife was prohibited from introducing was completely relevant and essential to her cause of action, and its “prejudice” was not unfair where she attached copies of a number of documents that contained evidence of her husband’s surgeon’s mental impairment, abuse of nitrous oxide gas, and use of Prozac at or before the time of the surgery, excerpts from the surgeon’s testimony before the medical board, his sealed medical records, and the affidavits of two doctor’s who both opined that, on the day of the surgery, the surgeon was impaired and that he breached the applicable standard of care. Turner v. Northwest Ark. Neurosurgery Clinic, P.A., 84 Ark. App. 93, 133 S.W.3d 417 (2003).

Where injured truck driver had described his injuries from a 1999 accident by stating they were insubstantial, but the 2000 demand letter stemming from that accident indicated that he had suffered substantial injuries similar to those he sustained in the 2001 accident, the 2000 demand letter was admissible for impeachment purposes at the damages trial for the 2001 accident; it was also reasonable for the 2004 jury to know the extent of truck driver’s claims of injuries from the 1999 accident. House v. Volunteer Transp., Inc., 365 Ark. 11, 223 S.W.3d 798 (2006).

During defendant’s trial for committing a terroristic act, the trial court erred in excluding testimony from defendant’s mother regarding a computer-generated threat to defendant’s life; the testimony was relevant to the issue of self-defense. However, defendant failed to show prejudice by the ruling. McKeever v. State, 367 Ark. 374, 240 S.W.3d 583 (2006).

Circuit court properly allowed car manufacturer to introduce Japanese and Canadian reports on sudden acceleration into evidence in mother’s defective design action as the evidence was relevant to support manufacturer’s claim that it did not act with malice in response to mother’s request for punitive damages; the evidence’s relevance was not outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice because the mother had ample opportunity to prepare to defend against the reports, as their admission was a contested issue until and throughout the trial. Chapman v. Ford Motor Co., 368 Ark. 328, 245 S.W.3d 123 (2006).

In a trespass to timber action, a circuit court did not err in allowing the landowner’s expert to testify as to the fair market value of all of the timber removed from the property, including that which was removed prior to the date the land was transferred to a trust, even though the landowner could not recover for timber removed prior to that date, because the evidence was relevant to prove defendants’ wrongful conduct under this rule for purposes of an award of treble damages under § 18-60-102, of double damages under § 15-32-301, and of punitive damages. Travis Lumber Co. v. Deichman, 2009 Ark. 299, 319 S.W.3d 239 (2009).

Counsel was not ineffective for failing to use photographs showing a victim at a party in the days after her rape because the photographs were of questionable relevance; the fact that she did not, in defendant’s view, look like a victim some days after the event was irrelevant to the question of whether he raped her. Prater v. State, 2012 Ark. 164, 402 S.W.3d 68 (2012).

Because defendant challenged his daughter’s physician regarding the extent of her developmental disabilities as a result of her injuries that he was accused of inflicting, the jury was entitled to see her and draw its own conclusions about her physical challenges; such evidence was relevant. Hoodenpyle v. State, 2013 Ark. App. 375, 428 S.W.3d 547 (2013).

Evidence defendant sought to admit was improperly excluded, as evidence that there was DNA from more than one individual on several pieces of evidence, as the evidence that defendant sought to admit challenged the credibility of the evidence introduced by the State to connect defendant to the murder, there a direct link between the DNA evidence proffered by defendant and the crimes at issue, and the evidence corroborated defendant’s testimony that a third-party was responsible for the crimes. Harmon v. State, 2014 Ark. 391, 441 S.W.3d 891 (2014).

Appeal of whether it was error to allow an employee who observed defendant attacking the victim to testify how she had been personally affected would be wholly frivolous because the circuit court carefully considered the evidence that the State sought to introduce and carefully limited its scope, and the decision it rendered was well within the bounds of its discretion. Jones v. State, 2017 Ark. 266 (2017).

Trial court properly denied appellant post-conviction relief because he failed to offer a meritorious basis for an objection to the admission of shell casings collected at the crime scene and of photos of the house; there was testimony about the collection of the shells following the shooting and that the photos accurately depicted the scene at the time, and the shells were relevant because they corroborated the officer’s testimony and aided the jury in understanding the testimony. Lee v. State, 2017 Ark. 337, 532 S.W.3d 43 (2017).

Circuit court did not abuse its discretion in admitting text messages from defendant’s cell phone because the text messages were relevant for purposes of corroborating the victim’s testimony and were close in time to the offense. Hill v. State, 2018 Ark. 194, 546 S.W.3d 483 (2018).

Child Rape Victims.

How, when and from whom the children who were rape victims acquired their knowledge of sexual matters did not make it more or less likely that the defendant committed rape, and the trial court did not abuse its discretion in its ruling that the proffered testimony was not relevant or material. Griswold v. State, 304 Ark. 168, 801 S.W.2d 270 (1990).

Defendant's rape conviction was proper because the circuit court did not abuse its discretion in finding the testimony of a supervisor with the Crimes Against Children Division of the Arkansas State Police relevant. The victim did not come forward until after years and years of abuse and the supervisor's testimony explained the typical behaviors of abused children that she had witnessed; she explained that it was common for a child victim to not make a disclosure and that there could be several reasons for that behavior. Chunestudy v. State, 2012 Ark. 222, 408 S.W.3d 55 (2012).

Doctor merely testified that the child victim's injury was caused by a penetrating trauma and was consistent with penetration by a penis into the child victim's vagina. Existing Arkansas law allowed such testimony; although the testimony embraced the ultimate issue, it did not mandate a legal conclusion. The evidence was clearly relevant and not unfairly prejudicial. While the doctor admitted that other penetrating traumas could have caused the injury, such evidence went to the weight of the testimony, not the admissibility of it. Bryles v. State, 2015 Ark. App. 688, 477 S.W.3d 555 (2015).

In a case in which defendant was convicted of four counts of second-degree sexual assault, the circuit court did not abuse its discretion in admitting a witness's testimony. The witness's statement that she saw defendant and the victim doing chores together at the apartment complex defendant lived in and that she saw defendant kissing and massaging the victim and putting his hands up the victim's shirt was relevant evidence of defendant's plan to use his position of authority to gain access to children and touch them for his sexual gratification. Watkins v. State, 2020 Ark. App. 506, 611 S.W.3d 245 (2020).

Circumstantial Evidence.

Where testimony in a prosecution for murder indicated that defendant did not have any paper money with him while at a tavern from which he left with the victim who had been paid and was observed with a sizable amount of paper money in his possession, it was proper to admit into evidence under this rule a blood stained dollar bill found on defendant after his arrest, even though the stain could not be typed, as well as testimony of a serologist to that effect, since that evidence tended to show, as circumstantial evidence, that defendant killed the victim in the course of a robbery. Linder v. State, 273 Ark. 470, 620 S.W.2d 944 (1981).

Where in a prosecution for rape and burglary, there was evidence that a ski cap was found several blocks away from the residence of the victim, that the cap was dry while the ground was wet with dew, and that several hairs found in the cap were similar to the defendant's hair, such evidence was relevant and was properly admitted. Kellensworth v. State, 275 Ark. 252, 631 S.W.2d 1 (1982).

Where the state's theory was that the murders were cult-related, and there was additional evidence about occult practices, a book about the occult and evidence that the defendant had been seen dressed like a wizard provided a circumstantial link and was therefore relevant. Echols v. State, 326 Ark. 917, 936 S.W.2d 509 (1996), cert. denied, 520 U.S. 1244, 117 S. Ct. 1853, 137 L. Ed. 2d 1055 (1997).

It is matters of common knowledge that illicit drug sales are ordinarily cash transactions and that those involved in selling drugs frequently do not conduct such transactions from an ordinary storefront during regular business hours, but instead must be reached at various times and locations; therefore, the trial court could properly conclude that defendant's possession of a significant amount of cash and a pager was relevant to the question of his intent to deliver the cocaine that he possessed. Jackson v. State, 52 Ark. App. 7, 914 S.W.2d 317 (1996).

Where the purpose of evidence is to disclose a motive for killing, anything and everything that might have influenced the commission of the act may, as a rule, be shown; any circumstance that ties a defendant to the crime or raises a possible motive for the crime is independently relevant and admissible as evidence. Morris v. State, 358 Ark. 455, 193 S.W.3d 243 (2004).

Codefendant's Father's Testimony.

In prosecution for possession of marijuana with intent to deliver, trial court correctly permitted codefendant's father to testify that defendant proposed that codefendant admit guilt and defendant would subsequently get him out of jail inasmuch as such testimony supported codefendant's version of the crime, and rebutted defendant's testimony. Sanders v. State, 262 Ark. 595, 559 S.W.2d 704 (1977), aff'd, Arkansas v. Sanders, 442 U.S. 753, 99 S. Ct. 2586, 61 L. Ed. 2d 235 (1979).

Comparative Evidence of Rehabilitation.

In a Miller v. Alabama jury resentencing hearing, the circuit court properly sustained the State's objection to certain testimony because the deputy warden did not know defendant when he was a juvenile, and any evidence comparing defendant's character and subsequent rehabilitation to the character and rehabilitation of other inmates was irrelevant. El-liott v. State, 2021 Ark. 114 (2021).

Corroboration of Accomplice.

Where the testimony of the witnesses clearly showed that the automobile had not been tampered with and was in essentially the same condition as it was when the defendant sold it several days after the homicide, the trial judge did not abuse his discretion in admitting a portion of a bloodstained seat cover into evidence since it was relevant as having a tendency to corroborate the accomplice's testimony. Bly v. State, 267 Ark. 613, 593 S.W.2d 450 (1980).

Corroboration of Confession.

Although every item of evidence to which defendant objected served to corroborate some aspect of the defendant's confession, the evidence was relevant as it was offered by the State to corroborate other evidence. Misskelley v. State, 323 Ark. 449, 915 S.W.2d 702 (1996).

Corroboration of Rape Victim.

In prosecution for rape, the trial court did not err in allowing articles of the defendant's clothing to be introduced into evidence together with testimony that there were human bloodstains on the clothing, where this evidence tended to corroborate the testimony of the rape victim, the police officers, and the medical examiner, and where it also tended to contradict the statement of the defendant that he had been in the car for only a period of time as to allow him to drive three or four blocks. Brewer v. State, 269 Ark. 185, 599 S.W.2d 141 (1980).

Credibility of Witness.

Where a defendant accused of driving while intoxicated alleged that the officer making the arrest treated him abusively, the officer's alleged refusal to administer breathalyzer test after defense attorney's arrival was relevant evidence which the jury should have been allowed to consider as bearing on the officer's credibility. Hice v. State, 11 Ark. App. 184, 668 S.W.2d 552 (1984).

Questions to, and answers by, the defendant and a defense witness regarding their beliefs concerning the court's authority over them were relevant to their credibility as the evidence showed that they questioned the authority of the court to hear the case and that their commitment to tell the truth in a court whose authority they questioned might be doubtful. Fowler v. State, 339 Ark. 207, 5 S.W.3d 10 (1999), cert. denied, 529 U.S. 1055, 120 S. Ct. 1558, 146 L. Ed. 2d 462 (2000).

In a witness bribery case, a trial court erred in excluding evidence that the state's main witness could have been biased due to a quiet title lawsuit two years earlier between the witness's parents and the defendant's parents. Paschal v. State, 2012 Ark. 127, 388 S.W.3d 429 (2012).

Defendant's State of Mind.

The trial court in a first-degree murder case properly excluded the opinion of the arresting officer that the defendant was "scared to death" at the time of his arrest, despite the fact that Rule 701 permits even lay witnesses to describe whether a defendant was angry, nervous or scared, since the defendant's state of mind after the shooting has no relevance under this rule and Rule 402, tending to make the existence of a consequential fact more or less probable than it would be without the evidence, and since the excluded testimony was merely repetitious to that presented by the defendant himself as to his actions after the shooting. Graham v. State, 2 Ark. App. 266, 621 S.W.2d 4 (1981).

Defendant's attempt to induce the victim to drop the charges with an offer of restitution, as evidence of defendant's knowledge of his own guilt, was probative evidence not outweighed by the danger of its unfair prejudice. Wallace v. State, 55 Ark. App. 114, 932 S.W.2d 345 (1996).

In a prosecution for capital felony murder, evidence the defendant was receiving Social Security checks for a mental disability was inadmissible to show lack of mental capacity, absent a showing that the standard for determining entitlement to such aid was the same as the statutory description of lack of capacity to engage in criminal misconduct. Bowden v. State, 328 Ark. 15, 940 S.W.2d 494 (1997).

Evidence of a defendant's mental condition, even if it does not show mental disease or defect sufficient to constitute a defense, is relevant on the issue of the culpable mental state. Sharp v. State, 90 Ark. App. 81, 204 S.W.3d 68 (2005).

Trial court did not err during defendant's trial for aggravated robbery in granting the state's motion in limine restricting evidence of a subsequent murder in support of defendant's affirmative defense of duress because even if evidence of the murder was relevant, and therefore potentially admissible, Ark. R. Evid. 405(b) would have kept it out because the specific instance of conduct was not relevant to the defense; a murder by another person that occurred three hours after the robberies could not have affected defendant's state of mind during the preceding robberies. Bell v. State, 2010 Ark. App. 814, 379 S.W.3d 748 (2010).

Circuit court properly overruled defendant's objection to the admission of a police officer's testimony about a statement defendant had made prior to the murder of his wife because the primary issue to be decided by the jury at trial was defendant's mental state at the time he shot the victim, the statement was admissible to show the course of conduct between defendant and the victim at the relevant point in time, defendant erroneously focused on only a portion of the entire statement that was admitted, and he was not unfairly prejudiced by the officer's testimony. Scott v. State, 2015 Ark. App. 614, 474 S.W.3d 516 (2015).

Discretion of Court.

The Supreme Court will not reverse a ruling on relevancy unless it finds an abuse of the trial court's discretion in the matter. Hamblin v. State, 268 Ark. 497, 597 S.W.2d 589 (1980).

A ruling on relevancy is discretionary with the trial court and its decision will not be reversed unless an abuse of the trial court's discretion in the matter is found. Kellensworth v. State, 278 Ark. 261, 644 S.W.2d 933 (1983); James v. State, 11 Ark. App. 1, 665 S.W.2d 883 (1984); Dooley v. Cecil Edwards Constr. Co., 13 Ark. App. 170, 681 S.W.2d 399 (1984); Shelter Mut. Ins. Co. v. Tucker, 295 Ark. 260, 748 S.W.2d 136 (1988); Demarest v. State, 25 Ark. App. 203, 755 S.W.2d 577 (1988); James v. James, 29 Ark. App. 226, 780 S.W.2d 346 (1989); Skiver v. State, 37 Ark. App. 146, 826 S.W.2d 309 (1992).

A trial court's decision regarding relevancy is entitled to great weight and will be reversed only if the court abused its discretion. Dixon v. State, 311 Ark. 613, 846 S.W.2d 170 (1993).

In a capital murder prosecution arising from the shooting of a police officer, the court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to allow expert testimony that childhood abuse of the defendant led to a state of mind in which the defendant acted impulsively in response to a perceived attack, given evidence that the defendant was crouched beside a stolen vehicle he had been driving while facing an officer when he turned and shot another officer who was about to apprehend him. Ford v. State, 334 Ark. 385, 976 S.W.2d 915 (1998).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in excluding the proffered testimony of a witness who purportedly would have corroborated defendant's assertion that officers beat him beside the road where that witness could not testify to having seen any such physical contact and could not positively identify either the officers or defendant. Miles v. State, 348 Ark. 544, 75 S.W.3d 677 (2002).

Entrapment Defense.

Information, amended information and arrest warrants allegedly filed and issued prior to the existence of any conspiracy on the part of defendants were relevant to the issue of entrapment, and it was an abuse of discretion for the trial judge to refuse to admit them. Sweat v. State, 5 Ark. App. 284, 635 S.W.2d 296 (1982).

Where there was evidence to suggest that the initial inducement to commit the offense charged (possession of marijuana with intent to deliver) came from police officers, and taped conversations which the officers had with third party indicated that the officers used him as a "go-between" with the defendants, as some of the statements made during the taped conversations were material to the defendants' claims of entrapment, it was error for the trial judge to refuse to allow the video tapes and audio recordings into evidence, even though much of the material on the tapes was irrelevant. Sweat v. State, 5 Ark. App. 284, 635 S.W.2d 296 (1982).

Evidence having any tendency to make the existence of entrapment more probable is admissible. Young v. State, 308 Ark. 647, 826 S.W.2d 814 (1992), abrogated as stated in Owens v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 109, 515 S.W.3d 625 (2017).

Defendant could not demonstrate any prejudice from the trial court's order granting the State's motion to prohibit him from attacking the credibility of a criminal informant because the jury heard, through the informant's own testimony, that the informant had an extensive criminal history; although it could make a would-be criminal more likely to trust an informant who had a reputation, that was not the same thing as inducing one to act through persuasion. Owens v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 109, 515 S.W.3d 625 (2017).

Trial court did not err in allowing the director of the drug task force to testify that drugs constituted something of value because it was appropriate rebuttal testimony as defendant denied taking any money but conceded he received a fraction of the drugs as payment; despite defendant's entrapment defense, the State was never relieved of its burden to prove that defendant facilitated the transaction in exchange for money or something of value beyond a reasonable doubt. Owens v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 109, 515 S.W.3d 625 (2017).

Evidence of Abortion.

Evidence of witness' abortions excluded where neither the pregnancy nor the abortions were relevant to any issue in the case, because they did not go to the credibility, believability, truthfulness, or veracity of the witness under this rule or Evid. Rules 608 and 609; and, in addition, even if relevant, the prejudicial impact would outweigh any probative value under Evid. Rule 403 because of the controversial nature of abortion. Billett v. State, 317 Ark. 346, 877 S.W.2d 913 (1994).

Evidence of Alternative Perpetrators.

Circuit court did not abuse its discretion in excluding photographs of footprints at the crime scene as evidence of alternative perpetrators because the footprints were not sufficiently linked to the murders to be relevant, and, in any event, there was testimony regarding the existence of the footprints. Barefield v. State, 2019 Ark. 149, 574 S.W.3d 142, cert. denied, 140 S. Ct. 671, 205 L. Ed. 2d 442 (2019).

Circuit court did not abuse its discretion by excluding testimony that merely suggested that others could have had a motive for the crimes or that another person had been publicly accused of having killed two unnamed men because defendant could not connect the proffered evidence to the murders. Barefield v. State, 2019 Ark. 149, 574 S.W.3d 142, cert. denied, 140 S. Ct. 671, 205 L. Ed. 2d 442 (2019).

Defendant did not show a deprivation of his constitutional right to present a defense by the circuit court's exclusion of evidence of alternative perpetrators; the constitution permits the exclusion of evidence that is repetitive, only marginally relevant, or poses an undue risk of harassment, prejudice, or confusion of the issues, and evidence of third-party guilt that is irrelevant, or which is relevant but substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice or confusion because it is not sufficiently linked to the crime in question, is prohibited. Barefield v. State, 2019 Ark. 149, 574 S.W.3d 142, cert. denied, 140 S. Ct. 671, 205 L. Ed. 2d 442 (2019).

Evidence of Dangerous Instrumentalities.

The instrumentality used to inflict fear is patently relevant to crimes of rape, kidnapping and aggravated robbery, all of which include an element of force for perpetration. Brooks v. State, 308 Ark. 660, 827 S.W.2d 119 (1992).

Knife found at crime site was relevant to corroborate the testimony of the victim concerning stabbings, and no prejudice resulted to the defendant. Brooks v. State, 308 Ark. 660, 827 S.W.2d 119 (1992).

On trial for solicitation to commit first-degree murder, evidence of the instrumentality to be used in the murder was entirely relevant, since it clearly evidenced the purpose of the solicitation as well as the means that defendant promoted to perpetrate foul play. As such, a simulated bomb and a videotape depicting its detonation qualified as proof of a material fact under this rule. Loy v. State, 310 Ark. 33, 832 S.W.2d 499 (1992).

Defendant's convictions for capital murder and committing a terroristic act were appropriate because evidence of ammunition taken from his former home was relevant and admissible since the shell casings at the scene of the drive-by shooting were the exact types found at defendant's former home and that related to his and his alleged accomplices' knowledge of those types of ammunition, their access thereto, and to their guilt. Banks v. State, 2010 Ark. 108, 366 S.W.3d 341 (2010).

Evidence of Death.

Under this rule, a vivid and detailed explanation of the death of a fetus was neither relevant nor properly admissible. Meadows v. State, 291 Ark. 105, 722 S.W.2d 584 (1987).

In a murder case, the court did not err by allowing the state to question the medical examiner about strangulation as a cause of death where the issue was critical to the state's case and defendant suffered no unfair prejudice; defendant confessed to his son that he got his wife in a choke hold and did not let her go, the jury was not misled by testimony, and the medical examiner's opinion on the cause of death was highly probative. Wyles v. State, 357 Ark. 530, 182 S.W.3d 142 (2004).

Evidence of Drug Use.

In defendant's manslaughter case stemming from a head-on collision that occurred as a result of defendant's reckless driving, the trial court did not err in permitting the state to introduce into evidence pipes with cocaine residue that were found in defendant's vehicle because the drug paraphernalia was relevant to the state's theory of the case that defendant was driving while under the influence of drugs and because the evidence made it more probable that defendant had ingested cocaine at some point prior to the accident. Rollins v. State, 2009 Ark. 484, 347 S.W.3d 20 (2009).

Evidence of Identity.

The discovery of the rape victim's charm bracelet in a room which had been occupied by the defendant after the crime had a tendency to make his identity as the perpetrator more probable than it would have been without that evidence; therefore, the charm bracelet was relevant and admissible. Kellensworth v. State, 278 Ark. 261, 644 S.W.2d 933 (1983).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting a portion of a 911 dispatch log into evidence because the court determined that the probative value of the dispatch log substantially outweighed the danger of unfair prejudice, as the log corroborated the victims' testimony that defendant was involved in a robbery and burglary. Moreover, the identification of defendant by name in the 911 calls undermined defendant's theory of mistaken identity. Turner v. State, 2014 Ark. App. 428, 439 S.W.3d 88 (2014).

Evidence of Intent.

Documents written by the defendant describing aggravated robbery scenarios were relevant to the crime since whether defendant intended to commit aggravated robbery was a material issue. Cook v. State, 345 Ark. 264, 45 S.W.3d 820 (2001).

In defendant's stalking case, the court properly admitted testimony regarding the shredding of the victim's patio furniture and the "keying" of her truck because there was evidence that defendant had engaged in a number of harassing tactics throughout the course of the case, and the evidence of damage to her personal property, which began after the victim and defendant separated, had a tendency to show that he was engaging in conduct in order to harass her. Lowry v. State, 90 Ark. App. 333, 205 S.W.3d 830, rev'd, 364 Ark. 6, 216 S.W.3d 101 (2005).

Defendant's convictions for capital murder and kidnapping were appropriate because the police officers' testimony linking defendant to a maroon vehicle did not violate Ark. R. Evid. 404(b) since it was not offered for the purpose of showing that he was a bad character, nor was it offered to show a pattern of behavior; rather, it was offered to demonstrate defendant's identity as the driver of a vehicle that was seen near both crime scenes. The evidence was relevant and not too remote in time from the commission of the crimes. Gilcrease v. State, 2009 Ark. 298, 318 S.W.3d 70 (2009).

Evidence of Kinship.

Where one of the issues presented to the court was whether a particular person was the heir at law of a particular decedent, and one witness testified decedent had told her she had had an illegitimate son named after one of their cousins, a birth certificate for such an illegitimate son with that name is relevant as tending to make this fact more probable within this rule. Sims v. First Nat'l Bank, 264 Ark. 378, 571 S.W.2d 600 (1978).

Evidence of Rape.

Where the similarity between the microscopic particle found on the sheets and those found on defendant's clothing when he was arrested had a tendency to make his identity as the rapist more probable than it would have been without that evidence, the evidence was therefore relevant. Parker v. State, 266 Ark. 13, 582 S.W.2d 34 (1979).

The trial court in a rape prosecution properly excluded, on the basis of relevancy, testimony offered by the defendant's sister that she had observed the victim masturbating approximately two weeks prior to the alleged rape, where there was no evidence presented which indicated that the victim's injuries were caused by masturbation and where the examining physician testified unequivocally that the injuries occurred at most, three to four days prior to the alleged rape. Pruitt v. State, 8 Ark. App. 350, 652 S.W.2d 51 (1983).

During defendant's trial for the rape of his nine-year-old stepdaughter, the trial court correctly applied the pedophile exception to Ark. R. Evid. 404(b) when admitting testimony from another young woman, who testified that she had been molested by digital penetration by defendant when she was a child, because the similarities were significant and probative on the issue of defendant's deviate sexual impulses; the probative value of the evidence was not substantially outweighed by any danger of unfair prejudice. Eubanks v. State, 2009 Ark. 170, 303 S.W.3d 450 (2009).

Evidence of Rehabilitation.

The trial court did not err in excluding evidence of the defendant's rehabilitation through counseling subsequent to crimes of carnal abuse and sexual abuse since such evidence did not extenuate or reduce the degree of moral culpability but was merely offered to show that defendant was unlikely to commit such crimes again. James v. State, 11 Ark. App. 1, 665 S.W.2d 883 (1984).

Evidence of Robbery.

Evidence that the victim had been robbed of $68.00 and that defendant was found shortly thereafter with $52.52 on him was relevant and admissible. Logan v. State, 264 Ark. 920, 576 S.W.2d 203 (1979).

Items which were seized pursuant to a search warrant and then identified by victim as those things which were in his automobile when it was stolen were relevant and admissible in prosecution for robbery and theft where there was testimony connecting defendant with items and vehicles. Phillips v. State, 271 Ark. 96, 607 S.W.2d 664 (1980).

Trial court did not err in admitting testimony about the victim's subsequent death a month after the robbery because the evidence of the victim's death was clearly relevant to prove death or serious physical injury as an element of the offense of aggravated robbery, § 5-12-103. Medlock v. State, 79 Ark. App. 447, 89 S.W.3d 357 (2002).

In a capital murder case, testimony of witness who overheard a conversation about the location of a planned robbery was relevant and not unduly prejudicial because it placed defendant at the scene of a later double homicide. Harris v. State, 366 Ark. 190, 234 S.W.3d 273 (2006).

Evidence of Similar Occurrences.

Evidence of similar occurrences is admissible only when it is demonstrated that the events arose out of the same or substantially similar circumstances; and the burden rests on the party offering such evidence to prove that the necessary similarity of conditions exists. Houston Gen. Ins. Co. v. Arkansas La. Gas Co., 267 Ark. 544, 592 S.W.2d 445 (1980).

Where the defendant gas company offered no evidence that the conditions surrounding other fires, including one fire ascertained as being caused by arson, were similar to the fire involved in this case, the trial court erred in permitting the local fire chief to testify on behalf of the defendant company concerning his investigation as to the cause of several other explosions and fires which had occurred in the vicinity a few months before and after the explosion and fire causing the damages here, since that testimony as presented was not relevant to the cause of this particular fire. Houston Gen. Ins. Co. v. Arkansas La. Gas Co., 267 Ark. 544, 592 S.W.2d 445 (1980).

The trial court in a personal injury action arising from an automobile collision did not abuse its discretion in excluding the proffered testimony of the investigating officer, regarding similar automobile accidents in the near vicinity within the general time frame, which was offered to show that weather conditions contributed to the accident. Williams v. Gates, 275 Ark. 381, 630 S.W.2d 34 (1982).

In a contract action brought by a general contractor and a subcontractor to recover the value of work performed in Arkansas, testimony about the existence of a lawsuit in Oklahoma between the same parties for construction work performed there was relevant since it suggested a reason why defendants would refuse to pay the contractors for work performed in Arkansas. Being relevant and not unfairly prejudicial, this evidence was admissible. Dooley v. Cecil Edwards Constr. Co., 13 Ark. App. 170, 681 S.W.2d 399 (1984).

Before evidence of subsequent incidents may be received into evidence, a proper foundation demonstrating the probative relevancy of this information must be presented. Turner v. Laminata, 297 Ark. 361, 761 S.W.2d 929 (1988).

In a sexual assault case, introduction of evidence that defendant had stopped another church member and persuaded that victim to go to an isolated area where unwanted sexual advances were made was relevant to show modus operandi and lack of consent by the second victim and, as such, did not violate Ark. R. Evid. 403. Davis v. State, 362 Ark. 34, 207 S.W.3d 474 (2005).

Where the employee allegedly sustained a left-knee injury while working at a restaurant, the employer contested her workers' compensation claim, arguing that it had no notice of the injury. The Arkansas Workers' Compensation Commission did not err by allowing the employee to cross-examine the restaurant owner about other instances where he denied receiving notice about an alleged work injury; evidence of similar occurrences was admissible under this rule. Steak House v. Weigel, 101 Ark. App. 81, 270 S.W.3d 365 (2007).

Although the testimony of the three witnesses regarding prior incidents involving defendant did not involve kidnapping, given the similarities between the events, including missing underwear, deceptive tactics to gain entry into a witness's home, use of a latex glove, and his use of a pellet gun and his threat to attack another witness's husband, under this rule and § 16-97-103(5), the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the testimony at the sentencing phase of the trial. Huff v. State, 2012 Ark. 388, 423 S.W.3d 608 (2012).

Circuit court did not abuse its discretion when it excluded the testimony of the driver's expert witness about rollover accidents in three other cases because the driver's theory for proving the seat-belt buckle's defective condition depended on the transmission of gravitational forces through the frame of the vehicle to the buckle stalk, and in the other cases, there were notable differences in the length of the buckle stalks and the frames of the vehicles involved. Cantrell v. Toyota Motor Corp., 2018 Ark. App. 335, 553 S.W.3d 157 (2018).

Evidence of Violation of Regulation.

Absence of a state-mandated lifeline was relevant under this rule as: (1) the violation of a government regulation was evidence of negligence; (2) the purposes of a lifeline were to demarcate the shallow and deep ends of the pool and to provide a swimmer with something to grasp onto, which were relevant to proximate cause; and (3) the substantial probative value of the violation was not substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice under Ark. R. Evid. 403. Bishop v. Tariq, Inc., 2011 Ark. App. 445, 384 S.W.3d 659 (2011).

Evidence of Weapons.

In a capital murder trial, the court erred by admitting evidence of the .22 caliber rifle seized from defendant's house where the rifle was not the murder weapon and admission of evidence of the rifle did not support the state's theory that defendant disposed of the actual murder weapon; however, evidence of .22 caliber ammunition was relevant to prove that defendant possessed the means to kill the victim. Barrett v. State, 354 Ark. 187, 119 S.W.3d 485 (2003).

Even if Ark. R. Evid. 404(b) did apply, evidence that defendant possessed a .380 caliber handgun was certainly relevant in light of the fact that a .380 caliber shell hull was recovered at the scene of the crime and the trial court did not err in admitting the testimony. White v. State, 2009 Ark. 374, 326 S.W.3d 421 (2009).

Codefendant's gun possession charge was not relevant under this rule as defendant did not assert at the trial level, and did not assert on appeal, that the codefendant actually shot two victims; the defense was a general denial that defendant had anything to do with the crime, and whether the codefendant later possessed a gun, unrelated to the crimes defendant was accused of perpetrating, had little, if any, value considering defendant's blanket denial of participation in the crime. Jackson v. State, 429 S.W.3d 176 (Ark. 2011).

Evidence of Weight of Controlled Substance.

Crime lab analyst's report was relevant because the weight of the marijuana was an element of the offense under § 5-64-439(b)(3), and the prejudicial nature of the evidence did not outweigh its probative value. Brown v. State, 2014 Ark. App. 474, 442 S.W.3d 8 (2014).

Exclusion of Irrelevant Testimony.

Trial court did not err in excluding any mention of a doctor who had been involved as a consultant and legal assistant on a patient's malpractice case because the fact that the doctor participated in consulting with two of the patient's experts had no relevance nor had the fact that he had been convicted of drug possession, causing him to lose his medical license. McCoy v. Montgomery, 370 Ark. 333, 259 S.W.3d 430 (2007).

Although if any part of a malpractice settlement received by a father was paid for loss of consortium to his new wife, it would have been error for a circuit court to base a child-support award on the entire settlement, the circuit court did not err in excluding the proffered evidence regarding the settlement because the proffered evidence did not have any tendency to prove that any portion of the settlement was issued for that element of damages. Fusher v. Fusher, 103 Ark. App. 158, 287 S.W.3d 624 (2008).

Defendant's conviction for murder in the first degree was proper because there was no error in refusing to allow certain testimony from a witness since the excluded testimony did nothing more than offer a motive or opportunity for a third party to commit the murder. There was nothing in the excluded testimony that could have implicated another individual in the victim's murder and the proffered testimony did not even identify the male as being the other individual, describing only a threat from a male in a red shirt. Boykins v. State, 2013 Ark. App. 463 (2013).

In awarding permanent custody of a son to the father, knowing when the father began having sexual relations with the mother was not relevant because it did not make any fact that was of consequence to the determination of the action more probable or less probable than it would be without the evidence. Gaskill v. Ark. Dep't of Human Servs., 2013 Ark. App. 610 (2013).

Because there was no question as to the identity of the accused, the victim, or any of the key witnesses, and defendant did not show how the witness's modus operandi in the other alleged bad acts, which purportedly occurred after the August 2009 shooting incident, was relevant to any material issue in the current capital murder case, the circuit court did not abuse its discretion in excluding the evidence of the witness's other bad acts. Allen v. State, 2013 Ark. 396 (2013).

Fingerprint Evidence.

Where trial court refused to allow defendant to introduce evidence which was admittedly hearsay because the FBI fingerprint expert was not available to testify that defendant's fingerprints had not been found at the scene of a robbery, while those of his accomplice were allowed into evidence, the trial court was correct in so admitting the accomplice's fingerprints, since, in light of defendant's testimony that he and accomplice had served time together in a penitentiary and had seen each other frequently after their release, the fact that the accomplice's fingerprints were found at the robbery scene was relevant under this rule. Loane v. State, 271 Ark. 797, 611 S.W.2d 190 (1981).

Harmless Error.

In a case involving terroristic acts under § 5-13-310(a)(1), the exclusion of a computer-generated threat to bolster a self-defense claim under § 5-2-606 was error since the evidence was relevant; however, the error was harmless since evidence of other threats could have been elicited. McKeever v. State, 367 Ark. 374, 240 S.W.3d 583 (2006).

Although the gay-themed books were improperly admitted into evidence, any error was harmless in light of the wealth of other evidence of defendant's homosexual lifestyle; further, pornographic videos and photographs were properly admitted where two victims were in the photographs and they corroborated other victims' testimony. Simmons v. State, 95 Ark. App. 114, 234 S.W.3d 321 (2006).

Even if pornographic materials found by the police were not relevant during defendant's trial for sexual assault in the fourth degree, their admission was harmless because there was ample evidence aside from the pornographic materials that defendant committed the offense; the child sexual assault victim testified that she and defendant had sex and he never challenged that testimony. Magness v. State, 2012 Ark. App. 609, 424 S.W.3d 395 (2012).

In a case involving drugs and weapons offenses, it was error to allow a video of law enforcement officers firing a weapon found in the search of the home to be played for the jury and admitted into evidence because it was not relevant to any of the specific offenses charged since the offenses did not require that the weapon be fireable; however, the error was harmless because the evidence against defendant was overwhelming and defendant's sentences fell within the statutory sentence ranges. Gutierrez v. State, 2015 Ark. App. 516, 472 S.W.3d 147 (2015).

Testimony concerning defendant's romantic relationship with another man was not relevant to the charge of commercial burglary, as testimony regarding defendant's actions could have come from any roommate who lived in defendant's household; the error in admitting the evidence was harmless, however, in light of the overwhelming admissible evidence of defendant's guilt, including testimony that defendant had given his keys to a student to break into professors' offices and obtain exams and defendant did not deny the allegations when confronted but just resigned. Gilleen v. State, 2015 Ark. App. 698, 478 S.W.3d 255 (2015).

Inadmissible Evidence.

Evidence of acts of individuals while watching films not at issue at the trial could not be considered relevant evidence in the determination of whether movies and the magazine obtained from defendant's store were obscene material. Oglesby v. State, 299 Ark. 403, 773 S.W.2d 443 (1989).

Proffered publications properly excluded. Bice v. Hartford Accident & Indem. Co., 300 Ark. 122, 777 S.W.2d 213 (1989).

Circuit court did not err in excluding the finding of the Arkansas State Board of Chiropractic Examiners that the physical therapist was practicing chiropractic medicine without a license because the board did not find that his practice of chiropractic medicine was negligent or below the standard of care; the court found that the fact that the therapist had committed a statutory violation would have been unfairly prejudicial. Fryar v. Touchstone Physical Therapy, Inc., 365 Ark. 295, 229 S.W.3d 7 (2006).

Trial court did not err in sustaining state's objection that the terms of the civil dispute regarding a loan and the collateral for the loan were irrelevant and in refusing to permit defendant to question the victim concerning the property that had been collateral for the loan because, even if the victim had lied regarding the terms of the loan, that would be no defense to the crimes for which he was convicted, which included kidnapping, terroristic threatening, and aggravated assault. Tarpley v. State, 97 Ark. App. 122, 245 S.W.3d 192 (2006).

During defendant's trial for the rape of a nine-year-old girl, who tested positive for chlamydia, the trial court did not err in not allowing defendant to ask the victim's mother, who had a sexual relationship with defendant, if she had tested positive for chlamydia; the question of whether the mother had a positive diagnosis for chlamydia had no relevance to any issue at trial. Kelley v. State, 375 Ark. 483, 292 S.W.3d 297 (2009).

Defendant's conviction for murder in the second degree was proper because there was no error in the circuit court's refusal to allow a letter into evidence that denied a handgun permit to the victim. The exhibit had been generated more than 10 years prior to the trial, making it too remote in time to be relevant and the appellate court found that there was no abuse of discretion in refusing to admit the disputed letter. Johnson v. State, 2010 Ark. App. 153, 375 S.W.3d 12 (2010).

In a manslaughter case, the court properly excluded evidence of the victim's alleged violent propensities because defendant admitted that he fired his gun without knowing who was riding toward him; therefore, because he did not know who he was shooting, he could not have considered the victim's background and state of mind before firing his weapon. Accordingly, such evidence would only have served to prejudice the victim. Sipe v. State, 2012 Ark. App. 261, 404 S.W.3d 164 (2012).

Appellant failed to provide sufficient argument as to why testimony regarding leasehold improvements was relevant; the fact that appellant made expenditures to improve the leased space did not have any tendency to make the fact that appellee was entitled to possession under the lease more or less probable, and thus the testimony was irrelevant. Wheatley v. Dixie

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in finding testimony regarding defendant's life history too remote and thus irrelevant; whether or not defendant was a good person before his drug addiction did nothing to demonstrate if he was a normally law-abiding person 10 years later when the crimes were committed. Owens v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 109, 515 S.W.3d 625 (2017).

Circuit court did not abuse its discretion by excluding evidence of defendant's knowledge of potentially violent white supremacists breaking into his property to explain why he was armed on the night of the murders; the evidence simply established that, on the basis of tattoos, witnesses told defendant that they believed the victims were associated with white supremacists and that white supremacists were violent. Barefield v. State, 2019 Ark. 149, 574 S.W.3d 142, cert. denied, 140 S. Ct. 671, 205 L. Ed. 2d 442 (2019).

Inference of Guilt.

When a defendant voluntarily offers an untrue exculpatory statement or explanation, it may be considered as circumstantial evidence of not only one's belief that his case is weak, but also of guilt itself. Flowers v. State, 30 Ark. App. 204, 785 S.W.2d 242 (1990).

Proof that defendant continued to cover up the circumstances of victim's death, by lying to the police about her last encounter with him, served directly to rebut defendant's plea of self-defense and was evidence from which the jury might infer a consciousness of guilt on her part, and trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting this evidence. Flowers v. State, 30 Ark. App. 204, 785 S.W.2d 242 (1990).

Defendant's convictions for capital murder and committing a terroristic act were appropriate pursuant to Ark. R. Evid. 404(b) because evidence of another drive-by shooting that defendant allegedly ordered while incarcerated was admissible since it reflected his consciousness of guilt and was independently relevant. Attempts to tamper with or silence witnesses to thwart prosecution for the charged offense was evidence of consciousness of guilt and constituted relevant evidence. Banks v. State, 2010 Ark. 108, 366 S.W.3d 341 (2010).

Limitation on Liability.

An insurer, which had adopted an underwriting policy limiting the coverage on a single item of men's jewelry to the sum of $2,500, was entitled to place that information before the jury for the jury's consideration along with all of the other competent evidence, in an action to recover on a homeowner's policy for theft of a ring. Northwestern Nat'l Ins. Co. v. Stanley, 268 Ark. 1058, 598 S.W.2d 439 (Ct. App. 1980).

Motive.

Testimony concerning defendant's relationship to militaristic organization, the involvement with weapons, and the methods of operation was held relevant to show motive, etc., in larger plan to obtain money for organization in trial for robbery and murder of pawnbroker. Snell v. State, 290 Ark. 503, 721 S.W.2d 628 (1986), cert. denied, 484 U.S. 872, 108 S. Ct. 202, 98 L. Ed. 2d 153 (1987).

In a criminal prosecution for first-degree murder, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in allowing tattoo evidence at trial; the tattoo, which read "Death Before Dishonor," was probative of defendant's motive in the shooting of the victim following an altercation. Morris v. State, 358 Ark. 455, 193 S.W.3d 243 (2004).

Defendant's conviction for capital murder was proper because when the purpose of evidence was to show motive, anything and everything that might have influenced the commission of the might could be shown. Because part of the state's theory of the case was that defendant killed the victim because she was pregnant with his child, the circuit court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the evidence of her pregnancy. Anderson v. State, 2011 Ark. 461, 385 S.W.3d 214 (2011).

Negligence.

In an action arising from an incident in which a piece of plexiglass flew off of the defendant's truck's camper shell and stuck the plaintiff's vehicle, information sought by the plaintiff about the defendant's prior traffic violations or problems with insurance were in no way relevant to the issue of whether he was negligent. Barker v. Clark, 343 Ark. 8, 33 S.W.3d 476 (2000).

No Prejudicial Error.

Admission of testimony about pills did not make the act of possession of marijuana with intent to sell more probable or less probable than it would have been without the testimony, and thus was not prejudicial error. Leonard v. State, 265 Ark. 937, 582 S.W.2d 15 (1979).

In capital murder trial testimony that witness had sold a .22-caliber revolver to defendant's wife and another one to the deceased, should have been admitted pursuant to this rule; however, the error was not prejudicial where the same evidence was introduced by other witnesses and was properly before the jury for its consideration. Mackey v. State, 279 Ark. 307, 651 S.W.2d 82 (1983).

Admission of irrelevant evidence did not warrant reversal where prejudicial effect was minimal and evidence of guilt overwhelming. Scherer v. State, 294 Ark. 227, 742 S.W.2d 877 (1988).

Trial court did not err in admitting evidence of items found in the victim's car because the items were relevant to help explain who the victim was, as the victim did not testify at trial, and defendant could not show how he was prejudiced by the admission of a headlamp found in the victim's car. Britt v. State, 468 S.W.3d 285 (Ark. Ct. App. 2015).

Circuit court properly admitted into evidence, during the sentencing phase of defendant's trial, conversations regarding "snuff" sex; while the evidence was obviously prejudicial to defendant, the evidence was both relevant and not unduly prejudicial. Defendant was convicted of conspiracy to commit rape of two minor children and he not only expressed his interest in snuff sex during the planning of the act with an undercover police officer, he also indicated that he was interested in performing it with minors. Shreck v. State, 2017 Ark. 39, 510 S.W.3d 750 (2017).

Opinion Testimony.

An eyewitness' opinion testimony as to whether a shooting was accidental or intentional was not objectionable as being irrelevant or a waste of time in a murder prosecution. Mathis v. State, 267 Ark. 904, 591 S.W.2d 679 (Ct. App. 1979), overruled, Rogers v. State, 10 Ark. App. 19, 660 S.W.2d 949 (1983).

Photographs.

A photograph is not inadmissible merely because it is cumulative, and the defendant cannot admit the facts portrayed and thereby prevent the state from putting on its proof. Berry v. State, 290 Ark. 223, 718 S.W.2d 447 (1986); Bradford v. State, 306 Ark. 590, 815 S.W.2d 947 (1991).

The fact that photographs are inflammatory is not alone sufficient reason to exclude them; inflammatory pictures are admissible, in the discretion of the trial judge, if they tend to shed light on any issue, to enable a witness to better describe the objects portrayed or the jury to better understand the testimony, or to corroborate testimony. Berry v. State, 290 Ark. 223, 718 S.W.2d 447 (1986); Bradford v. State, 306 Ark. 590, 815 S.W.2d 947 (1991).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion where it ruled a picture of defendant, charged with possession with intent to distribute, with stacks of money in the room, where he conducted at least one drug transaction, was relevant. Qualls v. State, 306 Ark. 283, 812 S.W.2d 681 (1991).

Photographs which depicted trees growing near power lines a year after the incident in question and in a different site, and which did not depict trees that were blown into power lines after a storm, as was the case in the power outage at issue, did not fairly and correctly depict the situation at issue, and were not probative of the issue of whether the power company failed to clean up a situation after a storm, therefore the trial court erred in accepting the pictures into evidence. Rich Mt. Elec.

Under Evid. Rule 407, pictures which could not be admitted as evidence of negligence might be admitted for the purpose of impeachment; however, a trial court may prohibit their use for impeachment if it deems the evidence irrelevant under this rule, or prejudicial under Evid. Rule 403. Carton v. Missouri Pac. R.R., 315 Ark. 5, 865 S.W.2d 635 (1993).

Photographs showing the murder victim and her wounds were relevant evidence. Weger v. State, 315 Ark. 555, 869 S.W.2d 688 (1994).

In a prosecution alleging that defendant sexually assaulted his seven year old daughter, forced the daughter to have intercourse with her brother, who was also under 14, and made the brother have intercourse with the brother's mother, who was defendant's wife, trial court did not abuse its discretion in allowing the state to introduce photographs of the family home showing the general condition of the home, including the fact that defendant kept photographs of nude women in plain view, as the evidence was relevant and its probative value was not outweighed by the risk of prejudice to the defendant. Clem v. State, 351 Ark. 112, 90 S.W.3d 428 (2002).

In a wrongful death suit, an administratrix for the decedent's estate challenged the admission of 113 photographs by a farm tractor's driver and the tractor owner because the administratrix alleged that the photographs did not properly depict the circumstances at the time of decedent's death. The trial court committed reversible error in admitting the photographs because a foundation for the photographs was not properly laid. McMickle v. Griffin, 369 Ark. 318, 254 S.W.3d 729, reaff'd, 254 S.W.3d 729 (Ark. 2007).

Defendant's conviction for murder in the second degree was proper because admission of photographs taken at the crime scene of various items located in the front passenger seat of the victim's vehicle was proper since the evidence suggested that the crime scene was in a remote location that was secured by officers shortly after the victim's 911 call was made; the testimony presented was sufficient to support a finding that the matter in question was what its proponent claimed. The officer who took the photographs testified that he saw the items in the front passenger seat and that he did not touch them before photographing them; moreover, even if the photographs were improperly admitted, no prejudice occurred because they were merely cumulative evidence. Johnson v. State, 2010 Ark. App. 153, 375 S.W.3d 12 (2010).

Trial court did not err in allowing pictures defendant took on the victim's cell phone after the victim was dead because the pictures went to his state of mind and were relevant to the State's theory that he committed first-degree murder and did not kill the victim in self-defense. Roberts v. State, 2018 Ark. App. 332, 552 S.W.3d 446 (2018).

Pleadings.

Complaints, normally phrased in the most partisan language, are in no conceivable sense evidentiary; this is particularly true in a personal injury case, and one in which punitive damages are sought. Razorback Cab of Ft. Smith, Inc. v. Lingo, 304 Ark. 323, 802 S.W.2d 444 (1991).

Prejudicial Error.

Trial court erred in a medical malpractice action in granting a motion in limine during appellants' opening statement to exclude the decedent's postdischarge medical evidence because by excluding the evidence, which was relevant, the trial court allowed appellants to, at the last minute, be stripped of an entire defense that had been clearly developed throughout the litigation. Bedell v. Williams, 2012 Ark. 75, 386 S.W.3d 493 (2012).

Prejudicial Remark.

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying defendant's motion for a mistrial; although the prosecutor's statement at defendant's trial for rape that the 14-year-old victim was a virgin at the time of the rape was improper as it was irrelevant, defendant failed to show that such a statement was so prejudicial as to warrant a mistrial. Moreover, the trial court instructed the jury that statements or remarks of attorneys were not evidence and to disregard such statements or remarks. Lee v. State, 2015 Ark. App. 616, 474 S.W.3d 882 (2015).

Preservation of Argument.

Although defendant argued that the trial court erred in excluding evidence that the victim had cocaine in his system at the time of the murder, the court agreed with the state that the matter was not preserved for review; nowhere in the record did it show that defendant presented the trial court with the theory that the cocaine in the victim's system was relevant because his death was caused by money he owed a drug dealer. Randle v. State, 372 Ark. 246, 273 S.W.3d 482 (2008).

Prior Activity.

It was error to allow plaintiff to introduce photographs showing that defendant had, prior to the accident, barricaded a bridge similar to the one from which the plaintiff fell. Aluminum Co. of Am. v. Guthrie, 296 Ark. 269, 753 S.W.2d 538 (1988).

Court of appeals deferred to chancellor's decision that testimony that parent had sexually abused another child was irrelevant in custody proceeding, because neither a proper link had been made connecting the allegation to the case at hand nor had a proper investigation been made into the allegations, which were denied by the parent. Rector v. Rector, 58 Ark. App. 132, 947 S.W.2d 389 (1997).

In an action for negligence by the owner of an office building and a tenant against a security company arising from a fire in the building, a lay witness was properly permitted to testify regarding the owner's alleged failure to comply with applicable building codes during a remodeling since evidence regarding fire-safety measures was relevant to the issue of the owner's own liability. Nationsbank, N.A. v. Murray Guard, Inc., 343 Ark. 437, 36 S.W.3d 291 (2001).

In a prosecution for terroristic threatening arising from an incident in which the defendant ordered her son to let two pit bull dogs loose on police officers, it was error, though harmless, for the court to allow a police officer to testify regarding a prior visit to the defendant's home at which several pit bull dogs were engaged in a fight since (1) there was no evidence either that the defendant was present at or knew about the prior incident or that the same officers were involved, and (2) the state of mind of the officer was irrelevant to the charged crime. Lewis v. State, 73 Ark. App. 417, 44 S.W.3d 759 (2001).

In a breach of contract case, the court properly allowed insurer to introduce evidence of homeowner's prior late payments and lapses of her homeowner's policies as it showed that homeowner made only one timely payment on her homeowner's policy between November 2000 and November 2001, allowed the policy to lapse twice before the final lapse in November 2001, and had a long history of late payments on her automobile policy; the evidence was admissible to show homeowner's intent to not make the November 2001 payment on time and to show that a mistake did not occur, and the evidence was not unfairly prejudicial. Jones v. Coker, 90 Ark. App. 151, 204 S.W.3d 554 (2005).

During defendant's trial for permitting the abuse of her minor child, the court did not err in allowing defendant's neighbor to testify because the testimony was probative of the material issue of defendant's failure to take action to prevent abuse to her children; it also corroborated other testimony that defendant left her three children unattended for a couple of days while she and her boyfriend went to Texas. Sullivan v. State, 2012 Ark. 74, 386 S.W.3d 507 (2012).

In defendant's trial for concealing birth under § 5-26-203, the circuit court abused its discretion in allowing discussion of abortion, defendant's abortion history, and evidence that she had ingested medication prior to giving birth where it was undisputed that the child was not born alive, the evidence was irrelevant as to whether she had concealed the birth, and even if relevant, the probative value was substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice given the four-minute verdict. Bynum v. State, 2018 Ark. App. 201, 546 S.W.3d 533 (2018).

Prior Criminal Activity.

Since the introduction of an informant's past criminal activity, which did not involve defendant, simply did not shed any light on the intent of defendant, the testimony was irrelevant. Leonard v. State, 265 Ark. 937, 582 S.W.2d 15 (1979).

During the penalty phase of defendant's trial for driving while intoxicated in violation of § 5-65-103 and refusal to submit to a chemical test in violation of § 5-65-205, the trial court did not err by admitting evidence of his prior convictions for refusal to submit to a chemical test; for purposes of this rule, the evidence was relevant to his sentencing as either character evidence or aggravating circumstances. Williams v. State, 2009 Ark. App. 554 (2009).

At defendant's rape trial, the circuit court did not abuse its discretion in determining that evidence of his prior convictions for carnal abuse of a child, arson, terroristic threatening, and failure to register as a sex offender were admissible under Ark. R. Evid. 609 to impeach defendant. The prior convictions were highly probative of his credibility for purposes of this rule or Ark. R. Evid. 402, which was at issue because he chose to testify at trial and claimed in defense that the victim offered to pay him to have sex with her. Jordan v. State, 2012 Ark. 277, 412 S.W.3d 150 (2012).

Prior Inconsistent Statements.

In a prosecution for rape, burglary and theft, evidence of victim's prior inconsistent statement concerning identification of defendant, which statement included the phrase "so many niggers look alike," was not irrelevant nor was its probative value substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice; accordingly, the trial court erred in refusing to allow cross-examination of victim concerning the statement and such error was not harmless where defendant received the maximum sentence on all three charges. Miller v. State, 269 Ark. 409, 601 S.W.2d 845 (1980).

Prior Relationship.

Inasmuch as the proffered evidence of the prior relationship of the parties as described by the prosecutrix tended to make the defendant's defense of consent more probable in view of the invitation from the prosecutrix and her mode of dress at the time she let him into her abode, the trial court erred in excluding the testimony. Brown v. State, 264 Ark. 944, 581 S.W.2d 549 (1979).

Punitive Damages.

In a negligence case, a trial court erred by granting a motion in limine and excluding evidence of prior driving while intoxicated offenses because they were relevant under this rule to the determination of whether punitive damages under § 16-55-206 were warranted. Yeakley v. Doss, 370 Ark. 122, 257 S.W.3d 895 (2007).

Relevance Argument Waived.

Defendant's collateral argument, that cocaine evidence was relevant to show drug use on the part of the state's witness, was not preserved for review, given that defense counsel did not attempt to impeach any witness with this information and when the trial court sustained the state's objection to the question of the witness concerning drugs, defense counsel neither argued that the objection should be overruled nor proffered the testimony that he would have obtained if allowed to pursue another question, and without the proffer, for purposes of Ark. R. Evid. 103(a)(2), the matter was not preserved. Randle v. State, 372 Ark. 246, 273 S.W.3d 482 (2008).

Remoteness.

In a legal malpractice case, evidence of a failure to report property in a prior bankruptcy case was properly admitted into evidence as proof of credibility; moreover, there was no objection based on Ark. R. Evid. 404, the probative value of contradictory statements was not substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice, and the remoteness of the 1985 bankruptcy did not render it inadmissible. Howard v. Adams, 2012 Ark. App. 562, 424 S.W.3d 337 (2012).

Sentencing Phase.

In defendant's sentencing trial following his guilty plea to first-degree murder, the circuit court properly admitted defendant's letter requesting the proceeds of his wife's life insurance policy because it was relevant to his guilt and to rebut his argument that he had accepted responsibility for his actions or had exhibited remorse where it suggested a possible financial motive for his wife's murder; while the jury might have negatively viewed his desire to receive his wife's life insurance proceeds, the impact did not substantially outweigh its probative value since it provided evidence of his motive for the murder and displayed his conduct after the murder, and the jury could weigh both in considering his request for a lighter sentence. Burnell v. State, 2020 Ark. 244, 602 S.W.3d 115 (2020).

In the jury sentencing trial after defendant pled guilty to aggravated robbery, the trial court did not err in allowing the State to call a detective and defendant's sister-in-law to testify about two crimes with which defendant had been charged but not convicted because under § 16-97-103, certain evidence is admissible at the sentencing phase that would not have been admissible at the guilt-innocence phase and the evidence was relevant character evidence that showed that the robbery at issue was not an isolated incident and that defendant engaged in a pattern of criminal behavior. Even if the introduction of the evidence was in error, there was no prejudice because defendant received a sentence within the statutory range short of the maximum. Thomas v. State, 2020 Ark. App. 357, 605 S.W.3d 261 (2020).

Sexual History of Victim.

Although the rape shield statute, § 16-42-101, is inapplicable to juvenile delinquency proceedings, the trial court may otherwise correctly find that the prior sexual history of a victim is entirely irrelevant to the crime with which a juvenile is charged. M. M. v. State, 350 Ark. 328, 88 S.W.3d 406 (2002).

Sham Transaction.

In an eminent domain proceeding the State was entitled to produce any evidence that it might have to show the transaction between a landowner and a vendor was a sick or sham transaction. Arkansas State Hwy. Comm'n v. First Pyramid Life Ins. Co. of Am., 265 Ark. 417, 579 S.W.2d 587 (1979).

Sketch of Suspect.

Admission of sketch of a man made by police based on description of eyewitness to theft of property from home which showed man wearing two-tone shirt was admissible under this rule and Rule 402, since defendant was wearing similar shirt when photographed after his arrest and the sketch makes it more probable that defendant was properly identified as having committed the offense; thus, it was relevant. Morrow v. State, 271 Ark. 806, 610 S.W.2d 878, cert. denied, 454 U.S. 819, 102 S. Ct. 99, 70 L. Ed. 2d 89 (1981).

Termination of Parental Rights Cases.

Trial court erred in terminating a mother's parental rights to her child. While the child was dependent-neglected and there was admittedly a ground for termination—the previous involuntary termination of the mother's rights to another child, the trial court failed to consider or address adoptability and other relevant evidence in performing its best-interest analysis where evidence that the child was not born with drugs in her system (in contrast to the child for whom the mother's previous rights had been terminated) was relevant under this rule and counsel was prevented from completing a proffer of that evidence. Brown v. Ark. Dep't of Human Servs., 2015 Ark. App. 725, 478 S.W.3d 272 (2015).

Testimony by Victim's Family.

In a prosecution for capital felony murder and aggravated robbery, the admission of testimony by the victim's widow and children concerning the decedent's routine in the store which was robbed was not reversible error, inasmuch as the evidence presented by the members of the victim's family was either for the purpose of showing a proper element of the offense or to show the habit and routine of the victim. Brewer v. State, 271 Ark. 254, 608 S.W.2d 363 (1980).

Testimony Establishing Relevancy.

Where a police officer, who had established his familiarity with the subject matter, explained the use of each article of paraphernalia as it was introduced into evidence, such testimony concerning the items enabled the trial court to view the paraphernalia as relevant within the terms of this rule. State v. Anderson, 286 Ark. 58, 688 S.W.2d 947 (1985).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in allowing the Arkansas Department of Human Services' (DHS) attorney to ask the mother on direct examination if the case was the first time she had been involved with DHS; it was relevant because DHS had alleged in the termination petition that further services to the family would be unlikely to result in reunification and the mother's receipt of services from DHS for many years was relevant. Vasquez v. Ark. Dep't of Human Servs., 2009 Ark. App. 575, 337 S.W.3d 552 (2009).

Circuit court did not abuse its discretion by allowing testimony about subsequent crimes, as they were similar to the crimes in the present appeal, and the testimony was relevant as an aggravating circumstance and showed defendant's character and his lack of potential for rehabilitation, plus prejudice could not be shown as his sentence was under the maximum amount allowed. Stover v. State, 2014 Ark. App. 393, 437 S.W.3d 695 (2014).

Theft of Property.

In a theft of property case, the circuit court did not abuse its discretion when it allowed the State to ask defendant whether he took an ethics course and signed a code of ethics during his law-enforcement certification, because defendant opened the door to the questioning when he said he was a certified law-enforcement officer. Jackson v. State, 2015 Ark. App. 164 (2015).

Threats Against Victim.

When the evidence against a defendant accused of murder is circumstantial, threats to kill made by other parties are relevant to prove motive on the part of someone other than the accused. Smith v. State, 33 Ark. App. 37, 801 S.W.2d 655 (1990).

Defendant's alleged statement to rape victim the day after the rape, that if she reported the rape and accused him he would be tried for murder rather than rape, was relevant; evidence of post-crime conduct has been held relevant and admissible in a variety of contexts under Arkansas law. Morris v. State, 53 Ark. App. 183, 920 S.W.2d 508 (1996).

Toxicology Report.

In a second-degree murder case, there was no abuse of discretion in granting the State's motion to exclude testimony from the medical examiner that the victim had illegal controlled substances in his system at the time of his death because the report's probative value was far outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice. The toxicology report was irrelevant because defendant did not know at the time of the shooting that the victim had ingested drugs; moreover, defendant was not prejudiced by the ruling because he presented proof of the victim's erratic and aggressive behavior. Wade v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 157, 516 S.W.3d 772 (2017).

Victim Impact Evidence.

Testimony of the chairman of a non-profit group's board about the group's response to a flooding disaster, the resulting funerals, and the chairman's personal relationships with the bereaved was relevant victim-impact evidence under Ark. R. Evid. 402 and § 16-97-103 at defendant's sentencing hearing as although the group was able to meet the disaster victims' needs, the testimony illustrated the difficulties the group experienced due to defendant's theft; the evidence was not unduly prejudicial. Brown v. State, 2011 Ark. App. 608 (2011).

Victim's Intoxication.

In a first-degree murder case, because there was no evidence that defendant knew of the victim's intoxication, it would not have had any bearing on defendant's state of mind or belief that self-defense was warranted, and any evidence of the victim's intoxication and the general behaviors of an intoxicated person was not relevant and would be unduly prejudicial. Stanton v. State, 2020 Ark. 418, 613 S.W.3d 368 (2020).

Victim's Prior Criminal Activity.

Circuit court did not abuse its discretion in excluding evidence about the murder victim's past involvement in drug transactions and the victim's reputation as a drug dealer as the jury was made aware of the facts and circumstances leading up to the victim's death. Specifically, the jury learned that the victim's death resulted from a drug deal gone bad between two other individuals. Starling v. State, 2016 Ark. 20, 480 S.W.3d 158 (2016).

Videotapes.

A videotape is admissible if it is relevant, helpful to the jury, and not prejudicial; these are generally the same requirements for the admission of photographs. Hickson v. State, 312 Ark. 171, 847 S.W.2d 691 (1993).

Court properly found that the probative value of the various video recordings substantially outweighed the danger of unfair prejudice because, although there were witnesses to the events, the recordings represented an objective portrayal of what occurred during the traffic stop and served both to corroborate and to explain the eyewitnesses' testimony. Lard v. State, 2014 Ark. 1, 431 S.W.3d 249, cert. denied, 574 U.S. 836, 135 S. Ct. 76, 190 L. Ed. 2d 67 (2014).

Weight of Probative Value.

Where, in a personal injury action brought against a retail store and the purchaser of a handgun from said store, the plaintiff alleged that the store negligently sold the handgun to the defendant who used it to shoot the plaintiff, the trial court erred in admitting into evidence the defendant's deposition which indicated he had been treated by a psychiatrist more than 13 years prior to the shooting incident upon which this cause of action was based, since there was simply no connecting evidence between the prior psychiatric treatment and the present condition of the defendant and therefore, although the evidence may have been relevant, its probative value was substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice, confusion of the issues, or was misleading to the jury. Cullum & Boren-McCain Mall, Inc. v. Peacock, 267 Ark. 479, 592 S.W.2d 442 (1980).

To be relevant, it is not required that evidence prove the entire case or even all of a single issue; it requires only proof that has "any tendency" to make any fact that is of consequence to the determination of the action more or less probable. Ford Motor Co. v. Nuckolls, 320 Ark. 15, 894 S.W.2d 897 (1995).

In a wrongful death action brought by the administrator of the deceased patient's estate against a nursing center and its parent company, although relevant documentary evidence showing the nursing center's understaffing problem was prejudicial to the nursing center and the company, that prejudice did not outweigh the strong probative value of the evidence. Advocat, Inc. v. Sauer, 353 Ark. 29, 111 S.W.3d 346, cert. denied, 540 U.S. 1012, 124 S. Ct. 532, 157 L. Ed. 2d 424 (2003), cert. denied, 540 U.S. 1004, 124 S. Ct. 535, 157 L. Ed. 2d 409 (2003).

Rule 402. Relevant evidence generally admissible -- Irrelevant evidence inadmissible.

CASE NOTES

In General.

How the advocate's other court appointed special advocate cases were resolved did not have any tendency to make the existence of any fact that was of consequence to the determination of the mother's parental rights more or less probable; it was not relevant evidence under Ark. R. Evid. 401 or this rule, it was inadmissible, and the trial court did not abuse its discretion in excluding it, and this adverse evidentiary ruling could not create a meritorious issue on appeal. Williams v. Ark. Dep't of Human Servs., 2013 Ark. App. 534 (2013).

Bias of Witness.

Evidence that a civil suit had been filed by an assault and battery victim against the defendant as a result of the fracas had a bearing on the extent of the bias of the witness and was admissible in the criminal prosecution of the defendant for aggravated assault and battery. Hawksley v. State, 276 Ark. 504, 637 S.W.2d 573 (1982).

In a witness bribery case, a trial court erred in excluding evidence that the state's main witness could have been biased due to a quiet title lawsuit two years earlier between the witness's parents and the defendant's parents. Paschal v. State, 2012 Ark. 127, 388 S.W.3d 429 (2012).

Blood Tests.

The trial court erred in allowing into evidence two blood tests which did not exclude defendant as being the father, for the purpose of showing that he was the father. Winston v. Robinson, 270 Ark. 996, 606 S.W.2d 757 (1980).

Child Rape Victims.

How, when and from whom the children who were rape victims acquired their knowledge of sexual matters did not make it more or less likely that the defendant committed rape, and the trial court did not abuse its discretion in its ruling that the proffered testimony was not relevant or material. Griswold v. State, 304 Ark. 168, 801 S.W.2d 270 (1990).

Defendant's rape conviction was proper because the circuit court did not abuse its discretion in finding the testimony of a supervisor with the Crimes Against Children Division of the Arkansas State Police relevant. The victim did not come forward until after years and years of abuse and the supervisor's testimony explained the typical behaviors of abused children that she had witnessed; she explained that it was common for a child victim to not make a disclosure and that there could be several reasons for that behavior. Chunestudy v. State, 2012 Ark. 222, 408 S.W.3d 55 (2012).

Child Support.

In a case involving child support, a father's claim that evidence of his failure to pay support in another unrelated case was not admissible under Ark. R. Evid. 404(b) was not heard on appellate review because he advanced a different argument before the trial court relating to relevancy; on appeal he conceded that the evidence in question was relevant. Norman v. Cooper, 101 Ark. App. 446, 278 S.W.3d 569 (2008).

Corroboration of Accomplice.

Where the testimony of the witnesses clearly showed that the automobile had not been tampered with and was in essentially the same condition as it was when the defendant sold it several days after the homicide, the trial judge did not abuse his discretion in admitting a portion of a bloodstained seat cover into evidence since it was relevant as having a tendency to corroborate the accomplice's testimony. Bly v. State, 267 Ark. 613, 593 S.W.2d 450 (1980).

Corroboration of Rape Victim.

In prosecution for rape the trial court did not err in allowing articles of the defendant's clothing to be introduced into evidence together with testimony that there were human bloodstains on the clothing, where this evidence tended to corroborate the testimony of the rape victim, the police officers, and the medical examiner, and where it also tended to contradict the statement of the defendant that he had been in the car for only a period of time as to allow him to drive three or four blocks. Brewer v. State, 269 Ark. 185, 599 S.W.2d 141 (1980).

Testimony of family service worker and victim regarding sexual acts with the victim was relevant to prove the charge of rape, and its probative value substantially outweighed its prejudicial effect. Clark v. State, 323 Ark. 211, 913 S.W.2d 297 (1996).

Credibility of Witnesses.

In a prosecution for murder, an expert witness was properly precluded from testifying about inconsistencies in the defendant's statement to police officers where the defendant testified on his own behalf and the state cross-examined him concerning such inconsistencies. Hinkston v. State, 340 Ark. 530, 10 S.W.3d 906 (2000).

In defendant's murder trial, the key witness who was at the scene of the shooting allegedly battered a woman in retaliation against the her for not relaying the information the key witness wanted the woman to impart to the police, but that key witness was not charged with any offense; those matters were relevant, reflecting upon the key witness's interest, motives in testifying, and bias, and the trial court committed reversible error in restricting cross-examination on the subject. Ghoston v. State, 84 Ark. App. 387, 141 S.W.3d 907 (2004).

At defendant's rape trial, the circuit court did not abuse its discretion in determining that evidence of his prior convictions for carnal abuse of a child, arson, terroristic threatening, and failure to register as a sex offender were admissible under Ark. R. Evid. 609 to impeach defendant. The prior convictions were highly probative of his credibility for purposes of Ark. R. Evid. 401 or this rule, which was at issue because he chose to testify at trial and claimed in defense that the victim offered to pay him to have sex with her. Jordan v. State, 2012 Ark. 277, 412 S.W.3d 150 (2012).

Defendant's State of Mind.

The trial court in a first-degree murder case properly excluded the opinion of the arresting officer that the defendant was "scared to death" at the time of his arrest, despite the fact that Rule 701 permits even lay witnesses to describe whether a defendant was angry, nervous or scared, since the defendant's state of mind after the shooting has no relevance under Rule 401 and this rule, tending to make the existence of a consequential fact more or less probable than it would be without the evidence, and since the excluded testimony was merely repetitious to that presented by the defendant himself as to his actions after the shooting. Graham v. State, 2 Ark. App. 266, 621 S.W.2d 4 (1981).

Trial judge did not abuse her discretion in refusing to admit an earlier document by decedent in a will contest as the document was not relevant to the decedent's mental state when the documents at issue were executed eight years later. Farr v. Henson, 79 Ark. App. 114, 84 S.W.3d 871 (2002), overruled in part, Tait v. Cmty. First Trust Co., 2012 Ark. 455, 425 S.W.3d 684 (2012).

Trial court did not err during defendant's trial for aggravated robbery in granting the state's motion in limine restricting evidence of a subsequent murder in support of defendant's affirmative defense of duress because even if evidence of the murder was relevant, and therefore potentially admissible, Ark. R. Evid. 405(b) would have kept it out because the specific instance of conduct was not relevant to the defense; a murder by another person that occurred three hours after the robberies could not have affected defendant's state of mind during the preceding robberies. Bell v. State, 2010 Ark. App. 814, 379 S.W.3d 748 (2010).

Discretion of Court.

Circuit court did not abuse its discretion when it did not allow defendant in defendant's trial for possession of controlled substances to present testimony at trial—in opening, closing, cross-examination, or in defendant's case-in-chief—about the wrong address on the search warrant for defendant's mobile home. Defendant could not show how an error on the face of the search warrant had anything to do with whether defendant possessed controlled substances and the exclusion did not violate defendant's constitutional right to present a defense. Kellensworth v. State, 2021 Ark. 5, 614 S.W.3d 804 (2021).

Evidence of Dangerous Instrumentalities.

Defendant's convictions for capital murder and committing a terroristic act were appropriate because evidence of ammunition taken from his former home was relevant and admissible since the shell casings at the scene of the drive-by shooting were the exact types found at defendant's former home and that related to his and his alleged accomplices' knowledge of those types of ammunition, their access thereto, and to their guilt. Banks v. State, 2010 Ark. 108, 366 S.W.3d 341 (2010).

Evidence of Identity.

Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting a portion of a 911 dispatch log into evidence because the court determined that the probative value of the dispatch log substantially outweighed the danger of unfair prejudice, as the log corroborated the victims' testimony that defendant was involved in a robbery and burglary. Moreover, the identification of defendant by name in the 911 calls undermined defendant's theory of mistaken identity. Turner v. State, 2014 Ark. App. 428, 439 S.W.3d 88 (2014).

Evidence of Robbery.

Items which were seized pursuant to a search warrant and then identified by victim as those things which were in his automobile when it was stolen were relevant and admissible in prosecution for robbery and theft where there was testimony connecting defendant with items and vehicles. Phillips v. State, 271 Ark. 96, 607 S.W.2d 664 (1980).

Evidence of Similar Occurrences.

The trial court in a personal injury action arising from an automobile collision did not abuse its discretion in excluding the proffered testimony of the investigating officer, regarding similar automobile accidents in the near vicinity within the general time frame, which was offered to show that weather conditions contributed to the accident. Williams v. Gates, 275 Ark. 381, 630 S.W.2d 34 (1982).

In personal injury action where the plaintiff alleged that she tripped over the defendant's shopping cart, two customer accident reports from other stores owned by the defendant were not relevant, where the only similarity shown between the accidents in the two reports and the plaintiff's accident was that a cart was involved in some way. Fraser v. Harp's Food Stores, Inc., 290 Ark. 186, 718 S.W.2d 92 (1986).

The relevance of proffered testimony of a drug task force coordinator concerning when and against whom the task force decided to file charges was marginal at best, and thus the trial court did not abuse its discretion in limiting cross-examination by excluding such testimony. Newman v. State, 327 Ark. 339, 939 S.W.2d 811 (1997).

Evidence of Victim's Prior Criminal Activity.

Circuit court did not abuse its discretion in excluding evidence about the murder victim's past involvement in drug transactions and the victim's reputation as a drug dealer as the jury was made aware of the facts and circumstances leading up to the victim's death. Specifically, the jury learned that the victim's death resulted from a drug deal gone bad between two other individuals. Starling v. State, 2016 Ark. 20, 480 S.W.3d 158 (2016).

Evidence of Weapons.

In a capital murder trial, the court erred by admitting evidence of the .22 caliber rifle seized from defendant's house where the rifle was not the murder weapon and admission of evidence of the rifle did not support the state's theory that defendant disposed of the actual murder weapon; however, evidence of .22 caliber ammunition was relevant to prove that defendant possessed the means to kill the victim. Barrett v. State, 354 Ark. 187, 119 S.W.3d 485 (2003).

Exclusion of Irrelevant Testimony.

Where a stopped car had been struck at an intersection, and there was no evidence that its driver contributed to the accident in any way, testimony concerning alcohol in the struck vehicle was irrelevant and correctly excluded. Lowe v. State, 264 Ark. 205, 570 S.W.2d 253 (1978).

Where in a prosecution for possession of heroin, the defense counsel made a general objection to testimony about a pistol found in the defendant's car, the objection should have been sustained since it should have been apparent to the trial court that the weapon was not relevant to the offense charged and should not have been discussed before the jury. Philmon v. State, 267 Ark. 1121, 593 S.W.2d 504 (Ct. App. 1980).

The question of whether the option purchase price was nominal turned on whether the lessor had retained an appreciable residual at the expiration of the lease, and testimony analyzing the hard costs of operation over the remaining economic life of the chattel, should the lessee choose to exercise the option to purchase, was not relevant evidence that the option purchase price was nominal, and properly excluded under this rule and Rule 403. Sutton v. Ryder Truck Rental, Inc., 305 Ark. 231, 807 S.W.2d 905 (1991).

Trial court had already dismissed the patient's theory of vicarious liability, as well as any claims of liability on the part of the nurse; therefore, any questions concerning the doctors' supervision of the nurse was irrelevant, and the trial court did not abuse its discretion in excluding any testimony on this issue. Stephens v. Petrino, 350 Ark. 268, 86 S.W.3d 836 (2002).

Trial court properly rejected evidence offered by a phone company regarding what it would have cost to rent replacement lines while lines damaged by a contractor, who dug in an area without providing notice to the phone company as required by § 14-271-112 of the Underground Facilities Damage Prevention Act, were repaired; evidence was irrelevant because loss of use damages were recoverable in an action for damage to personal property only in cases involving motor vehicles. Southwestern Bell Tel. Co. v. Harris Co., 353 Ark. 487, 109 S.W.3d 637 (2003).

Where defendant filed an answer that generally denied the allegations of plaintiff's complaint, including that defendant was negligent in regard to the traffic accident, the fact that she did not file a counterclaim was not an assertion of fact and she could not be impeached on that point; further, the reason that defendant did not file a counterclaim was not relevant to the issues. Martinez v. Wright, 94 Ark. App. 1, 223 S.W.3d 71 (2006).

Trial court did not err in excluding any mention of a doctor who had been involved as a consultant and legal assistant on a patient's malpractice case because the fact that the doctor participated in consulting with two of the patient's experts had no relevance nor had the fact that he had been convicted of drug possession, causing him to lose his medical license. McCoy v. Montgomery, 370 Ark. 333, 259 S.W.3d 430 (2007).

During defendant's trial for the rape of a nine-year-old girl, who tested positive for chlamydia, the trial court did not err in not allowing defendant to ask the victim's mother, who had a sexual relationship with defendant, if she had tested positive for chlamydia; the question of whether the mother had a positive diagnosis for chlamydia had no relevance to any issue at trial. Kelley v. State, 375 Ark. 483, 292 S.W.3d 297 (2009).

Trial court did not err by sustained the state's objection to defense counsel's questions to the victim's ex-wife about whether she believed that the victim had been having an affair with defendant's wife because they were relevant to the defense, as questions of the ex-wife's state of mind, or whether defendant's beliefs were accurate, were of no consequence to his defense. James v. State, 2010 Ark. 486, 372 S.W.3d 800 (2010), overruled in part, Kou Her v. State, 2015 Ark. 91, 457 S.W.3d 659 (2015).

In a manslaughter case, the court properly excluded evidence of the victim's alleged violent propensities because defendant admitted that he fired his gun without knowing who was riding toward him; therefore, because he did not know who he was shooting, he could not have considered the victim's background and state of mind before firing his weapon. Accordingly, such evidence would only have served to prejudice the victim. Sipe v. State, 2012 Ark. App. 261, 404 S.W.3d 164 (2012).

Defendant's conviction for murder in the first degree was proper because there was no error in refusing to allow certain testimony from a witness since the excluded testimony did nothing more than offer a motive or opportunity for a third party to commit the murder. There was nothing in the excluded testimony that could have implicated another individual in the victim's murder and the proffered testimony did not even identify the male as being the other individual, describing only a threat from a male in a red shirt. Boykins v. State, 2013 Ark. App. 463 (2013).

Because there was no question as to the identity of the accused, the victim, or any of the key witnesses, and defendant did not show how the witness's modus operandi in the other alleged bad acts, which purportedly occurred after the August 2009 shooting incident, was relevant to any material issue in the current capital murder case, the circuit court did not abuse its discretion in excluding the evidence of the witness's other bad acts. Allen v. State, 2013 Ark. 396 (2013).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to admit appellant's proffered expert and lay testimony to establish that his substance-induced psychosis caused him to falsely confess to a crime that he did not commit where he had not asserted an insanity defense, and thus, the proposed testimony was not relevant. The trial court's refusal to admit the proffered testimony did not deny appellant his right to a fair opportunity to present a defense where he took the stand in his own defense and he was able to cross-examine witnesses. Westbrook v. State, 2016 Ark. App. 77, 482 S.W.3d 731 (2016).

Circuit court properly excluded from evidence photographs found in the victim's purse and lay-witness testimony regarding her life and mental state because defendant offered no expert testimony to support his claim that persons seeking counseling or in troubled marriages were more likely to commit suicide, and the evidence established that the victim was shot with defendant's gun in his home, there was an attempt to clean the blood stain on the carpet, defendant admitted dumping the victim's body in a creek and throwing her purse off a bridge, and defendant told a police officer that the blood on his hands and clothes was from skinning a deer, all of which were efforts to conceal a crime and could be considered evidence of consciousness of guilt. Russell v. State, 2019 Ark. App. 606, 590 S.W.3d 206 (2019).

Harmless Error.

Where defendant admitted to killing the victim, and it was established by sufficient evidence that he acted with premeditation and deliberation, whatever harm may have resulted from testimony about the victim's interest in music was harmless because the evidence of guilt was overwhelming and the error was slight. Cobb v. State, 340 Ark. 240, 12 S.W.3d 195 (2000).

In a case involving terroristic acts under § 5-13-310(a)(1), the exclusion of a computer-generated threat to bolster a self-defense claim under § 5-2-606 was error since the evidence was relevant; however, the error was harmless since evidence of other threats could have been elicited. McKeever v. State, 367 Ark. 374, 240 S.W.3d 583 (2006).

During defendant's trial for committing a terroristic act, the trial court erred in excluding testimony from defendant's mother regarding a computer-generated threat to defendant's life; the testimony was relevant to the issue of self-defense. However, defendant failed to show prejudice by the ruling. McKeever v. State, 367 Ark. 374, 240 S.W.3d 583 (2006).

Even if pornographic materials found by the police were not relevant during defendant's trial for sexual assault in the fourth degree, their admission was harmless because there was ample evidence aside from the pornographic materials that defendant committed the offense; the child sexual assault victim testified that she and defendant had sex and he never challenged that testimony. Magness v. State, 2012 Ark. App. 609, 424 S.W.3d 395 (2012).

In a case involving drugs and weapons offenses, it was error to allow a video of law enforcement officers firing a weapon found in the search of the home to be played for the jury and admitted into evidence because it was not relevant to any of the specific offenses charged since the offenses did not require that the weapon be fireable; however, the error was harmless because the evidence against defendant was overwhelming and defendant's sentences fell within the statutory sentence ranges. Gutierrez v. State, 2015 Ark. App. 516, 472 S.W.3d 147 (2015).

In a rape and second-degree sexual assault case, it was error to allow the State to question defendant about whether he was "aware" of a detective's report that had been discredited; defendant's knowledge of the report had no probative value because the existence of the discredited police report did not concern any element of the crime or serve as legitimate fodder for impeachment as it was not a statement that defendant made. However, the error was harmless. Lowery v. State, 2019 Ark. 332, 586 S.W.3d 644 (2019).

While it was clearly improper for the circuit court to require defendant to answer the State's improper question, the error was harmless because defendant's answer was cumulative to other evidence of his character that had been properly admitted; the evidentiary value of defendant's being forced to admit that he was aware of the discredited police report was slight. Lowery v. State, 2019 Ark. 332, 586 S.W.3d 644 (2019).

Inadmissible Evidence.

Circuit court abused its discretion in allowing the State to introduce defendant's text message ("I'm ready to kill me some cops") because the message was not relevant on the issue of whether defendant purposely killed defendant; the statement concerning law enforcement was made more than two weeks before the victim's death and was not made nearly contemporaneously with the act of violence against her, and it would have been a simple matter for the circuit court to excise those six words. Cutsinger v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 647, 536 S.W.3d 134 (2017).

Although the circuit court erred in allowing the State to introduce defendant's text message because the message was not relevant on the issue of whether defendant purposely killed defendant, the error was harmless; the evidence of defendant's guilt was overwhelming, and any prejudice caused by the introduction of the text message was slight. Cutsinger v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 647, 536 S.W.3d 134 (2017).

Inquiry into Parole.

The general rule in criminal cases is that parole procedures are not proper areas of either comment or inquiry where the purpose is to influence the sentence. Gustafson v. State, 267 Ark. 830, 593 S.W.2d 187 (Ct. App. 1979).

Insanity.

In a prosecution for murder in which the defendant conceded at trial that he was not asserting the insanity defense, any testimony that an expert witness could have given about the defendant's inability to conform his conduct to the requirements of the law because of mental disease or defect was not relevant and therefore, was properly excluded. Hinkston v. State, 340 Ark. 530, 10 S.W.3d 906 (2000).

Intoxication of Victim.

Trial court did not abuse its discretion by excluding evidence regarding the presence of alcohol in the victim's blood where the evidence was not relevant to the cause of death, i.e., a gunshot wound, and uncontroverted evidence of the victim's intoxication and agitated behavior had already been admitted. Taylor v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 331, 522 S.W.3d 844 (2017).

Intoximeter Test.

Where in civil action for property damage and personal injury resulting from vehicular collision, one issue was party's sobriety, the results of an intoximeter test administered immediately after the incident was plainly relevant to the issue and therefore admissible under this rule, since there is nothing in the rules or statutes to prohibit it. Watson v. Frier-son, 272 Ark. 316, 613 S.W.2d 824 (1981).

Limited Purpose.

Where in an action by insureds against their insurer for damages to the roof of their home allegedly caused by a hailstorm, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting into evidence photographs of hail damage to a similar roof on another house, where the judge admitted the photographs for the limited purpose of aiding the jury in understanding the oral testimony of an insurance adjuster, testifying for the insurer, as to his opinion and his explanation as to what he looked for in hail damage and what he found in the insureds' roof. Morrison v. Firemen's Ins. Co., 4 Ark. App. 351, 631 S.W.2d 310 (1982).

Luminol Test.

The mere presence of human blood found by luminol testing, without factors which relate that evidence to the crime, is not admissible. Palmer v. State, 315 Ark. 696, 870 S.W.2d 385 (1994).

When positive luminol tests cannot be confirmed by other evidence, the luminol test results become irrelevant and their admission into evidence confuses the jury. Young v. State, 316 Ark. 225, 871 S.W.2d 373 (1994); Houston v. State, 321 Ark. 598, 906 S.W.2d 286 (1995).

Medical Records.

Writ of certiorari was proper, because the court erred in denying the husband's motion to quash several subpoenas concerning his medical records, when the husband was not a party to the underlying custody dispute, the husband did nothing to bring his medical condition into issue, and the husband's mental health was examined through other admissible evidence; a nonparty's medical records could not be subpoenaed under the circumstances presented in the instant case. McKenzie v. Pierce, 2012 Ark. 190, 403 S.W.3d 565 (2012).

Negative Test Results.

The results of test which fail to link a defendant to a crime are admissible pursuant to this rule. Mackey v. State, 279 Ark. 307, 651 S.W.2d 82 (1983).

Opinion Testimony.

An undercover narcotics officer can be found competent to state his opinion regarding the substance he purchased, and where officer, acting in an undercover capacity, and through prior experience, thought he was buying hashish, and in fact thought it was in sufficient quantity to have an effect on six to eight persons, he was properly allowed to testify to the nature of the transaction in a prosecution for delivery of marijuana. Euton v. State, 270 Ark. 121, 603 S.W.2d 468 (Ct. App. 1980).

Photographs.

Defendant's conviction for murder in the second degree was proper because admission of photographs taken at the crime scene of various items located in the front passenger seat of the victim's vehicle was proper since the evidence suggested that the crime scene was in a remote location that was secured by officers shortly after the victim's 911 call was made; the testimony presented was sufficient to support a finding that the matter in question was what its proponent claimed. The officer who took the photographs testified that he saw the items in the front passenger seat and that he did not touch them before photographing them; moreover, even if the photographs were improperly admitted, no prejudice occurred because they were merely cumulative evidence. Johnson v. State, 2010 Ark. App. 153, 375 S.W.3d 12 (2010).

Prejudicial Error.

Trial court erred in a medical malpractice action in granting a motion in limine during appellants' opening statement to exclude as inadmissible the decedent's postdischarge medical evidence because by excluding the evidence, which was relevant, the trial court allowed appellants to, at the last minute, be stripped of an entire defense that had been clearly developed throughout the litigation. Bedell v. Williams, 2012 Ark. 75, 386 S.W.3d 493 (2012).

Preservation for Review.

Defendant's contention that the trial court erred by allowing the portion of his custodial statement to be played for the jury in which he referenced another person calling him a child molester and trying to get his children taken away was not preserved for appellate review because the only reference to Ark. R. Evid. 404(b) was in defendant's pretrial motion for the state to disclose such evidence prior to trial; defense counsel never made a specific objection that the child molester reference was improper character evidence under Rule 404(b) and the trial court never ruled on the basis of Rule 404(b). In addition, defendant never made a specific relevancy objection under this rule but only urged that the portion of the statement including the comment had nothing to do with the case and no evidentiary purpose. Leach v. State, 2012 Ark. 179, 402 S.W.3d 517 (2012).

Probative Value.

The court's exclusion of references in defendant's confession to "sanity" or "insanity" held proper where defendant was not claiming mental disease or defect. Willett v. State, 322 Ark. 613, 911 S.W.2d 937 (1995).

Where a .45 caliber bullet and three .45 caliber shell casings were recovered from the scene, and an identical cartridge was recovered from defendant's car, the evidence showed that it was more probable than not that defendant had access to a .45 caliber weapon at the time of the homicide. Bohanan v. State, 324 Ark. 158, 919 S.W.2d 198 (1996).

In a prosecution alleging that defendant sexually assaulted his seven year old daughter, forced the daughter to have intercourse with her brother, who was also under 14, and made the brother have intercourse with the brother's mother, who was defendant's wife, trial court did not abuse its discretion in allowing the state to introduce photographs of the family home showing the general condition of the home, including the fact that defendant kept photographs of nude women in plain view, as the evidence was relevant and its probative value was not outweighed by the risk of prejudice to the defendant. Clem v. State, 351 Ark. 112, 90 S.W.3d 428 (2002).

Victim stated that she had viewed pornography with defendant at his home, and the items seized corroborated her testimony; photographs of the partially clad victim in suggestive poses were found in close proximity to pornographic magazines, and under these circumstances, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in determining that the probative value of the pornographic magazines was not substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice. Rasmussen v. State, 2009 Ark. App. 586 (2009).

Court properly found that the probative value of the various video recordings substantially outweighed the danger of unfair prejudice because, although there were witnesses to the events, the recordings represented an objective portrayal of what occurred during the traffic stop and served both to corroborate and to explain the eyewitnesses' testimony. Lard v. State, 2014 Ark. 1, 431 S.W.3d 249, cert. denied, 574 U.S. 836, 135 S. Ct. 76, 190 L. Ed. 2d 67 (2014).

In defendant's trial for concealing birth under § 5-26-203, the circuit court abused its discretion in allowing discussion of abortion, defendant's abortion history, and evidence that she had ingested medication prior to giving birth where it was undisputed that the child was not born alive, the evidence was irrelevant as to whether she had concealed the birth, and even if relevant, the probative value was substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice given the four-minute verdict. Bynum v. State, 2018 Ark. App. 201, 546 S.W.3d 533 (2018).

Relationship Between Victim and Defendant.

Where in a prosecution for aggravated assault and battery the state attempted to show that the female victim had been trying to break up her relationship with the defendant, her ex-boyfriend, the trial court erred in refusing to permit the defendant to testify concerning foreign travel plans that the defendant and the victim had jointly made about two weeks prior to the altercation, and in failing to allow the defendant to introduce evidence as to a $1,000 commission he gave the victim about two months before the incident. Hawksley v. State, 276 Ark. 504, 637 S.W.2d 573 (1982).

Circuit court properly overruled defendant's objection to the admission of a police officer's testimony about a statement defendant had made prior to the murder of his wife because the primary issue to be decided by the jury at trial was defendant's mental state at the time he shot the victim, the statement was admissible to show the course of conduct between defendant and the victim at the relevant point in time, defendant erroneously focused on only a portion of the entire statement that was admitted, and he was not unfairly prejudiced by the officer's testimony. Scott v. State, 2015 Ark. App. 614, 474 S.W.3d 516 (2015).

Res Gestae.

In a case involving rape, aggravated robbery, and kidnapping, a trial court did not err by overruling relevancy objections and admitting evidence that appellant told his victim that he planned to go kill someone because this was part of an entire criminal transaction under the res gestae exception. Appellant's statement revealed a reason that he jumped into the victim's car and demanded to be driven to another location, why he was carrying a gun, and what his intent was with regard to possibly shooting the victim. Dillard v. State, 2013 Ark. App. 87 (2013).

Scientific Evidence.

The relevancy approach as the standard for determining the admissibility of novel scientific evidence requires that the trial court conduct a preliminary inquiry of any novel scientific evidence and focus on: (1) the reliability of the process used to generate the evidence; (2) the possibility that the jury would be overwhelmed, confused or misled by the evidence; and (3) the connection between the evidence to be offered and the disputed factual issue in the particular case. Whitson v. State, 314 Ark. 458, 863 S.W.2d 794 (1993).

Horizontal gaze nystagmus testing is not "novel scientific evidence." Whitson v. State, 314 Ark. 458, 863 S.W.2d 794 (1993).

An investigator with the Arkansas State Police was properly not permitted to testify regarding the alleged superior ability of his canine partner to detect the presence of accelerants after a fire, based on a Master's thesis written by the purported Director of the Florida State Crime Laboratory, since the proponent of the evidence did not produce the study allegedly conducted by the author of the thesis, so there was no way of ascertaining the techniques used or the potential rate of error, and there was no evidence that this scientific theory had ever been tested or subjected to peer review or that it had been otherwise embraced by the particular scientific community. Farm Bureau Mut. Ins. Co. v. Foote, 341 Ark. 105, 14 S.W.3d 512 (2000).

Circuit court did not err by granting the state's motion in limine to prohibit defendant from introducing unknown trace DNA and fingerprints found at the crime scene on the grounds that the evidence was not relevant and therefore inadmissible under this rule and Ark. R. Evid. 403. The evidence tended to show nothing other than that some unknown third person was present in those two places at some unknown time; it did not directly connect the unknown third person with the commission of the murders. Birts v. State, 2012 Ark. 348 (2012).

Secondary Gain Motivation.

In an action to recover damages for injuries sustained in a construction site accident, it was reversible error for the court to allow a defense expert to testify regarding secondary gain motivation and to imply that plaintiffs in personal injury cases may exaggerate their symptoms in order to receive some financial benefit since such testimony was irrelevant where the expert affirmed during cross-examination that he was not testifying that he believed that the plaintiff was malingering or implying that the plaintiff had secondary gain involved in the case and unequivocally stated that he was not giving testimony that it was his opinion that there was any secondary gain involved in the case. Rodgers v. CWR Constr., Inc., 343 Ark. 126, 33 S.W.3d 506 (2000).

Sham Transaction.

In an eminent domain proceeding the State was entitled to produce any evidence that it might have to show the transaction between a landowner and a vendor was a sick or sham transaction. Arkansas State Hwy. Comm'n v. First Pyramid Life Ins. Co. of Am., 265 Ark. 417, 579 S.W.2d 587 (1979).

Sketch of Defendant.

Admission of sketch of a man made by police based on description of eyewitness to theft of property from home which showed man wearing two-tone shirt was admissible under Rule 401 and this rule, since defendant was wearing similar shirt when photographed after his arrest and the sketch makes it more probable that defendant was properly identified as having committed the offense; thus, it was relevant. Morrow v. State, 271 Ark. 806, 610 S.W.2d 878, cert. denied, 454 U.S. 819, 102 S. Ct. 99, 70 L. Ed. 2d 89 (1981).

Testimony Establishing Relevancy.

Where a police officer, who had established his familiarity with the subject matter, explained the use of each article of paraphernalia as it was introduced into evidence, such testimony concerning the items enabled the trial court to view the paraphernalia as relevant within the terms of Uniform Rules of Evidence, Rule 401. State v. Anderson, 286 Ark. 58, 688 S.W.2d 947 (1985).

Testimony concerning defendant's relationship to militaristic organization, the involvement with weapons, and the methods of operation was held relevant to show motive, etc., in larger plan to obtain money for organization in trial for robbery and murder of pawnbroker. Snell v. State, 290 Ark. 503, 721 S.W.2d 628 (1986), cert. denied, 484 U.S. 872, 108 S. Ct. 202, 98 L. Ed. 2d 153 (1987).

Evidence regarding a telephone conversation between a murder victim and his ex-wife in which the victim stated that the defendant, who was his current wife, had a gun pointed at him and was going to shoot him and in which the defendant stated that she was going to shoot the victim could be admitted into evidence since the statements by the defendant established relevancy. Thomas v. State, 62 Ark. App. 168, 973 S.W.2d 1 (1998).

Where defendant alleged that he shot the decedent in self-defense, evidence that defendant fled the scene of the crime and witness's testimony that defendant stated "I'll probably spend the rest of my life in prison" as he fled was probative to prove that defendant's behavior in fleeing the scene was inconsistent with a claim of self-defense. Anderson v. State, 354 Ark. 102, 118 S.W.3d 574 (2003).

Although the gay-themed books were improperly admitted into evidence, any error was harmless in light of the wealth of other evidence of defendant's homosexual lifestyle; further, pornographic videos and photographs were properly admitted where two victims were in the photographs and they corroborated other victims' testimony. Simmons v. State, 95 Ark. App. 114, 234 S.W.3d 321 (2006).

Circuit court did not abuse its discretion in admitting text messages from defendant's cell phone because the text messages were relevant for purposes of corroborating the victim's testimony and were close in time to the offense; also, the Supreme Court could not say that the circuit court abused its discretion in allowing a narcotics investigator to give his lay-opinion testimony about the drug terminology in the text messages. Hill v. State, 2018 Ark. 194, 546 S.W.3d 483 (2018).

Threats Against Victim.

When the evidence against a defendant accused of murder is circumstantial, threats to kill made by other parties are relevant to prove motive on the part of someone other than the accused. Smith v. State, 33 Ark. App. 37, 801 S.W.2d 655 (1990).

In defendant's stalking case, the court properly admitted testimony regarding the shredding of the victim's patio furniture and the "keying" of her truck because there was evidence that defendant had engaged in a number of harassing tactics throughout the course of the case, and the evidence of damage to her personal property, which began after the victim and defendant separated, had a tendency to show that he was engaging in conduct in order to harass her. Lowry v. State, 90 Ark. App. 333, 205 S.W.3d 830, rev'd, 364 Ark. 6, 216 S.W.3d 101 (2005).

Victim Impact Evidence.

Testimony of the chairman of a non-profit group's board about the group's response to a flooding disaster, the resulting funerals, and the chairman's personal relationships with the bereaved was relevant victim-impact evidence under this rule and § 16-97-103 at defendant's sentencing hearing as although the group was able to meet the disaster victims' needs, the testimony illustrated the difficulties the group experienced due to defendant's theft; the evidence was not unduly prejudicial. Brown v. State, 2011 Ark. App. 608 (2011).

Weight of Probative Value.

Where, in a personal injury action brought against a retail store and the purchaser of a handgun from said store, the plaintiff alleged that the store negligently sold the handgun to the defendant who used it to shoot the plaintiff, the trial court erred in admitting into evidence the defendant's deposition which indicated he had been treated by a psychiatrist more than 13 years prior to the shooting incident upon which this cause of action was based, since there was simply no connecting evidence between the prior psychiatric treatment and the present condition of the defendant and therefore, although the evidence may have been relevant, its probative value was substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice, confusion of the issues, or was misleading to the jury. Cullum & Boren-McCain Mall, Inc. v. Peacock, 267 Ark. 479, 592 S.W.2d 442 (1980).

Circumstantial evidence can constitute substantial evidence. Dixon v. State, 311 Ark. 613, 846 S.W.2d 170 (1993).

In a breach of contract case, the court properly allowed insurer to introduce evidence of homeowner's prior late payments and lapses of her homeowner's policies as it showed that homeowner made only one timely payment on her homeowner's policy between November

2000 and November 2001, allowed the policy to lapse twice before the final lapse in November 2001, and had a long history of late payments on her automobile policy; the evidence was admissible to show homeowner's intent to not make the November 2001 payment on time and to show that a mistake did not occur, and the evidence was not unfairly prejudicial. Jones v. Coker, 90 Ark. App. 151, 204 S.W.3d 554 (2005).

Rule 403. Exclusion of relevant evidence on grounds of prejudice, confusion, or waste of time.

Although relevant, evidence may be excluded if its probative value is substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice, confusion of the issues, or misleading the jury, or by considerations of undue delay, waste of time, or needless presentation of cumulative evidence.

In General.

The probative value of evidence correlates inversely to the availability of other means of proving the issue for which the prejudicial evidence is offered. In other words, if the state has no other means to prove the issue, then the evidence is highly probative and that may outweigh its prejudicial effect; however, in cases where the state has other means of proving the issue, then the balance is tipped in favor of it being excluded because of its prejudicial effect.

Smith v. State, 19 Ark. App. 188, 718 S.W.2d 475 (1986), overruled as stated in Velcoff v. State, 2006 Ark. App. LEXIS 729 (Ark. Ct. App. Nov. 8, 2006). But see Brown v. State, 63 Ark. App. 38, 972 S.W.2d 956 (1998).

Admissions.

In a prosecution for murder, a deputy was properly permitted to testify to statements made by the defendant while he was in custody which the deputy heard over a monitor used for security purposes; those statements were highly probative because they constituted admissions of his involvement in the murder and provided evidence of the circumstances surrounding the crime and his intent to kill the victim and, furthermore, the mere fact that his statements were incriminating did not render them unfairly prejudicial. Hinkston v. State, 340 Ark. 530, 10 S.W.3d 906 (2000).

In a murder prosecution, the trial court did not err when it allowed the introduction into evidence of a letter written by the defendant in which he stated that “I know I did murder that man,” notwithstanding that, from a review of the entire letter, the alleged confession contained therein could have been the result of a grammatical error rather than an actual confession; an admission of guilt by the accused is relevant evidence of highly probative value and this rule did not require the court to suppress the letter simply because it was open to interpretation. Phillips v. State, 344 Ark. 453, 40 S.W.3d 778 (2001).

Trial court did not err in excluding any mention of a doctor who had been involved as a consultant and legal assistant on a patient’s malpractice case because the fact that the doctor participated in consulting with two of the patient’s experts had no relevance nor had the fact that he had been convicted of drug possession, causing him to lose his medical license. Because the testimony was irrelevant, there was no need for an analysis under this rule. McCoy v. Montgomery, 370 Ark. 333, 259 S.W.3d 430 (2007).

Trial court did not err by allowing two witnesses to testify during sentencing that they had seen defendant “acting suspiciously” in the neighborhood park on the day of his initial contact with police because the trial court specifically instructed the jury that the testimony was only to be considered to show why the witnesses called the police and was not offered for the truth of the matter asserted, the testimony was not unduly prejudicial, and the testimony went to defendant’s character. Adkins v. State, 371 Ark. 159, 264 S.W.3d 523 (2007).

Trial court did not err by allowing a police officer to testify that defendant’s pants were unbuttoned and unzipped at the time of his arrest because defendant cured any prejudice by cross-examining the officer and the appearance of defendant’s clothing was relevant to why the officer searched defendant. Adkins v. State, 371 Ark. 159, 264 S.W.3d 523 (2007).

During defendant’s criminal prosecution for murder, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting defendant’s statement to a reporter that his reason for killing the victim was to give him an early Christmas present. For purposes of this rule, the statement was probative of extreme indifference by showing defendant’s state of mind at the time of the shooting as well as his lack of remorse. Vorachith v. State, 2009 Ark. App. 656 (2009).

Applicability.

This rule is not applicable to the cross-examination of character witnesses. Smith v. State, 316 Ark. 407, 872 S.W.2d 843 (1994).

In a medical malpractice action brought after her husband died from surgery, evidence that a wife was prohibited from introducing was completely relevant and essential to her cause of action, and its “prejudice” was not unfair where she attached copies of a number of documents that contained evidence of her husband’s surgeon’s mental impairment, abuse of nitrous oxide gas, and use of Prozac at or before the time of the surgery, excerpts from the surgeon’s testimony before the medical board, his sealed medical records, and the affidavits of two doctors who both opined that, on the day of the surgery, the surgeon was impaired and that he breached the applicable standard of care. Turner v. Northwest Ark. Neurosurgery Clinic, P.A., 84 Ark. App. 93, 133 S.W.3d 417 (2003).

Evidence of defendant’s encounter with the prior rape victim was relevant to the issue of whether his encounter with the victim was consensual, and it was also probative evidence that the rape took place; therefore, the circuit judge did not abuse his discretion in allowing this evidence under this rule. Rounsaville v. State, 2009 Ark. 479, 346 S.W.3d 289 (2009).

Basis for Exclusion.

Relevant evidence may be excluded only if its probative value is substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice, confusion of the issues, or misleading the jury, or by considerations of undue delay, waste of time or needless presentation of cumulative evidence. Gruzen v. State, 267 Ark. 380, 591 S.W.2d 342 (1979), cert. denied, 449 U.S. 852, 101 S. Ct. 144, 66 L. Ed. 2d 64 (1980).

Under this rule, any reference to homosexuality through cross-examination would have no relevance to the issues and would have involved a danger of unfair prejudice outweighing any possible probative value of the cross-examination; accordingly, where medical examiner found a few sperm in murder victim’s anal area, some anal scars which could either be attributable to the hemorrhoids which the victim had or to anal intercourse, and since the police had no information about the victim being a homosexual, and because it is common for a man to ejaculate when he dies a violent death, it was proper for the trial court to prevent defense counsel from cross-examining the examiner about his findings. Pitts v. State, 273 Ark. 220, 617 S.W.2d 849 (1981).

The fact that evidence is prejudicial to a party is not, in itself, reason to exclude evidence; the danger of unfair prejudice must substantially outweigh the probative value of the evidence. Marvel v. Parker, 317 Ark. 232, 878 S.W.2d 364 (1994).

Trial court gave a fair and reasonable explanation for excluding expert testimony pertaining to tests as conducted. Thomson v. Littlefield, 319 Ark. 648, 893 S.W.2d 788 (1995).

The trial court erred in admitting into evidence a triple-beam balance scale seized from another's residence because there was no evidence by which a jury could infer that the defendant had control, exclusive access, or dominion over such residence. Hicks v. State, 327 Ark. 652, 941 S.W.2d 387 (1997).

In juvenile proceeding where the defendant was charged with the rape of a victim under the age of 14, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in determining that evidence of the victim's sexual history was irrelevant. M. M. v. State, 350 Ark. 328, 88 S.W.3d 406 (2002).

Trial court properly denied defendant's motion to withdraw his plea and his motion in limine because the trial court's siding with the State on the exclusion argument did not mean that defendant's guilty plea resulted from ineffective counsel, the physical evidence was necessary to establish a factual basis for the crimes committed and allowed the State to present a complete portrait of the crimes, especially where the sentencing jury did not hear the facts during the guilt phase. Holmes v. State, 2014 Ark. App. 502, 441 S.W.3d 916 (2014).

Corroboration of Accomplice.

Where in a prosecution for theft of property the state introduced a recorded conversation that the defendant had with a police informant, in which the defendant incriminated himself by referring to his participation in other car thefts, the trial court properly admitted such evidence since it had independent relevancy and it corroborated the testimony of the defendant's alleged accomplice. Price v. State, 268 Ark. 535, 597 S.W.2d 598 (1980).

Corroboration of Rape Victim.

In prosecution for rape, the trial court did not err in allowing articles of the defendant's clothing to be introduced into evidence together with testimony that there were human bloodstains on the clothing, where this evidence tended to corroborate the testimony of the rape victim, the police officers, and the medical examiner, and where it also tended to contradict the statement of the defendant that he had been in the car for only a period of time as to allow him to drive three or four blocks. Brewer v. State, 269 Ark. 185, 599 S.W.2d 141 (1980).

Trial court did not err in admitting defendant's prior convictions of rape and sexual assault of his step-daughter and her friend as it went to the depraved sexual instinct of the accused; further, the evidence was not excluded under this rule as it corroborated the victim's testimony. Anderson v. State, 93 Ark. App. 454, 220 S.W.3d 225 (2005).

Credibility.

In a witness bribery case, a trial court erred in excluding evidence that the state's main witness could have been biased due to a quiet title lawsuit two years earlier between the witness's parents and the defendant's parents. Paschal v. State, 2012 Ark. 127, 388 S.W.3d 429 (2012).

Cumulative Evidence.

This rule was not only designed to exclude relevant evidence on grounds of prejudice, but a trial court in the interest of the efficient administration of criminal justice may exclude evidence, although relevant, where there is a needless presentation of cumulative evidence, upon considerations of undue delays and waste of time. Lee v. State, 266 Ark. 870, 587 S.W.2d 78 (Ct. App. 1979).

Testimony concerning defendant's relationship to militaristic organization, the involvement with weapons, and the methods of operation was held relevant to show motive, etc., in larger plan to obtain money for organization in trial for robbery and murder of pawnbroker. Snell v. State, 290 Ark. 503, 721 S.W.2d 628 (1986), cert. denied, 484 U.S. 872, 108 S. Ct. 202, 98 L. Ed. 2d 153 (1987).

Federal bankruptcy court order properly excluded from evidence as redundant and likely to confuse issues. First Nat'l Bank v. Hess, 23 Ark. App. 129, 743 S.W.2d 825 (1988).

Where the jury had before it evidence that the deceased was a "bouncer," evidence from several witnesses that they had seen the deceased in his capacity as a bouncer throw people out of bars, and that they had seen him win some fist fights, although relevant, was cumulative and need not have been admitted. Smith v. State, 33 Ark. App. 37, 801 S.W.2d 655 (1990).

It is not reversible error to exclude evidence which is merely cumulative. Edwards v. State, 40 Ark. App. 114, 842 S.W.2d 459 (1992).

There was no prejudicial error where the evidence erroneously admitted was merely cumulative. Thompson v. Perkins, 322 Ark. 720, 911 S.W.2d 582 (1995).

Testimony in a divorce proceeding by a second expert witness with regard to the value of the parties' shares in a company could not be excluded under the rule as a "needless presentation of cumulative evidence" since the 2 expert witnesses were not so similar in their credentials, opinions, and approaches to the valuation that the introduction of the second expert's testimony would have been needless. Skokos v. Skokos, 332 Ark. 520, 968 S.W.2d 26 (1998).

In an action against an attorney for breach of contract in his representation of his client in a divorce matter, the attorney was improperly precluded from presenting evidence in his case-in-chief, notwithstanding that some similar evidence had been presented during the plaintiff's case-in-chief, since all of the proffered evidence was cumulative and because the excluded evidence, even if cumulative, was not needlessly so because it was the essence of his case. Potter v. Magee, 61 Ark. App. 112, 964 S.W.2d 412 (1998).

The court reversed an award of damages in an action against an attorney for breach of contract in his representation of a client, where the trial court effectively prevented the attorney from presenting his case by excluding as cumulative his testimony during his case-in-chief regarding the exact nature of the services he provided to the client. Potter v. Magee, 61 Ark. App. 112, 964 S.W.2d 412 (1998).

Ark. R. Evid. 702 applied to a gang intelligence detective's testimony regarding gang activity and, because the detective's expertise came from his personal experiences, a Daubert analysis was not required; while it was an abuse of discretion to allow the detective to testify that defendant was a "slinger" and a "banger" under this rule, the error was harmless because the evidence was cumulative. Jackson v. State, 359 Ark. 297, 197 S.W.3d 468 (2004), cert. denied, 544 U.S. 1039, 125 S. Ct. 2266, 161 L. Ed. 2d 1070 (2005).

In a case where a child was determined to be dependent-neglected based on allegations of sexual abuse, it was unnecessary to decide if testimony from the father's mother about what the child said was admissible under Ark. R. Evid. 803(3) to show the child's then-existing mental, emotional, or physical condition because the testimony was excludable as cumulative under this rule. The father was trying to show that the child had made statements denying the abuse had occurred, but other statements to this effect had been introduced. Sparrow v. Ark. HHS, 101 Ark. App. 193, 272 S.W.3d 846 (2008).

In a case in which defendant was convicted for committing a terroristic act and first-degree battery, he unsuccessfully argued that the circuit court abused its discretion by denying his objection to the admissibility of a certified copy of a pretrial no-contact order, entered in an unrelated case, directing him not to have any contact with the victim in the present case. The no-contact order was cumulative evidence to the victim's testimony, to which defendant had not objected, and defendant failed to show prejudice. Harris v. State, 2010 Ark. App. 247 (2010).

Circuit court did not err in refusing to permit defendant to testify as to his knowledge of the victim's gang affiliation where other evidence of that affiliation had already been admitted, and thus the testimony would have been cumulative. Lewis v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 442, 528 S.W.3d 312 (2017).

In a felon in possession of a firearm case in which defendant's now wife gave a pretrial statement to law enforcement that defendant had been shot in the face, and that he had a large black gun with him and put it on the couch, even assuming, without deciding, that the audio and transcript of the prior statement of the wife was impermissible hearsay, the trial court did not err in admitting that evidence because it was merely cumulative to the wife's testimony presented to the jury without objection; and defendant could not show that he was prejudiced by the admission of that evidence, as the mere fact that the evidence was cumulative was not a basis for holding that its admission, otherwise proper, constituted an abuse of discretion. Washington v. State, 2019 Ark. App. 224, 575 S.W.3d 626 (2019).

Dangerous Instrumentalities.

The instrumentality used to inflict fear is patently relevant to crimes of rape, kidnapping and aggravated robbery all of which include an element of force for perpetration. Brooks v. State, 308 Ark. 660, 827 S.W.2d 119 (1992).

Knife found at crime site was relevant to corroborate the testimony of the victim concerning stabbings and no prejudice resulted to the defendant. Brooks v. State, 308 Ark. 660, 827 S.W.2d 119 (1992).

Defendant's convictions for capital murder and committing a terroristic act were appropriate because evidence of ammunition taken from his former home was relevant and admissible since the shell casings at the scene of the drive-by shooting were the exact types found at defendant's former home and that related to his and his alleged accomplices' knowledge of those types of ammunition, their access thereto, and to their guilt. The supreme court was further unable to say that the circuit court abused its discretion in concluding that the evidence was more probative than prejudicial. Banks v. State, 2010 Ark. 108, 366 S.W.3d 341 (2010).

Details of Prior Incident.

Where the defendant was prosecuted for committing a battery on a deputy sheriff outside of a nightclub, the trial court did not err in limiting introduction into evidence of the details as to what occurred inside the club before the altercation with the deputy sheriff, despite the defendant's contention that what happened inside the club and what happened outside constituted one ongoing episode, was part of the res gestae, and would have better enabled the jury to understand the defendant's mental state and the reasonableness of his belief that he was in danger of great bodily harm. Barnes v. State, 4 Ark. App. 84, 628 S.W.2d 334 (1982).

Where injured truck driver had described his injuries from a 1999 accident by stating they were insubstantial, but the 2000 demand letter stemming from that accident indicated that he had suffered substantial injuries similar to those he sustained in the 2001 accident, the 2000 demand letter was admissible for impeachment purposes at the damages trial for the 2001 accident; it was also reasonable for the 2004 jury to know the extent of truck driver's claims of injuries from the 1999 accident. House v. Volunteer Transp., Inc., 365 Ark. 11, 223 S.W.3d 798 (2006).

Discretion of Court.

The mere fact that evidence is cumulative may be a ground for its exclusion, in the sound discretion of the trial judge, but it is hardly a basis for holding that its admission, otherwise proper, constitutes an abuse of discretion. Beed v. State, 271 Ark. 526, 609 S.W.2d 898 (1980), disapproved, Batson v. Kentucky, 476 U.S. 79, 106 S. Ct. 1712, 90 L. Ed. 2d 69 (1986).

Trial court has discretion in determining the relevance of evidence and in gauging its probative value against unfair prejudice. Simpson v. Hurt, 294 Ark. 41, 740 S.W.2d 618 (1987).

The balancing of probative value against prejudice is a matter left to the sound discretion of the trial judge, and his decision on such a matter will not be reversed absent a manifest abuse of that discretion. Wood v. State, 20 Ark. App. 61, 724 S.W.2d 183 (1987); Bennett v. State, 297 Ark. 115, 759 S.W.2d 799 (1988); Neble v. State, 26 Ark. App. 163, 762 S.W.2d 393 (1988); Haynes v. State, 309 Ark. 583, 832 S.W.2d 479 (1992); Weger v. State, 315 Ark. 555, 869 S.W.2d 688 (1994).

Where murder defendant attempted to have entered into evidence testimony to show others had a motive to kill the deceased, because there were no specific threats, the trial court's finding that the proffered testimony was collateral and excludable under this rule was not an abuse of discretion. Ray v. State, 304 Ark. 489, 803 S.W.2d 894, cert. denied, 501 U.S. 1222, 111 S. Ct. 2837, 115 L. Ed. 2d 1005 (1991).

Where murder defendant attempted to have entered into evidence a report concealing a phone call which allegedly showed there was a third person with a motive to kill the deceased, considering the remoteness in time of the reported call and the absence of any subsequent calls or actions stemming from the call, it could not be said that the report was either material or particularly favorable to the defendant's case, and thus the trial court did not abuse its discretion in excluding it from evidence. Ray v. State, 304 Ark. 489, 803 S.W.2d 894, cert. denied, 501 U.S. 1222, 111 S. Ct. 2837, 115 L. Ed. 2d 1005 (1991).

As with other evidentiary determinations, the balancing of probative value against prejudice is a matter left to the trial court's sound discretion, and its decision on such a matter will not be reversed absent abuse of that discretion. Robinson v. State, 314 Ark. 243, 861 S.W.2d 548 (1993).

Just as it is within the trial court's discretion to decide pursuant to this rule that evidence, though relevant, is to be excluded because it is unfairly prejudicial, under Ark. R. Civ. P. 59(a)(8) it is within the trial court's discretion to grant a new trial on the basis of an error of law occurring at the trial and objected to by the party making the application. Burnett v. Fowler, 315 Ark. 646, 869 S.W.2d 694 (1994).

This rule allows a trial court to exclude relevant evidence if its probative value is outweighed by the possibility of confusion of issues; this weighing is a matter left to the trial court's sound discretion and will not be reversed absent a showing of manifest abuse. Bohanan v. State, 324 Ark. 158, 919 S.W.2d 198 (1996).

The court did not abuse its discretion in permitting the introduction of evidence that, at around the date that the defendant murdered his parents, he pulled a pistol out of his truck console and told a friend that he had the pistol in the truck in case someone tried to "fuck with" them since such evidence was not so unfairly prejudicial as to outweigh its probative value. Hodge v. State, 332 Ark. 377, 965 S.W.2d 766 (1998).

The trial court did not abuse its discretion in permitting the admission into evidence of a rap tape found in the defendant's automobile since the tape was admissible as corroborative of the intent of the defendant and his accomplices to carry out a criminal plan similar to that suggested by lyrics on the tape. Britt v. State, 334 Ark. 142, 974 S.W.2d 436 (1998).

The trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting "surprise" testimony that the defendant told a witness that, if anyone asked, he was to say that the defendant had cut his hand while filleting fish since, even if the testimony was prejudicial, it was harmless in light of other evidence presented at the trial. Baker v. State, 334 Ark. 330, 974 S.W.2d 474 (1998).

The trial court did not abuse its discretion in permitting the introduction into evidence of typewritten notes by a jail matron of statements she heard between the defendants when they visited one another, notwithstanding the absence of the original handwritten notes made by the jail matron, where the jail matron testified that she merely typed without change her missing handwritten notes. Efurd v. State, 334 Ark. 596, 976 S.W.2d 928 (1998).

The court did not abuse its discretion in disallowing testimony by a prosecuting attorney in an action for malicious prosecution since his testimony would have added nothing of substance to the testimony already offered by previous witnesses. Kellerman v. Zeno, 64 Ark. App. 79, 983 S.W.2d 136 (1998).

Evidence of defendant's friendship with his victim was not prejudicial under this rule where defense counsel, through cross-examination as well as through his closing statement, made his point to the jury that the existence of a friendship did not equal the existence of a sexual relationship. Smith v. State, 354 Ark. 226, 118 S.W.3d 542 (2003).

Driver's reliance on the rule did not convince the court that the evidence should have been excluded; as the attorney-client privilege was waived, the trial court did not abuse its considerable discretion in this regard. Reed v. Adamec, 2014 Ark. App. 170 (2014).

Trial judge did not abuse his discretion in excluding evidence regarding whether a health care provider in a medical malpractice case had a license to conduct surgery because the issue of licensing was a peripheral issue that was also complex and could have caused jury confusion. Poff v. Elkins, 2014 Ark. App. 663, 449 S.W.3d 315 (2014).

Circuit court did not abuse its discretion when it did not allow defendant in defendant's trial for possession of controlled substances to present testimony at trial—in opening, closing, cross-examination, or in defendant's case-in-chief—about the wrong address on the search warrant for defendant's mobile home. Defendant could not show how an error on the face of the search warrant had anything to do with whether defendant possessed controlled substances and the exclusion did not violate defendant's constitutional right to present a defense. Kellensworth v. State, 2021 Ark. 5, 614 S.W.3d 804 (2021).

Drawings.

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in allowing a drawing made by a twelve-year-old witness several days after a murder; defendant was allowed to question the witness about the drawing, and the Supreme Court could not say that defendant was unfairly prejudiced (defendant's attorney filed no-merit brief). Fletcher v. State, 2018 Ark. 261, 555 S.W.3d 858 (2018).

Drug Evidence.

In a criminal prosecution for possession of marijuana and cocaine with intent to deliver, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in allowing the marijuana to stay in the courtroom during the first two and a half hours of the trial; the presence and alleged odor of the marijuana was not unduly prejudicial. McKenzie v. State, 362 Ark. 257, 208 S.W.3d 173 (2005).

Dying Declarations.

A dying declaration by a murder victim that the defendant shot him was properly admitted into evidence, notwithstanding the defendant's assertion that the dying declaration was more prejudicial than probative because the state had other means to prove its case, i.e., eyewitness testimony, since the state was entitled to prove its case as conclusively as it can. Hammon v. State, 338 Ark. 733, 2 S.W.3d 50 (1999).

Elements of Crime.

As evidence of checks was part and parcel of the state's evidence establishing robbery, there was no abuse of discretion in the court's receiving this evidence. Nooner v. State, 322 Ark. 87, 907 S.W.2d 677 (1995), cert. denied, 517 U.S. 1143, 116 S. Ct. 1436, 134 L. Ed. 2d 558 (1996).

Gang-affiliation evidence held admissible to show motive for murder. Scott v. State, 325 Ark. 267, 924 S.W.2d 248 (1996).

Trial court did not err in admitting testimony about the victim's subsequent death a month after the robbery because the evidence of the victim's death was clearly relevant to prove death or serious physical injury as an element of the offense of aggravated robbery, § 5-12-103. Medlock v. State, 79 Ark. App. 447, 89 S.W.3d 357 (2002).

Where defendant was charged with possession of firearms by certain persons and aggravated assault, the trial court abused its discretion in refusing defendant's offer to stipulate to his prior felony conviction and in overruling defendant's objection to the admission of his prior conviction; thus, defendant's convictions were reversed. Ferguson v. State, 90 Ark. App. 119, 204 S.W.3d 113, rev'd, 362 Ark. 547, 210 S.W.3d 53 (2005).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting a portion of a 911 dispatch log into evidence because the court determined that the probative value of the dispatch log substantially outweighed the danger of unfair prejudice, as the log corroborated the victims' testimony that defendant was involved in a robbery and burglary. Moreover, the identification of defendant by name in the 911 calls undermined defendant's theory of mistaken identity. Turner v. State, 2014 Ark. App. 428, 439 S.W.3d 88 (2014).

Evidence More Probative Than Prejudicial.

Appellant complained of the ruling permitting evidence about his behavior before and at the time of his arrest over his objection under this rule, but the court found the evidence was relevant and more probative than prejudicial, given that (1) the evidence was admissible to show when and how appellant was taken into custody, and (2) appellant appeared as if he was going to flee; the evidence about what happened before and after appellant's arrest was relevant to inform the jury of all the facts that surrounded the crimes and to show consciousness of guilt. Caery v. State, 2012 Ark. App. 583 (2012).

Circuit court did not abuse its discretion in finding a recording admissible of a phone call between the incarcerated defendant and a witness who had testified on the first day of defen-defendant's trial; while prejudicial, the probative value of the call was not substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice, and the circuit court's admonition was sufficient to cure any possible prejudice that could stem from the jury learning that defendant was incarcerated during the trial. Miller v. State, 2018 Ark. App. 614, 567 S.W.3d 68 (2018).

There was no abuse of discretion in the circuit court's decision to admit the testimony of a special agent with the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms, and Explosives because the evidence was relevant to explain to the jury the functioning of the telescopic sight mounted on defendant's rifle, the circuit court decided it was not unduly prejudicial, and the agent did not offer any opinion or testimony regarding what defendant could see with or without the scope on the night of the shootings. Barefield v. State, 2019 Ark. 149, 574 S.W.3d 142, cert. denied, 140 S. Ct. 671, 205 L. Ed. 2d 442 (2019).

Evidence Not Relevant.

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to admit appellant's proffered expert and lay testimony to establish that his substance-induced psychosis caused him to falsely confess to a crime that he did not commit where he had not asserted an insanity defense, and thus, the proposed testimony was not relevant. The trial court's refusal to admit the proffered testimony did not deny appellant his right to a fair opportunity to present a defense where he took the stand in his own defense and he was able to cross-examine witnesses. Westbrook v. State, 2016 Ark. App. 77, 482 S.W.3d 731 (2016).

In defendant's trial for concealing birth under § 5-26-203, the circuit court abused its discretion in allowing discussion of abortion, defendant's abortion history, and evidence that she had ingested medication prior to giving birth where it was undisputed that the child was not born alive, the evidence was irrelevant as to whether she had concealed the birth, and even if relevant, the probative value was substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice given the four-minute verdict. Bynum v. State, 2018 Ark. App. 201, 546 S.W.3d 533 (2018).

Circuit court erred in admitting evidence of plaintiff's prescription medication in an automobile collision case where there was no evidence of plaintiff's intoxication or impairment at the time of the accident or immediately afterward. Baker v. Trevathan, 2018 Ark. App. 135, 542 S.W.3d 231 (2018).

Although plaintiff had established error in the circuit court's admission of evidence of her prescription medication in a case involving an automobile collision, she was not entitled to relief where the jury found neither party at fault for the accident; without a finding of fault on plaintiff's part, she could not demonstrate prejudice. Baker v. Trevathan, 2018 Ark. App. 135, 542 S.W.3d 231 (2018).

Evidence of Insurance.

Where the trial judge in a personal injury action apparently made no discretionary determination under this rule, that any prejudice resulting from introduction of evidence of insurance would outweigh the probative value of the evidence, there was no justification for the court to have refused to permit the testimony or to have given the requested instruction on admissibility of such evidence had the testimony been permitted. Ashmore v. Ford, 267 Ark. 854, 591 S.W.2d 666 (Ct. App. 1979), limited, Druckemiller v. Cluff, 316 Ark. 517, 873 S.W.2d 526 (1994).

In a medical malpractice action, the trial court did not abuse its discretion when it refused to permit the plaintiff to ask the expert witness testifying for the defense whether he had previously written a report for an insurance company in which he gave his opinion of the defendant's handling of the case, where the trial judge held that the prejudice which would result from the jury knowing insurance was involved outweighed any probative value. Hively v. Edwards, 278 Ark. 435, 646 S.W.2d 688 (1983).

Mention of insurance in an auto accident case would have caused substantial unfair prejudice, and it would have had only a slight probative value on the issue of orchestration; thus, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to allow the proffered testimony about insurance. Peters v. Pierce, 314 Ark. 8, 858 S.W.2d 680 (1993).

Testimony that defendant was injured and out of work did not lead the jury to assume that the defendant could not bear the financial burden of a judgment, and thus did not open the door to evidence regarding whether defendant had liability insurance. Esry v. Carden, 328 Ark. 153, 942 S.W.2d 846 (1997).

Exclusion Upheld.

In a drug trafficking case, where an HBO film crew filmed the officers' search of defendant's home, the circuit court did not abuse its discretion in granting the State's motion to exclude testimony about the filming of the search where neither party planned to introduce any footage, indeed, neither party had any footage, the filmmakers played no role in the search but merely observed it, and defendant's argument that law enforcement had something to hide was undercut by the prosecutor's prompt disclosure of the filmmakers' presence well over a year before trial. Harmon v. State, 2020 Ark. 217, 600 S.W.3d 586 (2020).

Expert Testimony.

In a medical malpractice action, the court did not abuse its discretion in excluding evidence that the defendant had failed a board certification examination on a number of occasions; although evidence of a physician's lack of board certification may be used to impeach the physician's credibility as an expert witness, a trial court must still properly weigh the interests under this rule and may exclude relevant evidence if its probative value is substantially outweighed by the possibility of unfair prejudice or confusion of the issues. Jackson v. Buchman, 338 Ark. 467, 996 S.W.2d 30 (1999).

In a murder case, the court did not err by allowing the state to question the medical examiner about strangulation as a cause of death where the issue was critical to the state's case and defendant suffered no unfair prejudice; defendant confessed to his son that he got his wife in a choke hold and did not let her go, the jury was not misled by testimony, and the medical examiner's opinion on the cause of death was highly probative. Wyles v. State, 357 Ark. 530, 182 S.W.3d 142 (2004).

Factors Considered.

Under this rule, the probative value and unfair prejudice of the evidence must be assessed somehow, and these values must be compared to determine which will advance the search for truth; on the basis of this comparison, the proffered evidence is admitted or rejected. Golden v. State, 10 Ark. App. 362, 664 S.W.2d 496 (1984), overruled, Bledsoe v. State, 344 Ark. 86, 39 S.W.3d 760 (2001).

Where letter purportedly written by defendant was not shown by the state to be in defendant's handwriting and contained no admission of guilt with respect to a stolen camera, the evidence of the camera in the letter was not prejudicial and was not needlessly cumulative where other evidence regarding the stolen camera had been introduced. Box v. State, 348 Ark. 116, 71 S.W.3d 552 (2002).

In defendant's murder case, the circuit court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to exclude the reference to defendant's tattoo in the video and transcript of his interview with the detective because there was no follow up or suggestion based on the questions and answers about the tattoo. Based upon the brevity of the discussion in an otherwise completely relevant statement, coupled with the fact that defendant no explanation as to how the tattoo suggested gang affiliation, there was no error. Navarro v. State, 371 Ark. 179, 264 S.W.3d 530 (2007).

Although the prejudice clearly outweighed the probative value of the 911 tapes under this rule, the error to admit the tapes was harmless because of the sufficient independent evidence presented in the form of victim testimony and physical evidence. Snider v. State, 2009 Ark. App. 472, 323 S.W.3d 635 (2009).

Denial of inmate's petition for postconviction relief was appropriate after he was convicted of first-degree sexual assault because he failed to prove that he received the ineffective assistance of counsel. In part, there were striking similarities in the testimony of the boys, the evidence in the case was highly probative, and the inmate failed to show that counsel could have prevailed on appeal if the argument regarding witness testimony had been preserved. Croy v. State, 2011 Ark. 284, 383 S.W.3d 367 (2011).

During defendant's trial for permitting the abuse of her minor child, the court did not err in allowing defendant's neighbor to testify because the testimony was probative of the material issue of defendant's failure to take action to prevent abuse to her children; it also corroborated other testimony that defendant left her three children unattended for a couple of days while she and her boyfriend went to Texas. Sullivan v. State, 2012 Ark. 74, 386 S.W.3d 507 (2012).

Denial of an inmate's Ark. R. Crim. P. 37 petition was proper because he failed to prove that he received the ineffective assistance of counsel. Had counsel made the objections that the inmate asserted should have been made under this rule and Ark. R. Evid. 404(b), they would have been properly overruled because the inmate himself introduced the issue of a Virginia trip and his treatment of the victim's older sister; thus, the inmate opened the door to the very testimony he now found objectionable. Gilliland v. State, 2012 Ark. 175 (2012).

Flight.

Admitting evidence about defendant's flight from law enforcement was not an abuse of discretion under this rule as the evidence was probative of defendant's consciousness of guilt; even had error occurred in admitting the evidence, the error was harmless in view of the overwhelming proof of guilt. Jefferson v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 536, 532 S.W.3d 593.

Harmless Error.

Where prosecutor in rape case elicited from the victim testimony that she had been a virgin prior to the rape but trial court admonished jury to disregard improper question and answer, the statement was harmless error regardless of its relevancy and there was no violation of this rule. Brewer v. State, 269 Ark. 185, 599 S.W.2d 141 (1980).

In a prosecution for possession and delivery of a drug, erroneous admission of certain drug paraphernalia was harmless error where there was overwhelming evidence to support a conviction. Hicks v. State, 327 Ark. 652, 941 S.W.2d 387 (1997).

When the evidence of guilt is overwhelming, slight errors in the introduction of evidence do not constitute reversible error. Kidd v. State, 330 Ark. 479, 955 S.W.2d 505 (1997).

In a prosecution of defendant for raping his daughter, any error in the admission of pornographic images from defendant's computer under this rule Ark. R. Evid. 404 was harmless. Even assuming that the admission of the photos was error, there was overwhelming evidence of defendant's guilt. Johnston v. State, 2014 Ark. 110, 431 S.W.3d 895 (2014).

Impeachment.

Rule 608(b) has no application to the issue of impeachment by contradiction, but this rule, which permits the court to exclude relevant evidence if its probative value is substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice, is applicable. However, under this rule the issue must be specifically brought to the attention of the trial court. Shaver v. State, 37 Ark. App. 124, 826 S.W.2d 300 (1992).

In a witness bribery case, a trial court erred in excluding evidence that the state's main witness could have been biased due to a quiet title lawsuit two years earlier between the witness's parents and the defendant's parents. Paschal v. State, 2012 Ark. 127, 388 S.W.3d 429 (2012).

In a legal malpractice case, evidence of a failure to report property in a prior bankruptcy case was properly admitted into evidence as proof of credibility; moreover, there was no objection based on Ark. R. Evid. 404, the probative value of contradictory statements was not substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice, and the remoteness of the 1985 bankruptcy did not render it inadmissible. Howard v. Adams, 2012 Ark. App. 562, 424 S.W.3d 337 (2012).

Incest and Child Abuse.

In the context of incest and child abuse cases, the question of the admissibility of evidence of prior offenses between different individuals must be determined on a case-by-case basis. Proper admission of this testimony requires a fact-intensive inquiry conducted by the trial court, keeping in mind the purpose of Rule 404(b), the rationale behind case law which has allowed the admission of such testimony, and the considerations required by this rule. This approach is preferable to a rigid, mechanistic rule which would automatically exclude such evidence regardless of its relevancy, its purpose, or its probative value. Baldrige v. State, 32 Ark. App. 160, 798 S.W.2d 127 (1990).

In a prosecution of defendant on four counts of violation of a minor in the first degree, the testimony of defendant's adult daughter, who testified that defendant sexually violated her when she was a child 30 years before, was admissible both to show motive and plan; the probative value of the daughter's testimony outweighed the danger of unfair prejudice. Tull v. State, 82 Ark. App. 159, 119 S.W.3d 523 (2003).

Defendant's daughter's testimony was properly admissible under this rule because enough similarities existed between the cases to make the evidence probative on the issue of defendant's deviate sexual impulses; the victim was around 13 when the abuse happened and the daughter was 14 at the time of the incident with her father; both girls were staying in defendant's home at the time of the abuse, and the victim testified that she looked upon defendant as a father. Flanery v. State, 362 Ark. 311, 208 S.W.3d 187 (2005).

In an assault case arising from shaking a baby under § 5-13-201(a)(4)(A), testimony of defendant's actions toward the same infant two weeks earlier was admissible under Ark. R. Evid. 404(b) and this rule because it was offered to show state of mind and to negate the claim of accident. Smith v. State, 90 Ark. App. 261, 205 S.W.3d 173 (2005).

Trial court did not err by denying defendant the right to elicit evidence tending to corroborate testimony about the victim's alleged molestation of one his children because the grandmother testified only that her granddaughter cried when taken from her grandparents to visit the victim and admitted that she never called any social service agency or any law enforcement authorities to report any incidents of child abuse. Vidos v. State, 367 Ark. 296, 239 S.W.3d 467 (2006).

Trial court properly admitted evidence of defendant having an erection during supervised visitation with the victims, his young daughters, during his rape trial as the evidence fell under the pedophile exception to Ark. R. Evid. 404(b) because: (1) evidence of defendant's arousal while watching the victims perform a dance routine demonstrated a "particular proclivity" toward young girls, particularly the victims, thereby establishing the "intimate relationship" between the perpetrator and the victim; (2) the fact that defendant got an erection demonstrated an unnatural sexual attraction towards his daughters and, therefore, there was a "sufficient degree of similarity" between defendant's arousal at seeing the victims and his sexual conduct of having intercourse with them; and (3) the evidence was relevant under this rule because it demonstrated why visitation with the victims stopped shortly thereafter. White v. State, 367 Ark. 595, 242 S.W.3d 240 (2006), cert. denied, 550 U.S. 904, 127 S. Ct. 2114, 167 L. Ed. 2d 815 (2007).

Evidence of defendant's physical abuse of the victims, his two young daughters, was properly admitted into evidence during his rape trial because defendant's physical abuse demonstrated that he instilled fear in the victims and intimidated them by both physical and sexual abuse. White v. State, 367 Ark. 595, 242 S.W.3d 240 (2006), cert. denied, 550 U.S. 904, 127 S. Ct. 2114, 167 L. Ed. 2d 815 (2007).

ship between defendant and his daughter, the witness, was clearly an intimate one, and the conduct about which she testified was sufficiently similar to the charged conduct to warrant application of the exception. Both girls were under defendant's care at the time of the abuse, the victim viewed defendant as her father, and both girls were between the ages of six and nine at the time of the start of the abuse. Strong v. State, 372 Ark. 404, 277 S.W.3d 159 (2008).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in permitting a 30-year old witness from testifying regarding his sexual abuse by defendant when the witness was between the ages of 13 and 18 at defendant's trial for raping and sexually assaulting his minor step-grandchildren because defendant had subjected the witness to the same type of sexual conduct and because the witness and defendant's step-grandchildren were, to a certain degree, under defendant's care at the time of the abuse. Because the similarities were significant and probative on the issue of defendant's deviate sexual impulses, the probative value of the evidence was not substantially outweighed by any danger of unfair prejudice. Allen v. State, 374 Ark. 309, 287 S.W.3d 579 (2008).

Defendant's convictions for rape as a habitual offender were appropriate because the testimony of a 26-year-old female (witness) whose mother was married to defendant when the witness was a child was permissible under Ark. R. Evid. 404(b) since the testimony was probative of defendant's depraved sexual instinct toward young girls living in his home. A review of the record further showed that the trial court weighed the probative value and the prejudice in admitting the witness's testimony. Price v. State, 2010 Ark. App. 111, 377 S.W.3d 324 (2010).

In defendant's prosecution under § 5-14-103(a)(3)(A), it was not an abuse of discretion to admit an anatomical chart completed at the child victim's direction with defendant's name on the chart because (1) the name was not hearsay, under Ark. R. Evid. 801(c), as the name was not offered to prove defendant abused the victim, (2) if hearsay, the name was admissible, as Ark. R. Evid. 803(4) permitted statements in a medical exam identifying a perpetrator in a child's household, and (3) this rule did not exclude the exhibit as the victim identified defendant as the victim's abuser at trial, and any error was harmless, as the exhibit was cumulative. Elliott v. State, 2010 Ark. App. 810, 379 S.W.3d 101 (2010).

During defendant's trial for raping his seven-year-old daughter, the court did not err in allowing the admission of a drawing by the victim because the drawing not only enabled the jury to more fully understand the victim's testimony but also allowed the victim to testify more effectively; there was no prejudice to

Testimony of defendant's 12- or 13-year-old daughter that defendant asked her to show him her breasts was properly excluded as: (1) the 12-year-old victim alleged that defendant touched her breasts, buttocks, and vagina; (2) the daughter's testimony was sufficiently similar to fall within the pedophile exception to Ark. R. Evid. 404(b) as it signified defendant's sexual interest in the bodies of young teen or pre-teen girls; and (3) the testimony had independent relevance for purposes of this rule. Stewart v. State, 2011 Ark. App. 658, 386 S.W.3d 583 (2011).

At defendant's jury trial for two counts of rape arising from the sexual assault of his stepdaughter, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting evidence of conduct that led to his prior conviction for endangering the welfare of a minor in connection with allegations made by the second victim — defendant's other stepdaughter; the evidence was admissible because it showed that defendant had a proclivity to engage in sexual intercourse with children in his care. The appellate court rejected defendant's claims that evidence should have been excluded under this rule because balancing the probative value of the evidence against the prejudicial effect was a matter left to the trial court's discretion. Ball v. State, 2012 Ark. App. 665 (2012).

In the trial of defendant for the rape of his stepdaughter, the trial judge did not err in allowing the testimony of two witnesses who had been raped by defendant 20 years earlier because they were similar in age and circumstances to the stepdaughter. The evidence was probative because it showed defendant's depraved sexual instinct for raping minor girls and the circumstances of how he came in contact with the girls, and its probative value outweighed any alleged prejudice. Brown v. State, 2012 Ark. App. 399, 424 S.W.3d 288 (2012).

Intent.

Expert testimony on the ability of a defendant to form specific intent to murder is not admissible. Stewart v. State, 316 Ark. 153, 870 S.W.2d 752 (1994).

In a negligence action against insurance agent, statements pertaining to insured's intent that his son not receive any policy benefits were admissible to establish that agent had properly effectuated the intent of the insured. Easterling v. Weedman, 54 Ark. App. 22, 922 S.W.2d 735 (1996).

In a prosecution for permanent detention or restraint, defendant's several contradictory statements that defendant had killed and buried the victim, while the victim was alive and residing in another state, were probative of defendant's intent and were not so prejudicial as to be excluded under this rule. Brown v. State, 54 Ark. App. 44, 924 S.W.2d 251 (1996).

In a prosecution for capital felony murder, evidence that the defendant was receiving Social Security checks might have been confusing to the jury, which could have concluded the federal government's determination that the defendant was entitled to assistance due to a mental disability amounted to proof that he lacked the capacity to commit the crime alleged. Bowden v. State, 328 Ark. 15, 940 S.W.2d 494 (1997).

Two documents written by defendant describing a robbery scenario were not prejudicial to defendant because they were probative of defendant's intent to commit aggravated robbery. Cook v. State, 345 Ark. 264, 45 S.W.3d 820 (2001).

Evidence of subsequent drug sales was properly admitted at defendant's trial for possession of cocaine with the intent to deliver and possession of methamphetamine with the intent to deliver, both pursuant to § 5-64-401 [repealed], because, pursuant to Ark. R. Evid. 404(b) and this rule, the evidence was relevant to whether defendant intended to deliver the drugs, and was not unfairly prejudicial. Turner v. State, 2009 Ark. App. 822 (2009).

Intoxication.

Although Ark. Code Ann. § 27-101-202(7) (Repl. 1994) provides that no person shall operate any motorboat while intoxicated, trial court did not abuse its discretion in excluding testimony regarding beer cans found in the water; there was no evidence that boat operator was intoxicated, and its prejudicial effect outweighed any probative value. Wade v. Grace, 321 Ark. 482, 902 S.W.2d 785 (1995).

In a prosecution for murder, the court did not err in refusing to allow the defendant to present evidence that the victim, had cocaine in her bloodstream at the time of her death since such evidence had little probative value with regard to provocation, but was highly prejudicial, and the court allowed the defendant to offer evidence of alcohol in the victim's bloodstream, but he failed to do so. Jones v. State, 340 Ark. 390, 10 S.W.3d 449 (2000).

No unfair prejudice occurred in a product liability action by the admission of evidence of the vehicle driver's alcohol consumption because a dim view of drinking and driving was to be expected no matter what the circumstances or jurisdiction. Gartman v. Ford Motor Co., 2013 Ark. App. 665, 430 S.W.3d 218 (2013).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in finding that the probative value of defendant's refusal to take a breath test was not substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice. Tiller v. State, 2014 Ark. App. 431, 439 S.W.3d 705 (2014).

Limitation on Testimony.

There was no manifest abuse of discretion in the trial court's limitation of testimony regarding a matter that was tangential to the proceedings and bore no significant probative value. Trakru v. Mathews, 2014 Ark. App. 154, 434 S.W.3d 10 (2014).

Limited Purpose.

Where savings and loan association accepted decedent's credit life insurance request as part of a loan package, but failed to advise decedent that an application would have to be taken, so that no insurance was procured, it was not error for the trial court to admit evidence under this rule tending to show that decedent was insurable by companies other than the one used by the association, since it was relevant for the limited purpose of showing decedent's insurability, because its probative value was not substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice or misleading the jury. Home Fed. Sav. & Loan Ass'n v. Bass, 1 Ark. App. 146, 613 S.W.2d 604 (1981).

Limiting Instruction.

Where a narcotics agent testified as to a conversation he had with the defendant at the time of the delivery transaction, and when he asked defendant about the quality of the PCP, two packets of white powder, the defendant assured him it was "pretty good," and he had already sold 30 hits that same night, and where following the agent's testimony, the court admonished the jury that the testimony was admitted for the limited purpose of establishing the "entire transaction of the night in question," and not for determining the defendant's guilt or innocence with regard to the offense with which he was being tried, the court did not err in admitting the questioned testimony. Young v. State, 269 Ark. 12, 598 S.W.2d 74 (1980).

The court did not abuse its discretion in admitting evidence that narcotics officers had received a call saying there were two black males from the Sallisaw, Oklahoma area who were selling cocaine or had it in their possession, as the evidence had a high probative value, and gave the reason behind the officers' surveillance of the defendant's activity, and since the trial court gave a limiting instruction to the jury, informing them that they were not to look to the evidence for the truth of the matter asserted, but to show why the officers acted as they did. Kilpatrick v. State, 322 Ark. 728, 912 S.W.2d 917 (1995).

Luminol Test.

The mere presence of human blood found by luminol testing, without factors which relate that evidence to the crime, is not admissible. Palmer v. State, 315 Ark. 696, 870 S.W.2d 385 (1994).

When positive luminol tests cannot be confirmed by other evidence, the luminol test results become irrelevant and their admission into evidence confuses the jury. Young v. State, 316 Ark. 225, 871 S.W.2d 373 (1994).

Misleading Evidence.

In suit seeking recovery for personal injuries suffered when plaintiff was struck by auto driven by defendant, the refusal of court to permit plaintiff to show that there was a speed limit sign near the scene of the accident not for the purpose of showing the speed limit but in order to show defendant was not keeping a proper lookout was not error since it was stipulated that there was no ordinance regulating vehicular speed in the area and evidence pertaining to this sign would be calculated to mislead the jury on the issue of speed and the danger of unfair prejudice on this account would substantially outweigh the slight relevance it would have had on the lookout issue. Ferguson v. Graddy, 263 Ark. 413, 565 S.W.2d 600 (1978).

A Rule 702 determination of whether the evidence might confuse or mislead the jury is separate from a weighing under this rule, in which the proponent of the evidence must first prove that it is reliable and will not confuse or mislead the jury. Prater v. State, 307 Ark. 180, 820 S.W.2d 429 (1991).

Testimony that tended to show that defendant had cleaned himself up for court did not unfairly prejudice or mislead the jury. Gunter v. State, 313 Ark. 504, 857 S.W.2d 156, cert. denied, 510 U.S. 948, 114 S.Ct. 391, 126 L. Ed. 2d 339 (1993).

Trial court abused its discretion in permitting the chiropractor's testimony suggesting that plaintiff's complaints of pain were motivated by secondary gain; the chiropractor's statement that he was only quoting science, not expressing an opinion about plaintiff, when saying that the most common cause of chronic pain was the eligibility for compensation was irrelevant and resulted in unfair prejudice because the jury may well have believed that plaintiff was motivated by secondary gain. Glover v. Main St. Wholesale Furniture, LLC, 2018 Ark. App. 152, 545 S.W.3d 245 (2018).

Motive.

In a murder prosecution, evidence of the defendant's participation in uncharged acts of forgery and burglary was properly admitted as proof of his motive for killing the victim. McGehee v. State, 338 Ark. 152, 992 S.W.2d 110 (1999).

In a criminal prosecution for first-degree murder, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in allowing tattoo evidence at trial; the tattoo, which read "Death Before Dishonor," was probative of defendant's motive in the shooting the victim following an altercation. Morris v. State, 358 Ark. 455, 193 S.W.3d 243 (2004).

Admitting evidence of defendant's gang affiliation was proper under Ark. R. Evid. 403 and 404(b) where the State alleged that defendant shot the victim because he disrespected the mother of a fellow Piru gang member, and thus evidence of defendant's gang affiliation was relevant to show motive and to rebut defendant's justification defense. Gentry v. State, 2021 Ark. 26 (2021).

Objections.

Where plaintiffs did not ask the trial court to weigh probative value against unfair prejudice, the trial court erred in granting a new trial based on this Rule because no objection was raised either before or during the trial, and Ark. R. Civ. P. 59(a)(8) provides that a new trial may be granted for an "error of law occurring at the trial and objected to"; lacking an objection, there was no support for the ruling that the evidence was not relevant. Ford Motor Co. v. Nuckolls, 320 Ark. 15, 894 S.W.2d 897 (1995).

Opinion Testimony.

An eyewitness' opinion testimony as to whether a shooting was accidental or intentional was not objectionable as being irrelevant or a waste of time in a murder prosecution. Mathis v. State, 267 Ark. 904, 591 S.W.2d 679 (Ct. App. 1979), overruled, Rogers v. State, 10 Ark. App. 19, 660 S.W.2d 949 (1983).

An undercover narcotics officer can be found competent to state his opinion regarding the substance he purchased and where officer, acting in an undercover capacity, and through prior experience, thought he was buying hashish, and in fact thought it was in sufficient quantity to have an effect on six to eight persons, he was properly allowed to testify to the nature of the transaction in a prosecution for delivery of marijuana. Euton v. State, 270 Ark. 121, 603 S.W.2d 468 (Ct. App. 1980).

The state trooper should not have been permitted to testify concerning his opinion on the speed issue absent some indication that his opinion was based on information that went beyond the experience and understanding of the average juror where the question before the jury was whether the defendant was driving negligently when he collided with the decedent's car. Higgs v. Hodges, 16 Ark. App. 146, 697 S.W.2d 943 (1985).

Other Acts.

Circuit court did not abuse its discretion when it rejected defendant's argument that the admission of his daughter's "prior act" witness testimony would be unduly prejudicial as there was another case pending in another county in which she was the victim; defendant failed to show how allowing the daughter to testify burdened his right to confront her when she would presumably be the complaining witness in the other trial, and defendant would not be bound to employ the same strategy to impeach the daughter as he used in the case-at-bar. Lowery v. State, 2019 Ark. 332, 586 S.W.3d 644 (2019).

In a rape and second-degree sexual assault case in Miller County, the circuit court did not abuse its discretion when it rejected defendant's argument that the admission of his daughter's "prior act" witness testimony, concerning his alleged rape of her, was unduly prejudicial because the conduct she would testify to was the subject of a pending Pulaski County case; counsel had not yet been retained for the Pulaski County trial, that trial was not yet scheduled, and the circuit court in Miller County only had the jurisdiction to control the receipt of evidence in the Miller County trial and could not control the admission of evidence in a Pulaski County trial. Lowery v. State, 2019 Ark. 332, 586 S.W.3d 644 (2019).

This rule functions to prevent undue prejudice in the trial in which the evidence in question is sought to be introduced, and the intent of the rule is to prevent the trier of fact from being swayed by evidence that obscures the issue before it; the rule does not concern the prejudice to a litigant in some other proceeding. Lowery v. State, 2019 Ark. 332, 586 S.W.3d 644 (2019).

State's attempt to convince the jury that defendant had to be guilty of strangulation based on the evidence that he previously choked his former girlfriend in an unrelated domestic dispute was the embodiment of the danger of unfair prejudice contemplated by this rule, and the admission was not harmless. While the evidence was sufficient to support a conviction, it was hardly overwhelming. Gonzales v. State, 2019 Ark. App. 600, 589 S.W.3d 505 (2019).

In a rape case, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in permitting testimony under Ark. R. Evid. 404(b) regarding two prior alleged rapes of two other victims. The trial court found enough similarities between the incidents to make the testimony relevant as evidence of defendant's intent, motive, or plan; and while the evidence might have been prejudicial, its probative value was not outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice under this rule. Carter v. State, 2019 Ark. App. 57, 568 S.W.3d 788 (2019).

Circuit court did not abuse its discretion in defendant's trial for second-degree murder when it admitted evidence that defendant had forged a check, making defendant the payee, because defendant's statement that defendant forged a check was an independently relevant fact under Ark. R. Evid. 404(b) tending to establish defendant's knowledge, intent, or motive for murdering the victims. The forged check evidence was independently relevant to support the inference that defendant killed the victims because defendant owed one of the victims money. Watts v. State, 2020 Ark. App. 218, 600 S.W.3d 618 (2020).

Other Crimes.

Other crimes' evidence will be admitted only if it has independent relevancy and its relevancy is not substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice; these are issues which the trial judge has wide discretion in deciding, and he will not be reversed on appeal unless he has abused such discretion. Price v. State, 268 Ark. 535, 597 S.W.2d 598 (1980); Carter v. State, 295 Ark. 218, 748 S.W.2d 127 (1988); Haynes v. State, 309 Ark. 583, 832 S.W.2d 479 (1992).

Although the general rule is that evidence of other crimes by the accused, not charged in the indictment or information and not a part of the same transaction, is not admissible at the trial of the accused, evidence of other criminal activity is admissible under the res gestae exception to the general rule to establish the facts and circumstances surrounding the alleged commission of the offense; accordingly, evidence concerning defendant's glue-sniffing during crime was properly admitted in prosecution for aggravated robbery and kidnapping. Bell v. State, 6 Ark. App. 388, 644 S.W.2d 601 (1982).

Trial court did not err in refusing to declare a mistrial because the testimony of defendant's probation officer tended to show defendant had been convicted of a crime, where the purpose of this testimony was to show that the vehicle used in robbery was one under the control of defendant; it was properly within the discretion of the circuit judge to admit this relevant evidence by balancing the probative value of the submitted testimony against its possible prejudicial effect. Mitchell v. State, 281 Ark. 112, 661 S.W.2d 390 (1983).

Evidence of other crimes is admissible if it is independently relevant, and meets the probative value versus unfair prejudice balancing test of this rule. Smith v. State, 19 Ark. App. 188, 718 S.W.2d 475 (1986), overruled as stated in Velcoff v. State, 2006 Ark. App. LEXIS 729 (Ark. Ct. App. Nov. 8, 2006). But see Morris v. State, 21 Ark. App. 228, 731 S.W.2d 230 (1987); Brown v. State, 63 Ark. App. 38, 972 S.W.2d 956 (1998).

Even when the evidence of other crimes has independent probative value, the trial judge may exclude it if its potential prejudice exceeds its probative value. Thrash v. State, 291 Ark. 575, 726 S.W.2d 283 (1987).

If those portions of a confession relating to the commission of extraneous offenses are offered under Evid. Rule 404(b), it is for the trial court to determine first whether the evidence is genuinely relevant to some independent issue in the case, as opposed to proving only that the defendant is a "bad man"; if the independent relevancy of this evidence is established, the trial court is then obliged to scrutinize the evidence under this rule. Tharp v. State, 20 Ark. App. 93, 724 S.W.2d 191 (1987).

All of the circumstances connected with a particular crime may be shown, even if those circumstances would constitute a separate crime. Collins v. State, 304 Ark. 587, 804 S.W.2d 680 (1991).

The general rule is that evidence of other crimes by the accused, not charged in the indictment or information and not a part of the same transaction, are not admissible at the trial of the accused; however, evidence of other crimes is admissible under the res gestae exception to the general rule to establish the facts and circumstances surrounding the alleged commission of the offense. Haynes v. State, 309 Ark. 583, 832 S.W.2d 479 (1992).

Where other crimes occurred 6 days prior to the crimes charged and victim's testimony was not necessary to establish facts surrounding charged crimes, res gestae exception to the exclusionary rule was inapplicable due to the separability of the alleged crimes with those offenses with which defendant was convicted, both in time and nature of the offenses; the two separate incidents simply did not comprise one continuing criminal episode or an overall criminal transaction. Haynes v. State, 309 Ark. 583, 832 S.W.2d 479 (1992).

Where witness' testimony regarding defendant's behavior before the murder described a prior bad act and involvement in "other crimes," the trial court violated this rule and Evid. Rule 404 by accepting this testimony in evidence; this evidence was not independently relevant and unfairly prejudicial in that this evidence of another crime, as accepted, proved the character of defendant and that he acted in conformity therewith in victim's homicide. Young v. State, 316 Ark. 225, 871 S.W.2d 373 (1994).

Defendant's flight to avoid arrest, two days after the offense, was admissible as a circumstance in corroboration of evidence tending to establish guilt; the timing was not a factor, and the credibility of defendant's alibi defense and belief that the officers were not authentic was a matter to be weighed by the trier of fact. Wallace v. State, 326 Ark. 376, 931 S.W.2d 113 (1996).

Defendant's attempt to induce the victim to drop the charges with an offer of restitution, as evidence of defendant's knowledge of his own guilt, was probative evidence not outweighed by the danger of its unfair prejudice. Wallace v. State, 55 Ark. App. 114, 932 S.W.2d 345 (1996).

The evidence of murder defendant's incarceration at a halfway house and escape was relevant and not unduly prejudicial; the escape evidence was an essential part of the facts surrounding the murder. Regalado v. State, 331 Ark. 326, 961 S.W.2d 739 (1998).

Law enforcement officer's testimony about a note found during a search of juvenile defendant's room which referred to a planned robbery was not improperly admitted in violation of this rule because it was relevant to show the jury how the officer's investigation was developed to implicate defendant in a murder more than one year earlier, and it was not inherently prejudicial, referring only to a general plan for a robbery but not to defendant's participation. Shields v. State, 357 Ark. 283, 166 S.W.3d 28 (2004).

In a rape case, evidence of defendant's prior rape was properly admitted where both victims were close in age and similar in appearance, both were pulled into an area with low visibility and were asked to perform oral sex, and defendant asked both victims similar questions, such as their age, name and where they lived; in addition, the evidence was not more prejudicial than probative as the similarities between the crimes were sufficient to make the evidence probative on the issue of defendant's motive, intent, preparation, plan and scheme. Morris v. State, 367 Ark. 406, 240 S.W.3d 593 (2006).

In a rape case, evidence that defendant had confessed to a similar crime in a presentence report was properly admitted under Ark. R. Evid. 404(b); although prejudice resulted from the admission of the evidence, it was probative to show defendant's motive, intent, preparation, plan, and scheme under this rule. Evidence showing defendant's address as a correctional institution was also admissible. Creed v. State, 372 Ark. 221, 273 S.W.3d 494, cert. denied, 555 U.S. 823, 129 S. Ct. 130, 172 L. Ed. 2d 37 (2008).

There was no abuse of discretion in allowing the state to present witness testimony at defendant's trial for rape, kidnapping and residential burglary concerning his two previous convictions for residential burglary and his escape attempt, because the testimony showing that defendant unlawfully entered the apartments of two other women in similar circumstances within two months of the instant crime was independently relevant to rebut his claim that his encounter with the victim was consensual, and the flight of a person charged with commission of a crime had some evidentiary value on the question of his probable guilt. McCullough v. State, 2009 Ark. 134, 298 S.W.3d 452 (2009), writ denied, 2020 Ark. 49 (2020).

In defendant's murder trial, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in permitting the state to introduce evidence regarding another murder with which defendant was charged because the evidence was relative where both murders involved elderly victims who were attacked at night in apparent schemes to rob them. The similarities between the crimes rendered the other murder probative of defendant's intent, preparation, plan, and scheme. Williams v. State, 2009 Ark. 433, 373 S.W.3d 237 (2009), cert. denied, 559 U.S. 980, 130 S. Ct. 1706, 176 L. Ed. 2d 194 (2010).

When someone driving appellant's car fled from an officer and ran into the woods, items used to manufacture methamphetamine were found in the car and appellant's girlfriend testified that he was driving; a jury found appellant guilty of manufacturing methamphetamine, possessing drug paraphernalia with intent to manufacture methamphetamine, and fleeing. He was not entitled to postconviction relief under Ark. R. Crim. P. 37.1 based on counsel's failure to object to evidence that appellant and his girlfriend had been convicted of other crimes related to methamphetamine; the admission of the evidence under Ark. R. Evid. 404(b) did not violate this rule, as it was independently relevant to the issue of the identity of the driver and his relationship to the passenger. Britt v. State, 2009 Ark. 569, 349 S.W.3d 290 (2009).

Though defendant was acquitted of a rape charge, he was convicted of the lesser included offense of second-degree sexual assault; therefore, evidence presented during the sentencing phase of his previous rape of another victim was neither irrelevant nor inadmissible as unduly prejudicial under this rule. McElroy v. State, 2011 Ark. App. 533, 385 S.W.3d 406 (2011).

In view of the similarities of the attacks on defendant's half sibling and the victim, the half sibling's testimony regarding the attack on her was highly probative on the issues of intent and lack of consent; thus, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in finding that the probative value of the evidence outweighed the danger of unfair prejudice. Harris v. State, 2018 Ark. App. 219, 547 S.W.3d 709 (2018).

Photographic Evidence.

The fact that photographic evidence is cumulative or unnecessary will not, standing alone, render it inadmissible; thus, defendant cannot prevent its admission by admitting the facts portrayed. Campbell v. State, 265 Ark. 77, 576 S.W.2d 938 (1979); Biniore v. State, 16 Ark. App. 275, 701 S.W.2d 385 (1985); Berry v. State, 290 Ark. 223, 718 S.W.2d 447 (1986); Parker v. State, 292 Ark. 421, 731 S.W.2d 756 (1987).

Photographs will not be excluded simply because they are gruesome, since the danger of unfair prejudice created by a photograph must substantially outweigh its probative value before the court will exclude it. Williams v. State, 267 Ark. 527, 593 S.W.2d 8 (1980).

Fact that some of the photographs were made after the victim was first examined did not bear on their admissibility, since the photographs were properly identified as representing the condition of the child after she had received treatment. Williams v. State, 267 Ark. 527, 593 S.W.2d 8 (1980).

Photographs of victims held inadmissible. Harris v. Damron, 267 Ark. 1141, 594 S.W.2d 256 (Ct. App. 1980); Earl v. State, 272 Ark. 5, 612 S.W.2d 98 (1981); Ellis v. State, 4 Ark. App. 201, 628 S.W.2d 871 (1982); Parker v. State, 292 Ark. 421, 731 S.W.2d 756 (1987).

Admission and relevancy of photographs is a matter within the sound discretion of the trial court. Robinson v. State, 269 Ark. 90, 598 S.W.2d 421 (1980); Biniore v. State, 16 Ark. App. 275, 701 S.W.2d 385 (1985).

Photographs of victims held admissible. Robinson v. State, 269 Ark. 90, 598 S.W.2d 421 (1980); Earl v. State, 272 Ark. 5, 612 S.W.2d 98 (1981); Biniore v. State, 16 Ark. App. 275, 701 S.W.2d 385 (1985); Parker v. State, 292 Ark. 421, 731 S.W.2d 756 (1987).

Photographs of victim properly admitted where they were not particularly gruesome or inflammatory and were not cumulative because each served the purpose of making the testimony more understandable and corroborated the testimony of the witnesses. Tucker v. State, 3 Ark. App. 89, 622 S.W.2d 202 (1981); Willett v. State, 322 Ark. 613, 911 S.W.2d 937 (1995).

Even though the defendant agreed to stipulate as to victim's wounds, the trial court did not err in permitting the prosecution to introduce a photograph showing the wounds, because the nature, extent, and location of the wounds were relevant to the questions of intent and state of mind of the defendant, and the state had the burden of proving every element of first-degree murder which included premeditation, deliberation and intent beyond any reasonable doubt. Cotton v. State, 276 Ark. 282, 634 S.W.2d 127 (1982).

Photographs properly admitted for the limited purpose of aiding the jury in understanding the oral testimony of an insurance adjuster. Morrison v. Firemen's Ins. Co., 4 Ark. App. 351, 631 S.W.2d 310 (1982).

Photographs showing one of defendants in a rape case engaging in simulations of sexual acts, which were admitted solely for the purpose of impeachment and not as evidence of guilt, should have been excluded since their probative value was outweighed by the prejudicial effect upon the jury. Bliss v. State, 282 Ark. 315, 668 S.W.2d 936 (1984).

Autopsy photographs of victim were properly admitted where they were used by the forensic pathologist to rebut the defendants' claims of accidental injuries; thus, their probative value outweighed any prejudicial effect. Deviney v. State, 14 Ark. App. 70, 685 S.W.2d 179 (1985).

The fact that photographs are inflammatory or gruesome is not alone sufficient reason to exclude them. Berry v. State, 290 Ark. 223, 718 S.W.2d 447 (1986); Barker v. State, 21 Ark. App. 56, 728 S.W.2d 204 (1987); Parker v. State, 292 Ark. 421, 731 S.W.2d 756 (1987).

Inflammatory pictures are admissible in the discretion of the trial judge if they tend to shed light on any issue, to enable a witness to better describe the objects portrayed or the jury to better understand the testimony, or to corroborate testimony. Berry v. State, 290 Ark. 223, 718 S.W.2d 447 (1986); Barker v. State, 21 Ark. App. 56, 728 S.W.2d 204 (1987); Huls v. State, 27 Ark. App. 242, 770 S.W.2d 160 (1989).

Where probative value of the photographs of the murder victim was limited to the cause and nature of death and would easily have been satisfied by the introduction of a reasonable number of photographs, the introduction into evidence of six, mostly repetitious, gory, color photographs of the victim was excessive, and their prejudicial nature was obvious. Berry v. State, 290 Ark. 223, 718 S.W.2d 447 (1986).

Picture of the rings on the hands of victim had probative value if for no other reason than that they tended to demonstrate that the rings had a value in excess of $2,500 as victim testified, and whatever prejudicial effect the photographs may have did not outweigh their probative value. Burris v. State, 291 Ark. 157, 722 S.W.2d 858 (1987).

A prejudicial photograph, which pictured the defendant, charged with possession with intent to distribute, in a room on a bed in the midst of piles of cash, was admissible. Qualls v. State, 306 Ark. 283, 812 S.W.2d 681 (1991).

Photographs will not be excluded simply because they are gruesome, but a deferential standard of review will be applied to the admission of photographic evidence. Ward v. State, 308 Ark. 415, 827 S.W.2d 110, 831 S.W.2d 100, cert. denied, 506 U.S. 841, 113 S. Ct. 124, 121 L. Ed. 2d 79 (1992).

Where a photo used to depict a crime was merely cumulative of the testimony, had only marginal probative value, the jury was informed of the discrepancies in the photograph, and the defendant made no meritorious argument with respect to prejudice, the photograph was not unfairly prejudicial. Willis v. State, 309 Ark. 328, 829 S.W.2d 417 (1992).

The trial court did not err in not excluding the photographs on its own motion; there is no "plain error" rule in this state. Dixon v. State, 311 Ark. 613, 846 S.W.2d 170 (1993).

Inflammatory photographs are admissible if they tend to shed light on an issue, enable a witness to better describe the objects portrayed, or enable the jury to better understand the testimony. Hickson v. State, 312 Ark. 171, 847 S.W.2d 691 (1993).

Enlargements of photographs showing the wounds defendant inflicted held not unfairly prejudicial. Harris v. State, 314 Ark. 379, 862 S.W.2d 271, 863 S.W.2d 282 (1993).

Under Evid. Rule 407, pictures which could not be admitted as evidence of negligence might be admitted for the purpose of impeachment; however, a trial court may prohibit their use for impeachment if it deems the evidence irrelevant under Evid. Rule 401, or prejudicial under this rule. Carton v. Missouri Pac. R.R., 315 Ark. 5, 865 S.W.2d 635 (1993).

Even the most gruesome photographs may be admissible if they assist the trier of fact in any of the following ways: by shedding light on some issue, by proving a necessary element of the case, by enabling a witness to testify more effectively, by corroborating testimony, or by enabling jurors to better understand the testimony; of course, if a photograph serves no valid purpose and could be used only to inflame the jurors' passions, it should be excluded. Weger v. State, 315 Ark. 555, 869 S.W.2d 688 (1994).

Gruesome photographs are admissible if they assist the trier of fact by shedding light on some issue, by proving a necessary element of the case, by enabling a witness to testify more effectively, by corroborating testimony or by enabling jurors to better understand the testimony. Marshall v. State, 316 Ark. 753, 875 S.W.2d 814 (1994).

Admitting videotape and photographs of the crime scene as well as two autopsy photographs was not error where the evidence aided the jury's perception of the crime scene and condition of the victims' bodies, and was relevant in establishing premeditation and deliberation. Camargo v. State, 327 Ark. 631, 940 S.W.2d 464 (1997).

It was not error to allow the introduction of photographs showing the decomposing bodies of the victims, blood on a couch where one victim apparently lay when he was shot, bloody pillows used to muffle the gunshots, and a bloody trail down a hallway, notwithstanding the defendant's contention that the photographs were more prejudicial than probative, since the photographs were not cumulative and gave a different perspective than a videotape shown to the jury. Hodge v. State, 332 Ark. 377, 965 S.W.2d 766 (1998).

It was not error in a prosecution for first degree murder for the trial court to permit the introduction into evidence of 8 crime scene photographs of the victims' bodies, notwithstanding the defendant's stipulation that the victims died as the result of multiple stab wounds, since the photographs depicted locations and types of wounds, the location of the bodies, and evidence of a fire, corroborated testimony of a witness, and tended to prove the defendant's intent. Baker v. State, 334 Ark. 330, 974 S.W.2d 474 (1998).

In a prosecution for aggravated assault, a photograph of the victim lying in a pool of blood near a men's restroom at a rest stop was properly admitted into evidence, notwithstanding the assertion that it was too gruesome and that verbal descriptions adequately described the crime scene, where the trial court determined that the photograph was probative because it showed the victim's location in relation to the restroom doors and to pay telephones.

In a prosecution for aggravated assault, two autopsy photographs which showed metal rods inserted through the victim's gunshot wounds were properly admitted into evidence, notwithstanding the assertion that they were inflammatory and prejudicial, where the trial court noted that the autopsy photographs reflected a natural arm position resulting from the arms being up and the hands being toward the face and remarked that the photographs showed the nature and direction of the wounds and the path of the bullet "probably in the most descriptive manner that [the court has] ever seen." Stewart v. State, 338 Ark. 608, 999 S.W.2d 684 (1999).

The photographs, although graphic and gruesome, were admissible because they depicted locations and types of wounds and the locations of the bodies, they corroborated the testimony of witnesses who claimed to have heard defendant discuss hiding bodies in a well, and they tended to prove defendant's purposeful intent, an element of the crime. Sanders v. State, 340 Ark. 163, 8 S.W.3d 520 (2000).

In a prosecution for murder, the court properly permitted the introduction into evidence of five photographs of the three victims, notwithstanding that the photographs were gruesome, since they helped establish the premeditated and deliberate nature of the crime, showed the condition of the bodies and the locations of the injuries, and refuted the defendant's theory that he had accidentally hit the victims as they struggled by demonstrating that all three victims suffered from similar lethal neck wounds. Jones v. State, 340 Ark. 390, 10 S.W.3d 449 (2000).

In a prosecution for aggravated robbery, it was not error for the trial court to permit the introduction of three photographs of the crime scene, which showed blood stains on the floor, and two photographs of the victim's injuries, as there was no unfair prejudice. Halford v. State, 342 Ark. 80, 27 S.W.3d 346 (2000).

Photograph of the murder victim, which depicted the victim's head and upper torso and the injuries he sustained in graphic detail was properly admitted since such photograph was helpful to the jury in determining the severity of the blows the victim received and whether one or more blows was administered in the murder. Upton v. State, 343 Ark. 543, 36 S.W.3d 740 (2001).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the state's photographs where, although the challenged photographs were gruesome and cumulative in some instances, they served to assist the trier of fact in understanding the testimony. Mosby v. State, 350 Ark. 90, 85 S.W.3d 500 (2002).

In a prosecution alleging that defendant sexually assaulted his seven year old daughter, forced the daughter to have intercourse with her brother, who was also under 14, and made the brother have intercourse with the brother's mother, who was defendant's wife, trial court did not abuse its discretion in allowing the state to introduce photographs of the family home showing the general condition of the home, including the fact that defendant kept photographs of nude women in plain view, as the evidence was relevant and its probative value was not outweighed by the risk of prejudice to the defendant. Clem v. State, 351 Ark. 112, 90 S.W.3d 428 (2002).

In a trial for capital murder based on the killing of the victim during a robbery, trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting photographs showing the crime scene with the victim present or photographs of the autopsy performed on the victim as the photographs were relevant to the state's robbery theory and to show that the fatal gunshot was a contact wound from the rear; evidence that defendant was arrested at a nearby liquor store after having just purchased some wine was admissible to show defendant's motive was robbery. Matthews v. State, 352 Ark. 166, 99 S.W.3d 403 (2003).

Three crime scene photographs were properly admitted into evidence in a capital murder trial where the trial court exercised its discretion by excluding several more gruesome photographs; moreover, the fact that a videotape of the crime scene was introduced did not mean that the photographs were cumulative. Smart v. State, 352 Ark. 522, 104 S.W.3d 386 (2003).

While the photographs of the victim were gruesome, they were properly admitted in defendant's capital murder trial because the pictures showed the condition of the victim's body and clearly assisted the jury in understanding the nature and extent of the victim's injuries. Newman v. State, No. CR 02-811, 2003 Ark. LEXIS 295 (Ark. May 22, 2003).

It was not error to admit autopsy photographs of the victim and the condition in which he was found because the medical examiner could not pinpoint a cause of death, and he testified that the photographs would be helpful to the jury in showing why the cause of death was difficult to determine and to more fully explain the damage from the fire to the victim; the trial court properly weighed the potential prejudice against the probative value of the photographs. Johnson v. State, 358 Ark. 460, 193 S.W.3d 260 (2004).

Where defendant attempted to challenge the mens rea element of the offense by claiming that he did not intend to murder his wife, photos of the crime scene and autopsy photographs of the victim showing the nature, extent and location of the victim's wounds were relevant to show intent. Garcia v. State, 363 Ark. 319, 214 S.W.3d 260 (2005).

When the trial court found that photographs of a murder victim enabled the jury to better understand the testimony and show the nature and extent of the wounds, the condition of the body, the type and location of the injuries, and corroborated a detective's testimony in defendant's prosecution for capital murder and aggravated assault, the trial court gave a specific basis for its ruling and clearly engaged in the kind of balancing required under this rule. Springs v. State, 368 Ark. 256, 244 S.W.3d 683 (2006), cert. denied, 550 U.S. 939, 127 S. Ct. 2257, 167 L. Ed. 2d 1100 (2007).

Although the gay-themed books were improperly admitted into evidence, any error was harmless in light of the wealth of other evidence of defendant's homosexual lifestyle; further, pornographic videos and photographs were properly admitted where two victims were in the photographs and they corroborated other victims' testimony. Simmons v. State, 95 Ark. App. 114, 234 S.W.3d 321 (2006).

Circuit court did not err by admitting into evidence photographs of the murder victim because her wounds were relevant to show defendant's intent to kill her; they also assisted the jury in understanding the crime-scene investigator's description of the scene, and the circuit court performed a proper evaluation of the photographs before allowing them to be presented to the jury. Davis v. State, 368 Ark. 401, 246 S.W.3d 862 (2007).

Although relevant, the probative value of photographic images of pornography that were introduced into evidence in a sexual assault case was outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice, because the images numbered 1,022, they depicted a wide range of pornographic materials, the inflammatory nature of the images was readily apparent, many of the photographs were duplicates, and many portrayed similar subject matter over and over again. Blanchard v. State, 104 Ark. App. 31, 289 S.W.3d 129 (2008), rev'd, 2009 Ark. 335, 321 S.W.3d 250 (2009).

During defendant's criminal trial for first degree felony murder, the trial court exercised its discretion in admitting a gruesome photograph of the victim's injuries. The photograph showed both blood pooling and spattering, which indicated to the medical examiner that the victim was shot in the back of the head while lying face down on the bed; the photograph was needed in the state's presentation of its case, and the probative value was not outweighed by the risk of unfair prejudice. Lockhart v. State, 2009 Ark. App. 587 (2009).

Admitting all twelve photographs into evidence was not an abuse of discretion where the individual pictures dispelled any notion that defendant photographed innocent activity and the testimony of the other victims was admissible under the pedophile exception of subsection (b) of this rule. Mason v. State, 330 S.W.3d 445 (Ark. Ct. App. 2009).

In a capital murder prosecution, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by allowing the state to show the jury enlarged photos of the victim's body on a projection screen, as the photos illustrated the crime scene, autopsy photographs were used by the forensic examiner to explain the nature of the injuries and cause of death, and the court examined each photo and applied the proper balancing test. Marcyniuk v. State, 2010 Ark. 257, 373 S.W.3d 243 (2010).

There was no abuse of discretion by the circuit court in admitting crime scene photographs because they were relevant to corroborate both the victim's testimony as to the manner and violence in which the victim was attacked, as well as the testimony of the victim's treating physician regarding the amount of blood loss the victim suffered. Wallace v. State, 2010 Ark. App. 706, 378 S.W.3d 269 (2010), overruled in part, Vankirk v. State, 2011 Ark. 428, 385 S.W.3d 144 (2011).

Defendant's conviction for capital-felony murder was appropriate because there was no error in the admission of autopsy photographs. The pictures were used to enhance and clarify testimony regarding the condition of the body and the pictures also helped explain how the injuries received were consistent with having skidded for some distances over a rough surface; further, the probative value of the photographs outweighed any prejudicial effect. Dixon v. State, 2011 Ark. 450, 385 S.W.3d 164 (2011).

Under subdivision (b) of this rule, the autopsy photos were not improperly admitted as they depicted the fatal head injury defendant was charged with causing, he was not unduly prejudiced by the jury seeing the natural consequence of his conduct, and all of the photos aided the State's theory of the case and enabled the jury to better understand a doctor's forensic testimony. Nunn v. State, 2013 Ark. App. 282 (2013).

Because the court only admitted three of the autopsy photos, the number was reasonable under this rule. Nunn v. State, 2013 Ark. App. 282 (2013).

Circuit court did not abuse its discretion in admitting crime-scene photographs of the victim's body as he was found by police where they assisted the trier of fact by showing the condition of the victim's body, the location of the victim's injury, and the position in which the body of the victim was discovered. Green v. State, 2015 Ark. 359, 471 S.W.3d 200 (2015).

Circuit court did not abuse its discretion in allowing a photo of appellant's penis into evidence where it featured unique characteristics that the victim corroborated. Pafford v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 700, 537 S.W.3d 302 (2017).

Circuit court did not abuse its discretion in admitting 16 crime-scene and autopsy photographs because the circuit court ruled separately on the admissibility of each photograph, giving its basis for the photograph's admission, and it excluded several photographs in the process. Bennett v. State, 2020 Ark. 295 (2020).

Prejudicial Evidence.

In prosecution for manslaughter, evidence regarding the condition and treatment afforded the victim was relevant, but its probative value was substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice, possible confusion of the issues or misleading the jury. Lee v. State, 266 Ark. 870, 587 S.W.2d 78 (Ct. App. 1979).

Before allowing questions regarding a defendant's previous misconduct, the court may require evidence of good faith; that is, the questioner must have credible knowledge that the offense has been committed, not just information based on rumor or speculation; next, the court in its discretion should decide if the probative value of the question outweighs the prejudicial effect of such a question; finally, the misconduct must relate to truthfulness or untruthfulness and that character trait. Gustafson v. State, 267 Ark. 278, 590 S.W.2d 853 (1979), overruled in part as stated in Rogers v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 521, 536 S.W.3d 128 (2017).

The trial judge, in a tort action arising from an automobile accident, abused his discretion in failing to hold that the slight probative value of evidence that, as a result of his injuries, the plaintiff had received specified disability payments from his employer and from insurance companies was outweighed by the prejudicial effect of proof that the plaintiff had received substantial income from outside sources, notwithstanding the defendant's contention that the evidence supported her defense of malin-gering. Evans v. Wilson, 279 Ark. 224, 650 S.W.2d 569 (1983).

Where film of a professional driver riding a motorcycle similar to the one involved in motocross accident over motocross-type terrain, did not duplicate the exact conditions of the actual accident in that the rider in the test was a professional whereas plaintiff was an amateur, the professional rider knew he was riding a bike with only one shock absorber functioning while plaintiff did not, the test demonstrated only one jump of 18 inches, but plaintiff made two successive jumps of 30 inches and, furthermore, the springs on the two bikes were different, it was error for the trial court to admit the film for the limited purpose of determining whether or not there was any perceptible difference in rebound of a motorcycle with one nonfunctioning shock as opposed to a motorcycle with both shocks functioning, and the experiment should have been excluded as prejudicial and misleading under this rule. Undoubtedly, the jury concentrated on the extraordinary skills of the test driver rather than the mechanics of the motorcycle and after viewing the film, the mind-set of the jury was that one shock would work just as well as two, not because of any perceptible difference in the mechanical performance of the motorcycle, but because the professional driver was not thrown over the handlebars as was plaintiff; the prejudicial impact of the film on the jury far outweighed any probative value it might have had. Carr v. Suzuki Motor Co., 280 Ark. 1, 655 S.W.2d 364 (1983).

Where, in a manslaughter prosecution arising from a car accident in which the allegedly intoxicated driver struck and killed a policeman, the probative value of testimony by a member of the state police, that in his opinion if the driver had been alert and practicing reasonable safety the death could have been prevented, was substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice. Ethridge v. State, 9 Ark. App. 111, 654 S.W.2d 595 (1983).

In a prosecution for murder, the trial court properly excluded evidence that the state criminalist had been demoted where the demotion was based upon a personality clash with a supervisor and was not based upon any lack of competency; the excluded evidence was unduly prejudicial and could not demonstrate any bias or lack of credibility. Maxwell v. State, 284 Ark. 501, 683 S.W.2d 908 (1985).

Admonishing statement of trial court was not sufficient to remove prejudicial error. Free v. State, 293 Ark. 65, 732 S.W.2d 452 (1987).

Evidence of witness' abortions excluded where neither the pregnancy nor the abortions were relevant to any issue in the case, because they did not go to the credibility, believability, truthfulness, or veracity of the witness under Evid. Rules 401, 608, or 609; and, in addition, even if relevant, the prejudicial impact would outweigh any probative value because of the controversial nature of abortion. Billett v. State, 317 Ark. 346, 877 S.W.2d 913 (1994).

Although there was no doubt that the proof in controversy would have an adverse impact on defendant at trial, unfair prejudice did not occur. Lindsey v. State, 319 Ark. 132, 890 S.W.2d 584 (1994).

The prejudice referred to in this rule denotes the effect of the evidence upon the jury, not the defendant. Hence the nature of the sentence that may be imposed in the event of the defendant's conviction is not a factor in the trial court's analysis under this rule. Sasser v. State, 321 Ark. 438, 902 S.W.2d 773 (1995).

Testimony regarding doctor's verbal discourse with lawyers was highly prejudicial; if doctor was being called as an expert witness, the fact that he enjoyed engaging in verbal street fighting with lawyers in the courtroom would be admissible to show bias and prejudice, but as a fact witness, such testimony was not probative, but prejudicial. National Bank of Commerce v. Quirk, 323 Ark. 769, 918 S.W.2d 138 (1996), amended in part, 325 Ark. 31, 922 S.W.2d 717 (1996), overruled in part, Ark. HHS v. Ahlborn, 547 U.S. 268, 126 S. Ct. 1752, 164 L. Ed. 2d 459 (2006).

In an action against an attorney for breach of contract in his representation of his client in a divorce matter, the client was properly precluded from presenting evidence about the attorney's dealings with another client since there was a very real danger that the proffered testimony would prejudice the jury with an assertion that the attorney had tried to cheat an elderly lady and almost certainly confuse the issue under litigation. Potter v. Magee, 61 Ark. App. 112, 964 S.W.2d 412 (1998).

In an action against an attorney for breach of contract in his representation of a client, the court properly excluded testimony that the attorney had previously wrongfully refused to return money to a person with whom he had a fiduciary relationship, notwithstanding the assertion that such allegedly similar conduct was admissible to prove intent or motive, since there was a very real danger that the proffered testimony would have prejudiced the jury with an assertion that the attorney had tried to cheat an elderly lady and almost certainly would have confused the issue under litigation. Potter v. Magee, 61 Ark. App. 112, 964 S.W.2d 412 (1998).

Where prison escapee robbed and killed a man and then fled to another state in the man's vehicle where he was captured following a high speed auto chase in which he killed the driver of another vehicle in a collision, evidence as to the chase was admissible at the guilt phase of the trial because possessions of the man the prison escapee robbed and killed were found in the vehicle defendant had stolen and was driving; further, evidence of the chase was admissible at the penalty phase of the trial because it had been submitted at the trial, so no prejudice resulted, and evidence of the death of the other driver was admissible at the punishment phase of defendant's trial because it was used as an aggravating circumstance. Williams v. State, 347 Ark. 728, 67 S.W.3d 548 (2002).

In a wrongful death action brought by the administrator of the deceased patient's estate against a nursing center and its parent company, although documentary evidence showing the nursing center's understaffing problem was prejudicial to the nursing center and the company, that prejudice did not outweigh the strong probative value of the evidence. Advocat, Inc. v. Sauer, 353 Ark. 29, 111 S.W.3d 346, cert. denied, 540 U.S. 1012, 124 S. Ct. 532, 157 L. Ed. 2d 424 (2003), cert. denied, 540 U.S. 1004, 124 S. Ct. 535, 157 L. Ed. 2d 409 (2003).

Trial court found that the evidence of the amount of damages assessed by the jury in a default trial was of little probative value in a subsequent attorney malpractice action, given that neither insurer defended during the proceeding; any probative value was substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice to the attorney and the misleading nature of the evidence. Barnes v. Everett, 351 Ark. 479, 95 S.W.3d 740 (2003).

Trial court abused its discretion by allowing the state to introduce the name and nature of defendant's prior felony conviction over his objection after defendant offered to stipulate that he was among the class of persons prohibited from possessing a firearm. Ferguson v. State, 2005 Ark. App. LEXIS 29 (Ark. Ct. App. Jan. 12, 2005), sub. op., 90 Ark. App. 119, 204 S.W.3d 113 (2005).

In a drug case, the court erred by admitting evidence that the witness was defendant's parole officer for his prior drug convictions because there was clearly no probative value in introducing that fact and the prejudice was manifest; allowing defendant's parole officer to so testify was tantamount to making defendant appear in the court room in shackles or prison garb. Cluck v. State, 91 Ark. App. 220, 209 S.W.3d 428 (2005), rev'd, 365 Ark. 166, 226 S.W.3d 780 (2006).

Circuit court did not err in excluding the finding of the Arkansas State Board of Chiropractic Examiners that the physical therapist was practicing chiropractic medicine without a license because the board did not find that his practice of chiropractic medicine was negligent or below the standard of care; the court found that the fact that the therapist had committed a statutory violation would have been unfairly prejudicial. Fryar v. Touchstone Physical Therapy, Inc., 365 Ark. 295, 229 S.W.3d 7 (2006).

Finding in favor of the passenger in her personal-injury action against the driver was proper, in part because the passenger had sufficiently shown that the digital motion x-ray evidence was reliable and that it was accepted by the chiropractic and medical communities. There was no question that the evidence was prejudicial to the driver's position; however, the evidence was not unfairly prejudicial. Graftenreed v. Seabaugh, 100 Ark. App. 364, 268 S.W.3d 905 (2007).

Victim stated that she had viewed pornography with defendant at his home, and the items seized corroborated her testimony; photographs of the partially clad victim in suggestive poses were found in close proximity to pornographic magazines, and under these circumstances, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in determining that the probative value of the pornographic magazines was not substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice. Rasmussen v. State, 2009 Ark. App. 586 (2009).

In a lessee's action for conversion against an owner, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in excluding evidence of the fair market value of the lessee's dogs on its finding that any relevance was substantially outweighed by the prejudice, because evidence that the owner killed the dogs would have been prejudicial. Schmidt v. Stearman, 2010 Ark. App. 274, 374 S.W.3d 254 (2010).

In a manslaughter case, the court properly excluded evidence of the victim's alleged violent propensities because defendant admitted that he fired his gun without knowing who was riding toward him; therefore, because he did not know who he was shooting, he could not have considered the victim's background and state of mind before firing his weapon. Accordingly, such evidence would only have served to prejudice the victim. Sipe v. State, 2012 Ark. App. 261, 404 S.W.3d 164 (2012).

Circuit court abused its discretion by admitting a warning letter sent to the antipsychotic medication developer by the Food and Drug Administration because it was not admissible under Ark. R. Evid. 803(8)(iv), as it was part of a special investigation of, into the developer's 2003 "dear doctor letter" and was not part of routine record keeping. The letter was also more prejudicial than probative under this rule and it was referred to repeatedly throughout the trial. Ortho-McNeil-Janssen Pharms., Inc. v. State, 2014 Ark. 124, 432 S.W.3d 563 (2014).

Detective's testimony that defendant's ex-girlfriend reported that defendant was in an altercation with her in the vicinity of the shooting and that he matched the description of the shooter was relevant to prove opportunity and identity and was admissible under Rule 404(b), but the specifics of the ex-girlfriend's injuries had little to no probative value in proving defendant committed the shooting, and the evidence was substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice under this rule; as credibility was key in this case, the error was not harmless. Williams v. State, 2016 Ark. App. 507, 505 S.W.3d 234 (2016).

In a first-degree murder prosecution in which defendant alleged self-defense, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by excluding evidence that the victim had a concealed-carry license because that fact would not have tended to bolster defendant's testimony unless the jury speculated that simply holding a permit made it more likely that the victim had a gun in his possession and was the aggressor. Muhammad v. State, 2019 Ark. App. 87, 572 S.W.3d 21 (2019).

Circuit court erred in resentencing defendant to life in prison after his original life-without-parole sentence for juvenile crimes was vacated due to Miller v. Alabama, 567 U.S. 460 (2012), because evidence of defendant's original sentence had no probative value and was inherently prejudicial. The jury not only could have had a diminished sense of responsibility, but also might have improperly considered the procedural history of the case in determining the appropriate punishment, particularly given the testimony of the victim's family as to the adverse effect that the overturning of defendant's sentence and the resentencing trial had on them. Kitchell v. State, 2020 Ark. 102, 594 S.W.3d 848 (2020).

Prior Charges or Convictions.

Where, in a prosecution for burglary, the state had direct as well as circumstantial evidence from which the jury could have inferred that the defendant intended to commit theft in the building in which he was caught, the trial court erred in allowing the state to prove the defendant's intent by introducing evidence of the defendant's three prior convictions for burglary. Golden v. State, 10 Ark. App. 362, 664 S.W.2d 496 (1984), overruled, Bledsoe v. State, 344 Ark. 86, 39 S.W.3d 760 (2001).

A prior felony conviction was relevant evidence in a prosecution for possession of a firearm by a felon in that it was an element of the crime, and the trial court's decision that the state could elect to introduce evidence of a conviction for delivery of heroin, rather than an earlier conviction for grand larceny, was not an abuse of discretion. The defendant's contention that he should be permitted to select the prior conviction to be introduced by the state was not tenable. Clinkscale v. State, 15 Ark. App. 166, 690 S.W.2d 740 (1985).

A 1982 charge of endangering the welfare of a minor, a charge which resulted from defendant's having abandoned her infant daughter, was admissible at defendant's 1984 trial for negligent homicide and concealing birth, where the earlier charge was relevant in proving defendant's intent, motive, preparation or plan regarding her actions in 1984. Smith v. State, 15 Ark. App. 266, 692 S.W.2d 622 (1985).

Since the state's evidence would have amply supported the defendant's conviction, evidence of the defendant's prior convictions should not have been admitted, as the probative value of evidence of a 14-year-old conviction was slight, if present at all, and the probability of unfair prejudice was great. Smith v. State, 19 Ark. App. 188, 718 S.W.2d 475 (1986), overruled as stated in Velcoff v. State, 2006 Ark. App. LEXIS 729 (Ark. Ct. App. Nov. 8, 2006); Brown v. State, 63 Ark. App. 38, 972 S.W.2d 956 (1998).

Where, without the defendant's prior theft and burglary convictions the state had no evidence showing defendant's reason for unlawfully entering the victim's house, the probative value of these convictions became paramount in the state's obligation to show defendant's entry was for the purpose of committing a felony, and allowing defendant's convictions into evidence was not an abuse of the trial court's discretion. Rudd v. State, 308 Ark. 401, 825 S.W.2d 565 (1992).

Motion in limine was proper to prohibit introduction of evidence in wrongful death action brought after one passenger died in automobile accident, the evidence was that both drivers pleaded nolo contendere to the charge of negligent homicide under §§ 27-50-307 and 27-50-804 resulting from the collision. Patterson v. Odell, 322 Ark. 394, 909 S.W.2d 648 (1995).

In a prosecution for murder and conspiracy to commit aggravated robbery, the fact that the defendant met his coperpetrator in the penitentiary was relevant to the conspiracy charge because it established a prior association. The inherent prejudice that resulted from informing the jury that the defendant was a convicted felon who had served time in the penitentiary outweighed the probative value of such fact; therefore, it was an abuse of discretion to admit such fact into evidence. Johnson v. State, 337 Ark. 477, 989 S.W.2d 525 (1999).

Where defendant offered to stipulate to the convicted-felon element of the felon-in-possession-of-a-firearm charge, the state's introduction of the certified copy of defendant's conviction was unfairly prejudicial and should have been excluded; the right of the state to prove its case had to be balanced against the right of a defendant to a trial free from unfair prejudice. Ferguson v. State, 362 Ark. 547, 210 S.W.3d 53 (2005).

Prior convictions were improperly admitted where, although defendant's 1987 offenses involved possession and delivery of methamphetamine, the 2002 charges were related to possession of pseudoephedrine and possession of paraphernalia with intent to manufacture; the 2002 offenses were different in nature as they were related to the actual manufacture, further lessening the probative value of the earlier convictions. Nelson v. State, 92 Ark. App. 275, 212 S.W.3d 31 (2005), rev'd, 365 Ark. 314, 229 S.W.3d 35 (2006), abrogated as stated in Nowlin v. State, 2007 Ark. App. LEXIS 523 (Ark. Ct. App. June 27, 2007).

Although the state was required to prove that defendant was in prison when he killed his cell mate to prove capital murder, that element could have been proven by stipulation and the trial court abused its discretion by allowing the state, over defendant's objections, to introduce evidence of his life sentence and convictions for rape, kidnapping, and burglary; the error was harmless however, as defendant was not prejudiced by the evidence in that the jury did not sentence him to death but, rather, to a second life sentence. Diemer v. State, 365 Ark. 61, 225 S.W.3d 348 (2006).

Defendant's prior drug conviction was properly admitted into evidence under Ark. R. Evid. 404(b) as he testified that he knew nothing of the significance of the chemicals found in his house. His prior conviction was probative of his knowledge and not unfairly prejudicial under this rule. Fowler v. State, 2011 Ark. App. 321 (2011).

At defendant's rape trial, the circuit court did not abuse its discretion in determining that evidence of his prior convictions for carnal abuse of a child, arson, terroristic threatening, and failure to register as a sex offender were admissible under Ark. R. Evid. 609 to impeach defendant. The prior convictions were highly probative of his credibility; because the prior offenses differed from the offense charged here, any potential prejudice was lessened for purposes of this rule. Jordan v. State, 2012 Ark. 277, 412 S.W.3d 150 (2012).

Circuit court properly found that appellant's prior residential-burglary convictions were independently relevant to the issue of whether he intended to break into the victim's residence where the evidence gleaned from those convictions was that he intended to break into the residence with the purpose of committing an offense punishable by imprisonment, and any prejudicial effect of the evidence was minimized by the limiting instruction read by the circuit court. Brigance v. State, 2018 Ark. App. 213, 548 S.W.3d 147 (2018).

Prior Misconduct.

Where the defendants were prosecuted under § 5-54-104 for allegedly forcibly preventing a police officer from taking an intoxicated person into custody, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in not allowing the defendants to offer proof of certain alleged incidents of prior misconduct on the part of the officer, which the defendants offered in an effort to show that the officer may not have been engaged in official business at the time of the incident in question, since the trial court had concluded that the possible relevance of the earlier incidents was outweighed by the confusion of issues and the delay that would have resulted from the exploration of such collateral matters. Blakemore v. State, 268 Ark. 145, 594 S.W.2d 231 (1980).

Evidence concerning planning of the convenience store robberies was admissible because it showed the defendant's participation in a continuing course of conduct or plan to commit an aggravated robbery. Beebe v. State, 301 Ark. 430, 784 S.W.2d 765 (1990).

In action for breach of duty by defendant trustee, trial court did not abuse its discretion in excluding as unfairly prejudicial to defendant proffered testimony concerning defendant's use of drugs and alcohol, his gambling habit, indebtedness, and evidence that his conduct as a bank director resulted in adverse action against him taken by bank regulators. Motes v. Johnson, 304 Ark. 23, 799 S.W.2d 798 (1990).

In a rape prosecution, the court properly permitted the introduction of evidence of a prior burglary by the defendant where (1) the defendant claimed that he had consensual sex with the victim, and (2) information about a gun and a flashlight stolen in the robbery lent credence to the victim's testimony that the act was not consensual. Bledsoe v. State, 344 Ark. 86, 39 S.W.3d 760 (2001).

During defendant's murder trial, the jury did not receive inadmissible and prejudicial bad-acts evidence about how defendant treated a former girlfriend; that he had placed a gun to the former girlfriend's head and not fired it was highly relevant to the state's effort to prove that the victim was purposely, not accidentally, shot. Shatwell v. State, 2013 Ark. App. 568, 430 S.W.3d 142 (2013).

Prior Psychiatric Treatment.

Where in a personal injury action brought against a retail store and the purchaser of a handgun from said store, the plaintiff alleged that the store negligently sold the handgun to the defendant who used it to shoot the plaintiff, the trial court erred in admitting into evidence the defendant's deposition which indicated he had been treated by a psychiatrist more than 13 years prior to the shooting incident upon which this cause of action was based, since there was simply no connecting evidence between the prior psychiatric treatment and the present condition of the defendant and therefore, although the evidence may have been relevant, its probative value was substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice, confusion of the issues, or was misleading to the jury. Cullum & Boren-McCain Mall, Inc. v. Peacock, 267 Ark. 479, 592 S.W.2d 442 (1980).

Prior Settlement.

Where the trial judge chose to exclude evidence of amounts received by plaintiff in a previous settlement, the appellate court was unable to say he abused his discretion in doing so. Gipson v. Garrison, 308 Ark. 344, 824 S.W.2d 829 (1992).

Prior Statements.

In a prosecution for rape, burglary and theft, evidence of victim's prior inconsistent statement concerning identification of defendant, which statement included the phrase "so many niggers look alike," was not irrelevant nor was its probative value substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice; accordingly, the trial court erred in refusing to allow cross-examination of victim concerning the statement and such error was not harmless where defendant received the maximum sentence on all three charges. Miller v. State, 269 Ark. 409, 601 S.W.2d 845 (1980).

The trial court erred when it allowed the State to impeach its own witness with his prior hearsay statement by asking him if he had in fact made the prior inconsistent statements, because the probative value of such testimony was far outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice. Roberts v. State, 278 Ark. 550, 648 S.W.2d 44 (1983).

The trial court, in a murder and kidnapping prosecution, abused its discretion when it allowed the state to ask an uncooperative state's witness about a prior incriminating unsworn statement he had allegedly made, where the prosecution knew from an in-chambers hearing that the witness was going to testify that he never made such a statement, and where any advantage the state might gain by discrediting him was far outweighed by the risk of prejudice resulting from disclosing to the jury the content of the statement; however, since the impeaching questions related only to the murder and not to the kidnapping, the error was reversible only as it related to the murder conviction. Gross v. State, 8 Ark. App. 241, 650 S.W.2d 603 (1983).

In prosecution for aggravated robbery, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting into evidence the statements of defendants when they were intoxicated as to how they came into possession of the car and the manner in which blood came to be upon themselves and the car where the statements were not concessions or admissions. Glisson v. State, 286 Ark. 329, 695 S.W.2d 121 (1985).

In deciding whether statements of the defendant should be suppressed because the defendant was intoxicated when the statements were given, the issue before the trial judge is whether the statements are relevant and then whether they should be excluded because they are unfairly prejudicial. In considering whether the prejudice to the defendant is unfair, the court may consider the defendant's contention that the statement is a product of his drunkenness and how the case will be affected if the defendant is, in effect, required to prove he was drunk when the statement was made. Glisson v. State, 286 Ark. 329, 695 S.W.2d 121 (1985).

In prosecution for rape of stepdaughter, where at trial stepdaughter stated that defendant had not engaged in oral intercourse with her nor touched her, state's use of prior inconsistent statements by stepdaughter exceeded parameters of proper impeachment and posed the danger that the jury would accord the statements substantive value; the prior inconsistent statements were not admissible for purposes of impeachment since the stepdaughter admitted making them, and the statements were not admissible as substantive evidence because they were not made under oath. Hinzman v. State, 53 Ark. App. 256, 922 S.W.2d 725 (1996).

During defendant's criminal trial for rape and tampering, defendant was not permitted to question the victim as to whether her New Year's resolution was to stop lying; the remark was too nebulous to show that the victim had any tendency to lie. Thus, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in weighing the evidence under this rule and denying its admission. Payton v. State, 2009 Ark. App. 690 (2009).

Proper Evidence.

Probative value of the evidence was not substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice. Tucker v. State, 3 Ark. App. 89, 622 S.W.2d 202 (1981); Hoback v. State, 286 Ark. 153, 689 S.W.2d 569 (1985); Free v. State, 293 Ark. 65, 732 S.W.2d 452 (1987); Sterling Drug, Inc. v. Oxford, 294 Ark. 239, 743 S.W.2d 380 (1988); Clark v. State, 26 Ark. App. 268, 764 S.W.2d 458 (1989).

Weapons found with defendant were relevant evidence of the element of premeditation and deliberation on the part of the defendant in the murder of policeman and should have been admitted at trial. Snell v. State, 287 Ark. 264, 698 S.W.2d 289 (1985).

Evidence properly admitted. Crossno v. State, 15 Ark. App. 341, 692 S.W.2d 626 (1985); McFadden v. State, 290 Ark. 177, 717 S.W.2d 812 (1986); Miller v. State, 19 Ark. App. 36, 715 S.W.2d 885 (1986); Simpson v. Hurt, 294 Ark. 41, 740 S.W.2d 618 (1987); Hubbard v. State, 306 Ark. 153, 812 S.W.2d 107 (1991).

Testimony which had a direct bearing on knowledge and intent, and was not of such character as to arouse undue hostility in the jury, was admissible. Morris v. State, 21 Ark. App. 228, 731 S.W.2d 230 (1987).

Testimony between defendant and his roommate was admissible and relevant in showing a possible motive for the killing. Easter v. State, 306 Ark. 615, 816 S.W.2d 602 (1991).

Where there was evidence that defendant scaled a chain-link fence adjacent to the building he attempted to enter illegally and was apprehended within that enclosure, the trial judge did not abuse his discretion in admitting items found along the chain-link fence adjacent to the building a few days later, into evidence for the consideration of the jury. Ward v. State, 35 Ark. App. 148, 816 S.W.2d 173 (1991).

Trial court did not err in refusing to permit certain evidence tending to show that defendant was a member of a street gang. State v. Jones, 322 Ark. 32, 907 S.W.2d 674 (1995).

Circuit court did not abuse its discretion in denying defendant's motion in limine to prohibit any reference to the unborn fetus by name; the fetus was at term at the time of death, the fetus had been named, and the name was included in the criminal information. Bull-ock v. State, 353 Ark. 577, 111 S.W.3d 380 (2003).

Evidence that defendant flirted with a guard after he killed his ill live-in companion was not unfairly prejudicial as it was a statement against interest under Ark. R. Evid. 801(d)(2)(i); the guard's testimony suggested that defendant's state of mind hours after the murder was not one of grief, but of relief. Boyle v. State, 363 Ark. 356, 214 S.W.3d 250 (2005).

In a breach of contract case, the court properly allowed insurer to introduce evidence of homeowner's prior late payments and lapses of her homeowner's policies as it showed that homeowner made only one timely payment on her homeowner's policy between November

2000 and November 2001, allowed the policy to lapse twice before the final lapse in November 2001, and had a long history of late payments on her automobile policy; the evidence was admissible to show homeowner's intent to not make the November 2001 payment on time and to show that a mistake did not occur; and the evidence was not unfairly prejudicial. Jones v. Coker, 90 Ark. App. 151, 204 S.W.3d 554 (2005).

In a drug manufacturing case, the trial court did not err by allowing officers to testify solely for the purposes of establishing prior criminal acts other than the one for which defendant was being tried because defendant's 1998 judgment for possession of drug paraphernalia after he was first charged with manufacturing methamphetamine and his arrest for shoplifting methamphetamine precursors was independently relevant and sufficiently similar to the charged offense of manufacturing methamphetamine; similar past conduct supporting defendant's knowledge of the methamphetamine manufacturing process and his shoplifting of methamphetamine precursors was certainly probative of intent. Saul v. State, 365 Ark. 77, 225 S.W.3d 373 (2006).

Defendant's convictions for possession of drug paraphernalia with intent to manufacture methamphetamine and possession of pseudoephedrine were upheld as the trial court properly allowed the state to introduce evidence of defendant's prior convictions because they concerned his culpability and intent; further, those convictions were independently relevant because they made it more probable that defendant understood the components of methamphetamine and the manufacturing process, that he knew that the items in his possession were illegal in that quantity, and that he knew the items were used for manufacturing methamphetamine. Nelson v. State, 365 Ark. 314, 229 S.W.3d 35 (2006).

In a capital murder case, testimony of witness who overheard a conversation about the location of a planned robbery was relevant and not unduly prejudicial because it placed defendant at the scene of a later double homicide. Harris v. State, 366 Ark. 190, 234 S.W.3d 273 (2006).

Circuit court did not abuse its discretion in admitting evidence of defendant's recorded conversation with another where, what prompted defendant's statement be it his frustration over not being able to speak to his wife or his frustration over his wife's conversation with police, was a matter for the jury to decide; the circuit court did not abuse its discretion in concluding that the statement was admissible pursuant to this rule. Holman v. State, 372 Ark. 2, 269 S.W.3d 815 (2007).

Defendant's convictions for capital murder and kidnapping were appropriate because evidence that defendant possessed a gun similar to that used in the murder was independently relevant proof on the issue of defendant's identity, Ark. R. Evid. 404(b). Moreover, its probative value was not substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice. Gilcrease v. State, 2009 Ark. 298, 318 S.W.3d 70 (2009).

Testimony that defendant was hiding in a closet that had been nailed shut when the police arrived at his home to arrest him was admissible because it was relevant to prove that defendant was hiding from the police due to his consciousness of guilt in having committed sexual assault against 15-year-old girl. Williams v. State, 2009 Ark. App. 639 (2009).

Absence of a state-mandated lifeline was relevant under Ark. R. Evid. 401 as: (1) the violation of a government regulation was evidence of negligence; (2) the purposes of a lifeline were to demarcate the shallow and deep ends of the pool and to provide a swimmer with something to grasp onto, which were relevant to proximate cause; and (3) the substantial probative value of the violation was not substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice under this rule. Bishop v. Tariq, Inc., 2011 Ark. App. 445, 384 S.W.3d 659 (2011).

Court did not err during defendant's trial for first-degree murder as an accomplice in admitting testimony from defendant's fellow inmate that defendant told the inmate he had no remorse for his wife's death; the testimony reflected defendant's consciousness of guilt and was independently relevant. The testimony was more probative than prejudicial. Camp v. State, 2011 Ark. 155, 381 S.W.3d 11 (2011).

Defendant's rape conviction was proper because the victim's testimony fell squarely under the pedophile exception to Ark. R. Evid. 404(b). The relationship between the victim and her father was clearly an intimate one and the similar acts she described were exactly of the same nature as the acts that occurred in the time frame listed in the information; it was an ongoing sexual relationship and the evidence was not more prejudicial than probative. Chunestudy v. State, 2012 Ark. 222, 408 S.W.3d 55 (2012).

Defendant's relevancy objections were properly overruled because (1) the evidence to which defendant objected was relevant to plan, mental state, motive, and intent, and (2) evidence cumulative of other evidence admitted without objection could not be prejudicial. Conte v. State, 2015 Ark. 220, 463 S.W.3d 686 (2015).

Testimony concerning defendant's suicide attempt evidenced how much control and manipulation defendant had over the victims' lives and included repeated threats to kill himself in order to get them to behave in ways that he wanted; furthermore, the photograph and testimony of his hanging attempt were introduced by the State through its rebuttal witness after defendant denied attempting suicide and sending the picture in question, and there was no abuse of discretion in admitting the evidence.

England v. State, 2016 Ark. App. 211, 489 S.W.3d 721 (2016).

In a domestic battering case, prior bad acts were introduced to establish that defendant had used physical abuse to punish his children for wrongdoing before the incident at issue, in which he allegedly physically abused the victim as punishment; the prior bad acts were relevant to show that defendant intentionally caused the injuries to the victim, and defendant failed to show how testimony about the prior bad acts was unfairly prejudicial. Geelhoed v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 96, 515 S.W.3d 139 (2017).

Rebuttal Evidence.

Genuine rebuttal evidence consists of evidence offered in reply to new matters, and evidence can still be categorized as genuine rebuttal evidence even if it overlaps with the evidence-in-chief. Pyle v. State, 314 Ark. 165, 862 S.W.2d 823 (1993), cert. denied, 510 U.S. 1197, 114 S. Ct. 1306, 127 L. Ed. 2d 657 (1994).

Where defendant, in a trial for manufacturing a Schedule II controlled substance, testified, as part of his affirmative defense, that he did not know how to manufacture drugs and had never done so either before or after his arrest, the state could rebut this testimony. Hill v. State, 314 Ark. 275, 862 S.W.2d 836 (1993).

Circuit court properly allowed car manufacturer to introduce Japanese and Canadian reports on sudden acceleration into evidence in mother's defective design action as the evidence was relevant to support manufacturer's claim that it did not act with malice in response to mother's request for punitive damages; the evidence's relevance was not outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice because the mother had ample opportunity to prepare to defend against the reports, as their admission was a contested issue until and throughout the trial. Chapman v. Ford Motor Co., 368 Ark. 328, 245 S.W.3d 123 (2006).

Res Gestae.

In a case involving rape, aggravated robbery, and kidnapping, a trial court did not err by overruling relevancy objections and admitting evidence that appellant told his victim that he planned to go kill someone because this was part of an entire criminal transaction under the res gestae exception. Appellant's statement revealed a reason that he jumped into the victim's car and demanded to be driven to another location, why he was carrying a gun, and what his intent was with regard to possibly shooting the victim. Dillard v. State, 2013 Ark. App. 87 (2013).

Scientific Evidence.

preliminary inquiry of any novel scientific evidence and focus on: (1) the reliability of the process used to generate the evidence; (2) the possibility that the jury would be overwhelmed, confused or misled by the evidence; and (3) the connection between the evidence to be offered and the disputed factual issue in the particular case. Whitson v. State, 314 Ark. 458, 863 S.W.2d 794 (1993).

Circuit court did not err by granting the state's motion in limine to prohibit defendant from introducing unknown trace DNA and fingerprints found at the crime scene on the grounds that the evidence was not relevant and therefore inadmissible under Ark. R. Evid. 402 and this rule. The evidence was too remote and speculative, and tended to show nothing other than that some unknown third person was present in those two places at some unknown time; it did not directly connect the unknown third person with the commission of the murders. Birts v. State, 2012 Ark. 348 (2012).

Sentencing Phase.

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting on-line chats and photographs depicting snuff sexual acts found on defendant's computer in the sentencing phase of his jury trial where the photos were the best method for the jury to gauge the veracity of defendant's attempts to downplay his activities, and they directly challenged witness testimony about defendant's care for his disabled wife and his good reputation in the community. Shreck v. State, 2016 Ark. App. 374, 499 S.W.3d 677 (2016), superseded, 2017 Ark. 39, 510 S.W.3d 750 (2017).

Circuit court properly admitted into evidence, during the sentencing phase of defendant's trial, conversations regarding "snuff" sex; while the evidence was obviously prejudicial to defendant, the evidence was both relevant and not unduly prejudicial. Defendant was convicted of conspiracy to commit rape of two minor children and he not only expressed his interest in snuff sex during the planning of the act with an undercover police officer, he also indicated that he was interested in performing it with minors. Shreck v. State, 2017 Ark. 39, 510 S.W.3d 750 (2017).

Trial court misapplied the law by overruling defendant's objection at sentencing to admission of evidence concerning nude images found on his computer without first engaging in the required Ark. R. Evid. 403 inquiry; from the trial court's comments from the bench in response to defendant's objection, it was apparent that the trial court was under the erroneous impression that Rule 403 did not apply at the sentencing stage of the proceedings. Peebles v. State, 2019 Ark. App. 483, 588 S.W.3d 355 (2019).

In defendant's sentencing trial following his guilty plea to first-degree murder, the circuit court properly admitted defendant's letter requesting the proceeds of his wife's life insurance policy because it was relevant to his guilt and to rebut his argument that he had accepted responsibility for his actions or had exhibited remorse where it suggested a possible financial motive for his wife's murder; while the jury might have negatively viewed his desire to receive his wife's life insurance proceeds, the evidence did not substantially outweigh its probative value since it provided evidence of his motive for the murder and displayed his conduct after the murder, and the jury could weigh both in considering his request for a lighter sentence. Burnell v. State, 2020 Ark. 244, 602 S.W.3d 115 (2020).

Defendant's objection to the admission of evidence of her prior misdemeanor convictions at the penalty phase was only to the misdemeanor convictions' relevance. To the extent defendant's objection could be construed as one pertaining to this rule, it was defendant's burden to obtain a ruling from the trial court on that basis and she failed to preserve the argument; and, in any event, defendant could not demonstrate prejudice because she was sentenced within the statutory range. Peer v. State, 2020 Ark. App. 181, 598 S.W.3d 59 (2020).

Similar Occurrences.

There were enough similarities between the testimony of the witnesses, to make this evidence probative on the issue of defendant's sexual impulses acted out on young family members; considering the circuit court's broad discretion in admitting evidence, the circuit court properly concluded that the probative nature of this evidence was not substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice. Warner v. State, 2021 Ark. 215 (2021).

Where the issue was whether a fire was set deliberately to claim insurance, the existence of other fires, if not too remote in time or dissimilar in circumstances, may have been admissible without showing the same or substantially similar circumstances; such evidence had relevance to show motive, intent, absence of mistake or accident. Where the issue involved a claim of negligence, proof of similar occurrences required evidence of the same or substantially similar conditions. Johnson v. Truck Ins. Exch., 285 Ark. 470, 688 S.W.2d 728 (1985).

In a sexual assault case, introduction of evidence that defendant had stopped another church member and persuaded that victim to go to an isolated area where unwanted sexual advances were made was relevant to show modus operandi and lack of consent by the second victim and, as such, did not violate this rule. Davis v. State, 362 Ark. 34, 207 S.W.3d 474 (2005).

In a child rape case, a court properly allowed evidence of defendant's prior sexual acts with children because in both cases, defendant occupied a caregiver role for the victims, the sexual act alleged, oral sex, was identical, and the evidence of defendant's prior sexual acts with his daughters tended to show his depraved sexual instinct. The similarities between defendant's admitted abuse of his daughters and the alleged rape of the victim, tended to show defendant's intent to commit the charged offense, and the evidence that defendant forced his daughter to perform oral sex on him tended to corroborate the victim's testimony that he forced her to perform oral sex. Lamb v. State, 372 Ark. 277, 275 S.W.3d 144 (2008).

During defendant's trial for the rape of his nine-year-old stepdaughter, the trial court correctly applied the pedophile exception to Ark. R. Evid. 404(b) when admitting testimony from another young woman, who testified that she had been molested by digital penetration by defendant when she was a child, because the similarities were significant and probative on the issue of defendant's deviate sexual impulses; the probative value of the evidence was not substantially outweighed by any danger of unfair prejudice. Eubanks v. State, 2009 Ark. 170, 303 S.W.3d 450 (2009).

In defendant's criminal trial involving allegations and convictions for capital murder and kidnapping, the admission of testimony from a witness about a 27-year-old incident was admissible under Ark. R. Evid. 404(b) because the similarities between the alleged prior act and the charged offense tended to show defendant's intent to commit the charged offense. The similarities between the two acts were clearly probative of defendant's intent, motive, and plan, as theorized by the state's charges and the probative value of the witness testimony was not outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice. Osburn v. State, 2009 Ark. 390, 326 S.W.3d 771 (2009), cert. denied, 559 U.S. 938, 130 S. Ct. 1522, 176 L. Ed. 2d 113 (2010).

Circuit court did not err in allowing the state to present evidence during his trial of the rape committed against one victim in her home on April 21, 2008, some six months prior to similar crimes committed against another victim on October 20, 2008. While the first victim's testimony might have been prejudicial, as most Ark. R. Evid. 404(b) evidence was, it was also independently relevant to defendant's intent, scheme, or plan, and its probative value was not outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice. Vance v. State, 2011 Ark. 243, 383 S.W.3d 317 (2011).

Trial court did not err in finding that the prejudicial value of defendant's prior child molestation convict was outweighed by its probative value based on the similarities of the current rape charge and the prior child molestation conviction. Woods v. State, 2013 Ark. App. 739, 431 S.W.3d 343 (2013).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the testimony of a witness, who testified that the witness had encountered defendant while jogging on a trail at a lake one day before another female jogger running alone was allegedly attacked by defendant on the trail, as the testimony was relevant to the issues of identification, preparation, and absence of mistake. Furthermore, the probative value of the testimony was substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice. Turner v. State, 2018 Ark. App. 5, 538 S.W.3d 227 (2018).

Circuit court did not abuse its discretion when it excluded the testimony of the driver's expert witness about rollover accidents in three other cases because the driver's theory for proving the seat-belt buckle's defective condition depended on the transmission of gravitational forces through the frame of the vehicle to the buckle stalk, and in the other cases, there were notable differences in the length of the buckle stalks and the frames of the vehicles involved. Cantrell v. Toyota Motor Corp., 2018 Ark. App. 335, 553 S.W.3d 157 (2018).

Specific Act.

Where the connection between a fraudulent conveyance and defendant's possible civil liability had a remote bearing upon a witness's credibility, the court should have disallowed cross-examination about the specific act. Morrison v. Lowe, 267 Ark. 361, 590 S.W.2d 299 (Ct. App. 1979).

Standard of Review.

The standard of review of a trial court's weighing of probative value against unfair prejudice is whether the trial court abused its discretion. Peters v. Pierce, 314 Ark. 8, 858 S.W.2d 680 (1993).

The balancing of probative value and unfair prejudice mandated by this section is a matter left to the sound discretion of the trial court, and will not be reversed absent a showing of manifest abuse. Mixon v. State, 330 Ark. 171, 954 S.W.2d 214 (1997).

Circuit court did not manifestly abuse its discretion by allowing the state to introduce appellant's letters to his wife; any suggestion of a guilty conscience in the letter to appellant's wife was slight. He never confessed to the crime in the letter, and as the weigher of credibility, the jury was charged with interpreting appellant's state of mind and intentions in writing the letter. Bryant v. State, 2010 Ark. 7, 377 S.W.3d 152 (2010).

Subsequent Remedial Measures.

When evidence of a subsequent remedial measure is not barred by Evid. Rule 407, its probative value should outweigh any dangers associated by its admission. Ford Motor Co. v. Nuckolls, 320 Ark. 15, 894 S.W.2d 897 (1995).

Tape Recording.

The trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting tape of a 911 call; even though the state had clear proof that someone entered caller's home without resorting to the "911" call, the call served to explain why the police were in the area, and defendant offered no authority for how caller's alleged "frantic voice" inflamed the jury. Passley v. State, 323 Ark. 301, 915 S.W.2d 248 (1996).

A recording of a 911 call in which a witness reported a murder was properly admitted into evidence, notwithstanding the contention that it was more prejudicial than probative, since the tape showed that the defendant was fully armed and acted with premeditation and deliberation and that the victim was not armed. Henry v. State, 337 Ark. 310, 989 S.W.2d 894 (1999).

Circuit court did not err by admitting into evidence a recording of the kidnapping victim's 911 call because the evidence contained in the recording was relevant to prove the restraint element of the kidnapping offense and to counter defendant's argument that he released the victim; in the call, the victim told the operator the circumstances of the crimes and that she was bound and could not escape, and defendant did not produce any authority to support his position that the 911 recording was unduly prejudicial because the victim's voice was hysterical. Davis v. State, 368 Ark. 401, 246 S.W.3d 862 (2007).

In a capital murder trial, the probative value of the tape recording of the 911 call made immediately after the shooting, which described the shooting's aftermath and resuscitation efforts, was not substantially outweighed by unfair prejudice or the needless presentation of cumulative evidence. Reid v. State, 2019 Ark. 363, 588 S.W.3d 725 (2019), cert. denied, 141 S. Ct. 551, 208 L. Ed. 2d 175 (2020).

Testimony Improper.

It was improper to allow an officer to testify as to the details of what an anonymous telephone caller told him relating to the manner in which the crime was committed, but it was proper to allow the officer to relate the portions of the telephone call which caused him to take the course of action which he subsequently took. Van Cleave v. State, 268 Ark. 514, 598 S.W.2d 65 (1980).

Testimony was prejudicial and of little or no probative value in determining defendant's guilt. McCoy v. State, 270 Ark. 145, 603 S.W.2d 418 (1980).

Proffered remarks had minimal probative value and no relevance. Hughes v. State, 292 Ark. 619, 732 S.W.2d 829 (1987).

A witness should not be compelled to invoke his Fifth Amendment privilege in front of the jury, and if forced to take the stand and invoke the privilege against self-incrimination question by question any probative value would be substantially outweighed by the possibility of confusing the jury. Echols v. State, 326 Ark. 917, 936 S.W.2d 509 (1996), cert. denied, 520 U.S. 1244, 117 S. Ct. 1853, 137 L. Ed. 2d 1055 (1997).

In a drug case, the court erred by admitting evidence from an undisclosed "rebuttal witness" regarding items that were seized from defendant's house in a prior, unrelated search because the so-called rebuttal testimony did not "merely" respond to defendant's contention that the alleged contraband had legitimate uses, but delved into the details of a prior crime; further, the testimony went well beyond the mere existence of a drug manufacturing conviction. Cluck v. State, 91 Ark. App. 220, 209 S.W.3d 428 (2005), rev'd, 365 Ark. 166, 226 S.W.3d 780 (2006).

Defendant's conviction for raping his daughter under § 5-14-103(a)(4)(A)(i) was appropriate because the evidence was sufficient and because the circuit court properly denied defendant's rape-shield motions. Consent was never an issue in a rape-by-guardian case, and when consent was not an issue, whether the victim had sexual relations with a third person was entirely collateral and irrelevant, § 16-42-101(b), (c); further, even if the supreme court had concluded that the conduct was relevant, it could not say that the probative value of such evidence was not substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice under this rule. Vance v. State, 2011 Ark. 392, 384 S.W.3d 515 (2011).

Testimony on Victim's Injuries.

The trial court did not err when it allowed the state to call a physician to the stand to testify as to the robbery victim's injuries despite the defendant's offer to stipulate as to the injuries the victim sustained, where the doctor's testimony was only a brief and general description of the victim's injuries and the permanent effect of her paralysis, and the testimony was relevant to show the infliction or intent to inflict death or serious injury to another. Harshaw v. State, 275 Ark. 481, 631 S.W.2d 300 (1982).

Where essentially the same evidence of the fact that witnesses had seen that murder victim had been "beat up" on several occasions was admitted without objection, any potential error in allowing another witness to testify to essentially the same facts was harmless. Brenk v. State, 311 Ark. 579, 847 S.W.2d 1 (1993).

Doctor merely testified that the child victim's injury was caused by a penetrating trauma and was consistent with penetration by a penis into the child victim's vagina. Existing Arkansas law allowed such testimony; although the testimony embraced the ultimate issue, it did not mandate a legal conclusion. The evidence was clearly relevant and not unfairly prejudicial. While the doctor admitted that other penetrating traumas could have caused the injury, such evidence went to the weight of the testimony, not the admissibility of it. Bryles v. State, 2015 Ark. App. 688, 477 S.W.3d 555 (2015).

Testimony Time Limit.

The trial court did not abuse its discretion by limiting the testimony to instances within six months of the accident, as there was nothing to suggest that the six-month period was unreasonable or unfair to either party. Miller v. Nix, 315 Ark. 569, 868 S.W.2d 498 (1994).

Tests.

Probative value of gaze nystagmus test results to show an alcohol level above the legal limit was substantially outweighed by the potential for unfair prejudice. Middleton v. State, 29 Ark. App. 83, 780 S.W.2d 581 (1989).

The trial's admission of genital herpes test results, to corroborate the testimony of the rape victim, was not a manifest abuse of discretion. Cole v. State, 307 Ark. 41, 818 S.W.2d 573 (1991).

DNA tests should not be ruled admissible before the accused's expert has had a chance to examine the evidence, procedures, and protocol, ideally, an accused should even be provided with the actual DNA samples in order to reproduce the tests, an accused must be given the opportunity for independent expert review before a determination of reliability is made. Prater v. State, 307 Ark. 180, 820 S.W.2d 429 (1991).

It was error for trial court to admit evidence of luminol testing where there was no follow-up testing done to establish that the substance causing the luminol reaction was, in fact, human blood related to the alleged murder. Brenk v. State, 311 Ark. 579, 847 S.W.2d 1 (1993).

It was error to allow criminalist to testify that he thought that luminol reactions indicated the presence of blood without adequate follow-up testing having been done to establish that what caused the reactions was, in fact, blood, since the testimony was likely to be misleading and confusing to the jury. Brenk v. State, 311 Ark. 579, 847 S.W.2d 1 (1993).

Toxicology Report.

In a second-degree murder case, there was no abuse of discretion in granting the State's motion to exclude testimony from the medical examiner that the victim had illegal controlled substances in his system at the time of his death because the report's probative value was far outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice. The toxicology report was irrelevant because defendant did not know at the time of the shooting that the victim had ingested drugs; moreover, defendant was not prejudiced by the ruling because he presented proof of the victim's erratic and aggressive behavior. Wade v.

State, 2017 Ark. App. 157, 516 S.W.3d 772 (2017).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion by excluding a toxicology report showing the presence of methamphetamine in the wife's body because without more the mere presence of methamphetamine failed to show that her drug use was linked to her murder. Drennan v. State, 2018 Ark. 328, 559 S.W.3d 262 (2018).

In a trial resulting in defendant's conviction for first-degree battery, the circuit court did not err in declining to allow defendant to ask the victim to read the results of the victim's blood-alcohol test on cross-examination. Under this rule, the danger was that without further explanation as to the specifics of the results, the jury would confuse the numbers with the more common measurement of blood-alcohol content; testimony of the results also would have been more prejudicial than probative because there was no evidence presented that defendant knew the victim had been drinking prior to the altercation. Wright v. State, 2019 Ark. App. 364, 584 S.W.3d 711 (2019).

Even if the circuit court had abused its discretion by not allowing the victim to recite the results of the "tox-screen", any error was harmless because the victim confirmed on direct and cross-examination that he had consumed two or three beers on the day of his altercation with defendant; also, the results of the blood-alcohol test were in evidence in the medical records. Wright v. State, 2019 Ark. App. 364, 584 S.W.3d 711 (2019).

Undue Delay or Waste of Time.

It was error to suppress evidence relevant to the issues of whether the machine was properly certified and whether it was functioning properly at the time the appellant's test was administered. McKim v. State, 25 Ark. App. 176, 753 S.W.2d 295 (1988).

The trial court has discretion to exclude testimony, even if relevant, if it would confuse the issues or waste time. Caldwell v. State, 319 Ark. 243, 891 S.W.2d 42 (1995).

Victim Impact Evidence.

Testimony of the chairman of a non-profit group's board about the group's response to a flooding disaster, the resulting funerals, and the chairman's personal relationships with the bereaved was relevant victim-impact evidence under Ark. R. Evid. 402 and § 16-97-103 at defendant's sentencing hearing as although the group was able to meet the disaster victims' needs, the testimony illustrated the difficulties the group experienced due to defendant's theft; the evidence was not unduly prejudicial. Brown v. State, 2011 Ark. App. 608 (2011).

Victim's Sexual Knowledge.

Five-factor test to be used in determining whether evidence of a child victim's prior sexual conduct was admissible to show the child's basis of sexual knowledge applied to two incidents, but both failed to meet the first prong of the test: there was no evidence that the prior act clearly occurred; therefore, neither of these instances was admissible because the first factor was not met, and the trial court's denial to allow this testimony into evidence under this rule was not an abuse of discretion. T.E. v. State, 2015 Ark. App. 438 (2015).

Videotapes.

Videotapes, like photographs, are not rendered inadmissible merely because they are cumulative. Hickson v. State, 312 Ark. 171, 847 S.W.2d 691 (1993).

The trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting videotape of the crime scene and the victims' bodies where the videotape gave an overall perspective of the crime scene at the time the crimes were committed and was helpful to the jury's understanding of the nature and extent of the victims' injuries. Jefferson v. State, 328 Ark. 23, 941 S.W.2d 404 (1997).

Trial court did not err in permitting the state to introduce videotapes depicting defendant engaged in sexual acts with his minor victims and with each other because the video footage was relevant to proving the elements of both the charges of rape and the charges of engaging children in the production of child pornography and because it could not be said that the video served no valid purpose other than to inflame the passions of the jury. Williams v. State, 374 Ark. 282, 287 S.W.3d 559 (2008).

Where defendant was charged with numerous counts of rape and engaging children in the production of child pornography, the probative value of a DVD depicting defendant engaged in sexual contact with the young boys was not substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice because the state had the burden of proving the elements of all of the charges against defendant and because the state was entitled to prove the elements of the charges with its best evidence and the videos were certainly the state's best evidence. Williams v. State, 374 Ark. 282, 287 S.W.3d 559 (2008).

Court properly found that the probative value of the various video recordings substantially outweighed the danger of unfair prejudice because, although there were witnesses to the events, the recordings represented an objective portrayal of what occurred during the traffic stop and served both to corroborate and to explain the eyewitnesses' testimony. Lard v. State, 2014 Ark. 1, 431 S.W.3d 249, cert. denied, 574 U.S. 836, 135 S. Ct. 76, 190 L. Ed. 2d 67 (2014).

Waiver.

In a capital murder case, where the record reflected that appellant failed to make an argument under this rule at trial as to the admissibility of a .22 caliber rifle found in his home, the court would not review the argument on appeal. Barrett v. State, 354 Ark. 187, 119 S.W.3d 485 (2003).

Defendant's conviction for capital-felony murder was appropriate because he did not receive a ruling from the circuit court regarding his argument under this rule; accordingly the issue was not preserved for our review. Dixon v. State, 2011 Ark. 450, 385 S.W.3d 164 (2011).

It was defendant's burden to obtain a ruling under this rule, and since he did not, the point was not preserved. Dolson v. State, 2018 Ark. App. 440, 558 S.W.3d 899 (2018).

Court of Appeals declined to review defendant's Rule 403 argument on appeal because defendant failed to obtain a clear ruling from the circuit court as to whether the probative value of the witness's testimony was substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice to him; because the circuit court never made a finding under the rule, the required balancing analysis did not occur. Baumann v. State, 2018 Ark. App. 564, 566 S.W.3d 494 (2018).

Rule 404. Character evidence not admissible to prove conduct, exceptions -- Other crimes.

(a) Character Evidence Generally. Evidence of a person's character or a trait of his character is not admissible for the purpose of proving that he acted in conformity therewith on a particular occasion, except:

(1) Character of accused. Evidence of a pertinent trait of his character offered by an accused, or by the prosecution to rebut the same;

(2) Character of victim. Evidence of a pertinent trait of character of the victim of the crime offered by an accused, or by the prosecution to rebut the same, or evidence of a character trait of peacefulness of the victim offered by the prosecution in a homicide case to rebut evidence that the victim was the first aggressor;

(3) Character of witness. Evidence of the character of a witness, as provided in Rules 607, 608, and 609.

(b) Other Crimes, Wrongs, or Acts. Evidence of other crimes, wrongs, or acts is not admissible to prove the character of a person in order to show that he acted in conformity therewith. It may, however, be admissible for other purposes, such as proof of motive, opportunity, intent, preparation, plan, knowledge, identity, or absence of mistake or accident.

CASE NOTES

In General.

The admissibility of relevant evidence under subsection (b) of this rule may be decided on a case by case basis. Conley v. State, 267 Ark. 713, 590 S.W.2d 66 (Ct. App. 1979).

To be admissible under subsection (b) of this rule, the evidence must be independently relevant and its probative value must not be substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice. Crutchfield v. State, 25 Ark. App. 227, 763 S.W.2d 94 (1988); Garner v. Kees, 312 Ark. 251, 848 S.W.2d 423 (1993).

Evidence offered under subsection (b) of this rule must be independently relevant. Larimore v. State, 317 Ark. 111, 877 S.W.2d 570 (1994).

Exceptions under subsection (b) of this rule go beyond a plan or scheme and include any independently relevant proof such as motive, opportunity, intent, absence of mistake, and other categories; this list of exceptions is not all-inclusive, since there may be other examples where the proof offered is independently probative. Lindsey v. State, 319 Ark. 132, 890 S.W.2d 584 (1994).

Prior acts need not exhibit the same or strikingly similar methodology, which is one so unique that only one person could have perpetrated both the prior act and the present crime, in order to be admissible to prove the motive, plan, and intent of the perpetrator. Haire v. State, 340 Ark. 11, 8 S.W.3d 468 (2000).

The list of exceptions to inadmissibility in subsection (b) of this rule is not an exclusive list, but instead, it is representative of the types of circumstances under which evidence of other crimes or wrongs or acts would be relevant and admissible. Barnes v. State, 346 Ark. 91, 55 S.W.3d 271, op. withdrawn, sub. op., 65 S.W.3d 389 (Ark. 2001).

Evidence that defendant had shot his cousin was relevant and admissible under subsection (b) of this rule to prove that killing the victim was not a mistake or accident, and the similar nature of the previous battery conviction to the crime charged made the earlier conviction relevant to impeach defendant's testimony that he had reformed his violent behavior. Herron v. State, 362 Ark. 446, 208 S.W.3d 779 (2005).

In a capital murder case, defendant's use of crack cocaine was admissible as part of the res gestae where the witness testified that defendant took the items he had stolen to the witness's home, discussed his crimes with the witness, solicited help in burning down the victim's home, and then smoked crack cocaine with the witness that was purchased with money taken from the victim. Thessing v. State, 365 Ark. 384, 230 S.W.3d 526, cert. denied, 549 U.S. 891, 127 S. Ct. 193, 166 L. Ed. 2d 158 (2006).

Although the gay-themed books were improperly admitted into evidence, any error was harmless in light of the wealth of other evidence of defendant's homosexual lifestyle; further, pornographic videos and photographs were properly admitted where two victims were in the photographs and they corroborated other victims' testimony. Simmons v. State, 95 Ark. App. 114, 234 S.W.3d 321 (2006).

In attorney's disciplinary proceeding, the special judge did not err when he disallowed certain evidence because the attorney had not been given notice that the Executive Director of the Arkansas Supreme Committee on Professional Conduct planned to introduce that evidence at the hearing. Ligon v. Dunklin, 368 Ark. 443, 247 S.W.3d 498 (2007).

Absence of Duress.

In a prosecution for murder, the trial court properly permitted the introduction of evidence regarding the defendant's presence at the murder of another person earlier on the same day as such evidence belied her defense that she acted with her copерpetrator only out of duress. Arnett v. State, 342 Ark. 66, 27 S.W.3d 721 (2000).

Absence of Mistake.

Testimony that the defendant said he had shot one individual and was probably going to prison was admissible to show defendant's intent, knowledge, and absence of mistake regarding the murder at issue. Williams v. State, 338 Ark. 178, 992 S.W.2d 89 (1999).

Where children are concerned, evidence of physical injuries to other children in the home and even to a child in another home is probative of intent and the absence of mistake or accident. Branstetter v. State, 346 Ark. 62, 57 S.W.3d 105 (2001).

Evidence of defendant's prior conviction for domestic battering of the victim was properly admitted as evidence of lack of mistake or accident where defendant testified in his trial for attempted first-degree murder that he had learned a valuable lesson and inferred that the current incident was a mistake. McCoy v. State, 354 Ark. 322, 123 S.W.3d 901 (2003).

In an assault case arising from shaking a baby under § 5-13-201(a)(4)(A), testimony of defendant's actions toward the same infant two weeks earlier was admissible under Ark. R. Evid. 403 and subsection (b) of this rule because it was offered to show state of mind and to negate the claim of accident. Smith v. State, 90 Ark. App. 261, 205 S.W.3d 173 (2005).

During defendant's murder trial, the jury did not receive inadmissible and prejudicial bad-acts evidence about how defendant treated a former girlfriend; that he had placed a gun to the former girlfriend's head and not fired it was highly relevant to the State's effort to prove that the victim was purposely, not accidentally, shot. Shatwell v. State, 2013 Ark. App. 568, 430 S.W.3d 142 (2013).

Evidence regarding defendant's abuse against his wife and his mother was independently relevant and admissible to demonstrate the absence of mistake or accident; the defense that the child's death was an accident allowed the admission of that evidence to rebut his defense. Atwood v. State, 2020 Ark. 283 (2020).

Alibi Defense.

The admissibility of testimony about another crime, to rebut a defense of alibi, is uniformly recognized. Williams v. State, 276 Ark. 399, 635 S.W.2d 265 (1982).

Where in a prosecution for first-degree murder committed in the perpetration of a robbery at a motel the defendant and his wife testified that the defendant was at home at the time of the murder, the trial court did not err in allowing the state on rebuttal to introduce evidence that the defendant had held up another person in the same vicinity a short time before the robbery at the motel, because the state's evidence was relevant to disprove the defendant's alibi and was not merely offered to show the defendant's bad character. Williams v. State, 276 Ark. 399, 635 S.W.2d 265 (1982).

Appeal.

State did not argue that the circuit court misinterpreted subsection (b) of this rule, instead, it only contended that the trial court abused its discretion in applying the rule; state appeals were not allowed merely to demonstrate the fact that the trial court erred. State v. Fuson, 355 Ark. 652, 144 S.W.3d 250 (2004).

Appellate court was unable to review the trial court's decision to allow polygraph evidence under subsection (b) of this rule during rebuttal in a rape case because defendant failed to meet the burden of providing the evidence in question in the record on appeal. Rollins v. State, 362 Ark. 279, 208 S.W.3d 215 (2005).

Applicability.

This rule is inapplicable to show a habit of lying. Biggers v. State, 317 Ark. 414, 878 S.W.2d 717 (1994).

There was no issue from subsection (b) of this rule that arose from defendant's request for a redaction of portions of a telephone conversation between defendant and a rape victim's mother because the statement in question would not have made the jury aware that there was an alleged prior similar crime; there had been a prior trial for the alleged rape of the same victim that resulted in a mistrial and no retrial. White v. State, 370 Ark. 284, 259 S.W.3d 410 (2007).

Circuit court did not abuse its discretion in admitting evidence of defendant's recorded conversation with another where, what prompted defendant's statement be it his frustration over not being able to speak to his wife or his frustration over his wife's conversation with police, was a matter for the jury to decide; the circuit court did not abuse its discretion in concluding that the statement was admissible pursuant to Ark. R. Evid. 403. Holman v. State, 372 Ark. 2, 269 S.W.3d 815 (2007).

Defendant argued that certain testimony was inadmissible under subdivision (b) of this rule; as a threshold matter, the court had to first determine whether the rule even applied in the context of defendant's case. White v. State, 2009 Ark. 374, 326 S.W.3d 421 (2009).

Subsection (b) of this rule was not applicable to a witness's testimony; the only testimony related to the gun was that the witness had seen defendant with a .380 caliber handgun, it is not a crime to possess a handgun, and thus the jury was not informed of any prior criminal or other bad act on the part of defendant. White v. State, 2009 Ark. 374, 326 S.W.3d 421 (2009).

Under subsection (b) of this rule, the circuit court abused its discretion by admitting evidence of other allegations of sexual misconduct as there was no issue of intent with respect to the harassment charge; the appellate court could not perceive of any independent relevance that the testimony of the alleged victims in their two severed charges had in this case. Donaldson v. State, 2009 Ark. App. 119, 302 S.W.3d 622 (2009).

Bias.

The purpose of the state's cross-examination of the defense witness was to show that the witness was a friend of defendant and would testify favorably for that reason; because the evidence that the defense witness and defendant met in prison was relevant to proving the witness's bias, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in allowing the state to delve into this area of cross-examination. Jones v. State, 349 Ark. 331, 78 S.W.3d 104 (2002).

In defendant's murder trial, the key witness who was at the scene of the shooting allegedly battered a woman in retaliation against her for not relaying the information the key witness wanted the woman to impart to the police, but that key witness was not charged with any offense; those matters were relevant, reflecting upon the key witness's interest, motives in testifying, and bias, and the trial court committed reversible error in restricting cross-examination on the subject. Ghoston v. State, 84 Ark. App. 387, 141 S.W.3d 907 (2004).

Character of Accused.

Where in a prosecution for theft of property the prosecutor made improper and prejudicial remarks about the defendant's character and his associates before the jury, the trial court had wide discretion in deciding whether to declare a mistrial or merely admonish the jury, and since the prosecutor's statements were not so highly prejudicial as to warrant a mistrial, the admonition by the trial court was adequate to offset the impropriety of the statements. Gustafson v. State, 267 Ark. 830, 593 S.W.2d 187 (Ct. App. 1979).

Where the defendant in a murder prosecution raised the defense of self-defense, the trial court erred in prohibiting the defendant from putting on testimony as to his reputation for being a peaceful and law-abiding citizen, and his conviction was therefore reversed, since the traits of being peaceful and law-abiding were pertinent to both the crime with which he was charged and the defense upon which he relied, and such character evidence should have been admitted. Finnie v. State, 267 Ark. 638, 593 S.W.2d 32 (1980).

Where eight of state's 15 witnesses in manslaughter trial testified about two fighting incidents with patrons which defendant, as doorman at club, was involved in prior to fight with victim, who died of broken neck, and there was no evidence that the first two encounters which occurred at the front of the club had any connection with the fatal fight which occurred at the back of the club, or that the victim was acquainted with the other persons involved, evidence of the first incidents was not admissible under subsection (b) of this rule, since the only purpose served by the evidence is to prove that defendant was a bad man. Slavens v. State, 1 Ark. App. 245, 614 S.W.2d 529 (1981).

Where in a prosecution for burglary, aggravated assault, criminal mischief and battery, the defendant on cross-examination did not testify to a character trait of nonviolence, no rebutting character trait evidence was admissible. Hawksley v. State, 276 Ark. 504, 637 S.W.2d 573 (1982).

If other conduct of the accused is independently relevant to the main issue, in the sense of tending to prove some material point rather than merely to prove that the defendant is a criminal, that conduct may be admissible with a proper cautionary instruction by the court.

Setters v. State, 4 Ark. App. 46, 627 S.W.2d 263 (1982).

While defendant in murder prosecution did plead self-defense, or justification, such plea did not permit the state to offer evidence of specific instances of prior misconduct to show she may have been the aggressor because her character was not an essential element of her claim of self-defense. Rowdean v. State, 280 Ark. 146, 655 S.W.2d 413 (1983).

Court erred in admitting evidence, in murder prosecution, that defendant had been known to carry a knife prior to murder since such testimony was evidence of a character trait and defendant had not placed her general character in evidence nor had she offered any evidence of her character for peacefulness, or the victim's for violence. Rowdean v. State, 280 Ark. 146, 655 S.W.2d 413 (1983).

By testifying to his past exemplary conduct, the defendant in a damages action thereby opened the door to the admission of rebuttal evidence, otherwise inadmissible, concerning his reputation for peacefulness; thus, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting a police officer's testimony that the defendant had a reputation in the community for violence when he was drinking. Pursley v. Price, 283 Ark. 33, 670 S.W.2d 448 (1984).

Where testimony of the police officer could have been considered evidence that the defendant was predisposed to violence but did not directly show that defendant had such a character trait nor demonstrate in any way that he would be violent towards his own children, a mistrial would not be granted. Burnett v. State, 287 Ark. 158, 697 S.W.2d 95 (1985), overruled, Midgett v. State, 292 Ark. 278, 729 S.W.2d 410 (1987).

The trial court was right to exclude proof of character through specific instances of conduct on direct examination, but should have admitted opinion evidence of a "pertinent trait;" evidence that defendant was not a discipline problem, that he had an aversion to violence, and that he was immature and of limited intelligence should have been admitted in the capital murder trial. Shelton v. State, 287 Ark. 322, 699 S.W.2d 728 (1985).

In incest and child abuse cases, character evidence which would ordinarily be inadmissible under subsection (b) of this rule is admissible when it is helpful to show a proclivity toward a specific act with a person or class of persons with whom the accused has an intimate relationship. Baldrige v. State, 32 Ark. App. 160, 798 S.W.2d 127 (1990).

Where defendant in murder trial raised the character issue by testifying that there was no violence in his relationship with the murder victim and that he never had been charged with a criminal offense, the clear implication was that violence was not a character trait, and by testifying as he did, he invited a retort from the state on the peacefulness of his character, and when the state obliged by asking about a woman that defendant had held against her will in another state, there was no abuse of discretion in admitting defendant's testimony as to the unrelated incident. Spohn v. State, 310 Ark. 500, 837 S.W.2d 873 (1992).

It is clearly the defendant's obligation to object to testimony violating subdivision (a)(2) of this rule, and to ask for a curative instruction; the failure to do so will not inure to his benefit on appeal. Vick v. State, 314 Ark. 618, 863 S.W.2d 820 (1993).

The state is limited in character evidence about the victim under subdivision (a)(2) of this rule to rebutting what the defense has presented. Stewart v. State, 316 Ark. 153, 870 S.W.2d 752 (1994).

When an accused offers character evidence in his own behalf, the character witness is subject to cross-examination as to his or her knowledge of relevant specific instances of conduct by the accused; when that occurs, cross-examination as to specific instances of conduct is allowed irrespective of prejudice. Smith v. State, 316 Ark. 407, 872 S.W.2d 843 (1994).

Where defendant put his character and reputation for peacefulness in issue by testifying that he usually did not even carry a knife, the trial court did not err in permitting the rebuttal evidence of his knife-carrying reputation offered by the state. Landrum v. State, 47 Ark. App. 165, 887 S.W.2d 314 (1994), aff'd, 320 Ark. 81, 894 S.W.2d 933 (1995).

Testimony by defendant that he usually did not carry a knife or sometimes did not carry a knife was not evidence of his good character or of a particular character trait, and was not subject to rebuttal evidence. Landrum v. State, 320 Ark. 81, 894 S.W.2d 933 (1995).

No mistrial granted where a question that could have led to a prejudicial comment was asked, but never answered. Standridge v. State, 329 Ark. 473, 951 S.W.2d 299 (1997).

Witness' statement that defendant looked like "an animal" on the night of the murders was not a representation of his character. Noel v. State, 331 Ark. 79, 960 S.W.2d 439 (1998).

Witness' statement that she forged a prescription because she had heard that defendant "was out" was not improper character evidence; the jury could just as easily have concluded that defendant "was out" on bail. Noel v. State, 331 Ark. 79, 960 S.W.2d 439 (1998).

Defendant was properly convicted of four counts of rape in light of the testimony regarding the rape of two victims, the incident involving another, the vehicle and license-plate information, the presence of duct tape in the victim's garbage can, and the unequivocal identification by the victims and witnesses of defendant as the perpetrator; although defendant argued that the trial court erred by permitting the state to introduce character evidence in violation of this rule, he did not object to the character evidence at trial, and the appellate court would not consider the argument for the first time on appeal. Moore v. State, 87 Ark. App. 385, 192 S.W.3d 271 (2004).

Although defendant had been accused but not yet convicted of forgery, evidence that defendant was out on bond when he committed residential burglary and theft of property provided proof of his character and was relevant to the jury's determination of an appropriate punishment; the jury need not have learned of the details of defendant's bond requirements to understand that the fact that defendant was out on bond when he committed the new crimes said something about his character. Helms v. State, 92 Ark. App. 79, 211 S.W.3d 53 (2005).

Trial court properly denied defendant's motion for a mistrial after a witness testified that defendant was unemployed as it was doubtful whether the fact of unemployment was the type of character evidence contemplated by this rule and the evidence was relevant to defendant's motive for the murder; defendant had been living with the victim, his girlfriend, and relying on her for transportation, and there was evidence that she had broken up with defendant shortly before her murder. Tate v. State, 367 Ark. 576, 242 S.W.3d 254 (2006).

In a first-degree murder trial, defendant's testimony concerning his lack of intent to commit a violent act, along with testimony of two defense witnesses that he was not a violent person, invited inquiry into whether defendant had cut his finger while slashing a tire during an angry outburst shortly before the murder. Ross v. State, 96 Ark. App. 385, 242 S.W.3d 298 (2006).

Character evidence, which included defendant's prior convictions in another state, was admissible under this rule and Ark. R. Evid. 405 because defendant opened the door to the admission of such evidence when he questioned his wife about her opinion of his character. Frye v. State, 2009 Ark. 110, 313 S.W.3d 10 (2009).

Circuit court abused its discretion in allowing the State to cross-examine defendant as to whether he was a peaceful and law-abiding citizen or whether he had ever pulled a gun on anyone where the testimony as to the prior use of a gun was not relevant to prove motive, opportunity, intent, or preparation or plan of the murder, the evidence was unrelated to defendant's justification defense, and although defendant had testified about his personal history and background, his testimony had not strayed into the area of his character for peacefulness or of being a law-abiding citizen. Stanton v. State, 2017 Ark. 155, 517 S.W.3d 412 (2017).

Circumstances Surrounding Crime.

In a murder prosecution, evidence of the defendant's flight to Utah and subsequent arrest there was properly admitted to show the circumstances surrounding the crime. McGehee v. State, 338 Ark. 152, 992 S.W.2d 110 (1999).

In defendant's murder case, the presentation by the state of various incidents of defendant's obsessive behavior towards the victim was proper because, in so doing, the state established defendant's state of mind towards the victim by showing his strange behavior during the months leading up to the murder and the drastic measures that defendant was willing to take to keep the victim under his control; the testimony also established that defendant was aware of the victim's relationship with another man and thereby established defendant's possible motive in committing the murders. Brunson v. State, 368 Ark. 313, 245 S.W.3d 132 (2006).

In defendant's murder case, a witness testimony about being scared to live in the family home with defendant was properly admitted because the prosecutor asked the witness if she was scared in order to establish the state of the marital relationship between defendant and the victim, rather than to link defendant to another alleged crime. Brunson v. State, 368 Ark. 313, 245 S.W.3d 132 (2006).

Certain evidence was not admitted for the purpose of proving that defendant inflicted those injuries to a woman's face, and the visible injuries were simply evidence of the circumstances that existed that night, and the trial court did not abuse its discretion by denying the motion in limine. Detherow v. State, 2014 Ark. App. 478, 444 S.W.3d 867 (2014).

Civil Cases.

The exceptions to the general rule which are set out in subdivisions (a)(1) and (2) of this rule are not applicable to civil cases. Brown v. Conway, 300 Ark. 567, 781 S.W.2d 12 (1989); Razorback Cab of Ft. Smith, Inc. v. Lingo, 304 Ark. 323, 802 S.W.2d 444 (1991).

The general rule does not prohibit the introduction of evidence of character or traits of character in a civil case where: (1) trait of character is in issue; (2) the evidence is being offered to reflect upon the credibility of the witness; that is, showing the witness's character for veracity under Evid. Rules 608 and 609, or (3) the evidence is offered to prove something other than that the defendant acted in conformity with his character. Brown v. Conway, 300 Ark. 567, 781 S.W.2d 12 (1989).

Rule did not prevent a plaintiff in a civil assault action from showing in rebuttal that the defendant had a trait of violence where the defendant first put his own traits of character in evidence by testifying to his peacefulness. Brown v. Conway, 300 Ark. 567, 781 S.W.2d 12 (1989).

In a products liability action arising from an airplane accident, it was reversible error for the court to permit testimony that the plaintiff's decedent was a "cowboy" who was "hard on an airplane" since there was no purpose for such testimony other than to show that the decedent was flying recklessly at the time of the accident and given that the key question at trial was whether the crash was caused by mechanical failure or by pilot error. Lawhon v. Ayres Corp., 67 Ark. App. 66, 992 S.W.2d 162 (1999).

Consciousness of Guilt.

Evidence of the refusal to submit to a chemical test can properly be admitted as circumstantial evidence showing consciousness of guilt of a defendant charged with offense of driving while intoxicated, and once admitted, the weight of this evidence is a question to be resolved by the trier of fact, which may also consider the circumstances surrounding the refusal and any explanation given for declining to take the test. Spicer v. State, 32 Ark. App. 209, 799 S.W.2d 562 (1990).

A factfinder is entitled to know whether a defendant attempted to thwart his prosecution by secreting a witness who had implicated him in the charged offense. Thus, proof regarding defendant and his travel with confidential informant on the day set for trial was relevant circumstantial evidence of his knowledge or consciousness of guilt and was not unfairly prejudicial. Henderson v. State, 322 Ark. 402, 910 S.W.2d 656 (1995).

The defendant's conviction for escape, while awaiting trial on the rape charges at issue, was properly introduced into evidence to show consciousness of guilt. Elliott v. State, 342 Ark. 237, 27 S.W.3d 432 (2000).

Defendant's convictions were affirmed where, after the evidence was considered absent an officer's testimony about threats made to the officer by defendant at a pretrial hearing, admitted under subsection (b) of this rule, there was still abundant evidence as all three victims testified they were robbed at gunpoint and kidnapped at defendant's direction. Mendiola v. State, 92 Ark. App. 359, 214 S.W.3d 271 (2005).

Under subsection (b) of this rule, the trial court did not err in allowing the testimony of two witnesses as they were independently relevant to show defendant's consciousness of guilt, and thus, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in allowing the testimony. Banks v. State, 2009 Ark. 483, 347 S.W.3d 31 (2009).

Defendant's convictions for capital murder and committing a terroristic act were appropriate pursuant to subsection (b) of this rule because evidence of another drive-by shooting that defendant allegedly ordered while incarcerated was admissible since it reflected his consciousness of guilt and was independently relevant. Attempts to tamper with or silence witnesses to thwart prosecution for the charged offense was evidence of consciousness of guilt and constituted relevant evidence. Banks v. State, 2010 Ark. 108, 366 S.W.3d 341 (2010).

Court did not err under subsection (b) of this rule during defendant's trial for first-degree murder as an accomplice in admitting testimony from defendant's fellow inmate that defendant told the inmate he had no remorse for his wife's death; the testimony reflected defendant's consciousness of guilt and was independently relevant. Camp v. State, 2011 Ark. 155, 381 S.W.3d 11 (2011).

Construction.

Once the admissibility of character evidence is established under this rule, Evid. Rule 405 establishes the methods of proof which may be utilized. Rank v. State, 318 Ark. 109, 883 S.W.2d 843 (1994).

Subsection (b) of this rule does not mention modus operandi as one of the bases for introducing evidence of other crimes; however, the list of exceptions to inadmissibility contained in the rule is not an exclusive list but rather represents examples of the types of circumstances where evidence of other crimes or wrongs would be relevant and admissible. Christian v. State, 54 Ark. App. 191, 925 S.W.2d 428 (1996).

Corroboration of Accomplice.

Where in a prosecution for theft of property the state introduced a recorded conversation that the defendant had with a police informant, in which the defendant incriminated himself by referring to his participation in other car thefts, the trial court properly admitted such evidence since it had independent relevancy and it corroborated the testimony of the defendant's alleged accomplice. Price v. State, 268 Ark. 535, 597 S.W.2d 598 (1980).

In defendant's drug case, the court properly allowed the state to introduce testimony concerning items that were found in defendant's work vehicle sixteen days after he was arrested at the accomplice's residence, together with defendant's statement to an officer that the items in the vehicle were his, for the purpose of corroborating the accomplice's testimony. Fitting v. State, 94 Ark. App. 283, 229 S.W.3d 568 (2006).

Cross-Examination.

Where witness testified on direct examination that defendant charged with kidnapping and burglary was like a member of the family and had been a protector of her children, the State was well within its rights on cross-examination to delve into defendant's character once the door had been opened by his own witness. Rush v. State, 324 Ark. 147, 919 S.W.2d 933 (1996).

Evidence Necessary.

Where in prosecution for rape, prosecutor questioned defendant about "touching" eight-year-old victim earlier in the day on the date of the incident, but there was no prior evidence about such conduct, such questioning was an improper attempt to impeach the witness under Rule 608, since the questions had no relationship to the truthfulness or untruthfulness of his testimony and the probative value of the answers did not outweigh their prejudicial effect, nor did the questions qualify under this rule as tending to show motive, intent, preparation or plan, since there was no prior evidence of the conduct and this rule cannot apply without evidence. Harper v. State, 1 Ark. App. 190, 614 S.W.2d 237 (1981).

Evidence of Defense.

Where defendant in double homicide prosecution for killing his wife and her paramour, raised defense of justification under § 5-2-607, it was improper to exclude evidence which showed that defendant's wife had shot him on two prior occasions within two years of the murder, the first causing permanent injury to defendant's shoulder and the second causing loss of his thumb and finger, that both victims had threatened to kill defendant, and that the paramour had pulled a gun and threatened to kill defendant three months before the homicide, since, under this rule, where a claim of justification is raised, such evidence is relevant to the issue of who was the aggressor and whether or not the accused reasonably believed he was in danger of suffering unlawful deadly physical force. Smith v. State, 273 Ark. 47, 616 S.W.2d 14 (1981).

Evidence of other acts or crimes is usually admissible in rebuttal to the defense of entrapment. Jackson v. State, 12 Ark. App. 378, 677 S.W.2d 866 (1984).

Evidence of Different Charge.

If, in a prosecution for the possession of heroin the state had introduced the evidence of a different offense having been charged against the defendant, the defendant would have been entitled to show he was acquitted of that charge. Philmon v. State, 267 Ark. 1121, 593 S.W.2d 504 (Ct. App. 1980).

Where in a prosecution for possession of heroin, to whatever extent the knowledge of the jury that the defendant had been accused of a different offense from the one for which he was being tried may have prejudiced him, it was invited or created by him and should not be a basis for relief on appeal, since the defendant's trial counsel had objected to a police detective's testimony about the arrest warrant by saying that the arrest warrant was for a different offense. Philmon v. State, 267 Ark. 1121, 593 S.W.2d 504 (Ct. App. 1980).

In a capital murder prosecution, it was not error to admit evidence of defendant's prior kidnapping of another because (1) defendant waived an appellate objection by not making the objection at trial, and (2) defendant could not show prejudice, as the evidence was cumulative of other evidence admitted without objection. Conte v. State, 2015 Ark. 220, 463 S.W.3d 686 (2015).

Exclusion Upheld.

Circuit court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to allow witness testimony about a resident's character and reputation for engaging in sexual assaults because the testimony was barred by Ark. R. Evid. 404(b) and Ark. R. Evid. 405(b). The testimony would not have supported an essential element of the aggravated-residential-burglary charge or defendant's general-denial defense. Although the testimony would have provided evidence of specific instances of conduct to show the reason that defendant entered the home, the testimony would not have provided specific instances to show the reason that defendant entered or remained unlawfully in another resident's bedroom. Hill v. State, 2018 Ark. 194, 546 S.W.3d 483 (2018).

Factors Considered.

Similarity and time connections are factors in determining the probativeness of the evidence, which must be weighed against the possibility of confusing the issues and wasting time. Larimore v. State, 317 Ark. 111, 877 S.W.2d 570 (1994).

The focal point of an analysis under subsection (b) of this rule is whether the proof of the other crime, wrong, or act is relevant, not whether it was part of a single plan or scheme. Lindsey v. State, 319 Ark. 132, 890 S.W.2d 584 (1994).

Denial of inmate's Ark. R. Crim. P. 37 petition was proper because he failed to prove that he received the ineffective assistance of counsel. Had counsel made the objections that the inmate asserted should have been made under Ark. R. Evid. 403 and subdivision (b) of this rule, they would have been properly overruled because the inmate himself introduced the issue of a Virginia trip and his treatment of the victim's older sister; thus, the inmate opened the door to the very testimony he now found objectionable. Gilliland v. State, 2012 Ark. 175 (2012).

Failure to Disclose.

Despite a proper defense motion expressly seeking disclosure of other act evidence, the State failed to disclose that it had such evidence and the information was not disclosed until the State was cross-examining defendant, at which time it was far too late for him to prepare any kind of defense or response to the allegation; the circuit court's failure to grant defendant's motion for mistrial in the face of the State's misconduct was an abuse of discretion. Honey v. State, 2018 Ark. App. 217, 547 S.W.3d 483 (2018).

Failure to Raise Issue of Character.

Where the defendant was charged with manslaughter, and produced evidence of the decedent's aggressive acts against him and the prosecution cross-examined the defense witness as to defendant's violent background, such cross-examination was impermissible under this rule, since the defendant did not make an issue of his own character. West v. State, 265 Ark. 52, 576 S.W.2d 718 (1979).

Flight.

Defendant had been advised by a police officer that he was a fugitive wanted in connection with a murder charge, he had been read his Miranda rights, and he was told that the police would be searching for him; the trial court determined that defendant's flight was probative of consciousness of guilt and thus was relevant evidence, and there was no abuse of discretion. Toombs v. State, 2015 Ark. App. 71 (2015).

Allowing testimony about defendant's flight from law enforcement was not error where the officers' attempt to apprehend him occurred just three weeks after his release from the hospital, where he had been admitted when he was arrested for DWI; he clearly had reason to believe that he was being sought by the police in relation to the previous arrest; and even assuming he was unable to recall the specifics of the arrest, he certainly became aware that he no longer possessed his vehicle, the large sum of money he had in his pocket, two cell phones, and the concealed drugs. Jefferson v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 536, 532 S.W.3d 593 (2017).

Evidence of defendant's efforts to flee law enforcement in two other states was properly admitted under Ark. R. Evid. 404(b) where it was relevant to establish consciousness of guilt. Dorsey v. State, 2020 Ark. 316, 607 S.W.3d 485 (2020).

Habits of Victim.

Where a capital murder was alleged to have occurred, but the victim's body was never found, evidence that the victim had not been heard from in the three years prior to the trial, that he was very dependable in his routine and kept a fairly rigid schedule, plus the fact that he had a good samaritan's tendency to stop and help people in need, including hitchhikers, which, under other evidence introduced, could have included defendant, was properly admitted on the issue of habit pursuant to Rule 406, since the trial judge admonished the jury several times that he was not admitting the evidence as character evidence. Derring v. State, 273 Ark. 347, 619 S.W.2d 644 (1981).

Harmless Error.

Appellate court agreed with defendant that the trial court improperly allowed the state to introduce evidence of the other thefts since the fact that the items were stolen was not independently relevant to defendant's identity and there was no need for the state to present testimony from the victims regarding the fact that the items were stolen, however, the error in admitting the improper evidence under subsection (b) of this rule was harmless, because any error in allowing the victims to testify about the theft of their property was slight in comparison to the overwhelming evidence of guilt. Tomboli v. State, 100 Ark. App. 355, 268 S.W.3d 918 (2007).

Because defendant testified at trial concerning his prior violent crimes, he could not demonstrate any prejudice resulting from the trial court's failure to give an instruction under subsection (b) of this rule, even if one had been requested. Miller v. State, 2010 Ark. 1, 362 S.W.3d 264 (2010).

In a prosecution of defendant for raping his daughter, any error in the admission of photographic images from defendant's computer under Ark. R. Evid. 403 and this rule was harmless. Even assuming that the admission of the photos was error, there was overwhelming evidence of defendant's guilt. Johnston v. State, 2014 Ark. 110, 431 S.W.3d 895 (2014).

Identification of Defendant.

When challenging identification of defendant, under subsection (b) of this rule, the defendant should have the right to show that crimes of a similar nature have been committed by some other person when the acts of such other person are so closely connected in point of time and method of operation as to cast doubt upon the identification of the defendant as the person who committed the crime charged against him. Larimore v. State, 317 Ark. 111, 877 S.W.2d 570 (1994).

Where the relevance of the evidence went to the issue of identification, as well as intent or lack or absence of mistake, the testimony of an earlier drug transaction was admissible under subsection (b) of this rule. Bragg v. State, 328 Ark. 613, 946 S.W.2d 654 (1997).

The similarities of the two rapes were not sufficient to support a finding that the witness's testimony was admissible pursuant to subsection (b) of this rule to identify the defendant. Akins v. State, 330 Ark. 228, 955 S.W.2d 483 (1997).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the testimony of a witness, who testified that the witness had encountered defendant while jogging on a trail at a lake one day before another female jogger running alone was allegedly attacked by defendant on the trail, as the testimony was relevant to the issues of identification, preparation, and absence of mistake. Furthermore, the probative value of the testimony was substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice. Turner v. State, 2018 Ark. App. 5, 538 S.W.3d 227 (2018).

Impeachment.

Circuit court did not err in finding that subsection (b) of this rule was not implicated by a line of questioning where the questions regarding the phone calls to the police were asked to impeach the witness's testimony that she would never call the police and that she had not known defendant to commit any crimes. Lewis v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 442, 528 S.W.3d 312 (2017).

Independent Relevance.

Although the State did not attempt to establish that defendant committed any crime in connection with the first fire that occurred, it was independently relevant under subsection (b) of this rule because it was a catalyst for defendant's statement that the fire should have "came down a little further" to reach his girlfriend's apartment, suggesting his desire that she be harmed. Gaines v. State, 340 Ark. 99, 8 S.W.3d 547 (2000).

Evidence suggesting or implying a kidnapping, namely evidence that defendant forced the victim into his truck at gun point and drove him to another location, was independently relevant to prove an element of the aggravated robbery charge. Smith v. State, 351 Ark. 468, 95 S.W.3d 801 (2003).

In a drug manufacturing case, the trial court did not err by allowing officers to testify solely for the purposes of establishing prior criminal acts other than the one for which defendant was being tried because defendant's 1998 judgment for possession of drug paraphernalia after he was first charged with manufacturing methamphetamine and his arrest for shoplifting methamphetamine precursors was independently relevant and sufficiently similar to the charged offense of manufacturing methamphetamine; similar past conduct supporting defendant's knowledge of the methamphetamine manufacturing process and his shoplifting of methamphetamine precursors was certainly probative of intent. Saul v. State, 365 Ark. 77, 225 S.W.3d 373 (2006).

Trial court committed reversible error in a capital murder and kidnapping case in allowing the State to present other bad acts evidence where the sister of one of the murder victims testified that her nephew had died mysteriously after he was involved in stealing defendant's marijuana plants and that she was afraid for her brother; because of the nature and prejudice attached to the sister's statement, the trial court abused its discretion when it failed to grant defendant's motion for mistrial. Green v. State, 365 Ark. 478, 231 S.W.3d 638 (2006).

In defendant's capital murder case, the court erred by denying a motion for a mistrial where it allowed defendant's children and wife to testify that defendant was not law abiding and had physically abused them; the control defendant had over his family was not independently relevant to whether he committed the crimes. Green v. State, 365 Ark. 478, 231 S.W.3d 638 (2006).

Where defendant was charged with raping and sexually assaulting his minor stepdaughter, evidence that he had threatened and assaulted his wife, the victim's mother, immediately before she contacted the police was relevant and admissible under subsection (b) of this rule because it showed that defendant was attempting to silence a witness and was thus independently relevant to prove the crimes charged. Rohrbach v. State, 374 Ark. 271, 287 S.W.3d 590 (2008).

Even if subsection (b) of this rule did apply, evidence that defendant possessed a .380 caliber handgun was certainly relevant in light of the fact that a .380 caliber shell hull was recovered at the scene of the crime and the trial court did not err in admitting the testimony. White v. State, 2009 Ark. 374, 326 S.W.3d 421 (2009).

Trial court properly admitted evidence of a prior murder five days earlier under subsection (b) of this rule, as a prior bad act, to establish that defendant had access to a .45 caliber pistol on the night he murdered the victim by showing that five days prior to that murder, he was present when the same caliber pistol was used to murder the first victim. The shell casings from both murders matched. Lockhart v. State, 2010 Ark. 278, 367 S.W.3d 530 (2010).

In defendant's death penalty case, the court properly allowed other acts evidence because defendant began shooting at the officers in order to avoid arrest; defendant's previous threats to shoot police officers if confronted were thus independently relevant as proof of his intent, plan, and state of mind. Lard v. State, 2014 Ark. 1, 431 S.W.3d 249, cert. denied, 574 U.S. 836, 135 S. Ct. 76, 190 L. Ed. 2d 67 (2014).

Circuit court did not commit prejudicial error, by admitting evidence regarding a probationer's arrest for public intoxication when the incident was not listed in the petition by the State of Arkansas as a basis for revocation of probation, because the challenged testimony by the probation officer was presented and allowed by the court merely to explain the circumstances leading up to the probation officer's assignment to the case, rather than as a basis for revocation. Seaton v. State, 2014 Ark. App. 296 (2014).

Trial court did not err in determining that a sufficient showing was made that evidence of defendant's flight was independently relevant to defendant's consciousness of guilt, as defendant knew of the victim's allegations against him and there had been a continual, active, and unsuccessful search for defendant for 11 months. Hunt v. State, 2015 Ark. App. 53, 454 S.W.3d 771 (2015).

Defendant's prior sexual acts with a physically disabled adult were admissible under the unique facts and very limited circumstances of the case because (1) the acts were independently relevant to show defendant's course of conduct to engage in oral sex with younger men and boys unable to resist, and (2) the admissibility of the evidence under Ark. R. Evid. 403 was weighed. Hortenberry v. State, 2017 Ark. 261, 526 S.W.3d 840 (2017).

Defendant's choking of another person for 15 seconds years prior was not independently relevant to show knowledge, intent, or absence of mistake; it was clear that the State used the prior act evidence to argue that because defendant had choked a previous girlfriend, he was acting in conformity with his prior bad acts and strangled the victim, which was strictly prohibited under subsection (b) of this rule. Gonzales v. State, 2019 Ark. App. 600, 589 S.W.3d 505 (2019).

Circuit court did not abuse its discretion in defendant's trial for second-degree murder when it admitted evidence that defendant had forged a check, making defendant the payee, because defendant's statement that he forged a check was an independently relevant fact tending to establish his knowledge, intent, or motive for murdering the victims. The forged check evidence was independently relevant to support the inference that defendant killed the victims because he owed one of the victims money. Watts v. State, 2020 Ark. App. 218, 600 S.W.3d 618 (2020).

Circuit court did not abuse its discretion in admitting a video of defendant with his gun in a retail store the same day he shot the victim where the firearm was never recovered, the video put him with a firearm with an extended clip that matched the description witnesses gave of the weapon he used to shoot the victim, and it showed that he was very comfortable with the gun, his friends were comfortable with him having it, and he was dressed in the same clothing he was wearing when he was arrested. Thus, the video was independently relevant under Ark. R. Evid. 404(b). Davis v. State, 2021 Ark. App. 104 (2021).

Injuries to Child.

If evidence of physical injuries to other children is admissible under subsection (b) of this rule, then evidence of mistreatment against the same child is certainly admissible under the same provision. Smith v. State, 90 Ark. App. 261, 205 S.W.3d 173 (2005).

In a domestic battering case, prior bad acts were introduced to establish that defendant had used physical abuse to punish his children for wrongdoing before the incident at issue, in which he allegedly physically abused the victim as punishment; the prior bad acts were relevant to show that defendant intentionally caused the injuries to the victim, and defendant failed to show how testimony about the prior bad acts was unfairly prejudicial. Geelhoed v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 96, 515 S.W.3d 139 (2017).

Instructions.

Where evidence was introduced that defendant had purchased stolen property in return for controlled substances on two prior occasions, which was admissible under this rule to show a system or design in the present case, the trial court, which gave a precautionary instruction at the end of the trial, was not also required to give the same precautionary instruction at the close of the state's case when the evidence was admitted. Vernon v. State, 2 Ark. App. 305, 621 S.W.2d 17 (1981).

It is the defendant's duty to request a curative instruction; his failure to ask for an admonition at trial cannot inure to his benefit on appeal. Hall v. State, 314 Ark. 402, 862 S.W.2d 268 (1993).

Intent.

Where the defendant was charged with possession with intent to deliver methamphetamine, evidence that he admitted to having sold drugs to other named persons was admissible to show his intent. Johnson v. State, 333 Ark. 673, 972 S.W.2d 935 (1998).

In a breach of contract case, the court properly allowed insurer to introduce evidence of homeowner's prior late payments and lapses of her homeowner's policies as it showed that homeowner made only one timely payment on her homeowner's policy between November 2000 and November 2001, allowed the policy to lapse twice before the final lapse in November 2001, and had a long history of late payments on her automobile policy; the evidence was admissible to show homeowner's intent to not make the November 2001 payment on time and to show that a mistake did not occur, and the evidence was not unfairly prejudicial. Jones v. Coker, 90 Ark. App. 151, 204 S.W.3d 554 (2005).

Evidence of subsequent drug sales was properly admitted at defendant's trial for possession of cocaine with the intent to deliver and possession of methamphetamine with the intent to deliver, both pursuant to § 5-64-401 [repealed], because, pursuant to subsection (b) of this rule and Ark. R. Evid. 403, the evidence was relevant to whether defendant intended to deliver the drugs, and was not unfairly prejudicial. Turner v. State, 2009 Ark. App. 822 (2009).

Defendant's acts committed against his half sibling were sufficiently similar to the acts committed against the victim to be admissible as probative of his intent because, in both instances, he initiated the assault by punching the women in the back of the head; he then choked each woman into unconsciousness and dragged her into a bedroom; when each woman regained consciousness, she was naked; although the victim confirmed that she was raped and the half sibling did not remember being raped, the half sibling did recall that defendant had made sexual advances toward her; and the evidence was independently relevant to show that defendant's acts with the victim were forcible as opposed to consensual. Harris v. State, 2018 Ark. App. 219, 547 S.W.3d 709 (2018).

In a first-degree murder case, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting evidence of the prior acts because defendant, the victim, and the victim's brother were all involved in the altercation at the club that resulted in the victim's death; and the evidence of prior violent acts by defendant toward the victim and the victim's brother was independently relevant to and probative of defendant's intent as well as his motive in pointing a gun at the victim and pulling the trigger. Jaquize v. State, 2019 Ark. 259, 584 S.W.3d 236 (2019).

Circuit court did not abuse its discretion by permitting a witness to testify pursuant to Ark. R. Evid. 404(b); her testimony demonstrated defendant's intent or absence of mistake, as both the witness and the victim testified that they were driving in the same area within one day of each other when an individual in a dark-colored sedan projected an object toward their vehicles that resulted in damage to their car. Allen v. State, 2021 Ark. App. 22, 617 S.W.3d 265 (2021).

Knowledge of Defendant.

In prosecution for theft of automobile by receiving where identification numbers had been removed from the vehicle, proof that police officers found other vehicles with identification numbers removed on defendant's premises was admissible as tending to show defendant's knowledge that the vehicle in question had been stolen. Reeves v. State, 263 Ark. 227, 564 S.W.2d 503, cert. denied, 439 U.S. 964, 99 S. Ct. 450, 58 L. Ed. 2d 422 (1978).

Where defendant was charged with the crime of theft by receiving, slides could be introduced to show other vehicles that had the V.I.N. numbers bored out and covered up, for the purpose of linking the defendant to the premises where these stolen vehicles were found and to prove the defendant's knowledge that the subject of the offense had been altered in a similar way to indicate the defendant's knowledge that the vehicle he possessed was stolen. Reeves v. Mabry, 480 F. Supp. 529 (W.D. Ark. 1979), aff'd, 615 F.2d 489 (8th Cir. 1980).

Testimony held relevant as tending to show appellant's knowledge of her own guilt, from which it could be inferred that she was the person who committed the crime. Morris v. State, 21 Ark. App. 228, 731 S.W.2d 230 (1987).

Where defendant, in a trial for manufacturing a Schedule II controlled substance, testified, as part of his affirmative defense, that he did not know how to manufacture drugs and had never done so either before or after his arrest, the state could rebut this testimony. Hill v. State, 314 Ark. 275, 862 S.W.2d 836 (1993).

Defendant's refusal to submit to a chemical test can be properly admitted as circumstantial evidence showing a knowledge or consciousness of guilt. Medlock v. State, 332 Ark. 106, 964 S.W.2d 196 (1998).

The similarities between an act charged and extrinsic acts admitted, under subsection (b) of this rule, to show the act charged was not performed inadvertently, accidentally, involuntarily, or without guilty knowledge need not be as extensive and striking as is required to show modus operandi. Barnes v. State, 346 Ark. 91, 55 S.W.3d 271, op. withdrawn, sub. op., 65 S.W.3d 389 (Ark. 2001).

Circuit court did not err in allowing chat transcripts into evidence because the transcripts were relevant to show that defendant did not mistakenly have child pornography on his computer; the transcripts reflected that defendant admitted possessing pictures of his daughters and of other young girls, and they were shocking and prejudicial, but they were also highly probative toward establishing defendant's intent and lack of mistake or accident. Whitney v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 341, 520 S.W.3d 326 (2017).

Modus Operandi.

In a prosecution for rape arising from an incident in which the defendant stopped the victim's car at night by following her and flashing a blue light, the trial court properly permitted introduction of another rape which followed a similar fact pattern as the evidence showed a modus operandi, especially as the rape kits from each crime supported an expert opinion that the source of the DNA was the same individual. Birmingham v. State, 342 Ark. 95, 27 S.W.3d 351 (2000).

In a prosecution for murder, the trial court erred in allowing a prior aggravated robbery to be introduced into evidence to show modus operandi, notwithstanding that the crimes took place close in time; the evidentiary similarities were not so unique that they independently identified the defendant as the perpetrator of both crimes. Williams v. State, 343 Ark. 591, 36 S.W.3d 324 (2001).

To offer evidence to prove modus operandi, two requirements must be met: (1) both acts must be committed with the same or strikingly similar methodology; and (2) the methodology must be so unique that both acts can be attributed to one individual. Barnes v. State, 346 Ark. 91, 55 S.W.3d 271, op. withdrawn, sub. op., 65 S.W.3d 389 (Ark. 2001).

Prisoner's argument, that the Arkansas Supreme Court improperly relied upon evidence of the prisoner's transgressions on another occasion with the date-rape victim as evidence of guilt in the present case, in violation of subsection (b) of this rule, was without basis as the evidence showed plan and modus operandi by demonstrating that the prisoner had gone through a similar sequence with the date-rape victim — taking the victim on a drive to another town, drugging the victim with Rohypnol such that the victim was unconscious, taking the victim to a bed and breakfast, and removing the victim's clothes. Sera v. Norris, 400 F.3d 538 (8th Cir.), cert. denied, 546 U.S. 915, 126 S. Ct. 283, 163 L. Ed. 2d 250 (2005).

In a sexual assault case, introduction of evidence that defendant had stopped another church member and persuaded that victim to go to an isolated area where unwanted sexual advances were made was relevant to show modus operandi and lack of consent by the second victim and, as such, did not violate Ark. R. Evid. 403. Davis v. State, 362 Ark. 34, 207 S.W.3d 474 (2005).

In defendant's trial for the stabbing and strangulation murder of an elderly woman, testimony that his girlfriend and co-defendant had stabbed defendant in a past domestic battery was properly excluded because it did not establish bias or modus operandi, and defendant offered no other evidence to suggest that the girlfriend had stabbed the victim. Lewis v. State, 2014 Ark. 23 (2014).

Motive.

In the prosecution of the defendant for the murder of his parents and his sister, the court properly admitted evidence of the defendant's party behavior, including his use of alcohol and marijuana, his engaging in sexual relations with a teenaged girl, and his unauthorized use of his father's credit card and business checks to obtain cash and goods, where the state argued that such evidence tended to prove the defendant's motive. Hodge v. State, 332 Ark. 377, 965 S.W.2d 766 (1998).

In a murder prosecution, evidence of the defendant's participation in the beating of another person for "snitching" on the defendant and the copерpetrators, was relevant to show as motive for kidnapping, beating, and killing the victim. McGehee v. State, 338 Ark. 152, 992 S.W.2d 110 (1999).

Where the purpose of evidence is to disclose a motive for a killing or attempted killing, anything that might have influenced the commission of the act may be shown. Gaines v. State, 340 Ark. 99, 8 S.W.3d 547 (2000).

In a murder prosecution in which the state's theory of the case was that the defendant sold drugs and that the victim's alleged theft of the defendant's drug money was the motive for the murder, it was not error to allow the introduction of evidence that the defendant sold drugs to a third party as his dealing drugs was a vital cog in the state's proof of motive. Bowen v. State, 342 Ark. 581, 30 S.W.3d 86 (2000).

In a prosecution for attempted capital murder of an inmate arising from his attack on a corrections officer with a table leg, the trial court properly allowed the introduction of evidence of the inmate's prior conviction for second degree murder arising from an incident in which he struck the victim on the head with a baseball bat since such evidence was relevant to show that the defendant knew that a club such as a baseball bat or table leg could cause death, and that he planned to use the same type of weapon to kill the officer as he did to kill his first victim. Jones v. State, 72 Ark. App. 271, 35 S.W.3d 345 (2000).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in allowing the admission of evidence into defendant's trial for murder that defendant was under investigation for the alleged abuse of the victim's sister when the evidence tended to show defendant's motive for not seeking medical attention for the victim sooner. Burley v. State, 348 Ark. 422, 73 S.W.3d 600 (2002).

In a trial for capital murder based on the killing of the victim during a robbery, trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting photographs showing the crime scene with the victim present or photographs of the autopsy performed on the victim as the photographs were relevant to the state's robbery theory and to show that the fatal gunshot was a contact wound from the rear; evidence that defendant was arrested at a nearby liquor store after having just purchased some wine was admissible to show defendant's motive was robbery. Matthews v. State, 352 Ark. 166, 99 S.W.3d 403 (2003).

If the evidence of another crime, wrong, or act is relevant to show that the offense of which the appellant is accused actually occurred and is not introduced merely to prove bad character, it will not be excluded; the test for establishing motive, intent, or plan as an exception under subsection (b) of this rule is whether the evidence of the other act has independent relevance. Anderson v. State, 357 Ark. 180, 163 S.W.3d 333 (2004).

Because defendant's drug use was probative of his motive in committing the offenses of first-degree murder and aggravated robbery in an attempt to get money to buy drugs, although the evidence was prejudicial, it was relevant to motive and intent and it was not more prejudicial than probative; thus, the evidence of defendant's drug use was admissible under subsection (b) of this rule. Hudson v. State, 85 Ark. App. 85, 146 S.W.3d 380 (2004).

Circuit court properly admitted the disputed evidence under subsection (b) of this rule to show appellant's motive, intent, plan, and knowledge where (1) there was evidence that, within days of appellant's arrest and his possession of a credit card and driver's license in the victim's name, someone went to three banks to withdraw money from the victim's account, using as identification a California driver's license and credit card bearing his name; (2) surveillance photographs at two of the locations apparently showed appellant to be the person, a determination that the jury could have made by comparing the photos with his actual person; and (3) the car in which appellant was riding contained checks bearing the victims' names, and one victim had reported fraudulent action on his account. Anderson v. State, 2009 Ark. App. 804, 372 S.W.3d 385 (2009).

Admitting evidence of defendant's gang affiliation was proper under Ark. R. Evid. 403 and 404(b) where the State alleged that defendant shot the victim because he disrespected the mother of a fellow Piru gang member, and thus evidence of defendant's gang affiliation was relevant to show motive and to rebut defendant's justification defense Gentry v. State, 2021 Ark. 26 (2021).

Objections.

Where prosecutor did not deliberately induce a prejudicial response and where defendant never requested a cautionary instruction or admonition to the jury, trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying defendant's motion for mistrial. Brown v. State, 320 Ark. 201, 895 S.W.2d 909 (1995).

In order to preserve an argument for review, an appellant must make a specific objection that apprises the trial court of the current argument, and may not change arguments on appeal. Foreman v. State, 328 Ark. 583, 945 S.W.2d 926 (1997).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in concluding that the parties reached no stipulation that no evidence of defendant's prior acts, wrongs, or crimes would be admitted because the prosecutor's statement during a pretrial conference that the state did not intend to offer any prior acts evidence did not constitute an agreement that no evidence of other crimes, wrongs, or acts would be offered. Davis v. State, 375 Ark. 368, 291 S.W.3d 164 (2009).

Other Acts.

Even though defendant was never charged for trying to start a fight outside a residence, that conduct was admissible under Ark. R. Evid. 404(b) to show the circumstances surrounding his earlier offense that night. Further, any error in allowing the officer to testify as to the second caller's report was harmless because the homeowner testified that defendant tried to fight people outside his residence and that he left when the police were called. Morgan v. State, 2021 Ark. App. 344, 632 S.W.3d 759 (2021).

The trial court, in a case alleging theft by receiving in violation of § 5-36-106 in which the defendant paid for goods with LSD and marijuana, properly admitted evidence that on two prior occasions the defendant had purchased property which he knew was stolen and made payment in marijuana or LSD, since, under subsection (b) of this rule, evidence of other acts under similar circumstances is admissible as tending to show a system, design or guilty knowledge in the case at hand where there is a question whether the crime was committed with guilty knowledge, and since the court gave cautionary instructions in which the jury was informed of the limited purpose for which the evidence might be considered. Vernon v. State, 2 Ark. App. 305, 621 S.W.2d 17 (1981).

In a prosecution for the sale of a controlled substance, LSD, it was not error for the trial court to permit an undercover police investigator to testify that the defendant sold the LSD to him and that on two other occasions the defendant sold marijuana to him, where all the meetings and transactions between the defendant and the undercover agent occurred during a 22-hour period, and the acts which occurred at those meetings were so interrelated by time and substance as to form one transaction. Setters v. State, 4 Ark. App. 46, 627 S.W.2d 263 (1982).

In murder prosecution, evidence concerning an incident earlier on the evening of the murder, in which defendant was observed by the owner of a drive-in to be pulling a gun on another female patron of the establishment was totally unrelated to the charge in question and was clearly inadmissible since it was not relevant to motive, opportunity, intent, preparation or planning of the murder. Rowdean v. State, 280 Ark. 146, 655 S.W.2d 413 (1983).

Where the record reflected sufficient evidence from which the jury could have found that defendant and accomplice planted an explosive in the victim's car which, when detonated, failed to kill her, this evidence was probative of their intent to commit murder since the bombing incident, which occurred five weeks before the actual murder, and was not so remote in time that the jury was prevented from connecting the incident to the murder. Accordingly, such evidence was properly admitted. Orsini v. State, 281 Ark. 348, 665 S.W.2d 245, cert. denied, 469 U.S. 847, 105 S. Ct. 162, 83 L. Ed. 2d 98 (1984).

In a prosecution for incest, the court did not err in denying defendant's request to admonish the jury to disregard his former girl friend's statement, on redirect examination, that he asked her to perform oral sex on him; the scope of redirect examination lies within the sound discretion of the trial court, and a witness should be allowed full opportunity to explain matters brought out on cross-examination, or to rebut any discrediting effect they may have had, or to correct any wrong impression that may have been created on cross-examination, even though the evidence brought out on redirect would not have been admissible on direct examination. Hall v. State, 11 Ark. App. 53, 666 S.W.2d 408 (1984).

In the prosecution of defendant for carnal abuse of the 11-year-old daughter of his live-in girlfriend, evidence that the defendant had made a sexual overture to the little girl in her mother's presence and that he had been sexually molesting her for three years was admissible under subsection (b) of this rule to show purpose, plan, and opportunity. Collins v. State, 11 Ark. App. 282, 669 S.W.2d 505 (1984).

In a prosecution for attempted murder, evidence that the defendant had an argument with another man earlier the same night, and that he waved a pistol around during that argument, should not have been admitted; it was unrelated to the shooting for which the defendant was charged and tried and was not relevant to the later incident. Lincoln v. State, 12 Ark. App. 46, 670 S.W.2d 819 (1984).

Evidence of prior sexual contact between the defendant stepfather and the stepdaughter rape victim was admissible as probative of both the victim's fear of the defendant and the fact that a rape could have occurred in the bathroom of a house which might have been full of people, after the accused merely shoved the victim to the floor. Sullivan v. State, 289 Ark. 323, 711 S.W.2d 469 (1986).

Subsection (b) of this rule means that if the evidence of prior bad acts is relevant to show the offense of which the defendant was accused occurred and is thus not being introduced to show only bad character, it will not be excluded; while the evidence may not be able to be tied specifically to proof of "motive, opportunity, intent, preparation, plan, knowledge, identity or absence of mistake or accident," if it has an independent relevancy it will be regarded as being, in the words of the rule, "such as" one of those permissible objects of proof. Sullivan v. State, 289 Ark. 323, 711 S.W.2d 469 (1986); Bonds v. State, 296 Ark. 1, 751 S.W.2d 339 (1988).

In trials for incest or carnal abuse, the state may show other acts of intercourse between the same parties to show the relation and intimacy of the parties, their disposition, and antecedent conduct toward each other. Free v. State, 19 Ark. App. 84, 717 S.W.2d 215 (1986), rev'd, 293 Ark. 65, 732 S.W.2d 452 (1987).

Testimony to show similar acts with the same child or other children in the same household was permitted since testimony of prior carnal abuse helps in proving the depraved sexual instinct of the accused. Free v. State, 293 Ark. 65, 732 S.W.2d 452 (1987).

Where no evidence of other alleged acts or misconduct was admitted into evidence, defendant's contention of error has no merit. Bussard v. State, 295 Ark. 72, 747 S.W.2d 71 (1988).

In trials for incest or carnal abuse, the state may show other acts of intercourse between the same parties. Such evidence helps in proving the sexual instinct of the accused, and is expressly applicable to cases of sodomy. Young v. State, 296 Ark. 394, 757 S.W.2d 544 (1988).

Evidence of other prior or similar transactions involving the offer and sale of securities is admissible to show habit, practice, or a common scheme, plan, and course of conduct, provided that the previous conduct is not too remote in time from the offense charged and is similar in nature to the offense charged. Hardcastle v. State, 25 Ark. App. 157, 755 S.W.2d 228 (1988).

Daughter's testimony that defendant had used physical force against his wife, threatened to kill her with a gun, and beat her clearly tended to show defendant's motive, intent or plan to kill his wife and was admissible. Starling v. State, 301 Ark. 603, 786 S.W.2d 114 (1990).

In light of the fact that defendant testified that his wife's shooting was accidental, trial court properly ruled that evidence of defendant's prior bad acts concerning mistreatment of his wife was relevant to show intent and lack of accident, and that any prejudice was outweighed by probative value. Huckabee v. State, 30 Ark. App. 82, 785 S.W.2d 223 (1990).

Where the defendant's proclivity toward unnatural sex acts was a material issue in the case, his niece's testimony of his incestuous relationship with her, reflected directly on the rape charge, on the defendant's unnatural sexual instinct of opportunity, plan or motive, and was admissible pursuant to this rule. Baldrige v. State, 32 Ark. App. 160, 798 S.W.2d 127 (1990).

When self-defense is clearly not applicable, excluding evidence of the victim's prior acts of violence is not an abuse of the trial court's discretion, and subsection (b) of this rule and Rule 405(b) do not apply. Heinze v. State, 309 Ark. 162, 827 S.W.2d 658 (1992).

State's attempts to elicit from witnesses evidence of defendant's drug and gang activity was relevant to explain the circumstances of the murder and showed both a motive and appellant's state of mind. Smith v. State, 310 Ark. 247, 837 S.W.2d 279 (1992).

Where the charges based on the possession of cocaine had not as yet gone to trial, and the trial court permitted the testimony to show concerted actions, or conspiracy, and to show substantial income was being generated by the enterprise, this evidence was relevant as to time, place and type of the activity where a continuing marketing of drugs was the issue, and its relevance was a matter for the discretion of the trial court. Hughey v. State, 310 Ark. 721, 840 S.W.2d 183 (1992).

Testimony of police officer stating, "We've had previous occasions and stuff . . ." and "We've had problems with him in the past . . ." were not sufficiently violative of subsection (b) of this rule to warrant a mistrial. Hall v. State, 314 Ark. 402, 862 S.W.2d 268 (1993).

Where witness' testimony regarding defendant's behavior before the murder described a prior bad act and involvement in "other crimes," the trial court violated Evid. Rule 403 and this rule by accepting this testimony in evidence; this evidence was not independently relevant and unfairly prejudicial in that this evidence of another crime, as accepted, proved the character of defendant and that he acted in conformity therewith in victim's homicide. Young v. State, 316 Ark. 225, 871 S.W.2d 373 (1994).

Where it is material whether a criminal defendant has intentionally burned a third person's property, proof that the third person has suffered prior unintentional fires is relevant to show the existence of yet another mistake or accident. Armstrong v. State, 45 Ark. App. 72, 871 S.W.2d 420 (1994).

There are two requirements for introducing evidence of an unrelated prior act to show a method of operation: (1) both acts must be committed with the same or strikingly similar methodology; and (2) the methodology must be so unique that both acts can be attributed to one individual. In sum, to be admissible, the two related acts must be so distinctive, so unique, and so uncommon that they become identifying, and they must be independently relevant to show a method of operation. Diffie v. State, 319 Ark. 669, 894 S.W.2d 564 (1995).

Testimony about prior, uncharged drug sales held admissible to negate defendant's testimony that the drugs found in a police search of his home had been "planted" there by some other person. Neal v. State, 320 Ark. 489, 898 S.W.2d 440 (1995).

The court erred in admitting into evidence a previous violent incident involving the defendant where there was no logical connection between the previous acts and the crime charged; the error was harmless where there was other admissible evidence of defendant's guilt. Abernathy v. State, 325 Ark. 61, 925 S.W.2d 380 (1996).

Witness's testimony that she worked with defendants in manufacturing methamphetamine two months before they were arrested for drug-related charges was admissible as independently relevant to the issues of whether defendants were actually manufacturing methamphetamine, were using certain ordinary household items in the manufacturing process, merely possessed the drug or possessed it with intent to deliver, and whether the items found in the house could be used as drug paraphernalia. Owens v. State, 325 Ark. 110, 926 S.W.2d 650 (1996).

Evidence of defendant's extramarital affair held admissible where he testified himself that he wanted to have the affair and that he had no problem with extramarital affairs if the timing were right. Stephens v. State, 328 Ark. 81, 941 S.W.2d 411 (1997).

The evidence of defendant's incarceration at a halfway house and escape was probative of his motive, plan, and intent to murder his wife. Regalado v. State, 331 Ark. 326, 961 S.W.2d 739 (1998).

In a prosecution for conspiracy to deliver a controlled substance and possession of a controlled substance with intent to deliver, the court properly permitted the introduction of evidence that the defendant sold a controlled substance to one witness and that she concealed a controlled substance during the time her husband was under investigation. Fultz v. State, 333 Ark. 586, 972 S.W.2d 222 (1998).

In a tort action for inter alia, assault and battery, the court properly permitted evidence of a prior violent incident involving the defendant since that incident and the incident at issue involved very similar methods and specific threats to inflict physical harm upon both victims and, ultimately, to kill them. Edwards v. Stills, 335 Ark. 470, 984 S.W.2d 366 (1998).

In an action against an attorney for breach of contract in his representation of a client, the court properly excluded testimony that the attorney had previously wrongfully refused to return money to a person with whom he had a fiduciary relationship, notwithstanding the assertion that such allegedly similar conduct was admissible to prove intent or motive, since there was no temporal nexus linking the events and the events were clearly unrelated. Potter v. Magee, 61 Ark. App. 112, 964 S.W.2d 412 (1998).

Proof of modus operandi is not the same as proof of an exception to other bad acts, for which the test is whether the evidence of the other act has independent relevance as provided in subsection (b) of this rule. Haire v. State, 340 Ark. 11, 8 S.W.3d 468 (2000).

Evidence of drug use and drug dealing was clearly intermingled and contemporaneous with the arson, culminating in the commission of the crimes charged, and as such, it was part of the res gestae and admissible as an exception to this rule. Gaines v. State, 340 Ark. 99, 8 S.W.3d 547 (2000).

Because defendant stated that he hurt other people and questioned why such acts had not been brought up, defendant opened the door to the prosecutor's cross-examination concerning the prior bad acts, and the trial court did not err in denying defendant's objection to the questioning. Newman v. State, No. CR 02-811, 2003 Ark. LEXIS 295 (Ark. May 22, 2003).

In a capital murder trial, evidence that appellant had hit the victim on prior occasions was admissible given the fact that the victim sustained injuries during her murder that were similar to those she had previously suffered at the hands of appellant. Barrett v. State, 354 Ark. 187, 119 S.W.3d 485 (2003).

In a criminal prosecution for rape, the circuit judge erred by admitting hearsay statements that defendant was accused of rape in Alabama without direct proof of the offense. Hanlin v. State, 356 Ark. 516, 157 S.W.3d 181 (2004).

Trial court properly admitted evidence of other acts of violence by defendant on the victim to show an absence of mistake on the part of defendant; evidence of prior violence proved defendant acted with a purposeful intent as he had previously exhibited violence toward the victim, and the fact that the previous acts were not ones in which he struck her with a vehicle was irrelevant because, under case law, the previous acts did not have to be identical, just similar. Morgan v. State, 359 Ark. 168, 195 S.W.3d 889 (2004).

Evidence that defendant abused his adopted daughter and niece, both close familial relationships, showed a proclivity for that kind of sexual contact and would have been relevant to the alleged rape of defendant's son; although the specific acts complained of were not identical, allegations of vaginal touching were admissible in cases of vaginal or oral penetration to show a defendant's attraction to the characteristics of young children. Swift v. State, 363 Ark. 496, 215 S.W.3d 619 (2005).

Trial court properly admitted testimony by victim's roommate that defendant had fired a handgun into a couch two days before the murder as: (1) defendant claimed that his shooting of the victim was accidental; (2) defendant's intentional discharge of the murder weapon was relevant to show lack of mistake or accident; and (3) considered in conjunction with the testimony that defendant uttered a contingent threat against the victim's life on the night before her murder, the shot into the couch was probative of defendant's motive and intent to commit the murder. Tate v. State, 367 Ark. 576, 242 S.W.3d 254 (2006).

Defendant's conviction of delivery of methamphetamine in violation of § 5-64-401 [repealed] was reversed because the trial court erred by admitting evidence of a prior controlled drug buy under subsection (b) of this rule that occurred approximately two weeks before the instant crime because the court could not perceive of any reason for the admission of the prior crime other than to show that he was a drug dealer likely to have sold drugs again on the particular date for which he was tried. The record did not show that identity was an issue at trial, and it showed that the controlled buys were fairly routine drug transactions and failed to show a unique methodology; defendant's intent was not at issue. Phavixay v. State, 373 Ark. 168, 282 S.W.3d 795 (2008).

Where defendant was charged with raping and sexually assaulting his minor stepdaughter, evidence that he had threatened and assaulted his wife, the victim's mother, was relevant and admissible under subsection (b) of this rule because the threat of physical violence provided defendant with the opportunity to molest the young girl without her mother's intervention. Rohrbach v. State, 374 Ark. 271, 287 S.W.3d 590 (2008).

During a client's action against an attorney, which alleged that the attorney demanded sexual favors as a condition of his continued legal representation of the client, the trial court did not err in allowing the client to introduce evidence of the attorney's relationship with another woman; the evidence was admissible under subsection (b) of this rule to show a plan or scheme. Rees v. Smith, 2009 Ark. 169, 301 S.W.3d 467 (2009).

In defendant's criminal trial involving allegations and convictions for capital murder and kidnapping, the admission of testimony from a witness about a 27-year-old incident was admissible under subsection (b) of this rule because the similarities between the alleged prior act and the charged offense tended to show defendant's intent to commit the charged offense. The similarities between the two acts were clearly probative of defendant's intent, motive, and plan, as theorized by the state's charges and the probative value of the witness testimony was not outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice. Osburn v. State, 2009 Ark. 390, 326 S.W.3d 771 (2009), cert. denied, 559 U.S. 938, 130 S. Ct. 1522, 176 L. Ed. 2d 113 (2010).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in permitting witnesses to testify that defendant threatened his wife on the day before and the day upon which he admittedly murdered her because the testimony permitted the jury to conclude that defendant's actions on the day before the shooting and the day of the shooting were purposeful and deliberate, and the testimony further showed motive, opportunity, preparation, plan, knowledge, and absence of mistake or accident. Davis v. State, 2009 Ark. 478, 348 S.W.3d 553 (2009).

Evidence that defendant raped a prior victim under similar circumstances was independently relevant in light of his argument that his April 2004 sexual encounter with the victim was consensual, and the circuit judge did not abuse his discretion by admitting the evidence of defendant's rape of the victim under subsection (b) of this rule. Rounsaville v. State, 2009 Ark. 479, 346 S.W.3d 289 (2009).

Defendant's conviction for capital-felony murder was appropriate because evidence that defendant sold drugs during the particular time frame surrounding the victim's murder was not offered to prove defendant's character or to show that he acted in conformity therewith; such testimony was an integral and interwoven part of the circumstances surrounding the murder and robbery and explained the scope and nature of the interactions between defendant and the victim. Because testimony that defendant sold drugs constituted res gestae evidence, there was no abuse of discretion in the circuit court's admission of such evidence under subsection (b) of this rule. Dixon v. State, 2011 Ark. 450, 385 S.W.3d 164 (2011).

Circuit court did not err in allowing the state to present evidence during his trial of the rape committed against one victim in her home on April 21, 2008, some six months prior to similar crimes committed against another victim on October 20, 2008. While the first victim's testimony might have been prejudicial, as most evidence was under subsection (b) of this rule, it was also independently relevant to defendant's intent, scheme, or plan, and its probative value was not outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice. Vance v. State, 2011 Ark. 243, 383 S.W.3d 317 (2011).

Defendant's rape conviction was proper because the circuit court did not err when it allowed the state to introduce evidence of other sexual activity with the victim prior and subsequent to the offense dates of which he was charged under subsection (b) of this rule. The evidence not only corroborated the victim's testimony of what occurred in Greene County during the years relevant to the charge, but also demonstrated defendant's proclivity for sex with her and his opportunity, intent, and plan. Chunestudy v. State, 2012 Ark. 222, 408 S.W.3d 55 (2012).

Court properly allowed testimony regarding defendant's other acts because the testimony of the State's experts revealing the other bad acts committed by defendant was offered to support the opinions reached by the State's experts by apprising the jury of the factual basis underlying the diagnosis of antisocial personality disorder. Lard v. State, 2014 Ark. 1, 431 S.W.3d 249, cert. denied, 574 U.S. 836, 135 S. Ct. 76, 190 L. Ed. 2d 67 (2014).

Because there was no question as to the identity of the accused, the victim, or any of the key witnesses, and defendant did not show how the witness's modus operandi in the other alleged bad acts, which purportedly occurred after the August 2009 shooting incident, was relevant to any material issue in the current capital murder case, the circuit court did not abuse its discretion in excluding the evidence of the witness's other bad acts. Allen v. State, 2013 Ark. 396 (2013).

There was no error in the admission of testimony by others regarding defendant's inappropriate sexual actions with them, as it illustrated defendant's depraved sexual instinct for minors and his method for finding the opportunity to make sexual contact with them. Jeffries v. State, 2014 Ark. 239, 434 S.W.3d 889 (2014).

Trial court did not err in admitting a witness's testimony that he and defendant had smoked marijuana together, as it was relevant to the issue of whether or not he was going to rob the marijuana man. Perry v. State, 2014 Ark. 406 (2014).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in allowing evidence of subsequent shoplifting incidents where the evidence demonstrated defendant's intent, motive, opportunity, knowledge, and plan to shoplift from the retailer, and was sufficiently similar to the instance at issue to be independently relevant. Brasuell v. State, 2015 Ark. App. 559, 472 S.W.3d 499 (2015).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion by excluding bad acts of the victim's mother under subsection (b) of this rule because it was character evidence that was prohibited by this rule and by case law; defendant, who was convicted of severely injuring an infant, wanted to use the evidence to show that the victim's mother had a propensity for violent behavior against the injured child and was therefore inclined to physically harm the child the day he received emergency medical treatment. Washington v. State, 2016 Ark. App. 565, 506 S.W.3d 893 (2016).

For "reverse 404(b)" evidence to be admissible, the alleged prior wrongs by someone other than the targeted defendant must be so closely connected in time and method that the evidence can cast doubt on whether the defendant committed the crime. Washington v. State, 2016 Ark. App. 565, 506 S.W.3d 893 (2016).

Circuit court did not abuse its discretion by admitting the evidence of the conditions of the home where defendant had lived with the children, as the neglect occurred during the same time period that he was allegedly committing multiple rapes against each child, and the evidence demonstrated an established pattern of defendant's intentional neglect of his victims' well-being; evidence that defendant raped one child in exchange for food and that the children were kept in a locked room strongly linked the evidence to the charged crime. Dolson v. State, 2018 Ark. App. 440, 558 S.W.3d 899 (2018).

In a rape case, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in permitting testimony under subsection (b) of this rule regarding two prior alleged rapes of two other victims. The trial court found enough similarities between the incidents to make the testimony relevant as evidence of defendant's intent, motive, or plan; and while the evidence might have been prejudicial, its probative value was not outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice under Ark. R. Evid. 403. Carter v. State, 2019 Ark. App. 57, 568 S.W.3d 788 (2019).

In a prosecution of defendant for aggravated residential burglary and manslaughter, testimony about defendant slapping the victim was relevant and probative to support the State's evidence that appellant had the motive to commit the crimes and that he was, in fact, the perpetrator. The circuit court did not abuse its wide discretion in finding this to be admissible and finding its probative value not to be outweighed by unfair prejudice. Huskey v. State, 2019 Ark. App. 113, 571 S.W.3d 533 (2019).

In a rape and sexual indecency with a minor case, the trial court's denial of defendant's motion for mistrial was proper after an investigator had referred to "other victims" while testifying; the brief remark was neither repeated nor solicited by the State and the trial court gave a proper admonition to the jury and specifically asked the jurors whether any of them were unable to disregard the comment. Walker v. State, 2019 Ark. App. 130, 571 S.W.3d 70 (2019).

Circuit court properly allowed a witness to testify that she had been raped by defendant because the rapes and batteries described by the victim and the witness were sufficiently similar to make the witness's testimony relevant evidence of defendant's intent, motive, or plan; although defendant's identity was not at issue, that did not mean the only purpose for the evidence was to demonstrate defendant was a bad person. Fowlkes v. State, 2020 Ark. 56, 592 S.W.3d 702 (2020).

Other Crimes.

In a prosecution for delivery of marijuana the trial court improperly admitted evidence of two other instances of criminal conduct which occurred at a later time and for which the defendant was not charged, where the state's purpose in offering the evidence was simply to prove that defendant had made the delivery with which he was charged. Rios v. State, 262 Ark. 407, 557 S.W.2d 198 (1977).

Evidence that a second child had had both his arms broken was properly admissible against husband and wife charged with murder by child abuse. Limber v. State, 264 Ark. 479, 572 S.W.2d 402 (1978).

Where the state proved actual delivery, by testimony that the witness bought 16 bags of marijuana from the defendant, there could be no question about the defendant's intent; in such a situation the state could not create a fictitious issue of intent by charging possession with intent to deliver and use that device as a basis for proving prior sales of a controlled substance by the accused. Moser v. State, 266 Ark. 200, 583 S.W.2d 15 (1979).

In allowing testimony covering prior dealings involving stock transactions defendant had with other individuals, the court has two criteria as a guide: the previous conduct must not be too remote from the offense charged and it must be similar in nature to the offense charged; when such evidence is admitted it must be accompanied by a limiting instruction. Smith v. State, 266 Ark. 861, 587 S.W.2d 50 (Ct. App. 1979), cert. denied, 445 U.S. 905, 100 S. Ct. 1082, 63 L. Ed. 2d 321 (1980).

This rule should be interpreted to exclude evidence of other offenses when its only purpose is to show the accused's character or some general propensity he might have to commit the particular sort of crime in question; it should not be interpreted to exclude evidence of other offenses when that evidence is probative of the accused's participation in the particular crime charged and if it is probative of his participation the only remaining question should be whether it is so prejudicial that it should be excluded because the prejudice brought about by exposition of other offenses is not sufficiently balanced by the probative value of the evidence on the facts sought to be proved. Price v. State, 267 Ark. 1172, 599 S.W.2d 394 (Ct. App. 1980).

Trial judge has wide discretion in deciding admissibility of evidence of other crimes and he will not be reversed on appeal unless he has abused such discretion. Price v. State, 268 Ark. 535, 597 S.W.2d 598 (1980); Bennett v. State, 297 Ark. 115, 759 S.W.2d 799 (1988).

Evidence of other crimes is admissible under subsection (b) of this rule if the evidence is independently relevant, and probative value of the evidence outweighs the dangers of unfair prejudice. Price v. State, 268 Ark. 535, 597 S.W.2d 598 (1980); Golden v. State, 10 Ark. App. 362, 664 S.W.2d 496 (1984), overruled, Bledsoe v. State, 344 Ark. 86, 39 S.W.3d 760 (2001); Smith v. State, 19 Ark. App. 188, 718 S.W.2d 475 (1986), overruled as stated in Velcoff v. State, 2006 Ark. App. LEXIS 729 (Ark. Ct. App. Nov. 8, 2006). But see Brown v. State, 63 Ark. App. 38, 972 S.W.2d 956 (1998); Morris v. State, 21 Ark. App. 228, 731 S.W.2d 230 (1987); Carter v. State, 295 Ark. 218, 748 S.W.2d 127 (1988); Bennett v. State, 297 Ark. 115, 759 S.W.2d 799 (1988); Henry v. State, 309 Ark. 1, 828 S.W.2d 346 (1992); Houston v. State, 41 Ark. App. 67, 848 S.W.2d 430 (1993).

Where policeman was murdered after being seen stopping van and automobile which were implicated in earlier burglary of clothing store, and circumstantial evidence was amply sufficient to connect defendant with the burglary, proof of the burglary was clearly admissible under this rule as being relevant to prove both the motive and identity of the murderers. Cassell v. State, 273 Ark. 59, 616 S.W.2d 485 (1981).

Where there was testimony that murder defendant had made harassing telephone calls to the victim's wife and had mailed a package to victim containing a bullet with the victim's name on it, such evidence was admissible under this rule both to show motive and to support identification of defendant by the victim's wife. Pitts v. State, 273 Ark. 220, 617 S.W.2d 849 (1981).

Where defendant testified that he had done nothing illegal prior to the date in question, it was proper for the prosecution, under subsection (b) of Rule 608, to ask defendant if he was guilty of possessing marijuana with intent to deliver on a previous date, since specific instances of the conduct of the witness may be inquired into on cross-examination for the purpose of exposing or supporting his credibility, other than conviction of a crime; however, since the defendant did not admit guilt of the crime asked about and since there was no other evidence to show it, subsection (b) of this rule did not apply to this question with respect to the defendant's prior knowledge and involvement with marijuana. Spicer v. State, 2 Ark. App. 325, 621 S.W.2d 235 (1981).

In a prosecution for first-degree murder, the trial court did not err in admitting evidence of defendant's involvement in a stolen car ring since such evidence was relevant to establish defendant's motive to kill the victim in order to prevent discovery of defendant's complicity in the car theft ring. Edgemon v. State, 275 Ark. 313, 630 S.W.2d 26 (1982).

Evidence of other crimes may not be introduced merely for the purpose of showing the accused to be a man of bad character likely to commit the crime charged. Ford v. State, 276 Ark. 98, 633 S.W.2d 3, cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1022, 103 S. Ct. 389, 74 L. Ed. 2d 519 (1982).

Where, in a prosecution for the murder of a police officer, the evidence showed that defendant had been serving time for particular convictions prior to his escape, it was proper to refer to them in the murder prosecution in order to show the defendant's motive or intent in trying to avoid apprehension for the other crimes and the escape. Ford v. State, 276 Ark. 98, 633 S.W.2d 3, cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1022, 103 S. Ct. 389, 74 L. Ed. 2d 519 (1982).

Where particular crimes were admissible under subsection (b) of this rule for the purpose of showing intent, it was not error to mention them in the closing argument. Ford v. State, 276 Ark. 98, 633 S.W.2d 3, cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1022, 103 S. Ct. 389, 74 L. Ed. 2d 519 (1982).

The words in § 5-13-201(a)(3), "under circumstances manifesting extreme indifference to the value of human life," are defined in the nature of a culpable mental state and therefore are akin to "intent," for the proof of which evidence of other offenses is admissible under subsection (b) of this rule. State v. Vowell, 276 Ark. 258, 634 S.W.2d 118 (1982).

Where the evidence indicated the defendant was drinking most of the day and was driving in an intoxicated condition when his automobile crossed the center line of a highway and collided with the victim's vehicle, and the defendant took the stand testifying on direct examination that the wreck was an accident caused by a mechanical malfunction of his automobile, a cross-examination by the state, regarding the defendant's three convictions within the past 26 months for driving while under the influence of intoxicants and regarding the revocation of the defendant's license, was not improper. State v. Vowell, 276 Ark. 258, 634 S.W.2d 118 (1982).

Although the general rule is that evidence of other crimes by the accused, not charged in the indictment or information and not a part of the same transaction, is not admissible at the trial of the accused, evidence of other criminal activity is admissible under the res gestae exception to the general rule to establish the facts and circumstances surrounding the alleged commission of the offense; accordingly, evidence concerning defendant's glue-sniffing during crime was properly admitted in prosecution for aggravated robbery and kidnapping. Bell v. State, 6 Ark. App. 388, 644 S.W.2d 601 (1982).

In capital felony murder prosecution, admission of evidence that two defendants were involved in a robbery committed using similar methods just prior to the offense on trial did not violate the rule against admitting evidence of prior bad acts, where jury was admonished in accordance with subsection (b) of this rule and it was defense cross-examination of witness which brought the evidence into trial. Clines v. State, 280 Ark. 77, 656 S.W.2d 684 (1983), cert. denied, 465 U.S. 1051, 104 S. Ct. 1328, 79 L. Ed. 2d 723 (1984), cert. denied sub nom. Clines v. Norris, 512 U.S. 1272, 115 S. Ct. 17, 129 L. Ed. 2d 916 (1994).

Where the state never attempted to show defendant committed the burglary by physically entering the home and stealing property but, rather, the state's case revealed that defendant was an accomplice in the burglary because he planned it, the trial court correctly allowed the state's witnesses, who were involved or had knowledge of the burglary, to testify that defendant's role in a series of other burglaries was to plan the burglaries — not to physically enter the respective houses; the other crimes evidence also showed knowledge and lack of mistake. Bradley v. State, 8 Ark. App. 300, 651 S.W.2d 113 (1983).

Evidence of other crimes has no place in a trial and the admission of such evidence is cause for a new trial. Lackey v. State, 283 Ark. 150, 671 S.W.2d 757 (1984).

In an assault and battery action, the trial court properly prohibited the plaintiff from introducing rapes, for which the defendant had been arrested but not convicted, as evidence of the defendant's violent character. Boren v. Qualls, 284 Ark. 65, 680 S.W.2d 82 (1984).

Subsection (b) of this rule only codified the law in existence before the rule was adopted, and the rule clearly permits evidence of other criminal activity committed by a defendant if it has relevancy independent of a mere showing that the defendant is a bad character. Collins v. State, 11 Ark. App. 282, 669 S.W.2d 505 (1984).

Where the defendant denied that he had any knowledge of the sale of the Toyota truck, testimony concerning other crimes committed by the defendant and his accomplice was admissible under subsection (b) of this rule as evidence of intent and plan. Walker v. State, 13 Ark. App. 124, 680 S.W.2d 915 (1984).

In a prosecution for multiple counts of robbery and burglary, evidence of the defendant's possession of other stolen property was properly admitted to impeach the defendant where the entire defense theory was that he was being "set up" by prosecution witnesses. McFarland v. State, 284 Ark. 533, 684 S.W.2d 233 (1985).

Reference to another burglary should only have been allowed if it were so intertwined factually with the burglary case before the court that exclusion of any reference to it would be confusing to the jury or unnecessarily hamper the state's proof of the charged crime. It cannot be said that, merely because they occurred on the same night and involved items of similar nature, that the state should be allowed to freely bring in all the evidence it could find on the other burglary to implicate the defendant. Evans v. State, 287 Ark. 136, 697 S.W.2d 879 (1985), superseded by statute as stated in Walker v. State, 304 Ark. 402A, 305 Ark. 402A, 304 Ark. 393, 805 S.W.2d 80 (1991).

Where the state was arguing that the motive for killing the officer was to avoid discovery of the burglary, while defendant was contending he was only a witness to the shooting, evidence of the burglary was admissible to show motive and intent; additionally, the time of the burglary and the murder was probative of an ongoing, uninterrupted course of conduct. Shelton v. State, 287 Ark. 322, 699 S.W.2d 728 (1985).

In prosecution for incest, proof of defendant's prior incestuous acts with the same person was admissible. Johnson v. State, 288 Ark. 101, 702 S.W.2d 2 (1986).

In prosecution for murder, the testimony of the record clerks at the hospital visited by the victim about the prior beating of the victim by the defendant was admissible, as it reflected a specific propensity to commit the particular sort of crime in question with the same person, and the probative value of the evidence outweighed any prejudice. White v. State, 290 Ark. 130, 717 S.W.2d 784 (1986).

The list of exceptions under subsection (b) of this rule is exemplary only and not exhaustive; accordingly, in prosecution for murder, testimony of the record clerks at the hospitals visited by the victim about a prior beating of the victim by the defendant was admissible so long as it was for some purpose other than to prove the character of the defendant in order to show he acted in conformity therewith. White v. State, 290 Ark. 130, 717 S.W.2d 784 (1986).

Where the defendant was charged with rape of his stepdaughter, and on direct examination he testified he had not raped her or any of the other children who had been living with him and their now deceased mother, it was not error to permit the prosecution to present rebuttal testimony from another, younger stepdaughter that she too had been raped by the defendant. McFadden v. State, 290 Ark. 177, 717 S.W.2d 812 (1986).

While subsection (b) of this rule precludes the introduction of evidence of another crime by the state just for the purpose of showing that the defendant was a person of bad character, "or to show that he acted in conformity therewith," this rule does not preclude evidence showing the commission of another crime if there is some other, proper purpose for its admission into evidence. McFadden v. State, 290 Ark. 177, 717 S.W.2d 812 (1986).

Where, in prosecution for rape of his nine-year-old nephew, the defendant claimed that it was the victim who initiated any sexual contact, the victim's testimony about the instances of anal sex was admissible to show that the defendant's participation was not just passive acceptance of the victim's advances. Free v. State, 19 Ark. App. 84, 717 S.W.2d 215 (1986), rev'd, 293 Ark. 65, 732 S.W.2d 452 (1987).

Under subsection (b) of this rule, there was no error in allowing the introduction of evidence of the sale of marijuana during the week preceding arrest for possession with intent to deliver. Vanderkamp v. State, 19 Ark. App. 361, 721 S.W.2d 680 (1986).

This rule permits the admissibility of other criminal activity if it is independently relevant to a material point in the case and not just to prove the defendant is of bad character. Henderson v. State, 291 Ark. 138, 722 S.W.2d 842 (1987), cert. denied, 493 U.S. 896, 110 S. Ct. 247, 107 L. Ed. 2d 197 (1989).

While subsection (b) of this rule does not mention modus operandi as one of the legitimate bases for introducing evidence of other crimes, the rule contemplates that the list of exceptions is not exclusive, for it discusses admission of such evidence for "other purposes, such as" the ones listed. Evidence of a crime other than the one charged may be admitted to show the defendant committed the crime charged where both involved the same unique method of operation. Thrash v. State, 291 Ark. 575, 726 S.W.2d 283 (1987).

If those portions of the confession relating to the commission of extraneous offenses are offered under subsection (b) of this rule, it is for the trial court to determine first whether the evidence is genuinely relevant to some independent issue in the case, as opposed to proving only that the defendant is a "bad man," if the independent relevancy of this evidence is established, the trial court is then obliged to scrutinize the evidence under URE 403. Tharp v. State, 20 Ark. App. 93, 724 S.W.2d 191 (1987).

Evidence concerning an offense committed after the one for which the defendant was charged was held not logically relevant to some independent issue in the case and not to fall within the exceptions of subsection (b) of this rule. Tharp v. State, 20 Ark. App. 93, 724 S.W.2d 191 (1987). But see Turner v. State, 59 Ark. App. 249, 956 S.W.2d 870 (1997).

To be admissible under subsection (b) of this rule, the evidence must be independently relevant and its probative value must not be substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice. Crutchfield v. State, 25 Ark. App. 227, 763 S.W.2d 94 (1988).

Evidence concerning planning of the convenience store robberies was admissible because it showed defendant's participation in a continuing course of conduct or plan to commit an aggravated robbery. Beebe v. State, 301 Ark. 430, 784 S.W.2d 765 (1990).

In the context of incest and child abuse cases, the question of the admissibility of evidence of prior offenses between different individuals must be determined on a case-by-case basis. Proper admission of this testimony requires a fact-intensive inquiry conducted by the trial court, keeping in mind the purpose of subsection (b) of this rule, the rationale behind case law which has allowed the admission of such testimony, and the considerations required by Rule 403. This approach is preferable to a rigid, mechanistic rule which would automatically exclude such evidence regardless of its relevancy, its purpose, or its probative value. Baldrige v. State, 32 Ark. App. 160, 798 S.W.2d 127 (1990).

All of the circumstances connected with a particular crime may be shown, even if those circumstances would constitute a separate crime. Collins v. State, 304 Ark. 587, 804 S.W.2d 680 (1991).

Proof of aggravated burglary, committed by the defendant an hour after the offense he was on trial for, was clearly admissible as being relevant to prove both his intent and plan, as well as his identity, in the commission of the first incident and because it was so factually intertwined with the present offense, although the circumstantial evidence was amply sufficient to connect the defendant with the first incident. Gillie v. State, 305 Ark. 296, 808 S.W.2d 320 (1991).

While evidence of an attempted robbery conviction may not have been admissible for impeachment purposes in the guilt phase of a capital murder trial, it was admissible in the penalty phase to prove the aggravating circumstance found in § 5-4-604(3). Whitmore v. Lockhart, 834 F. Supp. 1105 (E.D. Ark. 1992), aff'd, 8 F.3d 614 (8th Cir. 1993).

Prior drug sale occurring only the day before the drug charge transaction was admissible, where no actual delivery was shown to have occurred on the date of the drug transaction with which defendant was charged, and defendant's intent to deliver was in issue. Crawford v. State, 308 Ark. 218, 822 S.W.2d 386 (1992).

Girls' testimony concerning defendant's sexual acts with them was admissible, in rape case involving other victims, under subsection (b) of this rule to show motive, intent, or plan; the evidence was especially probative since defendant denied having any sexual contact with the victims, blamed another person, and stated that it was physically impossible for him to have sexual intercourse. Morgan v. State, 308 Ark. 627, 826 S.W.2d 271 (1992).

Whether the probative value of evidence of other crimes outweighs the prejudice is a matter left to the sound discretion of the trial judge. Henry v. State, 309 Ark. 1, 828 S.W.2d 346 (1992).

Where evidence of other crimes was offered in a conspiracy case, the proof was admissible under subsection (b) of this rule since it was not evidence of another crime, but rather was offered as direct evidence of the fact in issue, regular drug sales, and not circumstantial evidence requiring an inference as to the character of the accused. Henry v. State, 309 Ark. 1, 828 S.W.2d 346 (1992).

Evidence of other crimes is independently relevant, if it tends to prove some material point rather than merely trying to prove the defendant is a criminal. Henry v. State, 309 Ark. 1, 828 S.W.2d 346 (1992); McDonald v. State, 37 Ark. App. 61, 824 S.W.2d 396 (1992).

Where the trial court sustained an objection to statements referring to charges pending in another state in the prosecutor's opening statement, no further comment was made, and the trial judge instructed the jurors that statements of counsel not supported by evidence were not to be treated as evidence and any such statements should be disregarded, the admonition was adequate and defendant's motion for mistrial was properly denied. Miller v. State, 309 Ark. 117, 827 S.W.2d 149 (1992).

Indictment remark mentioning a prior warrant was insufficient to cause a mistrial. Michael v. State, 309 Ark. 151, 828 S.W.2d 351 (1992).

Under subsection (b) of this rule, testimony of similar acts of sexual abuse with other children will be allowed when it tends to show a proclivity to the same behavior. Fry v. State, 309 Ark. 316, 829 S.W.2d 415 (1992).

Where testimony regarding other crimes was relevant as to defendant's intent and state of mind and as an explanation for his behavior in committing the offenses in question, its independent relevance was negligible where defendant's actions could be explained through the police officers' testimony, and admission of victim's testimony was improper. Haynes v. State, 309 Ark. 583, 832 S.W.2d 479 (1992).

Testimony of female rape victim of defendant that defendant had started forcing her to have sexual intercourse with him, when she was about ten years old, and this continued until three to four months before trial, was relevant to prove the charge of rape of female rape victim's brother by defendant and its probative value far outweighed any prejudice it may have had. Jarrett v. State, 310 Ark. 358, 833 S.W.2d 779 (1992).

The defendant waived any objection he may have had to any testimony of other crimes when he introduced the transcript of an accomplice's testimony taken at the accomplice's trial, which contained references to the other crime. McDonald v. State, 37 Ark. App. 61, 824 S.W.2d 396 (1992).

Testimony of prior marijuana use and sale, as reflective of the accused's predisposition toward committing the crime of delivery of a controlled substance, is generally admissible to rebut the defense of entrapment, and is relevant on a material point in issue. Kellogg v. State, 37 Ark. App. 162, 827 S.W.2d 166 (1992).

Testimony of one victim was admissible as evidence that defendant followed a plan, or modus operandi, with another; modus operandi evidence is admissible in rape cases to prove a common plan. Dillon v. State, 311 Ark. 529, 844 S.W.2d 944 (1993).

In a trial for delivery of cocaine, where defendant had several other cases pending in which he had been charged with past drug dealings with witness, subsection (b) of this rule permitted the prosecutor to ask the witness about these earlier events in order to establish defendant as the perpetrator of the subject crime. Smith v. State, 314 Ark. 241, 862 S.W.2d 234 (1993).

Where witness testified on direct examination that defendant was not a current drug user, but was asked on cross-examination whether he was aware that defendant had a previous conviction for possession of cocaine, that evidence of his prior drug conviction had no independent relevance, and the court should have declared a mistrial. Value v. State, 48 Ark. App. 70, 891 S.W.2d 798 (1994).

Witness' brief reference to an arrest report was harmless error. Aaron v. State, 319 Ark. 320, 891 S.W.2d 364 (1995).

Evidence that defendant may have used an ice pick in a prior assault on her ex-husband, sought to be admitted in defendant's trial for stabbing victim some twenty-two times in various parts of her body, was not permitted under subsection (b) of this rule, there were no specific threats to him or other evidence of an intent or plan to inflict harm or take his life. Admission of this testimony was prejudicial error which mandated a new trial. Diffie v. State, 319 Ark. 669, 894 S.W.2d 564 (1995).

Although subsection (b) of this rule does not mention modus operandi as one of the bases for introducing evidence of other crimes, the list of exceptions contained in the rule is not exclusive. Kennedy v. State, 49 Ark. App. 20, 894 S.W.2d 952 (1995).

Where defendant and victim had had conversations prior to the victim's slaying which tended to provide a motive for the murder, the fact that the conversations came about in the context of an attempted drug deal was not grounds for excluding testimony about the proposed transaction. Johnson v. State, 326 Ark. 430, 934 S.W.2d 179 (1996), cert. denied, 520 U.S. 1242, 117 S. Ct. 1848, 137 L. Ed. 2d 1051 (1997).

Evidence that was seized six months after the act for which defendant was being tried, and that lacked any temporal or logical link to the current charge, held inadmissible. Warren v. State, 59 Ark. App. 155, 954 S.W.2d 298 (1997).

In a conspiracy case, evidence of an accused's prior crimes may be admissible under the rule as direct evidence of the accused's participation in the conspiracy. Fultz v. State, 333 Ark. 586, 972 S.W.2d 222 (1998).

The court did not abuse its discretion when it allowed the state to question a defense character witness regarding her knowledge of a prior conviction of the defendant for which she was incarcerated more than 10 years earlier. Smith v. State, 334 Ark. 190, 974 S.W.2d 427 (1998).

Trial court properly admitted evidence of defendant's prior crimes because they fell within the exception to subsection (b) of this rule in that they were independently relevant as proof of knowledge and intent to commit an offense; further, in determining whether an object is drug paraphernalia under § 5-64-101(v) (now 5-64-101(14)), courts are directed to consider prior convictions and expert testimony concerning its use. Cluck v. State, 365 Ark. 166, 226 S.W.3d 780 (2006).

Defendant's convictions for possession of drug paraphernalia with intent to manufacture methamphetamine and possession of pseudoephedrine were upheld as the trial court properly allowed the state to introduce evidence of defendant's prior convictions because they concerned his culpability and intent; further, those convictions were independently relevant because they made it more probable that defendant understood the components of methamphetamine and the manufacturing process, that he knew that the items in his possession were illegal in that quantity, and that he knew the items were used for manufacturing methamphetamine. Nelson v. State, 365 Ark. 314, 229 S.W.3d 35 (2006).

In a rape case, evidence that defendant had confessed to a similar crime in a presentence report was properly admitted under subsection (b) of this rule; although prejudice resulted from the admission of the evidence, it was probative to show defendant's motive, intent, preparation, plan, and scheme under Ark. R. Evid. 403. Evidence showing defendant's address as a correctional institution was also admissible. Creed v. State, 372 Ark. 221, 273 S.W.3d 494, cert. denied, 555 U.S. 823, 129 S. Ct. 130, 172 L. Ed. 2d 37 (2008).

There was no abuse of discretion in allowing the state to present witness testimony at defendant's trial for rape, kidnapping and residential burglary concerning his two previous convictions for residential burglary and his escape attempt, because the testimony showing that defendant unlawfully entered the apartments of two other women in similar circumstances within two months of the instant crime was independently relevant to rebut his claim that his encounter with the victim was consensual, and the flight of a person charged with commission of a crime had some evidentiary value on the question of his probable guilt. McCullough v. State, 2009 Ark. 134, 298 S.W.3d 452 (2009), writ denied, 2020 Ark. 49 (2020).

Where defendant was convicted of delivery of methamphetamine in violation of § 5-64-401 [repealed], his judgment was reversed on direct appeal because the trial court erred in admitting evidence of a prior crime pursuant to subsection (b) of this rule. Phavixay v. State, 2009 Ark. 452, 352 S.W.3d 311 (2009).

When someone driving appellant's car fled from an officer and ran into the woods, items used to manufacture methamphetamine were found in the car and appellant's girlfriend testified that he was driving; a jury found appellant guilty of manufacturing methamphetamine, possessing drug paraphernalia with intent to manufacture methamphetamine, and fleeing. He was not entitled to postconviction relief under Ark. R. Crim. P. 37.1 based on counsel's failure to object to evidence that appellant and his girlfriend had been convicted of other crimes related to methamphetamine; the evidence was admissible under subsection (b) of this rule, as it was independently relevant to the issue of the identity of the driver and his relationship to the passenger. Britt v. State, 2009 Ark. 569, 349 S.W.3d 290 (2009).

Defendant's convictions for two counts of delivery of cocaine and one count of delivery of a narcotic drug were proper because the trial court did not abuse its discretion in failing to grant a mistrial, nor was there manifest prejudice to defendant. The state had a right to impeach the credibility of a witness with prior convictions under Ark. R. Evid. 609 and the trial court did not permit the State to inquire about the underlying facts of those convictions, under subsection (b) of this rule. Porter v. State, 2011 Ark. App. 545 (2011).

After defendant was convicted of second-degree sexual assault, a woman was properly allowed to testify at the sentencing hearing that he had raped her nine years earlier, as other crime evidence that might not be admissible at the guilt phase under subsection (b) of this rule was admissible at sentencing under § 16-97-103(5) as relevant evidence of defendant's character that the jury could consider in determining the appropriate sentence. McElroy v. State, 2011 Ark. App. 533, 385 S.W.3d 406 (2011).

Court did not abuse its discretion in admitting evidence of a homicide that occurred approximately fifteen hours after defendant attempted to murder a victim because the shell casing and bullet at the homicide matched those found at the scene of the earlier attempted murder. Evidence of the subsequent homicide showed design, intent, identity, and absence of mistake or accident in the attempted murder. Wells v. State, 2012 Ark. App. 596, 424 S.W.3d 378 (2012).

Evidence of defendant's prior crimes involving the use of a knife was properly admitted because the jury could infer that, based on defendant's skill with a knife, the wounds were intentionally inflicted in the manner they were, and in the place they were, for the purpose of causing death. Stevenson v. State, 2013 Ark. 100, 426 S.W.3d 416 (2013).

Evidence of a similar plan involving defendant and another stealing checks from vehicles and using them to purchase expensive electronics at Walmart and returning the items for cash was properly admitted, as the crime was virtually the same method of operation and committed very close in time to the crime at issue. Todd v. State, 2016 Ark. App. 280, 494 S.W.3d 444 (2016).

Circuit court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the Ark. R. Evid. 404(b) evidence where the facts and circumstances surrounding the three Texas burglaries were independently relevant to the Arkansas crimes for which defendant was charged and were very similar to the facts and circumstances surrounding the Arkansas crimes. Hubbard v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 93, 513 S.W.3d 289 (2017).

Circuit court did not abuse its discretion by admitting evidence of appellant's prior guilty pleas for residential burglary; before introducing the prior convictions, the circuit court cautioned the jury that the evidence of the other crimes was not to be considered to establish particular traits of character that appellant may have had, nor was it to be considered to show that he acted similarly on the day of the intrusion, and the circuit court instructed the jury that the evidence was merely offered to show evidence of motive, opportunity, intent, identity, and absence of mistake. Brigance v.

While defendant's prior crime was temporally removed from the current charges by more than 17 years, the prior crime and current charges were very similar in character, as defendant was accused of sexually abusing girls who were approximately six years old by committing very similar sexual acts, and both times, he had a close family or domestic relationship with the girls and committed the acts at home; the circuit court did not abuse its discretion in finding the prior conviction admissible under subsection (b) of this rule. Mondy v. State, 2019 Ark. App. 290, 577 S.W.3d 460 (2019).

Propriety of calling a witness for impeachment purposes, if error, was harmless as prejudice was not shown; defendant opened the door to questions about his prior conviction and testified at length about the issue, the State's questions were significantly less prejudicial than defendant's own testimony about the prior events, and the child victim testified at length about defendant's abuse, such that the evidence of his guilt was overwhelming. Mondy v. State, 2019 Ark. App. 290, 577 S.W.3d 460 (2019).

Pedophile Exception.

All victims testified that defendant first forced them to perform oral sex through playing certain games that he had created, the victims were similar in age when the sexual abuse happened, and they were members of defendant's family; prior case law allowed testimony regarding alleged prior sexual conduct even when a significant time gap existed, and the testimony was relevant to demonstrate defendant's intent and was not too remote in time form the rape perpetrated on the child victim. Warner v. State, 2021 Ark. 215 (2021).

Evidence of other crimes is inadmissible character evidence under subsection (b) of this rule except in cases of child abuse or incest, where such evidence helps to prove the depraved sexual instinct of the accused. Greenlee v. State, 318 Ark. 191, 884 S.W.2d 947 (1994); Thompson v. State, 322 Ark. 586, 910 S.W.2d 694 (1995).

Permitting an eight-year-old child to develop a severe case of trench foot is a form of neglect by the parent and that neglect of a child's physical needs is necessarily a form of abuse; hence, a father's perpetration of child abuse by neglect is relevant to a case of sexual abuse against that same child, when both forms of abuse are occurring at the same time. Such evidence is pertinent in that it establishes an intentional pattern of abusive behavior on the part of the parent toward the child — the first by neglecting her basic hygienic needs and the second by soliciting her to engage in sexual activity. A contemptible lack of caring for a child's essential healthcare needs easily inter-twines with sexual abuse of the child. Both forms of abuse are intentional and evidence lack of care, concern, and respect for the child's well-being and admissible under Evid. Rule 403 and subsection (b) of this rule. Lindsey v. State, 319 Ark. 132, 890 S.W.2d 584 (1994).

Evidence of prior sexual acts by the accused with the victim or another child in the same household is admissible under a pedophile exception to show a proclivity toward a specific act with a person or class of persons with whom the accused has an intimate relationship; such evidence helps to prove the depraved sexual instinct of the accused. Clark v. State, 323 Ark. 211, 913 S.W.2d 297 (1996).

In trials for incest or carnal abuse, the state may show other acts of intercourse between the same parties. Mosley v. State, 325 Ark. 469, 929 S.W.2d 693 (1996).

Evidence of prior conviction of a sexual offense involving his stepdaughter held admissible in defendant's trial for rape of his daughter, given the similarity of the prior conviction to the current charges and the parental relationship of the defendant with the two victims. Mosley v. State, 325 Ark. 469, 929 S.W.2d 693 (1996).

When the charge concerns the sexual abuse of a child, evidence of other crimes or wrongs such as sexual abuse of that child or other children is admissible to show motive, intent, or plan, pursuant to this rule; the same evidence can be used for each of several counts. Douthitt v. State, 326 Ark. 794, 935 S.W.2d 241 (1996); Dougan v. State, 330 Ark. 827, 957 S.W.2d 182 (1997).

Where defendant was accused of sexually assaulting his fourteen-year-old sister-in-law, the testimony regarding his sexual abuse of his former stepchild, who was fourteen years old at the time of trial, was admissible. Munson v. State, 331 Ark. 41, 959 S.W.2d 391 (1998).

The pedophile exception only requires that the victims have lived in the same household as the defendant; the exception does not require that the victims live together in the same household. Munson v. State, 331 Ark. 41, 959 S.W.2d 391 (1998).

Evidence of a subsequent act of sexual misconduct with a child other than the minor victim of the alleged rape held admissible even though there was a passage of two years between the time of the abuse of the victim and the abuse of the visiting witness, where both acts occurred in defendant's home. Hernandez v. State, 331 Ark. 301, 962 S.W.2d 756 (1998).

In a prosecution for sexual abuse of 2 minor girls, evidence of the abuse of each girl was independently admissible with regard to the other. Dillard v. State, 333 Ark. 418, 971 S.W.2d 764 (1998).

In the prosecution of the defendant for the rape of his daughter, testimony of his children and stepchildren that he had also abused them was admissible under the pedophile exception to the rule. Taylor v. State, 334 Ark. 339, 974 S.W.2d 454 (1998).

In the prosecution of the defendant for raping his 13-year-old daughter, the daughter was properly permitted, pursuant to the pedophile exception, to testify to prior acts of sexual abuse by the defendant which occurred up to two and one-half years prior to the charged offense. Hyatt v. State, 63 Ark. App. 114, 975 S.W.2d 443 (1998).

In a prosecution of the defendant for the rape of two of his stepgranddaughters, it was not error for the court to allow each victim to testify about their experiences, notwithstanding the assertion that it was improper for the jury to use this testimony as to the other's count of rape, as the evidence involved similar crimes against children who were in the defendant's care or household at the time that the incidents occurred. Brewer v. State, 68 Ark. App. 216, 6 S.W.3d 124 (1999).

In a prosecution for rape of a five year old boy, two other boys were properly allowed to testify that the defendant had sexually abused them, even though they did not live in the same household; there were numerous similarities between the earlier instances of sexual abuse and the rape at issue and, therefore, the testimony of the two boys was relevant to show the defendant's proclivity toward sexual acts with children, as well as his motive, intent, or plan. Berger v. State, 343 Ark. 413, 36 S.W.3d 286 (2001).

Where the rape counts that were the subject of the appeal involved one victim and the violation-of-a-minor charges involved two other girls, the trial court properly allowed the testimony of the two other girls under the so-called "pedophile exception" to subsection (b) of this rule to show motive, intent, or plan and to help prove the depraved sexual instinct of the accused. Butler v. State, 349 Ark. 252, 82 S.W.3d 152 (2002).

The testimony of a student witness who alleged that defendant teacher made sexual advances toward her was admissible under the pedophile exception, subsection (b) of this rule, which permitted evidence of defendant's sexual acts with other children because it was helpful in showing a proclivity toward a specific act with a person or class of persons with whom the accused had an intimate relationship, and applied in classroom situations. Garner v. State, 81 Ark. App. 309, 101 S.W.3d 857 (2003).

In a sexual abuse case, the state properly presented evidence of the "game" defendant played with his family in which he twisted the nipples of members of his family; the victim's testimony that she suffered an injury as a result of the "game" and sought medical treatment was consistent with other testimony that defendant inappropriately touched the victims.

Defendant's daughter's statements about father's abuse were admissible under subsection (b) of this rule where, although the specific acts complained of by daughter and victim were not identical, the victim and daughter were similar in age when the abuse happened, both girls were living with defendant and looked on him as a father figure at the time of the abuse and, in each case, defendant attempted to rationalize his behavior in some way; thus, the daughter's testimony was relevant and not too remote in time from the abuse of the victim. Flanery v. State, 362 Ark. 311, 208 S.W.3d 187 (2005).

Although subdivision (b) of this rule generally prohibits the use of other crimes as character evidence, the so-called "pedophile exception" to this rule allows such evidence in child abuse and incest cases because it helps to prove the depraved sexual instinct of the accused; this evidence is particularly probative when it involves the same victim and the same course of conduct. Davidson v. State, 363 Ark. 86, 210 S.W.3d 887 (2005).

Trial court properly admitted an appellant's prior conviction for sexually abusing his step-granddaughter under the pedophile exception to subsection (b) of this rule where he failed to include in the record either a petition to seal, order to seal, or notice of expungement, as required by § 16-90-902 [repealed], or a court order of expungement, as required by former § 16-93-303(b)(1) (amended 1995). Davidson v. State, 363 Ark. 86, 210 S.W.3d 887 (2005).

Trial court did not err in admitting defendant's prior convictions of rape and sexual assault of his step-daughter and her friend as it went to the depraved sexual instinct of the accused. Anderson v. State, 93 Ark. App. 454, 220 S.W.3d 225 (2005).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting a witness's testimony that she observed defendant lying on his back with an unidentified little girl straddling his pelvic area under the pedophile exception where (1) there were similarities between defendant's actions toward the victim and the little girl; (2) what the witness saw could have been interpreted as a rubbing against the body of another to attain sexual gratification; and (3) defendant's conduct in frequently inviting young girls to his home while he was there alone, and his conduct at the church lock-in, was evidence that defendant was attracted to the physical characteristics of young girls; the witness's testimony was also relevant to show defendant's plan to meet children at church, to invite them back to his home, to keep them returning by offering them treats and entertainment, and then molest them. Hamm v. State, 365 Ark. 647, 232 S.W.3d 463 (2006).

Trial court properly admitted evidence of defendant having an erection during supervised visitation with the victims, his young daughters, during his rape trial because the evidence fell under the pedophile exception as: (1) evidence of defendant's arousal while watching the victims perform a dance routine demonstrated a "particular proclivity" toward young girls, particularly the victims, thereby establishing the "intimate relationship" between the perpetrator and the victim; (2) the fact that defendant got an erection demonstrated an unnatural sexual attraction towards his daughters and, therefore, there was a "sufficient degree of similarity" between defendant's arousal at seeing the victims and his sexual conduct of having intercourse with them; and (3) the evidence was relevant under Ark. R. Evid. 403 because it demonstrated why visitation with the victims stopped shortly thereafter. White v. State, 367 Ark. 595, 242 S.W.3d 240 (2006), cert. denied, 550 U.S. 904, 127 S. Ct. 2114, 167 L. Ed. 2d 815 (2007).

In a rape trial, evidence of other sexual contact between defendant and a child was permitted under subsection (b) of this rule; the child testified that she was having sex with defendant several times per week in 2004. White v. State, 370 Ark. 284, 259 S.W.3d 410 (2007).

In defendant's rape case, the court properly allowed evidence of a prior sexual incident between defendant and the child victim because the prior conduct and the conduct leading to the charged offense were similar; on both occasions, defendant had the victim touch his penis. The fact that during the later incident defendant had his pants down and the victim performed oral sex on him was a distinction without a difference. Bell v. State, 371 Ark. 375, 266 S.W.3d 696 (2007).

In a child rape case, a court properly allowed evidence of defendant's prior sexual acts with children because in both cases, defendant occupied a caregiver role for the victims, the sexual act alleged, oral sex, was identical, and the evidence of defendant's prior sexual acts with his daughters tended to show his depraved sexual instinct. The similarities between defendant's admitted abuse of his daughters and the alleged rape of the victim, tended to show defendant's intent to commit the charged offense, and the evidence that defendant forced his daughter to perform oral sex on him tended to corroborate the victim's testimony that he forced her to perform oral sex. Lamb v. State, 372 Ark. 277, 275 S.W.3d 144 (2008).

In defendant's rape case, the court properly admitted evidence that defendant had touched them in a sexual manner because the relationship between defendant and his daughter, the witness, was clearly an intimate one, and the conduct about which she testified was sufficiently similar to the charged conduct to warrant application of the exception. Both girls were under defendant's care at the time of the abuse, the victim viewed defendant as her father, and both girls were between the ages of six and nine at the time of the start of the abuse. Strong v. State, 372 Ark. 404, 277 S.W.3d 159 (2008).

In defendant's trial for raping and abusing his minor stepdaughter, the testimony of defendant's daughter that her father had similarly abused her when she was a young girl was admissible under the pedophile exception to subsection (b) of this rule because the evidence was helpful in showing defendant's proclivity toward specific acts with a person or class of persons with whom defendant had an intimate relationship, because the daughter's testimony helped prove defendant's depraved sexual instinct, and because the probative value of the daughter's testimony outweighed its prejudice. Rohrbach v. State, 374 Ark. 271, 287 S.W.3d 590 (2008).

Under subsection (b) of this rule, a convicted pedophile was properly permitted to testify at defendant's trial on charges of raping and sexually assaulting four of his minor step-grandchildren that defendant had molested him when he was a boy even though the witness was not a member of defendant's family or household because the state successfully established the existence of an intimate relationship between defendant and the witness where the witness testified that he viewed defendant as a role model, that they referred to each other as father and son, and that defendant purchased things for him, took him out to eat, and gave him special attention. Allen v. State, 374 Ark. 309, 287 S.W.3d 579 (2008).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in permitting a 30-year-old witness to testify at defendant's trial regarding the sexual abuse committed against him by defendant when he was between the ages of 13 and 18 under the pedophile exception to subsection (b) of this rule despite the passage of years because testimony regarding defendant's prior sexual conduct was permissible even when a significant time gap existed. Allen v. State, 374 Ark. 309, 287 S.W.3d 579 (2008).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in permitting a witness who was a convicted pedophile to testify at defendant's trial regarding the sexual abuse committed against him when he was a child by defendant under the pedophile exception to subsection (b) of this rule even though the abuse was never substantiated and defendant was never charged for that conduct because subsection (b) made no distinction between substantiated and unsubstantiated conduct or between charged and uncharged conduct. Allen v. State, 374 Ark. 309, 287 S.W.3d 579 (2008).

In a child rape case, defendant's half-brother's testimony regarding possibly consensual oral sex that occurred 17 years previously should have been excluded under subsection (b) of this rule as too dissimilar in character and temporally removed from the crimes charged, which involved repeated anal sex with a girl from ages four to eight. The pedophile exception did not apply. Efird v. State, 102 Ark. App. 110, 282 S.W.3d 282 (2008).

Evidence that a victim, who was a 14-year-old student of defendant, touched defendant on her breast was admissible in defendant's trial for first-degree sexual assault under § 5-14-124 because it was independently relevant and fell within the pedophile exception to this rule; the incidents corroborated the victim's testimony and established that defendant had a proclivity to engage in sexual acts with minors with whom she had an intimate relationship. Bobo v. State, 102 Ark. App. 329, 285 S.W.3d 270 (2008).

During defendant's trial for the rape of his nine-year-old stepdaughter, the trial court correctly applied the pedophile exception to subsection (b) of this rule when admitting testimony from another young woman, who testified that she had been molested by digital penetration by defendant when she was a child, because the similarities were significant and probative on the issue of defendant's deviate sexual impulses; the probative value of the evidence was not substantially outweighed by any danger of unfair prejudice. Eubanks v. State, 2009 Ark. 170, 303 S.W.3d 450 (2009).

During defendant's trial for child rape, the circuit court did not err by admitting the testimony from an adult witness who was allegedly raped by defendant as a child to prove defendant's propensity to engage in deviate sexual activity with children; the testimony was properly admitted under the "pedophile exception" to subsection (b) of this rule. The witness' testimony established a sufficient degree of similarity between the acts he alleged and the conduct with which defendant was charged in the present case. Kelley v. State, 2009 Ark. 389, 327 S.W.3d 373 (2009).

During defendant's trial for child rape, the circuit court abused its discretion by admitting the documentary evidence showing defendant's two prior convictions for indecency with a child; there was no evidence that would have allowed the circuit court to conduct a pedophile-exception analysis. However, the admission of this evidence in violation of this rule was harmless because the evidence against defendant was overwhelming and the testimony of the child rape victim was sufficient to sustain his conviction. Kelley v. State, 2009 Ark. 389, 327 S.W.3d 373 (2009).

Admitting all twelve photographs into evidence was not an abuse of discretion where the individual pictures dispelled any notion that defendant photographed innocent activity and the testimony of the other victims was admissible under the pedophile exception of subsection (b) of this rule. Mason v. State, 330 S.W.3d 445 (Ark. Ct. App. 2009).

Circuit court did not err in allowing a prior victim and his mother to testify as the testimony was admissible under the pedophile exception; both witnesses testified that the prior victim spent a lot of time with appellant while his wife served as babysitter and that the prior victim often slept over at appellant's home. The prior victim's testimony regarding the sexual abuse was similar in nature to the testimony of the victim, both victims were young boys at the time of the abuse, both testified that appellant was often intoxicated at the time of the abuse, and both were subjected to sexual abuse while staying in appellant's home. Bryant v. State, 2010 Ark. 7, 377 S.W.3d 152 (2010).

Defendant's convictions for rape as a habitual offender were appropriate because the testimony of a 26-year-old female (witness) whose mother was married to defendant when the witness was a child was permissible under subsection (b) of this rule since the testimony was probative of defendant's depraved sexual instinct toward young girls living in his home. The witness testified that the abuse stopped when she was 12 or 13, which was approximately 13 or 14 years prior to trial, and there was no error in the finding that defendant's acts committed against the witness were not too remote in time. Price v. State, 2010 Ark. App. 111, 377 S.W.3d 324 (2010).

Evidence of defendant's prior conviction for violation of a minor in the first degree and the victim's testimony was properly admitted under the pedophile exception to subsection (b) of this rule in defendant's trial on two counts of rape of a nine-year-old girl because the relationship between the victim of the prior conviction, defendant's biological daughter, and defendant was an intimate relationship, both victims alleged identical sexual acts committed by defendant, both victims were under defendant's care at the time of the abuse, and both victims were adolescent girls when the abuse occurred. Butler v. State, 2010 Ark. 259 (2010).

During defendant's trial for rape of a minor and sexual assault of a minor, the court did not err under the "pedophile exception" to subsection (b) of this rule in allowing the testimony of a woman who stated that he raped her 42 years earlier because the similarity requirement had been met; both victims were around five years of age when the abuse began. Morrison v. State, 2011 Ark. App. 290 (2011).

Babysitting a victim satisfies the "intimate relationship" criterion for the "pedophile exception" to subsection (b) of this rule. Morrison v. State, 2011 Ark. App. 290 (2011).

Another juvenile's testimony about a similar long-term pattern of defendant's inappropriate touching of the juvenile was admissible during defendant's trial on sexual assault charges, as the pedophile exception to subsection (b) of this rule allowed admission of evidence of similar acts with the same or other children to show a proclivity for a specific act. Hendrix v. State, 2011 Ark. 122 (2011).

Testimony of defendant's 12- or 13-year-old daughter that defendant asked her to show him her breasts was properly excluded as: (1) the 12-year-old victim alleged that defendant touched her breasts, buttocks, and vagina; (2) the daughter's testimony was sufficiently similar to fall within the pedophile exception to subsection (b) of this rule as it signified defendant's sexual interest in the bodies of young teen or pre-teen girls; and (3) the testimony had independent relevance for Ark. R. Evid. 403 purposes. Stewart v. State, 2011 Ark. App. 658, 386 S.W.3d 583 (2011).

Defendant failed to show that the trial court erred in allowing the state to introduce evidence of uncharged conduct under subsection (b) of this rule, because with the exception of the complainant's testimony about being afraid to tell anyone about defendant's sexual advances since defendant had been abusive toward her mother, which did not fall under the pedophile exception, all of the other evidence of which defendant complained fit squarely within the pedophile exception—other sexual acts with the complainant or her sister, who both were living with defendant at the time the conduct occurred. Elliott v. State, 2012 Ark. App. 126, 389 S.W.3d 100 (2012).

Because the Arkansas Supreme Court recognized a “pedophile exception” to subsection (b) of this rule, defendant's counsel was not ineffective for failing to make a constitutional challenge to the use of the pedophile exception during defendant's rape trial. Eubanks v. State, 2012 Ark. 142 (2012).

Defendant's rape conviction was proper because the victim's testimony fell squarely under the pedophile exception to subsection (b) of this rule. The relationship between the victim and her father was clearly an intimate one and the similar acts she described were exactly of the same nature as the acts that occurred in the time frame listed in the information; it was an ongoing sexual relationship and the evidence was not more prejudicial than probative. Chunestudy v. State, 2012 Ark. 222, 408 S.W.3d 55 (2012).

At defendant's jury trial for two counts of rape arising from the sexual assault of his stepdaughter, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting evidence of conduct that led to his prior conviction for endangering the welfare of a minor in connection with allegations made by the second victim — defendant's other stepdaughter. The evidence was admissible under subdivision (b) of this rule, “the pedophile exception,” because it showed that defendant had a proclivity to engage in sexual intercourse with children in his care. Ball v. State, 2012 Ark. App. 665 (2012).

Victim's testimony relating to the abuse defendant inflicted upon her was properly admitted at trial as the acts were closely related in time and occurred in a continuous six-year period, per subsection (b) of this rule. Mashburn v. State, 2012 Ark. App. 621 (2012).

In the trial of defendant for the rape of his stepdaughter, the trial judge did not err in allowing the testimony of two witnesses who had been raped by defendant 20 years earlier because they were similar in age and circumstances to the stepdaughter. The evidence was probative because it showed defendant's depraved sexual instinct for raping minor girls and the circumstances of how he came in contact with the girls, and its probative value outweighed any alleged prejudice. Brown v. State, 2012 Ark. 399, 424 S.W.3d 288 (2012).

Trial court properly allowed defendant's niece to testify about defendant's abusive conduct toward her under the pedophile exception to subsection (b) of this rule because defendant had an “intimate relationship” with her and the circumstances surrounding defendant's sexual contact with respect to both the niece and his daughter were sufficiently similar. Jones v. State, 2012 Ark. App. 636 (2012).

In the trial of defendant for the rape of his stepdaughter, the trial judge was not required to recuse herself because she had been a deputy prosecutor in a case 20 years earlier in which defendant was charged with raping a 13-year-old girl who was set to testify as a witness in the present case under subsection (b) of this rule, absent any showing of actual bias. Brown v. State, 2012 Ark. 399, 424 S.W.3d 288 (2012).

In defendant's prosecution for rape of a physically helpless victim who was unable to consent, defendant's prior conviction of lewd molestation of a child was admissible under the pedophile exception to subsection (b) of this rule as probative of defendant's motive, intent, and plan to assault the victim because, in each case, defendant placed himself in a position of authority, isolated the victim from parents or other adults while engaging the victim in a favored activity, removed the victim's pants, performed oral sex on the victim, and then told the victim not to tell and, in both cases, defendant cultivated a relationship close in acquaintance based on common interests and enjoyed a position of authority over the victims. The differences in age and gender between the two victims did not render the pedophile exception inapplicable; nor did the passage of 17 years between the events render the earlier event too remote to be admissible under Rule 404(b) because defendant's prior conviction, despite its age, tended to prove defendant's depraved sexual instinct. Craig v. State, 2012 Ark. 387, 424 S.W.3d 264 (2012).

At defendant's trial for rape, the circuit court did not abuse its discretion in admitting testimony from three witnesses who had prior sexual contact with defendant pursuant to the pedophile exception to subsection (b) of this rule. Like the victim, the witnesses were young children at the time they had an intimate relationship with defendant. Fields v. State, 2012 Ark. 353 (2012).

In a case in which defendant was convicted of raping two sisters, who were minors at the time of the crimes, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the testimony of a third sister, who testified about a past act that defendant had committed against her. It was not significant that defendant proceeded further with the two victims because there was a sufficient degree of similarity in his conduct. Webb v. State, 2012 Ark. App. 495 (2012).

Although there was no allegation that appellant had sexual intercourse with the victim, because his first instances of abuse against his daughter involved touching her breast and privates and not sexual intercourse, his conduct was substantially similar to the abuse perpetrated against the victim and was admissible under the pedophile exception to subdivision (b) of this rule. Baker v. State, 2013 Ark. App. 281 (2013).

There were sufficient similarities between the current rape offense and defendant's 1998 Missouri conviction for first-degree child molestation to satisfy the pedophile exception and to admit evidence of the prior molestation conviction because both victims were his minor stepdaughters at the time of rapes with whom he had lived; he touched the breasts and privates of both victims with his hands; he created opportunities for the abuse by waiting until the victims' mothers were away and by intentionally isolating them from their siblings; and he threatened both victims not to report the abuse. Woods v. State, 2013 Ark. App. 739, 431 S.W.3d 343 (2013).

Trial court did not err in finding that the prejudicial value of defendant's prior child molestation convict was outweighed by its probative value based on the similarities of the current rape charge and the prior child molestation conviction. Woods v. State, 2013 Ark. App. 739, 431 S.W.3d 343 (2013).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in ruling that prior act testimony was admissible under the pedophile exception, as the similarities between the past action and the charged acts was striking and any inconsistencies in the testimony of one of the prior victims was addressed through cross-examination. Holland v. State, 2015 Ark. 341, 471 S.W.3d 179 (2015), cert. denied, 578 U.S. 1004, 136 S. Ct. 2448, 195 L. Ed. 2d 266 (2016).

There is no requirement that evidence admitted under the pedophile exception be based upon a criminal charge or conviction; in this case, the fact that no charges were ever filed was disclosed to the jury, as was the fact that the girls told investigators that the conduct may have been accidental, and the jury was free to give that evidence the weight and credibility it deemed appropriate. Luper v. State, 2015 Ark. App. 440, 468 S.W.3d 289 (2015), superseded, 2016 Ark. 371, 501 S.W.3d 812 (2016).

It was not an abuse of discretion to admit defendant's prior rape victim's testimony, under subsection (b) of this rule and the rule's pedophile exception, at defendant's trial for deviate sexual activity with a minor because both victims were minors entrusted into defendant's care and raped in unoccupied homes. Watson v. State, 2015 Ark. App. 721, 478 S.W.3d 286 (2015).

Forensic interviewer's testimony fell within the pedophile exception to subsection (b) of this rule where the victim was petitioner's daughter, which was sufficient to establish an intimate relationship, regardless of whether she was living with petitioner. Smith v. State, 2016 Ark. 417, 504 S.W.3d 595 (2016).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in ruling that the evidence of prior acts was admissible under the pedophile exception, because the intimate relationship requirement was met by evidence that the victims were defendant's step-grandchildren or future step-grandchildren, and, in each instance, the children alleged that defendant touched them on their breasts and privates while in bed with them and placed his fingers on or in their privates and moved them causing it to hurt. Campbell v. State, 2016 Ark. App. 119, 484 S.W.3d 279 (2016).

Defendant's prior sexual acts were admissible under the pedophile exception because the acts (1) were sufficiently similar to conduct defendant was charged with, showing defendant's depraved sexual instinct and proclivity for deviate sexual activity with prepubescent boys defendant befriended, and (2) showed defendant's intimate relations with defendant's prior victims. Hortenberry v. State, 2017 Ark. 261, 526 S.W.3d 840 (2017).

Defendant's prior sexual acts with a physically disabled adult were inadmissible under the pedophile exception because the exception only applies to prior acts with children; however, the evidence was independently relevant under the unique facts and very limited circumstances of the case. Hortenberry v. State, 2017 Ark. 261, 526 S.W.3d 840 (2017).

Circuit court did not abuse its discretion in granting the State's motion to admit evidence of prior uncharged incidents of deviate sexual activity or sexual intercourse by defendant with his two daughters where the victim and the daughters were approximately the same age when raped, they were raped in similar locations and in a similar manner, and thus, the pedophile exception was fully applicable. Sanders v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 567, 533 S.W.3d 130 (2017).

Circuit court properly admitted evidence of incidents other than the ones with which defendant had been charged because his 13-year-old daughter's testimony of all the incidents fell within the "pedophile exception" to show a pattern of ongoing sexual abuse, defendant's proclivity for sexually abusing his daughter, and his depraved sexual instinct where he would isolate her from her brothers and force her to perform oral sex on him or attempt to penetrate her vaginally or anally, and there was nothing in the record that suggested the evidence's prejudice to him outweighed its probative value. Rayburn v. State, 2018 Ark. App. 84, 542 S.W.3d 882 (2018).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting evidence of prior uncharged sexual acts between defendant and the 14-year-old victim, as well as texts and social media messages between the two in the weeks leading up to the charged conducts, where the evidence fell squarely within the pedophile exception. McDaniel v. State, 2018 Ark. App. 151, 544 S.W.3d 115 (2018).

Circuit court did not abuse its discretion when it admitted a witness's testimony under the pedophile exception because the testimony established a sufficient degree of similarity with the accusations made in the case that defendant raped his daughter; the admission of the evidence helped to show that defendant's impulses and behavior were far outside the expected range of a normal father. Duvall v. State, 2018 Ark. App. 155, 544 S.W.3d 106 (2018).

No abuse of discretion occurred by admitting a witness's testimony under the pedophile exception because the testimony was independently relevant to the unique signature and methods defendant used to plan his assaults; the victim's testimony and the witness's testimony showed similarities in that defendant had the proclivity to lure and sexually violate young girls, he made efforts to be alone with them, he showed sexually explicit videos, and he had a planned method for obtaining oral sex. Duvall v. State, 2018 Ark. App. 155, 544 S.W.3d 106 (2018).

Circuit court did not abuse its discretion by admitting a witness's testimony under the pedophile exception because the similarities in defendant's conduct towards the victim and the witness, who were of very similar ages, demonstrated a depraved sexual instinct. Duvall v. State, 2018 Ark. App. 155, 544 S.W.3d 106 (2018).

Court of Appeals did not reach the arguments defendant made under Rule 403 because there was not a clear ruling by the circuit court on whether the probative value of each witness's testimony to the State's case substantially outweighed the danger of unfair prejudice to him. Duvall v. State, 2018 Ark. App. 155, 544 S.W.3d 106 (2018).

Circuit court did not abuse its discretion by permitting a witness's testimony under the pedophile exception because the evidence of defendant's sexual abuse of the witness was sufficiently similar to his sexual abuse of the victim; when the abuse began both the victim and the witness were prepubescent girls and similar in age, and the similarities in the testimony demonstrated that defendant preyed on them in their bedrooms at night. Baumann v. State, 2018 Ark. App. 564, 566 S.W.3d 494 (2018).

Circuit court did not abuse its discretion by permitting a witness's testimony under the pedophile exception even though defendant's abuse against the witness began approximately 30 years before the abuse of the victim, as this was within the time frame permitted by appellate courts. Baumann v. State, 2018 Ark. App. 564, 566 S.W.3d 494 (2018).

Testimony by a former police detective that, when defendant was stopped for driving down a road while masturbating, defendant explained that defendant was gay, that one of defendant's friends had told defendant that defendant could find potential partners in this way, and that defendant was extremely sexually frustrated because defendant missed defendant's two boys whom defendant had not seen in years was admissible in defendant's trial for sexual assault of minor youths under the pedophile exception; and even if any error occurred, the error was harmless. Ralston v. State, 2019 Ark. App. 175, 573 S.W.3d 607 (2019).

In a rape case under § 5-14-103(a)(4), although the witness was a female and the victim in the present case was a male, and the defendant's actions were not identical in each instance, they were sufficiently similar to allow the witness's testimony pursuant to the pedophile exception; additionally, although the alleged sexual activity involving the witness occurred about 13 years before the trial, it was not so remote in time as to be improper. Mabry v. State, 2020 Ark. 72, 594 S.W.3d 39 (2020).

Witness' testimony, which was admitted under the pedophile exception, was relevant to show defendant's proclivity to sexually abuse minor female victims; the witness testified to sexual abuse when she was 15 years old, while the sexual abuse in the subject case was alleged to have occurred when the victim was eight years old. Defendant did not preserve his Rule 403 argument for review. Bronson v. State, 2020 Ark. App. 50, 595 S.W.3d 6 (2020).

Pedophile exception does not require the witness to be the same gender as the victim, the sex acts to be identical, or the witness or victim to be a member of the same household as the accused. Scaggs v. State, 2020 Ark. App. 142, 596 S.W.3d 562 (2020).

Testimony of defendant's similar acts was properly admitted under Ark. R. Evid. 404(b) and under the pedophile exception because the probative value of the testimony far outweighed any prejudicial effect and established defendant's proclivity for engaging in sexual acts with children in his care. Scaggs v. State, 2020 Ark. App. 142, 596 S.W.3d 562 (2020).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the testimony of three minors under the pedophile exception where they testified, inter alia, that defendant exposed himself to them and watched them as they changed and swam naked in his pool, and the similarities in defendant's conduct toward the minors, who were of very similar ages as the victim at the time, demonstrated a depraved sexual instinct. The admission of that evidence helped to show that defendant's impulses and behavior were far outside the expected range of a normal uncle and further corroborated the victim's claims that defendant had touched her inappropriately, exposed himself to her, and watched her as she changed and as she swam naked. James v. State, 2021 Ark. App. 33, 616 S.W.3d 267 (2021).

Circuit court did not abuse its discretion in allowing testimony regarding defendant's text messages under the pedophile exception; the content of the messages, which defendant admitted sending, was proof of similar acts with the same child who lived in the same household, and the testimony regarding the content of the texts showed defendant's proclivity toward a specific sex act with his then stepdaughter. Dillard v. State, 2020 Ark. App. 419 (2020).

Circuit court did not abuse its discretion in admitting a witness's testimony under the pedophile exception because her allegations against defendant were sufficiently similar to the victim's allegations; the probative value of the witness's testimony was not substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice or confusion of the issues because it illustrated defendant's proclivity for sex with young teenage girls, and defendant had the opportunity to cross-examine her. Torres-Garcia v. State, 2021 Ark. App. 174 (2021).

Postconviction Proceedings.

Trial court did not err by denying appellant's petition for postconviction relief pursuant to Ark. R. Crim. P. 37.1 based on his ineffective assistance of counsel claim, because trial counsel's decision not to call witnesses was a matter of trial strategy outside the purview of Rule 37.1. Furthermore, substantial evidence under subdivision (b) of this rule provided overwhelming proof of appellant's guilt; and trial counsel argued various motions to suppress and to exclude the subdivision (b) evidence. Banks v. State, 2013 Ark. 147 (2013).

Prejudicial.

In an action against an attorney for breach of contract in his representation of his client in a divorce matter, the client was properly precluded from presenting evidence about the attorney's dealings with another client since there was a very real danger that the proffered testimony would prejudice the jury with an assertion that the attorney had tried to cheat an elderly lady and almost certainly confuse the issue under litigation. Potter v. Magee, 61 Ark. App. 112, 964 S.W.2d 412 (1998).

Circuit court abused its discretion in admitting evidence of checks, drivers' licenses, and Social Security cards belonging to others which were found in defendant's home because it related to uncharged conduct and had no independent relevance to the charges against him. Holman v. State, 372 Ark. 2, 269 S.W.3d 815 (2007).

Detective's testimony that defendant's ex-girlfriend reported that defendant was in an altercation with her in the vicinity of the shooting and that he matched the description of the shooter was relevant to prove opportunity and identity and was admissible, but the specifics of the ex-girlfriend's injuries had little to no probative value in proving defendant committed the shooting, and the evidence was substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice under Rule 403; as credibility was key in this case, the error was not harmless. Williams v. State, 2016 Ark. App. 507, 505 S.W.3d 234 (2016).

In defendant's trial for concealing birth under § 5-26-203, the circuit court abused its discretion in allowing discussion of abortion, defendant's abortion history, and evidence that she had ingested medication prior to giving birth where it was undisputed that the child was not born alive, the evidence was irrelevant as to whether she had concealed the birth, and even if relevant, the probative value was substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice given the four-minute verdict. Bynum v. State, 2018 Ark. App. 201, 546 S.W.3d 533 (2018).

Preservation for Review.

It was reversible error to allow the introduction defendant's prior conviction for drug paraphernalia possession and an arrest for shoplifting under subsection (b) of this rule in defendant's trial for conviction for manufacturing methamphetamine in violation of § 5-64-401(a) [repealed] because (1) defendant's prior possession conviction and shoplifting arrest were not relevant to the issues of whether the materials found in defendant's van could be used to manufacture methamphetamine and whether those materials belonged to defendant; and (2) the bad acts were introduced for no reason other than to show that defendant showed a propensity toward manufacturing methamphetamine. The error was not harmless because when excising the prior conviction and arrest from the case, the only evidence remaining was the fact that the methamphet-amine lab was found in defendant's vehicle. Saul v. State, 92 Ark. App. 49, 211 S.W.3d 1 (2005), rev'd, 365 Ark. 77, 225 S.W.3d 373 (2006).

Where a trial court made a preliminary ruling regarding the admissibility of a videotape during a rape trial, but defense counsel then failed to object under subsection (b) of this rule when the state sought to introduce such at trial, the error was not preserved for review. A similar error relating to the introduction of pornographic photographs during the sentencing phase of the trial was not also not preserved for review for the same reason. Ward v. State, 370 Ark. 398, 260 S.W.3d 292 (2007).

In a case involving child support, a father's claim that evidence of his failure to pay support in another unrelated case was not admissible under subsection (b) of this rule was not heard on appellate review because he advanced a different argument before the trial court relating to relevancy; on appeal he conceded that the evidence in question was relevant. Norman v. Cooper, 101 Ark. App. 446, 278 S.W.3d 569 (2008).

Defendant failed to preserve any claim regarding the admission of the testimony of a victim's cousin under subsection (b) of this rule as defendant did not object at trial, and in fact, stipulated to its admissibility for subsection (b) purposes; defendant was bound by defendant's stipulation. Strickland v. State, 2010 Ark. App. 599, 378 S.W.3d 157 (2010).

Defendant's claim of error in the trial court's refusal to allow defendant to cross-examine the victim about her prior drug conviction or a pending misdemeanor for criminal impersonation based on relevancy was speculative, as defendant did not make a proffer of the evidence to be admitted or how the evidence of only a single misdemeanor charge would have shown a pertinent trait of character; defendant did not raise the argument under subdivision (a)(2) of this rule below. Williams v. State, 2011 Ark. App. 675, 386 S.W.3d 609 (2011).

Defendant failed to preserve for review his assertion that the trial court erred in allowing the state to introduce evidence of uncharged conduct under subsection (b) of this rule, because although defendant's objections in the trial court were generally based upon relevancy, none of the objections to the evidence were specifically based on subsection (b) as he argued before the appellate court. Elliott v. State, 2012 Ark. App. 126, 389 S.W.3d 100 (2012).

Defendant's contention that the trial court erred by allowing the portion of his custodial statement to be played for the jury in which he referenced another person calling him a child molester and trying to get his children taken away was not preserved for appellate review because the only reference to subsection (b) of this rule was in defendant's pretrial motion for the state to disclose such evidence prior to trial; defense counsel never made a specific objection that the child molester reference was improper character evidence under subsection (b) and the trial court never ruled on the basis of subsection (b). In addition, defendant never made a specific relevancy objection under Ark. R. Evid. 402 but only urged that the portion of the statement including the comment had nothing to do with the case and no evidentiary purpose. Leach v. State, 2012 Ark. 179, 402 S.W.3d 517 (2012).

In a legal malpractice case, evidence of a failure to report property in a prior bankruptcy case was properly admitted into evidence as proof of credibility; moreover, there was no objection based on this rule, the probative value of contradictory statements was not substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice, and the remoteness of the 1985 bankruptcy did not render it inadmissible. Howard v. Adams, 2012 Ark. App. 562, 424 S.W.3d 337 (2012).

Defendant convicted of criminal mischief and domestic battering had successfully obtained a motion in limine concerning his prior conviction for domestic battering but failed to preserve for appellate review his challenge to the victim's testimony about defendant's history of destroying property when he was angry, as a separate issue from his prior conviction. Although the defense objected to the testimony on the basis of the motion in limine, the defense made no further argument that the testimony was inadmissible under subsection (b) of this rule. Philpott v. State, 2019 Ark. App. 314, 577 S.W.3d 754 (2019).

Prior Convictions.

Trial court did not err in refusing to declare a mistrial because the testimony of defendant's probation officer tended to show defendant had been convicted of a crime, where the purpose of this testimony was to show that the vehicle used in robbery was one under the control of defendant; it was properly within the discretion of the circuit judge to admit this relevant evidence by balancing the probative value of the submitted testimony against its possible prejudicial effect. Mitchell v. State, 281 Ark. 112, 661 S.W.2d 390 (1983).

Where, in a prosecution for burglary, the state had direct as well as circumstantial evidence from which the jury could have inferred that the defendant intended to commit theft in the building in which he was caught, the trial court erred in allowing the state to prove the defendant's intent by introducing evidence of the defendant's three prior convictions for burglary. Golden v. State, 10 Ark. App. 362, 664 S.W.2d 496 (1984), overruled, Bledsoe v. State, 344 Ark. 86, 39 S.W.3d 760 (2001).

Where, in a capital murder prosecution, much of the evidence consisted of testimony of prison inmates as well as one guard relating admissions made by the defendant, the court did not err in allowing the introduction of evidence that the defendant was serving a prison sentence. Rhodes v. State, 290 Ark. 60, 716 S.W.2d 758 (1986).

Since the state's evidence would have amply supported the defendant's conviction, evidence of the defendant's prior convictions should not have been admitted, as the probative value of evidence of a 14-year-old conviction was slight, if present at all, and the probability of unfair prejudice was great. Smith v. State, 19 Ark. App. 188, 718 S.W.2d 475 (1986), overruled as stated in Velcoff v. State, 2006 Ark. App. LEXIS 729 (Ark. Ct. App. Nov. 8, 2006). But see Brown v. State, 63 Ark. App. 38, 972 S.W.2d 956 (1998).

Where the defendant made no sweeping denial of any prior wrongdoing, and he only testified concerning his work record and service record, the defendant's prior conviction for burglary 14 years ago was not admitted to rebut any particular character trait, and the trial court erred in admitting the evidence. Smith v. State, 19 Ark. App. 188, 718 S.W.2d 475 (1986), overruled as stated in Velcoff v. State, 2006 Ark. App. LEXIS 729 (Ark. Ct. App. Nov. 8, 2006). But see Brown v. State, 63 Ark. App. 38, 972 S.W.2d 956 (1998).

Prosecution is limited to proof of one prior felony conviction in its case in chief where a felony conviction is an element of the offense, the proceedings are bifurcated, and the validity of the conviction is not in dispute. Tatum v. State, 21 Ark. App. 237, 731 S.W.2d 227 (1987).

Prior convictions cannot be introduced for the purpose of showing that the accused is a bad person. Tatum v. State, 21 Ark. App. 237, 731 S.W.2d 227 (1987).

Where character witness said defendant was innocent concerning a prior conviction, the trial court had the discretion to prevent a digression for the case before it to retry the prior case, since the issue was one of relevancy. Lee v. State, 297 Ark. 421, 762 S.W.2d 790 (1989).

Where prior conviction for first degree sexual abuse occurred within two months of the trial it was probative of intent, motive, or plan. George v. State, 306 Ark. 360, 813 S.W.2d 792, amended, 306 Ark. 374, 818 S.W.2d 951 (1991).

Where, without the defendant's prior theft and burglary convictions the state had no evidence showing defendant's reason for unlawfully entering the victim's house, the probative value of these convictions became paramount in the state's obligation to show defendant's entry was for the purpose of committing a felony, and allowing defendant's convictions into evidence was not an abuse of the trial court's discretion. Rudd v. State, 308 Ark. 401, 825 S.W.2d 565 (1992).

Testimony that defendant was "not that type of guy" opened the door for the state to inquire of witness' knowledge, or lack of knowledge, regarding defendant's prior convictions, and such inquiries and testimony provided a means by which the jury could determine what weight and credibility it should give witness' opinion of defendant. Gooden v. State, 321 Ark. 340, 902 S.W.2d 226 (1995).

Similarity between the circumstances of 1988 crimes and predicate offenses of the present crime was sufficient to support admission under subsection (b) of this rule as independently relevant proof of defendant's intent to commit the predicate offenses. Sasser v. State, 321 Ark. 438, 902 S.W.2d 773 (1995).

Trial judge properly allowed testimony regarding an earlier crime where the evidence was being used to prove opportunity, motive, plan, preparation, mode of operation, or lack of mistake, rather than because it was being introduced to demonstrate that defendant was a person of bad character. Kennedy v. State, 49 Ark. App. 20, 894 S.W.2d 952 (1995).

Although there were similarities between defendant's prior crime and the most recent in that both involved the nighttime robbery of an elderly woman who lived alone, the similarities of the two crimes did not rise to the level of modus operandi; thus, the trial judge erred in allowing the state to introduce the prior conviction as evidence to show modus operandi, however, the prior conviction was admissible under the exception to subsection (b) of this rule because it was independently relevant proof of defendant's intent. Medlock v. State, 79 Ark. App. 447, 89 S.W.3d 357 (2002).

In a drug case, the court erred by admitting evidence that the witness was defendant's parole officer for his prior drug convictions because there was clearly no probative value in introducing that fact and the prejudice was manifest; allowing defendant's parole officer to so testify was tantamount to making defendant appear in the court room in shackles or prison garb. Cluck v. State, 91 Ark. App. 220, 209 S.W.3d 428 (2005), rev'd, 365 Ark. 166, 226 S.W.3d 780 (2006).

Conviction for manufacturing methamphetamine was reversed on appeal as the trial court improperly admitted evidence of a prior drug conviction and a prior shoplifting conviction; both were improperly used to show that defendant had a propensity for manufacturing methamphetamine. Saul v. State, 92 Ark. App. 49, 211 S.W.3d 1 (2005), rev'd, 365 Ark. 77, 225 S.W.3d 373 (2006).

Prior convictions were improperly admitted where, although defendant's 1987 offenses involved possession and delivery of methamphetamine, the 2002 charges were related to possession of pseudoephedrine and possession of paraphernalia with intent to manufacture; the 2002 offenses were different in nature as they were related to the actual manufacture, further lessening the probative value of the earlier convictions. Nelson v. State, 92 Ark. App. 275, 212 S.W.3d 31 (2005), rev'd, 365 Ark. 314, 229 S.W.3d 35 (2006), abrogated as stated in Nowlin v. State, 2007 Ark. App. LEXIS 523 (Ark. Ct. App. June 27, 2007).

Codefendant's 2002 misdemeanor conviction for domestic battery could not be used to prove a similar act because codefendant's guilt was not the issue in defendant's trial; although defendant and codefendant were together on the night of the murder, defendant never claimed that codefendant was the perpetrator. Price v. State, 365 Ark. 25, 223 S.W.3d 817 (2006).

During defendant's trial for failure to register as a sex offender, the admission under subsection (b) of this rule of a judgment and commitment order from a 2004 conviction on a charge of failure to register as a sex offender was neither prejudicial nor probative because the offense was a strict-liability offense; at worst, the evidence could be viewed as irrelevant or cumulative. Reed v. State, 2012 Ark. App. 225 (2012).

At defendant's rape trial, the circuit court did not abuse its discretion in determining that evidence of his prior convictions for carnal abuse of a child, arson, terroristic threatening, and failure to register as a sex offender were admissible under Ark. R. Evid. 609 for impeachment purposes and did not constitute inadmissible character evidence under this rule. The prior convictions were highly probative of defendant's credibility, which was at issue because he chose to testify at trial and claimed in defense that the victim offered to pay him to have sex with her. Jordan v. State, 2012 Ark. 277, 412 S.W.3d 150 (2012).

It was not error to admit defendant's prior drug conviction in a drug prosecution because the conviction showed defendant's similar pattern of conduct and knowledge and intent regarding the manufacture of methamphetamine. Coger v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 466, 529 S.W.3d 640 (2017).

Proof of Identity.

Where defendant committed rape in the process of robbing a liquor store, it was not error to admit, under this rule, testimony concerning the rape in trial for robbery in order to establish the identity of the defendant, since the additional time involved, the nature of the incident and the increased opportunity to see and hear the perpetrator and form lasting impressions would certainly enhance the robbery victim's ability to identify the individual. Thomas v. State, 273 Ark. 50, 615 S.W.2d 361 (1981).

Trial court did not err in permitting a police officer to testify that, upon apprehension, defendant identified himself using an alias, and admission of this evidence did not violate subsection (b) of this rule. Kidd v. State, 24 Ark. App. 55, 748 S.W.2d 38 (1988).

Defendant's convictions for capital murder and kidnapping were appropriate because the police officers' testimony linking defendant to a maroon vehicle did not violate subsection (b) of this rule since it was not offered for the purpose of showing that he was a bad character, nor was it offered to show a pattern of behavior; rather, it was offered to demonstrate defendant's identity as the driver of a vehicle that was seen near both crime scenes. The evidence was relevant and not too remote in time from the commission of the crimes. Gilcrease v. State, 2009 Ark. 298, 318 S.W.3d 70 (2009).

Defendant's convictions for capital murder and kidnapping were appropriate because evidence that defendant possessed a gun similar to that used in the murder was independently relevant proof on the issue of defendant's identity, under subsection (b) of this rule. Moreover, its probative value was not substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice. Gilcrease v. State, 2009 Ark. 298, 318 S.W.3d 70 (2009).

Proof of Motive or Intent.

In a prosecution for obtaining food stamps by false pretense, testimony of a witness who had obtained food stamps from defendant, concerning remarks made to the witness by the defendant after an investigation of questionable food stamp cases had started, was relevant to prove intent, knowledge or absence of mistake. Poole v. State, 262 Ark. 4, 552 S.W.2d 647 (1977).

The court should have permitted the state to prove that an associate of defendant apparently tried to kill the victim about two weeks before defendant first sought to engage a professional killer, inasmuch as the earlier attempt was admissible to show motive and ill will. Williamson v. State, 267 Ark. 46, 590 S.W.2d 847 (1979).

Where defendant was convicted of theft of an automobile, evidence tending to show other offenses was admissible to show intent or motive of defendant (which issue was raised by his denial of commission of the crime and his explanation as to why he was at the scene of the crime) where such evidence was corroborated by other evidence putting the defendant at the scene of the crime early in the day the crime was committed and at the time of the commission of the crime. Price v. State, 267 Ark. 1172, 599 S.W.2d 394 (Ct. App. 1980).

Where defendant was tried on charge of fraud by deception in connection with contracting with several churches to deliver pictorial directories of members without intending to uphold his part of the contract, the trial court properly admitted evidence of other alleged criminal acts of obtaining money from other churches for unfilled promises, since such evidence showed motive and intent under this rule, was properly limited by instruction and was not admitted to show bad character as alleged by defendant. Hixson v. Housewright, 642 F.2d 242 (8th Cir. 1981).

Where there was no proof that defendant was at the scene of robbery, but evidence found in his vehicle definitely tended to show that the person or persons who committed the robbery were in defendant's car shortly after the robbery and this evidence was ruled to be relevant in regard to defendant and companion having a motive to kill police officer when he pulled them over, the motive being fear of discovery of the robbery evidence, such evidence was properly admitted in prosecution for acting as accomplice in capital murder. Henry v. State, 278 Ark. 478, 647 S.W.2d 419, cert. denied, 464 U.S. 835, 104 S. Ct. 121, 78 L. Ed. 2d 119 (1983).

In murder prosecution of father who killed his son-in-law, daughter's testimony about her sexual relationship with her father was admissible, under subsection (b) of this rule, to show motive and intent; absent such testimony, the jury might have attributed the killing solely to father's mental condition rather than to his strong hostility to his daughter's marriage. Wood v. State, 280 Ark. 248, 657 S.W.2d 528 (1983).

The trial court, in a murder prosecution, did not err in admitting evidence of an incident that took place shortly after the shooting when the defendant took a hostage in order to flee the scene, as the evidence was properly admitted under subsection (b) of this rule to show intent — the defendant's capability of acting in a criminal manner and comprehending it as such, and to show his ability to premeditate and deliberate. Love v. State, 281 Ark. 379, 664 S.W.2d 457 (1984).

In a prosecution for capital felony murder where the bodies of the victim's parents were found in a car with their baby, evidence that the defendant attempted to shoot the baby was properly admitted as an integral part of the criminal scheme and tended to show motive and intent. Henderson v. State, 284 Ark. 493, 684 S.W.2d 231 (1985).

Where the issue was whether a fire was set deliberately to claim insurance, the existence of other fires, if not too remote in time or dissimilar in circumstances, may have been admissible without showing the same or substantially similar circumstances; such evidence had relevance to show motive, intent, absence of mistake or accident. Where the issue involved a claim of negligence, proof of similar occurrences required evidence of the same or substantially similar conditions. Johnson v. Truck Ins. Exch., 285 Ark. 470, 688 S.W.2d 728 (1985).

Where defendant was on trial for the battery of one child and a photograph of another injured child was shown, the admission was proper because the jury could conclude that the photographed child had been severely beaten, and this fact was highly probative of the issue of defendant's intent and lack of mistake or accident. Van Sickles v. State, 16 Ark. App. 143, 698 S.W.2d 308 (1985).

Testimony concerning defendant's relationship to militaristic organization, the involvement with weapons, and the methods of operation was held relevant to show motive, etc., in larger plan to obtain money for organization in trial for robbery and murder of pawnbroker. Snell v. State, 290 Ark. 503, 721 S.W.2d 628 (1986), cert. denied, 484 U.S. 872, 108 S. Ct. 202, 98 L. Ed. 2d 153 (1987).

Questions relating to a conviction for growing marijuana and the quantity involved are permissible under subsection (b) of this rule to show knowledge, motive, and intent. Watson v. State, 291 Ark. 358, 724 S.W.2d 478 (1987).

In a murder prosecution in which defendant had been charged with the death of his wife, testimony by a former wife that defendant had threatened her when they were married, had tried to kill her, and had told her he would kill her, cut her body to pieces, and scatter the pieces so that no one would ever find her, was admissible to show defendant's intent, plan and identity due to the similarity of the circumstances defendant's wife's death and the specific threats made by defendant to his ex-wife, although they were made several years earlier. Brenk v. State, 311 Ark. 579, 847 S.W.2d 1 (1993).

Testimony which referred to previous purchase of drugs from defendant charged with delivery of a controlled substance, was admissible to show his intent. Scroggins v. State, 312 Ark. 106, 848 S.W.2d 400 (1993).

Where the issue of whether a fire was set deliberately in order to claim insurance is material, the existence of other fires, if not too remote in time or dissimilar in circumstances, may be admissible as relevant to show motive or intent. Armstrong v. State, 45 Ark. App. 72, 871 S.W.2d 420 (1994).

Because defendant claimed he shot his wife accidentally, detective's testimony concerning domestic violence call 39 days prior to the shooting was relevant to show lack of mistake or accident on defendant's part; at the very least, detective's testimony showed, by fair inference, that defendant and his loaded shotgun necessitated a call and an investigation by the police. Russey v. State, 322 Ark. 786, 912 S.W.2d 420 (1995).

In a prosecution for capital murder where the underlying felony was aggravated robbery, testimony regarding the defendant's drug problems was admissible to show motive, that he robbed and murdered the victim to obtain property to purchase drugs. Martin v. State, 328 Ark. 420, 944 S.W.2d 512, overruled, State v. Bell, 329 Ark. 422, 948 S.W.2d 557 (1997).

Girlfriend's testimony about earlier threats and beatings by defendant was probative of his motive, intent, or plan to harm her and was admissible regardless of whether she had sought or obtained a protection order. Evidence of the order itself was merely cumulative because the protection order was based upon admissible evidence of prior threats and beatings. Gaines v. State, 340 Ark. 99, 8 S.W.3d 547 (2000).

In an action arising from a motor vehicle accident, evidence regarding the defendant's fraudulent out-of-state driver's license was not admissible as relevant to state of mind, credibility, motive, and intent, since all defendants have a pecuniary interest in avoiding having an insurance claim filed on them and whether or not the defendant had a fraudulent license did not make it more or less probable that he negligently left a piece of plexiglass on his truck camper. Barker v. Clark, 69 Ark. App. 375, 13 S.W.3d 190, rev'd, 343 Ark. 8, 33 S.W.3d 476 (2000).

In a prosecution for theft by deception, it was not error for the court to allow the introduction of evidence of the defendant's use of crack cocaine since such evidence was relevant to prove motive for the theft and that checks cashed by the defendant were unauthorized. Donovan v. State, 71 Ark. App. 226, 32 S.W.3d 1 (2000).

In a murder prosecution, evidence of the defendant's prior threats to kill the victim, her husband, which were made over the preceding three years, were properly introduced into evidence in order to show motive and intent. Dyer v. State, 343 Ark. 422, 36 S.W.3d 724 (2001).

In a prosecution for murder, evidence that appellant previously abducted and robbed another person was admissible under the intent exception to prior crimes evidence. Williams v. State, 343 Ark. 591, 36 S.W.3d 324 (2001).

Degree of similarity between crime of capital felony murder and prior bad acts were sufficient to admit proof of the former crimes as probative of the defendant's intent to commit the underlying felony of aggravated robbery. Cook v. State, 345 Ark. 264, 45 S.W.3d 820 (2001).

The testimony of a student witness who alleged that defendant teacher made sexual advances toward her showed plan and modus operandi by demonstrating that defendant had gone through a similar sequence with all of the girls, involving compliments of a sexual nature, staring at them, and attempting to get them alone, that preceded the actual assaults, and showed defendant's depraved sexual instinct and proclivity for sexual predation upon young girls under his care and was admissible under subsection (b) of this rule. Garner v. State, 81 Ark. App. 309, 101 S.W.3d 857 (2003).

In a prosecution of defendant on four counts of violation of a minor in the first degree, the testimony of defendant's adult daughter, who testified that defendant sexually violated her when she was a child 30 years before, was admissible both to show motive and plan; the probative value of the daughter's testimony outweighed the danger of unfair prejudice. Tull v. State, 82 Ark. App. 159, 119 S.W.3d 523 (2003).

In a drug case, the court did not err in refusing to admit a certified copy of co-defendant's judgment and disposition order showing he pleaded guilty to manufacturing methamphetamine where, contrary to defendant's assertion, the order itself did not provide any information as to motive, opportunity, or intent. Lueken v. State, 88 Ark. App. 323, 198 S.W.3d 547 (2004).

Pursuant to subsection (b) of this rule, the alleged prior theft of victim's money by defendant was not only relevant but constituted proof of defendant's motive, opportunity, and knowledge; the testimony also revealed that defendant had a potential motive for attacking and strangling the victim in retaliation for her actions in calling the police to report the previous theft, such that the evidence was independently relevant, and the prior alleged theft demonstrated irrefutably that defendant had knowledge of the apartment complex. Henderson v. State, 360 Ark. 356, 201 S.W.3d 401 (2005).

During defendant's rape trial, it was not an abuse of discretion to deny defendant's motion to exclude the testimony of a witness who had also been allegedly raped by defendant; while the testimony might not have been admissible as modus operandi evidence, it could have been admitted under subsection (b) of this rule to show proof of motive, intent, or plan. Fells v. State, 362 Ark. 77, 207 S.W.3d 498 (2005).

In defendant's murder trial, victim's prior statement to police officer, that defendant assaulted her, was admissible under the catch-all exception of Ark. R. Evid. 804(b)(5) with respect to her unavailability and state of mind; as to whether the statement was admissible as a prior bad act, defendant's confession alone overwhelmingly established the elements of murder in the first degree and, thus, any error as to admitting the hearsay statement was harmless. Wooten v. State, 93 Ark. App. 178, 217 S.W.3d 124 (2005).

Defendant's capital-murder convictions were proper where evidence of an acrimonious divorce and evidence that defendant owed the victim, his estranged wife, back child support could have provided a motive for the killing; thus, the admission of that evidence was not erroneous. Armstrong v. State, 366 Ark. 105, 233 S.W.3d 627 (2006).

Trial court did not err in permitting the state to introduce testimony and items found in defendant's home on the ground that they should have been excluded as prior bad acts under subsection (b) of this rule because the evidence was relevant to defendant's intent, motive, and planning in killing the instant victim, who was a friend of defendant's ex-wife. The evidence included: (1) the fact that defendant had contacted another friend of his ex-wife to discourage a relationship with her; (2) the fact that defendant had traveled to Florida, where the friend lived; and (3) that defendant possessed rope and a knife in a brief case with a map of the Southeastern United States. Smith v. State, 367 Ark. 274, 239 S.W.3d 494 (2006).

In a rape case, evidence of defendant's prior rape was properly admitted where both victims were close in age and similar in appearance, both were pulled into an area with low visibility and were asked to perform oral sex, and defendant asked both victims similar questions, such as their age, name and where they lived; in addition, the evidence was not more prejudicial than probative as the similarities between the crimes were sufficient to make the evidence probative on the issue of defendant's motive, intent, preparation, plan and scheme. Morris v. State, 367 Ark. 406, 240 S.W.3d 593 (2006).

Circuit court did not abuse its discretion in admitting testimony regarding two aggravated robberies committed after the charged drive-by murder as relevant and admissible under subsection (b) of this rule, because the robberies provided context for defendant's statements to his co-conspirator that he killed the victim and was intending to kill another. Smith v. State, 2010 Ark. 75, 364 S.W.3d 443 (2010).

In a family doctor's trial on two counts of second-degree sexual abuse, violations of § 5-14-125, the testimony of several other patients was admissible under subsection (b) of this rule to prove motive, opportunity, intent, and plan, and was independently relevant to rebut the doctor's arguments that no inappropriate conduct occurred during medical exams and that the victims fabricated their stories because they wanted to sue the doctor for money damages. Arendall v. State, 2010 Ark. App. 358, 377 S.W.3d 404 (2010).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying defendant's motion in limine to exclude testimony concerning alleged incidents of unwanted physical touching from his trial for rape. The evidence was admissible under subsection (b) of this rule to show defendant's intent and to rebut defendant's defense of consent as each incident shared several material similarities. Solomon v. State, 2010 Ark. App. 559, 379 S.W.3d 489 (2010).

Evidence that defendant violated her employer's policy by rummaging in a stockroom where the designer purses she stole were kept was properly admitted under subsection (b) of this rule to demonstrate her plan, motive, opportunity, and intent, as her prior conduct was relevant to show that she knew where the purses were, how to get to them, and which ones she wanted. Howard v. State, 2011 Ark. App. 573, 386 S.W.3d 106 (2011).

In a case involving stalking and a violation of a protective order, a trial court did not err by allowing a victim to testify that defendant was a very jealous person, that he tried to distance her from family and friends, and that he was previously involved in violent offenses because the testimony concerning his bad acts was admissible to show his motive, intent, and plan for carrying out the threats made against the victim. Brawner v. State, 2013 Ark. App. 413, 428 S.W.3d 600 (2013).

Where defendant was convicted of 30 counts under § 5-27-602, the circuit court did not abuse its discretion in allowing testimony that defendant's computer contained "over three thousand" images of child pornography, for which he was not charged, because the number of images found on defendant's computer was probative of his intent, lack of mistake, and knowledge. Antoniello v. State, 2018 Ark. App. 105, 542 S.W.3d 878 (2018).

Testimony by a former police detective that, when defendant was stopped for driving down a road while masturbating, defendant explained that defendant was gay, that one of defendant's friends had told defendant that defendant could find potential partners in this way, and that defendant was extremely sexually frustrated because defendant missed defendant's two "boys" whom defendant had not seen in years was admissible in defendant's trial for sexual assault of minor youths as proof of motive or intent and also was independently relative. Ralston v. State, 2019 Ark. App. 175, 573 S.W.3d 607 (2019).

Proof of Scheme or Plan.

In a prosecution for several criminal counts related to three sexual encounters involving the use of the drug Rohypnol with two women, testimony regarding a videotape depicting three sexual encounters involving the defendant and three different apparently unconscious women, including one of the victims, was properly introduced into evidence to show modus operandi, scheme, or plan, from the initial courting of each of these women to the manner in which he ended each of the sexual episodes on the videotape with a similar degrading sex act. Sera v. State, 341 Ark. 415, 17 S.W.3d 61, cert. denied, 531 U.S. 998, 121 S. Ct. 495, 148 L. Ed. 2d 466 (2000).

In a criminal prosecution for murder arising from a shooting death, evidence of another shooting and a burglary committed by defendant and the presence of ammunition and guns at defendant's home was probative of a plan and intent to steal guns for use in killing someone; the introduction of the prior shooting and burglary during the guilt phase of the trial was necessary for the state to meet its burden of proving defendant's premeditated and deliberate intent to kill the victim. Anderson v. State, 357 Ark. 180, 163 S.W.3d 333 (2004).

In a sexual assault case, a court properly denied defendant's motion to sever offenses because both victims' testimony was admissible in the trial of the other to show defendant's intent, motive, common scheme, or plan. Parish v. State, 357 Ark. 260, 163 S.W.3d 843 (2004).

In defendant's trial as an accomplice to aggravated robbery and theft of property, a trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying defendant's motion in limine to exclude evidence involving her codefendant and defendant's bail bond because evidence surrounding the codefendant's inquiry as to whether defendant was going to get charged was highly probative and independently relevant to show defendant's connection to her codefendant. Ramsey v. State, 2010 Ark. App. 836, 378 S.W.3d 797 (2010).

Defendant was charged with possession of a controlled substance with purpose to deliver, and the extraction reports of his phones revealed messages making references to marijuana, as well as searches for storage, car rentals, and cheap flights, which information supported the State's theory that defendant was involved in a scheme of drug trafficking; the trial court committed no abuse of discretion in admitting the evidence. Hoey v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 253, 519 S.W.3d 745 (2017).

Prosecutor's Comments.

Where, in a capital murder prosecution, evidence that indirectly showed that the defendant was in the penitentiary was admissible, it was not error for the prosecutor to have mentioned it in his opening statement. Rhodes v. State, 290 Ark. 60, 716 S.W.2d 758 (1986).

Where jury was instructed that the remarks of counsel were not evidence and that the prior convictions testified to were to be considered for credibility and not guilt or innocence, those instructions, given by the court immediately before closing arguments of counsel began, were sufficient to cure any impropriety on the part of the prosecutor referring to defendant as a habitual criminal. Thompson v. State, 21 Ark. App. 53, 727 S.W.2d 865 (1987).

Rebuttal.

Defendant's relevancy objection overruled where the testimony of a state witness rebutted that of a defense witness. Wright v. State, 327 Ark. 558, 940 S.W.2d 432 (1997).

Where a defense character witness testified not only that the defendant was a nonviolent person, but also that she knew of no occasion in which the defendant was violent toward her roommate, the court properly permitted rebuttal testimony by the roommate regarding violent incidents involving the defendant. Smith v. State, 334 Ark. 190, 974 S.W.2d 427 (1998).

In a rollover vehicle case in which the decedent allegedly did not wear a seat belt, the manufacturer did not adequately prove the elements relating to noncompliance and reduction in injury under § 27-37-703, and therefore evidence that the decedent was not wearing his seat belt was properly excluded. The evidence was not rendered admissible under this rule merely because the survivor opened the door by introducing evidence that he was wearing his seat belt. Ford Motor Co. v. Washington, 2013 Ark. 510, 431 S.W.3d 210 (2013).

Trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion for mistrial due to his former girlfriend's remark regarding a black eye that was in violation of defendant's motion in limine; the prosecutor's question was whether she and defendant had ever separated and did not ask her to explain why the two may have separated, the court was careful not to repeat her statement in case the jurors did not hear it the first time, the trial court was in a better position to determine the effect of such remarks on the jury, and the judge admonished the jury to disregard the statement as nonresponsive. McDaniel v. State, 2019 Ark. 56, 567 S.W.3d 847 (2019).

Sentencing.

Character evidence that might not be admissible at the guilt phase under this rule could be admissible at sentencing under § 16-97-103. Elliott v. State, 2021 Ark. 114 (2021).

Sentencing.

In a Miller v. Alabama jury resentencing hearing, the circuit court properly sustained the State's objection to certain testimony because the deputy warden did not know defendant when he was a juvenile, and any evidence comparing defendant's character and subsequent rehabilitation to the character and rehabilitation of other inmates was irrelevant. Elliott v. State, 2021 Ark. 114 (2021).

Severance.

In a case where defendant was convicted of rape and sexual assault, there was no abuse of discretion by refusing to sever the offenses because the testimony of each of the victims would have been admissible at each trial as prior bad acts; moreover, a second mental evaluation was not necessary because the crimes occurred during the same time frame, and there had been no change in defendant's mental status since a November 2013 determination that he was fit to proceed. Thompson v. State, 2015 Ark. App. 275, 461 S.W.3d 368 (2015).

Standard of Review.

The admission or rejection of evidence under subsection (b) of this rule is left to the sound discretion of the trial court and will not be disturbed on appeal absent a manifest abuse of discretion. Jarrett v. State, 310 Ark. 358, 833 S.W.2d 779 (1992).

State of Mind.

Testimony by the alleged victim which included not only the events which led to the defendant's charges of rape, kidnapping and assault, but also other acts she said were committed against her by the defendant within the two-month period preceding the abduction, was admissible, not to show that defendant was a bad person and that he acted in conformity with his bad character, but to show his state of mind. Womack v. State, 36 Ark. App. 133, 819 S.W.2d 306 (1991).

Prior battery charge in capital murder case involving death of a child was properly admitted as evidence to show absence of mistake or accident, not method of operation. Davis v. State, 325 Ark. 96, 925 S.W.2d 768 (1996).

Where evidence of prior lawsuit between the parties was not introduced to show that defendant had stolen from plaintiff car dealership in the past, but was introduced to show dealership service director's state of mind at the time he decided to pursue criminal charges against defendant, and the trial court gave a limiting instruction to this effect, and where such evidence was highly probative as to whether dealership service director acted with malicious intent, this evidence was probative of his motive for bringing the charges, and the trial court did not abuse its discretion in finding that this evidence was not precluded by this rule. Sonny v. Balch Motor Co., 52 Ark. App. 233, 917 S.W.2d 173 (1996), aff'd, 328 Ark. 321, 944 S.W.2d 87 (1997).

The evidence of defendant's prior shoplifting conviction was relevant to show a unique method of operation as well as the defendant's intent, preparation, plan, and absence of mistake or accident in committing the theft. Christian v. State, 54 Ark. App. 191, 925 S.W.2d 428 (1996).

The state's evidence that defendant was on his way to obtain drugs shortly after the time of the murder was relevant to explain a possible motive for the killing — that he planned to use part of the money he took from the victim to purchase drugs — and to illustrate his state of mind. Lee v. State, 327 Ark. 692, 942 S.W.2d 231, cert. denied, 522 U.S. 1002, 118 S. Ct. 572, 139 L. Ed. 2d 412 (1997).

Evidence of a prior lawsuit introduced to show state of mind held relevant and admissible. Sonny v. Balch Motor Co., 328 Ark. 321, 944 S.W.2d 87 (1997), overruled, MacKintrush v. State, 334 Ark. 390, 978 S.W.2d 293 (1998).

In a capital murder trial, the circuit court properly granted the state's motion in limine seeking the admissibility of certain testimony regarding appellant's prior use of alcohol, subsequent use of marijuana, and the fact that appellant was under the influence of methamphetamine on the day prior to the murder; the evidence was admissible to show appellant's mental state in connection with the murder. Barrett v. State, 354 Ark. 187, 119 S.W.3d 485 (2003).

Trial court did not err in admitting evidence that defendant had made sexual remarks to the victim where the remarks showed his sexual attraction to the victim, thereby illustrating his state of mind. Robinson v. State, 2016 Ark. App. 550, 506 S.W.3d 881 (2016).

Evidence depicting defendant and the wife arguing in the hours before the child's death was relevant to demonstrate defendant's state of mind. Atwood v. State, 2020 Ark. 283 (2020).

Subsequent Acts.

Evidence of subsequent bad acts towards victim held admissible against defendant accused of rape, where the acts followed in close proximity and showed motive, intent, plan, or knowledge by defendant. Turner v. State, 59 Ark. App. 249, 956 S.W.2d 870 (1997).

Plain language of § 16-97-103 indicates that, while evidence introduced during the sentencing phase may include evidence described in that section, the list is not exhaustive; thus, evidence of subsequent drug manufacturing was admissible in the sentencing phase of the trial despite the fact that it was inadmissible in the guilt phase under this rule. Crawford v. State, 362 Ark. 301, 208 S.W.3d 146 (2005).

Defendant was properly convicted of three counts of theft of property because even assuming that the admission of subsequent evidence was error, there was overwhelming evidence of defendant's guilt, including a positive identification by all three victims that defendant was involved in the alleged criminal conduct and a fourth identification was merely cumulative. Williams v. State, 2014 Ark. App. 317 (2014).

Although defendant's acts occurred after the acts giving rise to the current charges, testimony about the other bad acts was admissible because subsection (b) of this rule does not distinguish between prior and subsequent bad acts by defendant. Harris v. State, 2018 Ark. App. 219, 547 S.W.3d 709 (2018).

Although the evidence admitted under subsection (b) of this rule could not be too separated in time, making the evidence unduly remote, the assaults on the two victims occurred less than a year apart, which satisfied the temporal-proximity requirement of admissibility under the rule. Harris v. State, 2018 Ark. App. 219, 547 S.W.3d 709 (2018).

Defendant was properly convicted by a jury of Class Y felony kidnapping and the circuit court properly admitted prior-bad-act evidence because the jury could have reasonably found that defendant failed to carry his burden to establish that he ultimately left the kidnapping victim "in a safe place" when he left her with a debilitating leg wound in an unfamiliar residence with unfamiliar people, and defendant's similar behavior two weeks after the kidnapping, but before his arrest, was relevant, its prejudice was outweighed by the probative value, and it went to defendant's plan, knowledge, and lack of accident or mistake. Perez v. State, 2020 Ark. App. 367, 607 S.W.3d 507 (2020).

Testimony Improper.

Testimony of a police officer relating to earlier unconnected case was improper. Patterson v. State, 267 Ark. 436, 591 S.W.2d 356 (1979), cert. denied, 447 U.S. 923, 100 S. Ct. 3014, 65 L. Ed. 2d 1115 (1980).

Testimony was prejudicial and of little or no probative value in determining defendant's guilt, the trial court committed reversible error in admitting the testimony. McCoy v. State, 270 Ark. 145, 603 S.W.2d 418 (1980).

Where in a prosecution for rape and burglary the defendant's mother testified that he worshipped his former wife and child, such testimony was likely collateral, but regardless of whether the statement by the mother was collateral, the trial court erred when it permitted the state, on rebuttal, to disprove the mother's general statement by calling the defendant's former wife to tell the jury of specific acts of misconduct by the defendant directed at her. Kellensworth v. State, 275 Ark. 252, 631 S.W.2d 1 (1982).

Testimony held to be inadmissible character evidence. Free v. State, 293 Ark. 65, 732 S.W.2d 452 (1987).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in excluding, for purposes of character evidence, the testimony of defendant doctor that he never charted anything unfavorable about himself. National Bank of Commerce v. Quirk, 323 Ark. 769, 918 S.W.2d 138 (1996), amended in part, 325 Ark. 31, 922 S.W.2d 717 (1996), overruled in part, Ark. HHS v. Ahlborn, 547 U.S. 268, 126 S. Ct. 1752, 164 L. Ed. 2d 459 (2006).

Court reversed defendant's drug-related convictions and remanded for a new trial where the trial court erred in allowing the testimony of two police officers from another state regarding defendant's previous arrest for possession of items of drug paraphernalia; the evidence was highly prejudicial and had no independent relevance. Holt v. State, 85 Ark. App. 308, 151 S.W.3d 1 (2004).

In a drug case, the court erred by admitting evidence from an undisclosed "rebuttal witness" regarding items that were seized from defendant's house in a prior, unrelated search because the so-called rebuttal testimony did not "merely" respond to defendant's contention that the alleged contraband had legitimate uses, but delved into the details of a prior crime; further, the testimony went well beyond the mere existence of a drug manufacturing conviction. Cluck v. State, 91 Ark. App. 220, 209 S.W.3d 428 (2005), rev'd, 365 Ark. 166, 226 S.W.3d 780 (2006).

Witness's testimony regarding the witness's purpose for calling defendant to obtain drugs was not independently relevant under subsection (b) of this rule to prove a material point related to defendant's first-degree murder charge. Hence, the testimony was improperly admitted. Stephens v. State, 98 Ark. App. 196, 254 S.W.3d 1 (2007).

While a witness's statement during defendant's kidnapping and murder trial that she traded "sex for drugs" with him when she was 15 years old was impermissible, a mistrial was not warranted because the trial court admonished the jury to disregard the statement and did not repeat the prejudicial remark. Green v. State, 2013 Ark. 497, 430 S.W.3d 729 (2013).

Testimony on Transaction.

Where a narcotics agent testified as to a conversation he had with the defendant at the time of the delivery transaction, and when he asked defendant about the quality of the PCP, two packets of white powder, the defendant assured him it was "pretty good," and he had already sold 30 hits that same night, and where following the agent's testimony, the court admonished the jury that the testimony was admitted for the limited purpose of establishing the "entire transaction of the night in question," and not for determining the defendant's guilt or innocence with regard to the offense with which he was being tried, the court did not err in admitting the questioned testimony. Young v. State, 269 Ark. 12, 598 S.W.2d 74 (1980).

All of the acts of a contemporaneous criminal transaction are admissible into evidence. Horne v. State, 12 Ark. App. 301, 677 S.W.2d 856 (1984).

Where there were no witnesses, the murder weapon was never located, and the defendant was evasive in his answers, statements made by the defendant three weeks earlier which bore a close relation to the facts surrounding the murder were held admissible under this rule. Rankin v. State, 57 Ark. App. 125, 942 S.W.2d 867 (1997).

During defendant's criminal trial for rape and tampering, evidence of defendant's marijuana use was admissible as res gestae under subsection (b) of this rule because it was part of the entire transaction surrounding the alleged rape. Payton v. State, 2009 Ark. App. 690 (2009).

Victim's Character.

Although a defendant may impeach his own witnesses, even character witnesses, he cannot make one his witness, after he has cross-examined him, and impeach the witness's adverse testimony by asking about specific instances of conduct except he may inquire about the victim's reputation or traits of character on matters relating solely to violence. Peals v. State, 266 Ark. 410, 584 S.W.2d 1 (1979).

In those cases in which the specific acts of violence by the victim were directed at the defendant or were within his knowledge before the crime, they are admissible as being probative of what he reasonably believed and therefore directly relevant to his plea of self-defense; testimony of specific acts not shown to have been within the knowledge of the defendant are not directly probative of defendant's beliefs. Britt v. State, 7 Ark. App. 156, 645 S.W.2d 699 (1983).

In battery prosecution, trial court did not err in excluding testimony purporting to prove a violent character trait of the victim by a specific instance of prior violent conduct which was not shown to have been within the knowledge of the defendant; trial court properly admitted reputation evidence tending to show victim's trait for violence as probative of the issue of who was the aggressor. Britt v. State, 7 Ark. App. 156, 645 S.W.2d 699 (1983).

Questions by the state focused on character did not violate this rule where defendant failed to demonstrate how his own character was put in issue by questions involving others. Watson v. State, 291 Ark. 358, 724 S.W.2d 478 (1987).

The trial judge did not err in holding that the evidence of rape victim's past homosexual activity was more prejudicial than probative. Logan v. Lockhart, 994 F.2d 1324 (8th Cir. 1993), cert. denied, 510 U.S. 1057, 114 S. Ct. 722, 126 L. Ed. 2d 686 (1994).

The trial court properly excluded evidence of incidents of rape victim's public masturbation and of his vasectomy; both matters had little if any relevance to the question of whether defendant committed rape, but had a strong tendency to disparage the victim's character. Logan v. Lockhart, 994 F.2d 1324 (8th Cir. 1993), cert. denied, 510 U.S. 1057, 114 S. Ct. 722, 126 L. Ed. 2d 686 (1994).

Proffered evidence of the victim's character, by testimony of specific instances of her prior violent conduct toward defendant, was not erroneously excluded; the proffered cross-examination testimony was not admissible under Evid. Rule 405, and was beyond the scope of cross-examination under Evid. Rule 611. Solomon v. State, 323 Ark. 178, 913 S.W.2d 288 (1996).

Where the defendant in a murder prosecution wished to prove the violent character of the victim by the fact that the victim was a gang member known to have sold drugs, the court properly ruled that it would allow such evidence but that it would permit the State to rebut such evidence with its own proof that the defendant had previously engaged in buying drugs from the victim. Henderson v. State, 335 Ark. 346, 980 S.W.2d 266 (1998).

In a family doctor's trial on two counts of second-degree sexual abuse, violations of § 5-14-125, there was no prejudice in disallowing evidence of one of the victims' hot-check charges because the evidence was merely speculative without a conviction. Arendall v. State, 2010 Ark. App. 358, 377 S.W.3d 404 (2010).

In a murder trial where defendant asserted self-defense and was convicted of manslaughter, the circuit court did not err in excluding evidence of specific instances of the victim's past violent conduct where defendant had no knowledge of that past conduct and the purpose for which the evidence was offered pertained to defendant's state of mind. Schnarr v. State, 2017 Ark. 10 (2017).

Rule 405. Methods of proving character.

(a) Reputation or Opinion. In all cases in which evidence of character or a trait of character of a person is admissible, proof may be made by testimony as to reputation or by testimony in the form of an opinion. On cross-examination, inquiry is allowable into relevant specific instances of conduct.

(b) Specific Instances of Conduct. In cases in which character or a trait of character of a person is an essential element of a charge, claim, or defense, proof may also be made of specific instances of his conduct.

CASE NOTES

Claim of Self-Defense.

Where the defendant in a murder prosecution raised the defense of self-defense, the trial court erred in prohibiting the defendant from putting on testimony as to his reputation for being a peaceful and law-abiding citizen, and his conviction was therefore reversed, since the traits of being peaceful and law-abiding were pertinent to both the crime with which he was charged and the defense upon which he relied, and such character evidence should have been admitted. Finnie v. State, 267 Ark. 638, 593 S.W.2d 32 (1980).

As an essential element of defendant's self-defense claim, defendant clearly had the right to introduce specific instances of the victim's violent character that were directed at her or within her knowledge. Thompson v. State, 306 Ark. 193, 813 S.W.2d 249 (1991).

Where defendant related violent acts of physical and sexual abuse by the victim in support of a self-defense claim, but proffered no testimony of specific acts that extended over the entire period of the relationship with the victim, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in limiting such evidence as to one year before the shooting. Thompson v. State, 306 Ark. 193, 813 S.W.2d 249 (1991).

The defense of justification is conditioned on a reasonable belief on the part of the actor that unlawful physical force is about to be inflicted on him. Bargery v. State, 37 Ark. App. 118, 825 S.W.2d 831 (1992).

For prior specific acts of violence to be relevant to the issue of whether an actor reasonably believes unlawful force is about to be inflicted upon him, he must not only be aware of those prior violent acts, but also be aware that his present assailant is the person who committed them. Bargery v. State, 37 Ark. App. 118, 825 S.W.2d 831 (1992).

Witness' conversation with homicide victim, who informed him that he and the defendant had had an argument, and that the victim was planning to attack defendant, was not hearsay under Evid. Rule 801(c) in that it was not offered for the truth of the matter asserted; the testimony was admissible under subsection (b) of this rule as an essential element of defendant's claim of self-defense. Simpkins v. State, 48 Ark. App. 14, 889 S.W.2d 37 (1994).

In a murder trial where defendant asserted self-defense and was convicted of manslaughter, the circuit court did not err in excluding evidence of specific instances of the victim's past violent conduct where defendant had no knowledge of that past conduct and the purpose for which the evidence was offered pertained to defendant's state of mind. Schnarr v. State, 2017 Ark. 10 (2017).

In a murder trial where defendant asserted self-defense and was convicted of manslaughter, evidence of specific instances of the victim's past violent conduct was not relevant for the purpose for which it was offered because events of which the defendant was not aware could have had no effect on his state of mind. Therefore, the exclusion of the evidence was not arbitrary and did not violate defendant's constitutional right to present a complete defense. Schnarr v. State, 2017 Ark. 10 (2017).

In a murder trial where defendant asserted self-defense and was convicted of manslaughter, defendant's contention that evidence of specific instances of the victim's past violent conduct was admissible to corroborate defendant's testimony that the victim was the aggressor was not made below and thus was not reviewable on appeal. Schnarr v. State, 2017 Ark. 10 (2017).

Construction.

Once the admissibility of character evidence is established under Evid. Rule 404, this rule establishes the methods of proof which may be utilized. Rank v. State, 318 Ark. 109, 883 S.W.2d 843 (1994).

Defendant's State of Mind.

Trial court did not err during defendant's trial for aggravated robbery in granting the state's motion in limine restricting evidence of a subsequent murder in support of defendant's affirmative defense of duress because even if evidence of the murder was relevant, and therefore potentially admissible, subsection (b) of this rule would have kept it out because the specific instance of conduct was not relevant to the defense; a murder by another person that occurred three hours after the robberies could not have affected defendant's state of mind during the preceding robberies. Bell v. State, 2010 Ark. App. 814, 379 S.W.3d 748 (2010).

Essential Element.

To be an "essential element," within the meaning of subsection (b) of this rule "[t]he trait of character must be an operative fact which under substantive law determines the rights and liabilities of the parties." West v. State, 265 Ark. 52, 576 S.W.2d 718 (1979).

The peaceful nature of the defendant is not an essential element or a direct substantive issue. West v. State, 265 Ark. 52, 576 S.W.2d 718 (1979).

Where defendant was accused, in first-degree murder trial, of shooting decedent after decedent threatened him with a bed slat in a dispute over loud music being played by defendant, the trial court properly excluded the proffered testimony of defendant's mother that decedent had choked her two days prior to the shooting and that defendant was aware of this incident, since the decedent's character was not an essential element of the defendant's defense of self-defense and thus not admissible under subsection (b) of this rule and since there was no evidence in the record that he was attempting to defend his mother when the shooting occurred or that he was testifying as to his knowledge of prior acts. Jones v. State, 1 Ark. App. 318, 615 S.W.2d 388 (1981).

In an assault and battery action, the trial court properly prohibited the plaintiff from introducing rapes, for which the defendant had been arrested but not convicted, as evidence of the defendant's violent character. Boren v. Qualls, 284 Ark. 65, 680 S.W.2d 82 (1984).

Evidence of victim's violent character held not admissible where it was not an essential element of the murder charge or of defendant's defense of accident; had defendant's defense been self-defense, the result might have been otherwise. Solomon v. State, 323 Ark. 178, 913 S.W.2d 288 (1996).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying appellant's request to introduce evidence of specific instances of his conduct with children in order to show good character where the trait of sexual morality with respect to minors was not an essential element of his defense of innocence to the charges of rape and sexual indecency with a child. McMullin v. State, 2016 Ark. App. 181, 486 S.W.3d 818 (2016).

Gang Activity.

To use expert testimony on gang conduct in general in order to establish, inferentially, the violent character of an individual in particular, is a method of proving character not contemplated by this rule. Johninson v. State, 317 Ark. 431, 878 S.W.2d 727 (1994).

The defendant was not entitled under the rule to use expert testimony on gang conduct in general in order to establish, inferentially, the violent character of the victim. Henderson v. State, 335 Ark. 346, 980 S.W.2d 266 (1998).

Improper Testimony of Specific Acts.

Where in a prosecution for rape and burglary the defendant's mother testified that he worshipped his former wife and child, such testimony was likely collateral, but regardless of whether the statement by the mother was collateral, the trial court erred when it permitted the state on rebuttal to disprove the mother's general statement by calling the defendant's former wife to tell the jury of specific acts of misconduct by the defendant directed at her. Kellensworth v. State, 275 Ark. 252, 631 S.W.2d 1 (1982).

Defendant failed to show that he was prejudiced by counsel's failure to raise the issue of the trial court's failure to record the motion in limine hearing on direct appeal because the character evidence that was the subject of the hearing was inadmissible. State v. Rainer, 2014 Ark. 306, 440 S.W.3d 315 (2014).

Circuit court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to allow witness testimony about a resident's character and reputation for engaging in sexual assaults because the testimony was barred by Ark. R. Evid. 404(b) and Ark. R. Evid. 405(b). The testimony would not have supported an essential element of the aggravated-residential-burglary charge or defendant's general-denial defense. Although the testimony would have provided evidence of specific instances of conduct to show the reason that defendant entered the home, the testimony would not have provided specific instances to show the reason that defendant entered or remained unlawfully in another resident's bedroom. Hill v. State, 2018 Ark. 194, 546 S.W.3d 483 (2018).

Opinion Testimony.

The trial court was right to exclude proof of character through specific instances of conduct on direct examination, but should have admitted opinion evidence of a "pertinent trait;" evidence that defendant was not a discipline problem, that he had an aversion to violence, and that he was immature and of limited intelligence should have been admitted in the capital murder trial. Shelton v. State, 287 Ark. 322, 699 S.W.2d 728 (1985).

Prior Aggression by Deceased.

Since the aggressive character of the deceased is not an essential element of the plea of self-defense, evidence of prior aggression by the deceased against the defendant is inadmissible. McClellan v. State, 264 Ark. 223, 570 S.W.2d 278 (1978).

In those cases in which the specific acts of violence by the victim were directed at the defendant or were within his knowledge before the crime, they are admissible as being probative of what he reasonably believed and therefore directly relevant to his plea of self-defense; testimony of specific acts not shown to have been within the knowledge of the defendant are not directly probative of defendant's beliefs. Britt v. State, 7 Ark. App. 156, 645 S.W.2d 699 (1983).

In battery prosecution, trial court did not err in excluding testimony purporting to prove a violent character trait of the victim by a specific instance of prior violent conduct which was not shown to have been within the knowledge of the defendant; trial court properly admitted reputation evidence tending to show victim's trait for violence as probative of the issue of who was the aggressor. Britt v. State, 7 Ark. App. 156, 645 S.W.2d 699 (1983).

When self-defense is clearly not applicable, excluding evidence of the victim's prior acts of violence is not an abuse of the trial court's discretion, and Ark. R. Evid. 404(b) and subsection (b) of this rule do not apply. Heinze v. State, 309 Ark. 162, 827 S.W.2d 658 (1992).

Because the decedent's character was not an essential element of a self-defense for first-degree murder, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in ruling that proffered testimony regarding the decedent's specific instances of violent conduct was not admissible under subsection (b) of this rule. Anderson v. State, 354 Ark. 102, 118 S.W.3d 574 (2003).

During defendant's trial for murder and battery, the court abused its discretion by excluding evidence of the victim's reputation for violence in the community; under Ark. R. Evid. 405(a), defendant was entitled to introduce testimony about the victim's reputation for violence in his community because that evidence was probative of who was the aggressor. Mitchell v. State, 2018 Ark. App. 253, 549 S.W.3d 375 (2018).

Prior Convictions.

Where character witness said defendant was innocent concerning a prior conviction, the trial court had the discretion to prevent a digression from the case before it to retry the prior case, since the issue was one of relevancy. Lee v. State, 297 Ark. 421, 762 S.W.2d 790 (1989).

Where witness testified on direct examination that defendant was not a current drug user, but was asked on cross-examination whether he was aware that defendant had a previous conviction for possession of cocaine, that evidence of his prior drug conviction had no independent relevance, and the court should have declared a mistrial. Value v. State, 48 Ark. App. 70, 891 S.W.2d 798 (1994).

Testimony that defendant was "not that type of guy" opened the door for the state to inquire of witness' knowledge, or lack of knowledge, regarding defendant's prior convictions, and such inquiries and testimony provided a means by which the jury could determine what weight and credibility it should give witness' opinion of defendant. Gooden v. State, 321 Ark. 340, 902 S.W.2d 226 (1995).

The court did not abuse its discretion when it allowed the State to question a defense character witness regarding her knowledge of a prior conviction of the defendant for which she was incarcerated more than 10 years earlier. Smith v. State, 334 Ark. 190, 974 S.W.2d 427 (1998).

Character evidence, which included defendant's prior convictions in another state, was admissible under Ark. R. Evid. 404 and this rule because defendant opened the door to the admission of such evidence when he questioned his wife about her opinion of his character. Frye v. State, 2009 Ark. 110, 313 S.W.3d 10 (2009).

Purpose.

The purpose of the cross-examination of a character witness with respect to a prior offense is to ascertain the witness' knowledge of facts which should have some bearing on the accused's reputation. Reel v. State, 288 Ark. 189, 702 S.W.2d 809 (1986).

Scope of Cross-Examination.

Circuit court did not abuse its discretion in ruling that defendant opened the door to the questioning about his prior violent acts and threats after defendant's mother testified that there had never been a problem out of defendant, and that he was a mentor; that evidence tested the witness's knowledge of her son's character and went to the weight to be given to her opinion. Tiarks v. State, 633 S.W.3d 788 (Ark. Ct. App. 2021).

Where, in a prosecution for rape, the defendant produced five character witnesses to prove his reputation for truthfulness, the trial court properly allowed the prosecutor to cross-examine the witnesses by asking whether their opinions as to the defendant's reputation would be altered by knowing of the defendant's prior conviction of sexual abuse since such conviction had been brought out on direct examination of the defendant by his defense counsel. Caldwell v. State, 267 Ark. 1053, 594 S.W.2d 24 (Ct. App. 1980).

The trial court did not err in refusing to grant a mistrial when the prosecutor questioned one of the defendant's witnesses concerning a prior conviction of the defendant, where the character witness had stated the defendant's reputation for truth and honesty was good, and on cross-examination, the prosecutor asked the witness if he was aware of the defendant's prior conviction for obtaining controlled substances by fraud and if this would change his opinion of the defendant. Meador v. State, 10 Ark. App. 325, 664 S.W.2d 878 (1984).

An earlier misdemeanor conviction of the defendant can be mentioned by the state in cross-examination of a character witness presented by the defendant. Reel v. State, 288 Ark. 189, 702 S.W.2d 809 (1986).

If the accused has presented a witness to testify as to his good character, cross examination may inquire into relevant specific instances of conduct; this rule places no limit, other than relevancy, on the kind of instances of misconduct with respect to which cross-examination may occur. Reel v. State, 288 Ark. 189, 702 S.W.2d 809 (1986).

Pursuant to subsection (a) of this rule, a character witness may be asked on cross-examination about relevant specific instances of conduct. If a witness does not know about a specific instance her credibility suffers; if she knows but disregards it, that may go to the weight to be given the character witness's opinion of the accused. Wilburn v. State, 289 Ark. 224, 711 S.W.2d 760 (1986).

Cross-examination of witness concerning prior convictions of defendant held proper where witness testified as to defendant's character on direct examination. Barker v. State, 21 Ark. App. 56, 728 S.W.2d 204 (1987).

The purpose of cross-examination of a character witness is not to attack the character or credibility of the accused, but to ascertain the witness's awareness of things having a bearing on the reputation for which the witness has vouched. The only limitation this rule places on cross-examination is that the facts inquired into be relevant to the issue of character. Lee v. State, 27 Ark. App. 198, 770 S.W.2d 148, cert. denied, 493 U.S. 847, 110 S. Ct. 142, 107 L. Ed. 2d 101 (1989).

When an accused offers character evidence in his own behalf, the character witness is subject to cross-examination as to his or her knowledge of relevant specific instances of conduct by the accused; when that occurs, cross-examination as to specific instances of conduct is allowed irrespective of prejudice. Smith v. State, 316 Ark. 407, 872 S.W.2d 843 (1994).

This rule places no limit, other than relevancy, on the kind of instances of misconduct with respect to which cross-examination may occur. Rank v. State, 318 Ark. 109, 883 S.W.2d 843 (1994).

This rule clearly provides that in cross-examining a defendant's character witness, it is permissible to inquire into the witness' knowledge of specific instances of conduct; such cross-examination tests the witness's knowledge of the defendant's reputation and that, in turn, may go to the weight to be given his opinion. Rank v. State, 318 Ark. 109, 883 S.W.2d 843 (1994).

Rule 406. Habit -- Routine practice.

(a) Admissibility. Evidence of the habit of a person or of the routine practice of an organization, whether corroborated or not and regardless of the presence of eyewitnesses, is relevant to prove that the conduct of the person or organization on a particular occasion was in conformity with the habit or routine practice.

(b) Method of Proof. Habit or routine practice may be proved by testimony in the form of an opinion or by specific instances of conduct sufficient in number to warrant a finding that the habit existed or that the practice was routine.

CASE NOTES

Applicability.

Even though this rule may have permitted some of the evidence that was excluded at an arbitration hearing to have been considered in a court of law or equity, the exclusion of this evidence in an arbitration proceeding is not a statutory ground for vacating the arbitration award. Dean Witter Reynolds, Inc. v. Deislinger, 289 Ark. 248, 711 S.W.2d 771 (1986).

Construction.

Habit, as used in this section is an acquired

Proffered evidence of the victim's character, by testimony of specific instances of her prior violent conduct toward defendant, was not erroneously excluded; the proffered cross-examination testimony was not admissible under this rule, and was beyond the scope of cross-examination under Evid. Rule 611. Solomon v. State, 323 Ark. 178, 913 S.W.2d 288 (1996).

Circuit court abused its discretion in allowing the State to cross-examine defendant as to whether he was a peaceful and law-abiding citizen or whether he had ever pulled a gun on anyone where the testimony as to the prior use of a gun was not relevant to prove motive, opportunity, intent, or preparation or plan of the murder, the evidence was unrelated to defendant's justification defense, and although defendant had testified about his personal history and background, his testimony had not strayed into the area of his character for peacefulness or of being a law-abiding citizen. Stanton v. State, 2017 Ark. 155, 517 S.W.3d 412 (2017).

or developed mode of behavior or function that has become nearly or completely involuntary; it is a regular response to a repeated specific situation which may become semi-automatic. Henry v. Cline, 275 Ark. 44, 626 S.W.2d 958 (1982).

Evidence Not Improper.

It was not improper for a trial court to deny proffered testimony that decedent driver of an automobile had a "habit" of weaving his car back and forth across the center line while delivering newspapers or reaching for chewing tobacco because he only had one arm, since there was nothing to show that at the time of the accident when he was allegedly weaving across the line, he was either reaching for tobacco or delivering newspapers. Ritchey v. Murray, 274 Ark. 388, 625 S.W.2d 476 (1981).

Habits of Victim.

Where a capital murder was alleged to have occurred, but the victim's body was never found, evidence that the victim had not been heard from in the three years prior to the trial, that he was very dependable in his routine and kept a fairly rigid schedule, plus the fact that he had a good samaritan's tendency to stop and help people in need, including hitchhikers, which, under other evidence could have included defendant, was properly admitted on the issue of habit pursuant to this Rule, since the trial judge admonished the jury several times that he was not admitting the evidence as character evidence. Derring v. State, 273 Ark. 347, 619 S.W.2d 644 (1981).

Insufficient Proof of Habit.

In an action for injuries sustained in an automobile accident, the trial court properly excluded proffered testimony by plaintiff's witness that she had seen defendant drive on the road in question a dozen times and that he was speeding half those times, because such testimony was insufficient to establish defendant's habit of driving fast as a mode of behavior that had become nearly or completely involuntary. Henry v. Cline, 275 Ark. 44, 626 S.W.2d 958 (1982).

In prosecution for theft by receiving, the fact that a witness was known to have indulged in smoking marijuana was not relevant to any issue in the case or admissible under the Uniform Rules of Evidence for the purpose of impeachment where there was nothing to show that the instances of marijuana use were sufficient in number to warrant a finding that the habit existed or that the practice was so routine as to become semiautomatic or completely involuntary so as to bring it within the exceptions of this rule. Gregory v. State, 9 Ark. App. 242, 657 S.W.2d 570 (1983).

Mailing Confirmations.

Where the routine for mailing confirmations of security transactions included running the envelopes containing the confirmations through a machine that insured that the proper postage was placed on the envelope, and where one party received at least two confirmations mailed to it through this process, the evidence was sufficient to have presented a jury question on delivery and receipt of the confirmation. Swink & Co. v. Carroll McEntee & McGinley, Inc., 266 Ark. 279, 584 S.W.2d 393 (1979).

Routine Practice.

In an action for negligence resulting in a slip and fall, evidence that the defendant airport was relying on a cleaning company to clean up dust and that the cleaning company routinely failed to rid the concourse of dust and dirt raised a fact question as to whether the tile was swept and vacuumed on the date of the accident, thereby precluding summary judgment. Kelley v. National Union Fire Ins. Co., 327 Ark. 329, 937 S.W.2d 660 (1997).

Warning of Right to Revoke Consent.

Where, when cross-examined on his recollection about advising defendant that he had a right to revoke the consent, an officer said that he was sure that "we did because we always do. I don't just say that I vividly remember it, I can't say that," this statement fell short of establishing the lack of any basis for this officer's statement that he did advise defendant that he had a right to revoke the consent, and evidence of the habit of this officer or routine practice of the sheriff's officers in this regard was relevant on the question. Pace v. State, 265 Ark. 712, 580 S.W.2d 689 (1979).

Rule 407. Subsequent remedial measures.

Whenever, after an event, measures are taken which, if taken previously, would have made the event less likely to occur, evidence of the subsequent measures is not admissible to prove negligence or culpable conduct in connection with the event. This rule does not require the exclusion of evidence of subsequent measures if offered for another purpose, such as proving ownership, control, or feasibility of precautionary measures, if controverted, or impeachment.

cability of Arkansas Rule of Evidence 407 in Strict Liability, 61 Ark. L. Rev. 91.

Applicability.

Shut-off of sprinkler system which damaged inventory after pipes froze was not evidence of a subsequent remedial measure to be excluded under this rule where it was clear from the testimony that the system was previously ruptured in several places and could not be turned back on; the system obviously was still broken and the situation had not been “remedied” at all. Westark Specialties, Inc. v. Stouffer Family Ltd. Partnership, 310 Ark. 225, 836 S.W.2d 354 (1992).

Exclusion Upheld.

Although plaintiff employee in a FELA action argued that a mechanical alert created after the incident was not evidence of subsequent remedial measures but was instead a summation of the employer’s failure to follow its established procedures and was merely an experimental test gone wrong, the mechanical alert qualified as a subsequent remedial measure because it established that a bracket would not be used again, despite the fact that the bracket was used only once in the experimental test. Sanders v. Union Pac. R.R., 2019 Ark. App. 386, 585 S.W.3d 713 (2019).

In a FELA action, the circuit court did not abuse its discretion by excluding evidence of a mechanical alert that was created after the incident because, inter alia, the impeachment exception to this rule was inapplicable; the employer’s safety implementation leader did not author the mechanical alert and he did not address in his testimony whether he continued to believe that the test was successful subsequent to the employee’s alleged injuries. Sanders v. Union Pac. R.R., 2019 Ark. App. 386, 585 S.W.3d 713 (2019).

Inadmissible Evidence.

Evidence held not to fall within a recognized exception to this rule. Dena Constr. Co. v. Burlington N.R.R., 297 Ark. 547, 764 S.W.2d 419 (1989).

A question relating to the status of the sign on the door after the date of the accident was an improper question for the purpose of proving appellant’s negligence at the time of the accident. Jacuzzi Bros. v. Todd, 316 Ark. 785, 875 S.W.2d 67 (1994).

A mistrial was not the only appropriate remedy where the trial court had previously sustained appellant’s objections pursuant to this rule and was very careful to maintain strict control over the evidence in this regard. Jacuzzi Bros. v. Todd, 316 Ark. 785, 875 S.W.2d 67 (1994).

In a products liability action arising from an airplane accident, it was error for the court to permit the introduction into evidence of a service bulletin issued by the defendant after the accident which required a wing spar inspection to detect cracks in the lower spar of wing assemblies that could result in wing separation from the aircraft since there was no purpose for such evidence other than to show culpability on the part of the defendant and there was no indication in the record that the bulletin was issued by a third party other than the defendant. Lawhon v. Ayres Corp., 67 Ark. App. 66, 992 S.W.2d 162 (1999).

Party Taking Measure.

Testimony that plaintiff’s employer had changed defendant’s allegedly defective product was admissible because it was a subsequent remedial measure by a third party rather than a defendant. Ford Motor Co. v. Nuckolls, 320 Ark. 15, 894 S.W.2d 897 (1995).

In action against manufacturer alleging negligent design of a saw which injured plaintiff while at work, subsequent remedial measures taken by plaintiff’s employer supported the jury’s finding of negligence. Buchanna v. Diehl Machine, Inc., 98 F.3d 366 (8th Cir. 1996).

Photographs.

Pictures that reflected remedial measures taken by the defendant held inadmissible. Carton v. Missouri Pac. R.R., 315 Ark. 5, 865 S.W.2d 635 (1993).

Under this rule, pictures which could not be admitted as evidence of negligence might be admitted for the purpose of impeachment; however, a trial court may prohibit their use for impeachment if it deems the evidence irrelevant under Evid. Rule 401, or prejudicial under Evid. Rule 403. Carton v. Missouri Pac. R.R., 315 Ark. 5, 865 S.W.2d 635 (1993).

Probative Value.

When evidence of a subsequent remedial measure is not barred by this rule, its probative value should outweigh any dangers associated by its admission. Ford Motor Co. v. Nuckolls, 320 Ark. 15, 894 S.W.2d 897 (1995).

Proof of Control.

Where plaintiff, in personal injury suit for fall suffered on steep gravel path at defendant’s marina, sought to introduce photographs of stairway which was constructed in place of the path following the accident, such photographs were not admissible under this rule, since they could only be admitted for purposes of proving ownership, control or the feasibility of precautionary measures, if controverted, or for impeachment, and the defendant had admitted in deposition and cross-examination that the stairway had been planned for months before the accident, that the corps of engineers owned the property and leased it to defendant, and defendant had admitted all of the provisions allowing proof of feasibility of precautionary measures; accordingly, since there was no real controversy of the issues, the photographs were properly excluded. Gist v. Meredith Marine Sales & Serv., Inc., 272 Ark. 489, 615 S.W.2d 365 (1981).

Proof of Ownership.

While repair of a field's fence may be relevant to negligence in its maintenance, this rule makes it inadmissible for that purpose; repair the day after an accident does not tend to show ownership of the cow involved in the accident, which would constitute an exception pursuant to the rule. Miller v. Nix, 315 Ark. 569, 868 S.W.2d 498 (1994).

Rule 408. Compromise and offers to compromise.

Evidence of (1) furnishing, offering, or promising to furnish, or (2) accepting, offering, or promising to accept, a valuable consideration in compromising or attempting to compromise a claim which was disputed as to either validity or amount, is not admissible to prove liability for, invalidity of, or amount of the claim or any other claim. Evidence of conduct or statements made in compromise negotiations is likewise not admissible. This rule does not require exclusion if the evidence is offered for another purpose, such as proving bias or prejudice of a witness, negating a contention of undue delay, or proving an effort to obstruct a criminal investigation or prosecution.

CASE NOTES

In General.

This rule is not a blanket prohibition against the admission of all evidence concerning offers to compromise. The rule prohibits the introduction of such evidence when the evidence is offered to prove "liability for, invalidity of, or amount of the claim or any other claim"; it does not prohibit such evidence when introduced for any other reason. McKenzie v. Tom Gibson Ford, Inc., 295 Ark. 326, 749 S.W.2d 653 (1988); Ozark Auto Transp., Inc. v. Starkey, 327 Ark. 227, 937 S.W.2d 175 (1997); Sexton Law Firm v. Milligan, 329 Ark. 285, 948 S.W.2d 388 (1997), writ denied sub nom. Milligan v. Circuit Court, 331 Ark. 439, 959 S.W.2d 747 (1998).

Where evidence is offered for a purpose other than those prohibited, this rule does not bar its introduction. That does not mean that the evidence is automatically admissible; relevance must still be determined under Evid. Rule 401 and admissibility under Evid. Rules 402 and 403. McKenzie v. Tom Gibson Ford, Inc., 295 Ark. 326, 749 S.W.2d 653 (1988).

This rule requires the exclusion of statements made in compromise negotiations of a defendant with a third party; offers to compromise or settle a disputed claim should be excluded from evidence even if no litigation has been commenced at the time of the compromise. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v. Londagin, 344 Ark. 26, 37 S.W.3d 620 (2001).

Answers to Interrogatories.

The defendant could use the plaintiff's answers to interrogatories to impeach her testimony where the answers to interrogatories pertained to an effort to settle her claim with the defendant. J. E. Merit Constructors, Inc. v. Cooper, 345 Ark. 136, 44 S.W.3d 336 (2001).

Bias or Prejudice of Witness.

Where the defendant's attorney asked the prosecuting witness about a $1,000,000 civil suit which the prosecuting witness had filed against the defendant arising from the alleged battery, and the attorney implied by one of his questions that, had the defendant paid the prosecuting witness $18,000, the criminal charges would have been dismissed, the trial court was in error in granting a mistrial. If the cross-examination had been allowed, the jury would have been informed that the prosecuting witness may have been biased due to a financial interest. On the other hand, the jury may have thought that the civil complaint and damages sought were well-founded, and that the evidence supported the prosecuting witness's testimony. Wilson v. State, 289 Ark. 141, 712 S.W.2d 654 (1986).

Condemnation Proceedings.

A statement of just compensation as required by § 27-67-312 is not a negotiation or settlement figure excluded by this rule. Arkansas State Hwy. Comm'n v. Johnson, 300 Ark. 454, 780 S.W.2d 326 (1989).

Construction.

The Arkansas Supreme Court has strictly applied this rule; offers are inadmissible to prove a party's liability on the underlying claim. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v. Londagin, 344 Ark. 26, 37 S.W.3d 620 (2001).

Elements of Exclusion.

To invoke the exclusion under this rule, the following elements are required: (1) there must be a claim; (2) the purpose of offering the evidence must be to prove liability for, invalidity of, or amount of the claim; (3) valuable consideration must be furnished or offered to be furnished, or promised to be furnished, or valuable consideration must be accepted, offered, or promised to be accepted in an effort to compromise or attempt to compromise a claim; and (4) the claim must be disputed as to either validity or amount; to invoke the exclusionary rule, an actual dispute must exist, preferably some negotiations, and at least an apparent difference of view between the parties as to the validity or amount of the claim; an offer to pay an admitted claim is not privileged since there is no policy of encouraging compromises of undisputed claims, which should be paid in full. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v. Londagin, 344 Ark. 26, 37 S.W.3d 620 (2001).

Evidence of Effort to Satisfy Claim.

Where there was no dispute as to either the validity or the amount of the claim, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in allowing the plaintiff to introduce evidence of defendant's efforts to satisfy appellee's claim. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v. Londagin, 344 Ark. 26, 37 S.W.3d 620 (2001).

Evidence of Negotiation Not Proper.

Where the court allowed the introduction of a repair estimate on plaintiffs vehicle, over objection, to be introduced, and the estimate was made out to defendant but the court refused to allow defendant to explain she had made the offer to settle for the purpose of protecting her license to drive a vehicle rather than because she felt she was at fault, this evidence of negotiation was not proper. Cantlin v. Pavlovich, 265 Ark. 654, 580 S.W.2d 190 (1979).

Letter which offered to settle without litigation for the sum of $145,000 was an offer of compromise, as it clearly stated there was no final damage estimate and that it was an offer predicated on not going to court, and therefore was correctly excluded from the evidence. Westark Specialties, Inc. v. Stouffer Family Ltd. Partnership, 310 Ark. 225, 836 S.W.2d 354 (1992).

Letter from the trustee to counsel for beneficiaries written on behalf of other beneficiaries of trust, offering $84,000 to the beneficiaries as "full and final settlement with them for their interest in the assets of this trust" was inadmissible under this rule which prohibits evidence of offers of compromise when there is a claim which was disputed as to validity or amount. Hickman v. Trust of Heath, House & Boyles, 310 Ark. 333, 835 S.W.2d 880 (1992).

Evidence Properly Excluded.

Appellants wanted to introduce a portion of one appellee's deposition in which she was asked if she had ever asked one appellant if he would be willing to enter a property-line agreement, and she responded that he was supposed to get something drawn up; as this clearly indicated the existence of an actual dispute and a difference of view between the parties as to the validity of the claim, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in excluding the evidence under this rule. Whitecotton v. Owen, 2016 Ark. App. 120, 487 S.W.3d 380 (2016).

Circuit court's refusal to admit a farmer's prior inconsistent letter as to crop price was affirmed as the statement was made during the farmer's attempt to settle a disputed claim involving a tractor, and thus was prohibited by this rule. Greenway Equip., Inc. v. Johnson, 2020 Ark. App. 336, 602 S.W.3d 142 (2020).

Evidence to Contradict Testimony.

In action against builder for damages allegedly resulting from failure to build house properly, testimony that builder made an offer to plaintiff to purchase the property from the plaintiff for the same price that he had paid for it several months after his purchase was admissible not as evidence of an offer to compromise but as tending to contradict plaintiff's testimony as to the value of the house and going to his credibility since he had paid $32,000 for the house but always contended that it was worth not more than $21,000. Enterprise Sales Co. v. Barham, 270 Ark. 544, 605 S.W.2d 458 (1980).

When a party has made a statement at trial which is inconsistent with a statement made during settlement negotiations, the inference is that one of the statements is knowingly false; in such a situation, the mandate in Rule 102 to interpret the rules so as to foster the values of “fairness” and “truth” requires the state to hold that prior inconsistent statements made in the course of settlement negotiations should be admitted for impeachment purposes. Missouri Pac. R.R. v. Arkansas Sheriff's Boys' Ranch, 280 Ark. 53, 655 S.W.2d 389 (1983).

Although a statement made by railroad claims agent during settlement negotiations between one landowner and railroad was inadmissible in the plaintiff's case-in-chief in action brought by other landowners against the railroad, the statement would be admissible in a specific situation — if offered to impeach the direct testimony of the railroad. Missouri Pac. R.R. v. Arkansas Sheriff's Boys' Ranch, 280 Ark. 53, 655 S.W.2d 389 (1983).

Where evidence relating to accident victim's second accident and settlement with another insurer was introduced by insurer for a purpose other than proving liability for, invalidity of, or amount of the claim, the circuit court did not abuse its discretion in admitting it as the insurer was entitled to introduce the evidence to impeach the victim's testimony and credibility. Gayley v. Allstate Ins. Co., 362 Ark. 568, 210 S.W.3d 40 (2005).

Improper Reference to Compromise.

Where in an action by the plaintiff driver of an automobile that was struck by defendant's truck at an intersection, the defense attorney, while questioning a witness who was a passenger in the plaintiff's car during the accident, said, “I believe you settled your case for $2,000,” the remark was uncalled for and undoubtedly prejudiced the plaintiff's case, and the trial court should have granted plaintiff's motion for a mistrial since no admonition of the jury by the court would have been sufficient to eliminate any possible prejudice which might have resulted to plaintiff by the statement referring to the offer of settlement. Elrod v. G & R Constr. Co., 275 Ark. 151, 628 S.W.2d 17 (1982).

In a tort action for inter alia, assault and battery, the court did not err in refusing to allow the introduction of evidence of an alleged prior settlement negotiation in which the plaintiff allegedly stated that he would make both the tort action and a criminal action against the defendant go away for a certain sum of money since there was no proffer that the plaintiff personally made the offer and since the plaintiff's attorney contested the defendant's attorney's version of the offer. Edwards v. Stills, 335 Ark. 470, 984 S.W.2d 366 (1998).

Letter from Attorney.

Where the plaintiff mother brought an action against the defendant, her son, for allegedly wrongfully withdrawing $12,000 from their joint savings account, and the son's attorney wrote a letter to the plaintiff prior to the trial seeking to settle the dispute, such letter was in the nature of an offer to compromise and was therefore inadmissible. Haseman v. Union Bank, 268 Ark. 318, 597 S.W.2d 67 (1980).

Where injured truck driver had described his injuries from a 1999 accident by stating they were insubstantial, but the 2000 demand letter stemming from that accident indicated that he had suffered substantial injuries similar to those he sustained in the 2001 accident, the 2000 demand letter was admissible for impeachment purposes at the damages trial for the 2001 accident; it was also reasonable for the 2004 jury to know the extent of truck driver's claims of injuries from the 1999 accident. House v. Volunteer Transp., Inc., 365 Ark. 11, 223 S.W.3d 798 (2006).

Offer to Compromise.

A document which stated that a payment would be in consideration of the release of “all claims, demands and causes of action that releasors ever had” was an offer of compromise or an offer to settle all claims and therefore should not have been admitted pursuant to this rule. Swindle v. Lumbermens Mut. Cas. Co., 315 Ark. 415, 869 S.W.2d 681 (1993).

Appellate court rejected the contention that the circuit court abused its discretion by considering the documents about settlement, because appellees did not offer the documents on issues related to liability, and the issue at the hearing was whether the parties had agreed to settle and all the documents were competent proof on that issue. Roberts v. Green Bay Packaging, Inc., 101 Ark. App. 160, 272 S.W.3d 125 (2008).

In a breach of contract action, the trial court did not err in denying a contractor's request to enter into evidence a client's statements about compromise contained in two letters; the client's statements were not inconsistent with the client's testimony and their introduction would have served little purpose other than to show a willingness to settle the claims. Acker Constr., LLC v. Tran, 2012 Ark. App. 214, 396 S.W.3d 279 (2012).

Party's Credibility.

Trial court properly admitted correspondence that allegedly occurred during the course of settlement negotiations, where it was relevant to the credibility of the party who wrote it. Sexton Law Firm v. Milligan, 329 Ark. 285, 948 S.W.2d 388 (1997), writ denied sub nom. Milligan v. Circuit Court, 331 Ark. 439, 959 S.W.2d 747 (1998).

Property Agreements.

Trial court erred when it excluded two partial stipulated property agreements on remand of a divorce because the partial stipulations were contracts executed in settlement of a portion of the parties' property division and, in fact, they were incorporated into the original divorce decree and accepted by the chancellor as a partial division of property; they were offered so that the trial court could enforce them and not for the purpose of proving liability for, invalidity of, or amount of the claim. Rogers v. Rogers, 90 Ark. App. 321, 205 S.W.3d 856 (2005).

Purpose.

The purpose of this rule is to promote complete candor between the parties to the settlement negotiations but not to protect false representations. Missouri Pac. R.R. v. Arkansas Sheriff's Boys' Ranch, 280 Ark. 53, 655 S.W.2d 389 (1983).

The rationale for this rule is based upon the grounds of promotion of the public policy favoring the compromise and settlement of disputes; the purpose of this rule is to promote complete candor between the parties to the settlement negotiations. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v. Londagin, 344 Ark. 26, 37 S.W.3d 620 (2001).

Resolution of Debt.

Vote of a city council to resolve an employment termination dispute with a city employee, followed by approval by signature of the city's mayor, was a resolution of a debt rather than a negotiation of a settlement, and evidence of the vote and approval thus was admissible despite this rule, which barred evidence of a settlement. Weaver v. Collins, 2010 Ark. App. 707, 379 S.W.3d 582 (2010).

Rule 409. Payment of medical and similar expenses.

Evidence of furnishing, offering or promising to pay medical, hospital, or similar expenses occasioned by an injury is not admissible to prove liability for the injury.

CASE NOTES

Intent of Rule.

A very good reason for this rule is that it is to the best interest of society and in keeping with the mores of the community that humanitarian and benevolent instincts not be hobbled by the hazard that assistance to an injured person be taken as an admission of liability in a personal injury action, when even lawyers and judges experience great difficulty in agreeing on such questions. Ferguson v. Graddy, 263 Ark. 413, 565 S.W.2d 600 (1978).

Reversible Error.

Where plaintiffs were injured when a guard-rail on defendant county's bridge gave way, plunging them into the creek bed below, as a result of which they sued the county and its insurance carrier, evidence introduced by one plaintiff of a conversation between himself and the county judge of the defendant county in which the county judge told him that the defendant insurance company would pay all his medical bills should have been excluded under this rule, and the trial court committed reversible error in permitting such testimony. Home

Ins. Co. v. Spears, 267 Ark. 704, 590 S.W.2d 71 (Ct. App. 1979).

Voluntary Payments.

In action for recovery for personal injuries suffered when plaintiff was struck by defendant's auto, the court did not err in excluding from the jury evidence of payments made to the plaintiff on behalf of defendant where such payments were not made in response to any demand by plaintiff but were purely voluntary, where there was no evidence that there had been any admission of liability proffered at the trial, where at in camera hearing plaintiff testified that defendant's insurance agent told her that defendant had been completely at fault but there was no evidence that such agent was authorized to make admissions on behalf of defendant and where defendant testified that she understood the recitations in the receipts she signed that these payments were to be credited to the total amount of any final judgment or settlement in her favor and, thus, there was no real issue of fact as to the amount of payments or the stipulation as to the condition under which they were paid. Ferguson v. Graddy, 263 Ark. 413, 565 S.W.2d 600 (1978).

Rule 410. Pleas and offers.

Evidence of a plea of nolo contendere, whether or not later withdrawn, and of a plea, later withdrawn, of guilty or admission to the charge, or of an offer to plead to the crime charged or any other crime, or of statements made in connection with any of the foregoing pleas or offers, is not admissible in any civil or criminal action, case, or proceeding against the person who made the plea or offer.

HISTORY: Amended November 18, 1996, effective March 1, 1997.

CASE NOTES

In General.

This rule is essentially the same in purpose and effect as Ark. R. Crim. P. 25.4. Gooden v. State, 295 Ark. 385, 749 S.W.2d 657 (1988).

Applicability.

This rule did not apply to defendant's sworn affidavit in which he asked to "take all charges" and that his female companion be relieved of the charges. While asking to "take all charges," defendant did not offer to plead guilty to the charges against him, but instead requested that he, not his companion, be charged with the crimes charged against them both. Lane v. State, 2017 Ark. 34, 513 S.W.3d 230, cert. denied, 137 S. Ct. 2222, 198 L. Ed. 2d 665 (2017).

Improper Testimony of Specific Acts.

The trial court did not err in refusing to declare a mistrial following an inadvertent statement by one of the state's witnesses concerning an offer by the defendant to enter a plea agreement, since the purpose of this rule was to prevent such references by the prosecutor and the trial court. Young v. State, 283 Ark. 435, 678 S.W.2d 329 (1984).

Nolo Contendere.

Motion in limine was proper to prohibit introduction of evidence in wrongful death action brought after one passenger died in automobile accident; the evidence was that both drivers pleaded nolo contendere to the charge of negligent homicide under §§ 27-50-307 and 27-50-804. Patterson v. Odell, 322 Ark. 394, 909 S.W.2d 648 (1995).

Perjury.

This rule is intended to protect an accused who has been permitted to withdraw a plea of guilty in accordance with Ark. R. Crim. P. 26 from having the guilty plea used against him or her as an admission against interest when the accused is tried on those same charges; it did not render the defendants' guilty pleas privileged from a prosecution for perjury where the defendants later filed motions to withdraw their guilty pleas and testified that they had lied at the hearing on their guilty pleas. Brown v. State, 288 Ark. 517, 707 S.W.2d 313 (1986).

This rule and Ark. R. Crim. P. 25.4(b) did not apply to prevent a state trial court from admitting the transcript of a federal plea hearing in defendant's perjury trial because those rules only applied when a guilty plea had been withdrawn or set aside, and the rules were not intended to bar perjury charges. Stewart v. State, 2010 Ark. App. 323, 374 S.W.3d 811 (2010).

Purpose.

The evil to be avoided by this rule is the use of a plea offer against defendant as an admission against interest. Owens v. State, 325 Ark. 110, 926 S.W.2d 650 (1996).

Sentencing.

Prosecutor's reference to plea offer in his closing argument during the sentencing phase did not require mistrial; defendant who had already been convicted was not so prejudiced as to be entitled to a mistrial. Owens v. State, 325 Ark. 110, 926 S.W.2d 650 (1996).

Witnesses.

Where a letter to the prosecution from the attorney for a witness charged with a crime suggested little more than effort to explore the potential for a negotiated plea, the trial court correctly ruled that the letter did not rise to the level of an agreement, and it was properly excluded, where defendant's attorney attempted to impeach the witness after she testified that she had no deal with the state. Sutton v. State, 311 Ark. 435, 844 S.W.2d 350 (1993).

Rule 411. Admissibility of evidence of victim's prior sexual conduct.

(a) As used in this rule, unless the context otherwise requires, "sexual conduct" means deviate sexual activity, sexual contact, or sexual intercourse, as those terms are defined by Ark. Code Ann. § 5-14-101.

(b) In any criminal prosecution under Ark. Code Ann. § 5-14-101 et seq. or § 5-26-202, or for criminal attempt to commit, criminal solicitation to commit, or criminal conspiracy to commit an offense defined in any of those sections, opinion evidence, reputation evidence, or evidence of specific instances of the victim's prior sexual conduct with the defendant or any other person, evidence of a victim's prior allegations of sexual conduct with the defendant or any other person, which allegations the victim asserts to be true, or evidence offered by the defendant concerning prior allegations of sexual conduct by the victim with the defendant or any other person if the victim denies making the allegations is not admissible by the defendant, either through direct examination of any defense witness or through cross-examination of the victim or other prosecution witness, to attack the credibility of the victim, to prove consent or any other defense, or for any other purpose.

(c) Notwithstanding the prohibition contained in subsection (b) of this rule, evidence directly pertaining to the act upon which the prosecution is based or evidence of the victim's prior sexual conduct with the defendant or any other person may be admitted at the trial if the relevancy of the evidence is determined in the following manner:

(1) A written motion shall be filed by the defendant with the court at any time prior to the time the defense rests stating that the defendant has an offer of relevant evidence prohibited by subsection (b) of this rule and the purpose for which the evidence is believed relevant.

(2)(A) A hearing on the motion shall be held in camera no later than three (3) days before the trial is scheduled to begin, or at such later time as the court may for good cause permit.

(B) A written record shall be made of the in camera hearing and shall be furnished to the appellate court on appeal.

(C) If, following the in camera hearing, the court determines that the offered proof is relevant to a fact in issue, and that its probative value outweighs its inflammatory or prejudicial nature, the court shall make a written order stating what evidence, if any, may be introduced by the defendant and the nature of the questions to be permitted in accordance with the applicable rules of evidence.

(3)(A) If the court determines that some or all of the offered proof is relevant to a fact in issue, the victim shall be told of the court's order and given the opportunity to consult in private with the prosecuting attorney.

(B) If the prosecuting attorney is satisfied that the order substantially prejudices the prosecution of the case, an interlocutory appeal on behalf of the state may be taken in accordance with Arkansas Rule of Appellate Procedure—Criminal 3.

(d) In the event the defendant has not filed a written motion or a written motion has been filed and the court has determined that the offered proof is not relevant to a fact in issue, any willful attempt by counsel or a defendant to make any reference to the evidence prohibited by subsection (b) of this rule in the presence of the jury may subject counsel or a defendant to appropriate sanctions by the court.

Admissibility in Criminal Case, Under Rule 412 of Federal Rules of Evidence, of Evidence of Victim's Past Sexual Behavior. 15 ALR Fed. 3d Art. 1 (2016).

CASE NOTES

Evidence Properly Denied.

Circuit court did not err by ruling that the rape-shield rule prevented defendant from impeaching the victim with recanted prior allegations of sexual assault against a third party because requiring the victim to publicly air earlier, unrelated sexual conduct was what the rule was designed to prevent. Turnbo v. State, 2021 Ark. 166, 629 S.W.3d 797 (2021).

Supreme Court could not say that the trial court committed reversible error in concluding that the language of Ark. R. Evid. 411 warranted exclusion of evidence of a sexual relationship between the victim and another minor, who testified at trial; although the sexual relationship may have suggested bias or a motivation to lie, evidence was admitted that the two were close friends, and the Rule 411 balancing test requires suppression whenever the probative value of the evidence is outweighed by its prejudicial effect. Mouton v. State, 2018 Ark. 187, 547 S.W.3d 76, cert. denied, 139 S. Ct. 289, 202 L. Ed. 2d 137 (2018).

Application of Ark. R. Evid. 411 did not violate defendant's constitutional right to present a complete defense where there was testimony that the victim had disclosed the sexual misconduct allegations to the minor witness approximately one year before the alleged motivation to fabricate arose (to retaliate for the firing of a school volunteer), and the only evidence suggesting that the prior disclosure was never made was defendant's trial testimony denying that anything improper occurred.

Mouton v. State, 2018 Ark. 187, 547 S.W.3d 76, cert. denied, 139 S. Ct. 289, 202 L. Ed. 2d 137 (2018).

Motions by Defendant.

Trial court properly disallowed questions about another man's DNA on the victim's sheets because the prosecutor did not "open the door" by inquiring about the victim's DNA, defendant's relevancy argument was not preserved for appeal, and defendant did not file a written motion to the trial court for its consideration. Gipson v. State, 2013 Ark. App. 651 (2013).

Reputation for Dishonesty.

Circuit court erred by excluding under this rule the testimony of a witness as to the alleged sexual assault victim's reputation for dishonesty because the plain language of this rule prohibits the defendant, not the State, from introducing evidence of a witness's sexual history, and the State could have impeached the witness with his past sexual assault conviction, without reference to the fact that defendant's alleged victim was also the victim of the witness. However, the error did not result in prejudice, as the testimony would have been cumulative to other testimony. Taffner v. State, 2018 Ark. 99, 541 S.W.3d 430 (2018).

Federal Privileges.

The reference to privilege in this rule includes the Fifth Amendment privilege. Echols v. State, 326 Ark. 917, 936 S.W.2d 509 (1996), cert. denied, 520 U.S. 1244, 117 S. Ct. 1853, 137 L. Ed. 2d 1055 (1997).

Preventing Another from Being Witness.

In murder trial wife was a competent witness against defendant husband since the statutes prohibiting testimony of a wife against her husband in effect when the murder was committed had been repealed by § 2 of Acts 1975, No. 1143 which adopted the Uniform Rules of Evidence, this rule of which provides that no person has the privilege to prevent another from being a witness and Rule 504 of which limits the husband and wife privilege to confidential communications which were not involved. Huckaby v. State, 262 Ark. 413, 557 S.W.2d 875 (1977).

In a murder case, the trial court did not err by refusing to allow defendant to call a witness because the witness's attorney informed the court that the witness would exercise her right to remain silent throughout the course of the trial. Flanagan v. State, 368 Ark. 143, 243 S.W.3d 866 (2006).

Rule 502. Lawyer-client privilege.

(a) Definitions. As used in this rule:

(1) A "client" is a person, public officer, or corporation, association, or other organization or entity, either public or private, who is rendered professional legal services by a lawyer, or who consults a lawyer with a view to obtaining professional legal services from him.

(2) A "representative of the client" is one having authority to obtain professional legal services, or to act on advice rendered pursuant thereto, on behalf of the client.

(3) A "lawyer" is a person authorized, or reasonably believed by the client to be authorized, to engage in the practice of law in any state or nation.

(4) A "representative of the lawyer" is one employed by the lawyer to assist the lawyer in the rendition of professional legal services.

(5) A communication is "confidential" if not intended to be disclosed to third persons other than those to whom disclosure is made in furtherance of the rendition of professional legal services to the client or those reasonably necessary for the transmission of the communication.

(b) General Rule of Privilege. A client has a privilege to refuse to disclose and to prevent any other person from disclosing confidential communications made for the purpose of facilitating the rendition of professional legal services to the client (1) between himself or his representative and his lawyer or his lawyer's representative, (2) between his lawyer and the lawyer's representative, (3) by him or his representative or his lawyer or a representative of the lawyer to a lawyer or a representative of a lawyer representing another party in a pending action and concerning a matter of common interest therein, (4) between representatives of the client or between the client and a representative of the client, or (5) among lawyers and their representatives representing the same client.

(c) Who May Claim the Privilege. The privilege may be claimed by the client, his guardian or conservator, the personal representative of a deceased client, or the successor, trustee, or similar representative of a corporation, association, or other organization, whether or not in existence. The person who was the lawyer or the lawyer's representative at the time of the communication is presumed to have authority to claim the privilege but only on behalf of the client.

(d) Exceptions. There is no privilege under this rule:

(1) Furtherance of crime or fraud. If the services of the lawyer were sought or obtained to enable or aid anyone to commit or plan to commit what the client knew or reasonably should have known to be a crime or fraud;

(2) Claimants through same deceased client. As to a communication relevant to an issue between parties who claim through the same deceased client, regardless of whether the claims are by testate or intestate succession or by inter vivos transaction;

(3) Breach of duty by a lawyer or client. As to a communication relevant to an issue of breach of duty by the lawyer to his client or by the client to his lawyer;

(4) Document attested by a lawyer. As to a communication relevant to an issue concerning an attested document to which the lawyer is an attesting witness;

(5) Joint clients. As to a communication relevant to a matter of common interest between or among two [2] or more clients if the communication was made by any of them to a lawyer retained or consulted in common, when offered in an action between or among any of the clients; or

(6) Public officer or agency. As to a communication between a public officer or agency and its lawyers unless the communication concerns a pending investigation, claim, or action and the court determines that disclosure will seriously impair the ability of the public officer or agency to process the claim or conduct a pending investigation, litigation, or proceeding in the public interest.

(e) Inadvertent disclosure. A disclosure of a communication or information covered by the attorney-client privilege or the work-product doctrine does not operate as a waiver if the disclosing party follows the procedure specified in Rule 26(b)(5) of the Arkansas Rules of Civil Procedure and, in the event of a challenge by a receiving party, the circuit court finds in accordance with Rule 26(b)(5)(D) that there was no waiver.

(f) Selective waiver. Disclosure of a communication or information covered by the attorney-client privilege or the work-product doctrine to a governmental office or agency in the exercise of its regulatory, investigative, or enforcement authority does not operate as a waiver of the privilege or protection in favor of nongovernmental persons or entities.

HISTORY: Amended January 10, 2008.

Explanatory Note:

New subdivision (e) cross-references the 2007 amendment to Rule of Civil Procedure 26(b), which governs inadvertent disclosures of privileged or otherwise protected material during discovery.

Under new subdivision (f), disclosure of information covered by the attorney-client privilege or the work-product doctrine to a government agency conducting an investigation of the client does not constitute a general waiver of the information disclosed. In short, this provision adopts a rule of “selective waiver” consistent with the Eighth Circuit’s view that disclosure of protected information to the government does not constitute a general waiver, so that the information remains shielded from use by other parties. E.g., Diversified Industries, Inc. v. Meredith, 572 F.2d 596 (8th Cir. 1977).

This is the minority view among the federal circuits. Most have held that waiver of privileged or protected information to a government agency constitutes a waiver for all purposes. E.g., In re Quest Communications Intern, Inc., 450 F.3d 1179 (10th Cir. 2006). Others have recognized selective waiver only if the disclosure was made subject to a confidentiality agreement with the government agency. E.g., Teachers Insurance & Annuity Ass’n v. Shamrock Broadcasting Co., 521 F. Supp. 638 (S.D.N.Y. 1981).

Subdivision (f) adopts the Eighth Circuit’s position, which is also reflected in a draft that the Federal Advisory Committee on Evidence has published for public comment. See <http://www.uscourts.gov/rules/ExcerptEVReportPub.pdf#page=4>.

Breach of Duty.

Inasmuch as an attorney is not bound by an obligation of secrecy when he is accused of a breach of duty to his client, the testimony of an attorney who was accused of being a part of a scheme to deprive a client of her property was admissible in an action to set aside a deed. *Corzine v. corporations, and he was clearly not asserting privilege, on the corporations’ behalf, as a bar to his review of the records; and (3) a similarly situated shareholder/director also had not asserted attorney-client privilege on the corporations’ behalf and had agreed that the records could be produced for the subpoenaing party’s examination. *Sobba v. Defendant’s Actions.

Whether or not a defendant’s refusal to communicate with his attorney has any bearing on his unavailability for trial as described in Ark. R. Crim. P. 28.3, testimony by the attorney or his staff regarding possibly excludable periods held inadmissible under subsection (b) of this rule. Byrd v. State, 326 Ark. 10, 929 S.W.2d 151 (1996).

Freedom of Information Act.

This rule does not create an exception to the Freedom of Information Act, § 25-19-101 et seq., based on attorney-client privilege. Scott v. Smith, 292 Ark. 174, 728 S.W.2d 515 (1987).

Joint Clients.

Attorney-client privilege from disclosure on the issue of the reasonableness of the executor's fee was inapplicable where executor, in consulting with attorney before will was offered for probate, was necessarily acting for both himself as executor and for beneficiaries under the will. Estate of Torian v. Smith, 263 Ark. 304, 564 S.W.2d 521, cert. denied, 439 U.S. 883, 99 S. Ct. 223, 58 L. Ed. 2d 195 (1978).

Permitted Testimony.

Attorney permitted to testify regarding her observations of her client's treatment of client's children and the conditions in the home while attorney was a guest there. Nance v. Arkansas Dep't of Human Servs., 316 Ark. 43, 870 S.W.2d 721 (1994).

Prohibited Testimony.

Whether or not a defendant's refusal to communicate with his attorney has any bearing on his unavailability for trial as described in Ark. R. Crim. P. 28.3, testimony by the attorney or his staff regarding possibly excludable periods held inadmissible under subsection (b) of this rule. Byrd v. State, 326 Ark. 10, 929 S.W.2d 151 (1996).

Defendant was improperly convicted of failure to appear because the trial court erred by allowing a former attorney to testify regarding a phone call where defendant was advised of his court date; the communication between defendant and his former attorney was privileged. The former attorney's testimony was the only evidence in the record that defendant did not have a reasonable excuse for failure to appear based on lack of notice. Buckley v. State, 2014 Ark. App. 516, 443 S.W.3d 559 (2014).

Representative of Lawyer.

Communications between defendant and investigator, who was not employed by defendant's attorneys to render professional legal services, were not protected. Parkman v. State, 294 Ark. 339, 742 S.W.2d 927 (1988).

Paternity report concerning deceased client from National Paternity Laboratories to attorney was not a communication protected by the attorney-client privilege where blood tests were ordered by the county court and clearly National Paternity Laboratories did not qualify as a "representative of the lawyer." Ross v. Moore, 30 Ark. App. 207, 785 S.W.2d 243 (1990).

Scope of Privilege.

The attorney-client privilege is limited to, and has no application outside of court proceedings; thus, it cannot create an exception to a substantive act such as the disclosure of information which has become part of the public record. McCambridge v. City of Little Rock, 298 Ark. 219, 766 S.W.2d 909 (1989).

Statements made by employees at the request of their employer's attorney to inform their own attorney and their employer's attorney to facilitate the rendition of legal advice to both were absolutely privileged. Courteau v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 307 Ark. 513, 821 S.W.2d 45 (1991).

The attorney-client privilege only applies to confidential communications, not to those uttered in public or intended for disclosure to others or in fact disclosed by the client to others. Shankle v. State, 309 Ark. 40, 827 S.W.2d 642 (1992).

An attorney is incompetent to testify concerning any communication made to him by his clients, or his advice thereon, without his client's consent, and the rule as to privileged communications between attorney and client extends to statements of each to the other. Kinhead v. Union Nat'l Bank, 51 Ark. App. 4, 907 S.W.2d 154 (1995).

Where an accident reconstructionist was hired by an attorney representing a driver who was involved in a car accident, the accident reconstruction report and testimony of the accident reconstructionist's employee were confidential, privileged communications that could not be subpoenaed. Holt v. McCastlain, 357 Ark. 455, 182 S.W.3d 112 (2004).

Following an accident, auto company was not entitled to discover a statement made by driver to her insurer because the court believed that it was protected by attorney-client privilege; the driver was entitled to expect that her insurer would engage a lawyer to represent her, which meant that she was entitled to view her insurer as her representative for purposes of obtaining legal services. Schipp v. GMC, 457 F. Supp. 2d 917 (E.D. Ark. 2006).

Attorney-client privilege under Fed. R. Evid. 501 and subdivisions (a)(5), (b) and (d)(6) of this rule applied to communications between an attorney for defendants, a city, its mayor, city council, and two other individuals, and his clients at a meeting to discuss the pending litigation against defendants because those at the meeting attended in their capacities as city officials to assist in the litigation as representatives of the city, but the attorney-client privilege did not apply to communications between the attorney and defendants at a second meeting because (1) the city defendants failed to cite any precedent in support of their claim that the privilege applied to communications between the lawyer and the public client, even though the communications were made at a public meeting with non-parties present; (2) it was questionable whether the communications could be considered confidential when it was clear that no party intended them to remain undisclosed; and (3) even if the communications could be considered "confidential," the disclosure would not seriously impair the ability of the public officer or agency to conduct the litigation in the public interest. Club Props. v. City of Sherwood, No. 4:07-CV-00550 GTE, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10090 (E.D. Ark. Jan. 30, 2008).

Insured did not establish that alleged “mental impressions” of an insurer’s agents were discoverable, and the district court did not abuse its discretion by declaring the documents in question to be privileged as work product or under the attorney-client privilege. Jackson v. Allstate Ins. Co., 785 F.3d 1193 (8th Cir. 2015).

Waiver.

The attorney-client privilege belongs to the client, and the privilege may be waived; however, in the prosecution of defendant for the rape and incest of his children, the mother did not waive the attorney-client privilege by simply answering a question about whether she had been approached by anyone about visitation. Poyner v. State, 288 Ark. 402, 705 S.W.2d 882 (1986).

Trial court did not err by permitting an attorney to testify about a statement defendant made regarding the location of the victim’s body because defendant waived the attorney-client privilege by consenting to the attorney’s calling the police concerning a body on property belonging to defendant’s family. Vidos v. State, 367 Ark. 296, 239 S.W.3d 467 (2006).

Driver’s reliance on the rule did not convince the court that the evidence should have been excluded; as the attorney client privilege was waived, the trial court did not abuse its considerable discretion in this regard. Reed v. Adamec, 2014 Ark. App. 170 (2014).

It was unnecessary for the court to decide whether the privilege actually attached to a communication because even if it did, the driver clearly waived it, as she did not raise the privilege in deposition, and the disclosure that the referral to a doctor was made by counsel was produced with no objection based on privilege. Reed v. Adamec, 2014 Ark. App. 170 (2014).

Rule 503. Physician and psychotherapist-patient privilege.

(a) Definitions. As used in this rule:

(1) A “patient” is a person who consults or is examined or interviewed by a physician or psychotherapist.

(2) A “physician” is a person authorized to practice medicine in any state or nation, or reasonably believed by the patient so to be.

(3) A “psychotherapist” is (i) a person authorized to practice medicine in any state or nation, or reasonably believed by the patient so to be, while engaged in the diagnosis or treatment of a mental or emotional condition, including alcohol or drug addiction, or, (ii) a person licensed or certified as a psychologist under the laws of any state or nation, while similarly engaged.

(4) A communication is “confidential” if not intended to be disclosed to third persons, except persons present to further the interest of the patient in the consultation, examination, or interview, persons reasonably necessary for the transmission of the communication, or persons who are participating in the diagnosis and treatment under the direction of the physician or psychotherapist, including members of the patient’s family.

(5) A “medical record” is any writing, document or electronically stored information pertaining to or created as a result of treatment, diagnosis or examination of a patient.

(b) General Rule of Privilege. A patient has a privilege to refuse to disclose and to prevent any other person from disclosing his medical records or confidential communications made for the purpose of diagnosis or treatment of his physical, mental or emotional condition, including alcohol or drug addiction, among himself, physician or psychotherapist, and persons who are participating in the diagnosis or treatment under the direction of the physician or psychotherapist, including members of the patient’s family.

(c) Who May Claim the Privilege. The privilege may be claimed by the patient, his guardian or conservator, or the personal representative of a deceased patient. The person who was the physician or psychotherapist at the time of the communication is presumed to have authority to claim the privilege but only on behalf of the patient.

(d) Exceptions:

(1) Proceedings for hospitalization. There is no privilege under this rule for communications relevant to an issue in proceedings to hospitalize the patient for mental illness, if the psychotherapist in the course of diagnosis or treatment has determined that the patient is in need of hospitalization.

(2) Examination by order of court. If the court orders an examination of the physical, mental, or emotional condition of a patient, whether a party or a witness, communications made in the course thereof are not privileged under this rule with respect to the particular purpose for which the examination is ordered unless the court orders otherwise.

(3) Condition and element of claim or defense.

A. There is no privilege under this rule as to medical records or communications relevant to an issue of the physical, mental, or emotional condition of the patient in any proceeding in which he or she relies upon the condition as an element of his or her claim or defense, or, after the patient's death, in any proceeding in which any party relies upon the condition as an element of his or her claim or defense.

B. Any informal, ex parte contact or communication with the patient's physician or psychotherapist is prohibited, unless the patient expressly consents. The patient shall not be required, by order of court or otherwise, to authorize any communication with the physician or psychotherapist other than (i) the furnishing of medical records, and (ii) communications in the context of formal discovery procedures.

CASE NOTES

In General.

The enactment of the Uniform Rules of Evidence in 1976 significantly changed Arkansas law regarding physician/patient privilege. While the former law protected "any information," the new rule grants the privilege only to confidential communications. Oxford v. Hamilton, 297 Ark. 512, 763 S.W.2d 83 (1989).

Applicability.

This rule not only applies to criminal cases but civil as well. Baker v. State, 276 Ark. 193, 637 S.W.2d 522 (1982); Oxford v. Hamilton, 297 Ark. 512, 763 S.W.2d 83 (1989).

The psychotherapist-patient privilege applies in both criminal and civil cases and is inapplicable only when proceedings are initiated to hospitalize the patient for mental illness, when a mental examination is ordered by the court, or when the patient relies on his or her physical, mental, or emotional condition as an element of his or her claim or defense. Johnson v. State, 342 Ark. 186, 27 S.W.3d 405 (2000), cert. denied, 532 U.S. 944, 121 S. Ct. 1408, 149 L. Ed. 2d 350 (2001).

Subdivision (d)(3)(A) of this rule clearly anticipates that the privilege is inapplicable only as to a party to a proceeding who brings his or her own physical, mental, or emotional condition into issue; the subsection does not apply to a witness. Johnson v. State, 342 Ark. 186, 27 S.W.3d 405 (2000), cert. denied, 532 U.S. 944, 121 S. Ct. 1408, 149 L. Ed. 2d 350 (2001).

State inmate, who was convicted of capital murder, was not entitled to federal habeas relief based on the trial court's denial of the inmate's request for access to a witness's psychotherapy records, which the inmate wished to use for impeachment purposes. The inmate did not establish that the enforcement of the psychotherapist-patient privilege under this rule violated the inmate's Sixth Amendment right to confrontation or the Fourteenth Amendment Due Process Clause; there was no specific rule of federal law requiring the privilege to yield to an accused's desire to use confidential information in defense of a criminal case. Johnson v. Norris, 537 F.3d 840 (8th Cir. 2008), cert. denied, 555 U.S. 1182, 129 S. Ct. 1334, 173 L. Ed. 2d 605 (2009).

Defendant's conviction for second-degree sexual assault was appropriate because the victim was a victim and a witness and thus, the privilege was inapplicable to her. Castrellon v. State, 2013 Ark. App. 408, 428 S.W.3d 607 (2013).

In a case involving a physician's alleged violation of a covenant not to compete, a medical center opposing a subpoena duces tecum was not entitled to claim the physician-patient privilege on behalf of nonparty patients as it was neither a patient nor a physician as defined in subdivisions (a)(1) and (2) of this rule, and there was no argument that the center, as the physician's employer, was entitled to assert the privilege based on agency principles. Wash. Reg'l Med. Ctr. v. Northwest Physicians, LLC, 2018 Ark. App. 497, 562 S.W.3d 239 (2018).

Although the psychotherapist-patient privilege is waived if a party in a criminal proceeding brings his or her mental or physical condition into issue, a witness in a criminal case does not waive the psychotherapist-patient privilege by testifying as the State, not the witness, is the party in the criminal proceeding. Collins v. State, 2019 Ark. 110, 571 S.W.3d 469 (2019).

Even assuming that Rule 503 did not apply and that the circuit court erred in denying defendant's request to impeach a prosecution witness's credibility with extrinsic evidence of her mental disorder, any error was harmless;

the error, if any, was slight as the credibility of the witness was impeached by other evidence, such as her prior criminal history and inconsistencies in her prior statement, and there was overwhelming evidence of defendant's guilt through other evidence. Collins v. State, 2019 Ark. 110, 571 S.W.3d 469 (2019).

Blood Test.

The result of a blood test is not a confidential communication and is properly admitted into evidence. Oxford v. Hamilton, 297 Ark. 512, 763 S.W.2d 83 (1989); McVay v. State, 312 Ark. 73, 847 S.W.2d 28 (1993).

Child Custody and Visitation Cases.

Appellate court declined to adopt a blanket exception to patient-physician privilege concerning a parent's mental stability when custody and visitation are at issue, and held that the circuit court did not abuse its discretion in denying the wife's motion to compel production of the husband's medical records. Friedly v. Friedly, 2020 Ark. App. 167, 597 S.W.3d 135 (2020).

Communications Not Privileged.

Where, in a prosecution for obtaining a controlled substance from a pharmacy by forgery, the evidence indicated that in the course of being treated by her physician, the defendant had obtained several blank prescriptions from his office and falsely obtained drugs in addition to those schedule II drugs he had prescribed for her, the physician's testimony concerning his contact with her was not excluded under this rule because of the physician-patient privilege. Finney v. State, 3 Ark. App. 180, 623 S.W.2d 847 (1981).

This rule, which replaced the much stricter privilege statute, § 28-607 (repealed), does not grant a privilege to "any information" as was granted under the former statute, but only to "communications" between the patient and doctor, and confidential ones at that; therefore, the trial court did not err when it admitted evidence of the fact that the defendant in an aggravated robbery and rape prosecution had been treated for venereal disease while in jail awaiting trial. Baker v. State, 276 Ark. 193, 637 S.W.2d 522 (1982).

The psychotherapist-patient privilege of this rule is limited to protecting only confidential communications between doctor and patient; this rule does not prohibit testimony identifying a patient's medical treatment. Horne v. State, 12 Ark. App. 301, 677 S.W.2d 856 (1984).

Communications made to a psychiatrist during a court ordered examination were not privileged where the forensic report was used for the limited purpose of impeaching the appellant's clearly contradictory statements made at the state hospital. Randleman v. State, 310 Ark. 411, 837 S.W.2d 449 (1992), cert. denied, 507

U.S. 985, 113 S. Ct. 1582, 123 L. Ed. 2d 149 (1993).

Appellant's Fifth Amendment right against self-incrimination and her Fourteenth Amendment due process rights were not violated by the use of the psychiatric forensic report to impeach her testimony. Randleman v. State, 310 Ark. 411, 837 S.W.2d 449 (1992), cert. denied, 507 U.S. 985, 113 S. Ct. 1582, 123 L. Ed. 2d 149 (1993).

Defendant's communications to doctor in rape case were not privileged where doctor explained to defendant that he would report his findings to the prosecuting attorney's office and the Department of Human Services. Hinzman v. State, 53 Ark. App. 256, 922 S.W.2d 725 (1996).

Communications Privileged.

Defendant had no right to the victim's private psychiatric records from, as the victim asserted her right to keep those records confidential. Turnbo v. State, 2021 Ark. 166, 629 S.W.3d 797 (2021).

A patient has a privilege to prevent any other person from disclosing confidential communications made for the purpose of diagnosis or treatment of his mental or emotional condition among himself, psychotherapist and persons who are participating in the diagnosis or treatment under the direction of the psychotherapist, including the patient's family. Gruzen v. State, 367 Ark. 380, 591 S.W.2d 342 (1979), cert. denied, 449 U.S. 852, 101 S. Ct. 144, 66 L. Ed. 2d 64 (1980).

Trial court did not err by ruling that a therapist's testimony was barred by privilege because: (1) one victim admitted on cross-examination what she told the therapist after the state played a video of her conversation with the therapist; (2) defendant's argument that the second victim's statements to the therapist were not privileged, as they were part of a forensic investigation, was misplaced because on direct examination the therapist testified that the DHS worker or foster parents were involved in the family sessions she conducted; and (3) under Ark. R. Evid. 511 the privilege was not defeated by disclosure to the prosecutor. White v. State, 367 Ark. 595, 242 S.W.3d 240 (2006), cert. denied, 550 U.S. 904, 127 S. Ct. 2114, 167 L. Ed. 2d 815 (2007).

Trial court did not err in denying defendant access to one of the victim's records of treatment after the trial court conducted in camera reviews of the records and concluded that the intake forms stood in contradiction to the victim's pretrial testimony as to the timing of his disclosure of abuse but contained no other exculpatory material. Holland v. State, 2015 Ark. 341, 471 S.W.3d 179 (2015), cert. denied, 578 U.S. 1004, 136 S. Ct. 2448, 195 L. Ed. 2d 266 (2016).

In a sexual assault case, the victim's therapy records and communications were privileged and the disclosure to the circuit court did not waive the privilege. The prosecution clearly stated that the victim did not waive the privilege and emphasized that it did not have access to the records until the court ordered production. Vaughn v. State, 2020 Ark. 313, 608 S.W.3d 569 (2020), cert. denied, 141 S. Ct. 2569, 209 L. Ed. 2d 592 (2021).

Communications With Physician.

Subdivision (d)(3)(B) of this rule by its plain language forbids ex parte communication with a patient's physician in the absence of the patient's consent and, therefore, a circuit court erred when it ordered that the defendants in a medical malpractice case could call as an expert witness one of the plaintiff's treating physicians. Kraemer v. Patterson, 342 Ark. 481, 29 S.W.3d 684 (2000).

In a medical malpractice and wrongful death action, the trial court should have disqualified opposing counsel based on his communications with a mother's doctor under subdivision (d)(3)(B) of this rule or Ark. R. Civ. P. 35(c)(2) because opposing counsel's advice to and communication with a second doctor were in service to the second doctor. Bulsara v. Watkins, 2009 Ark. App. 409, 319 S.W.3d 274 (2009), dismissed without prejudice, Ketan Bulsara v. Watkins, 2010 Ark. 453 (2010), superseded, 2012 Ark. 108, 387 S.W.3d 165 (2012).

Construction.

Court's deference to legislation involving rules of evidence and procedure will be given only to the extent the legislation is compatible with established rules, and when conflicts arise which compromise these rules, the rules remain supreme; thus, rules regarding the admissibility of evidence such as that covered by § 12-12-511 [repealed], prevail. State v. Syputl, 304 Ark. 5, 800 S.W.2d 402 (1990).

The legislature designed § 16-46-304 to be in accord with the other "physician privilege" statute, i.e., this rule, by limiting the privilege to confidential communications. McVay v. State, 312 Ark. 73, 847 S.W.2d 28 (1993).

The psychotherapist-patient privilege preempts the need to discover all admissible evidence. Johnson v. State, 342 Ark. 186, 27 S.W.3d 405 (2000), cert. denied, 532 U.S. 944, 121 S. Ct. 1408, 149 L. Ed. 2d 350 (2001).

Victim was not a party to a criminal prosecution; thus, a minor victim and the minor's mother were not parties to a delinquency proceeding for purposes of the exception to physician-patient privilege outlined in subdivision (d)(3)(A) of this rule. State v. K.B., 2010 Ark. 228, 379 S.W.3d 471 (2010).

Hearing.

This rule does not mandate that a hearing be initially closed; consequently, the trial court erred in holding that the mere existence of the physician patient privilege mandated a closed hearing. Arkansas State Medical Bd. v. Leonard, 267 Ark. 61, 590 S.W.2d 849 (1979).

Intoxication.

Where defendant's defense to a driving while intoxicated (DWI) charge would be that he smelled of alcohol because beer cans in the car had ruptured and spilled over him at the time of the collision, defendant waived his privilege under subdivision (d)(3) of this rule. McVay v. State, 312 Ark. 73, 847 S.W.2d 28 (1993).

Even if communications are privileged, they are admissible under the exception under subsection (d) of this rule if the defendant asserts the defense of involuntary intoxication, since by doing so, he places his mental condition in issue and thereby waives the privilege. Cavin v. State, 313 Ark. 238, 855 S.W.2d 285 (1993).

Motion to Quash.

Writ of certiorari was proper, because the court erred in denying the husband's motion to quash several subpoenas concerning his medical records, when the husband was not a party to the underlying custody dispute, the husband did nothing to bring his medical condition into issue, and the husband's mental health was examined through other admissible evidence; a nonparty's medical records could not be subpoenaed under the circumstances presented in the instant case. McKenzie v. Pierce, 2012 Ark. 190, 403 S.W.3d 565 (2012).

Nurses.

While a confidential communication with a nurse can fall within this rule's privilege, subsection (b) of this rule does not grant a privilege to all information or communication between the patient and the health provider. Cavin v. State, 313 Ark. 238, 855 S.W.2d 285 (1993).

Where defendant called two mental health facilities, and spoke to two nurses on the telephone about his participation in a murder, even though defendant had previously been a psychiatric patient at both facilities, when he made these phone calls, no confidential relationship had been established; defendant's statements were not made to the nurses in their professional capacity, nor made for the purpose of treatment, and as such, these were not confidential communications. Cavin v. State, 313 Ark. 238, 855 S.W.2d 285 (1993).

Preservation for Review.

Although defendant argued the circuit court erred in denying his motion in limine to suppress statements he made to his psychotherapist and the medical records pertaining to his treatment, defendant's argument was not properly preserved for appellate review. Defendant cited the circuit court to a case for a proposition different than that asserted on appeal, and the Supreme Court could not say that the mere citation of that case preserved for appeal any and every legal argument based thereon, even if not articulated to the circuit court. Riley v. State, 2012 Ark. 462 (2012).

Purpose.

The policy behind the physician-patient privilege is to encourage patients to communicate openly with their physicians and to prevent the physicians from revealing the infirmities of the patient. Finney v. State, 3 Ark. App. 180, 623 S.W.2d 847 (1981).

Waiver.

If a statement to a psychotherapist is not made for the purpose of diagnosis or treatment, it is not privileged. If it is made for either of those purposes, it is privileged, but the privilege can be waived by claiming mental disease or defect as a defense to a criminal prosecution. Davasher v. State, 308 Ark. 154, 823 S.W.2d 863, cert. denied, 504 U.S. 976, 112 S. Ct. 2948, 119 L. Ed. 2d 571 (1992).

The waiver of the psychotherapist-patient privilege by a witness at the first trial does not require that it be deemed waived at a subsequent retrial. Johnson v. State, 342 Ark. 186, 27 S.W.3d 405 (2000), cert. denied, 532 U.S. 944, 121 S. Ct. 1408, 149 L. Ed. 2d 350 (2001).

Rule 504. Husband-wife privilege.

(a) Definition. A communication is confidential if it is made privately by any person to his or her spouse and is not intended for disclosure to any other person.

(b) General Rule of Privilege. An accused in a criminal proceeding has a privilege to prevent his spouse from testifying as to any confidential communication between the accused and the spouse.

(c) Who May Claim the Privilege. The privilege may be claimed by the accused or by the spouse on behalf of the accused. The authority of the spouse to do so is presumed.

(d) Exceptions. There is no privilege under this rule in a proceeding in which one [1] spouse is charged with a crime against the person or property of (1) the other, (2) a child of either, (3) a person residing in the household of either, or (4) a third person committed in the course of committing a crime against any of them.

CASE NOTES

Applicability.

Subsection (b) of this rule did not apply where former wife did not testify at trial about any confidential communications made by defendant. Kidd v. State, 330 Ark. 479, 955 S.W.2d 505 (1997).

Authority of Court.

Change in law by this rule was an evidentiary matter, not one of substantive law, and as such, was within the court's rule-making authority. Parette v. State, 301 Ark. 607, 786 S.W.2d 817 (1990).

Communication Not Privileged.

In trial of husband for capital murder committed by his wife in stealing car to aid her husband in escaping from jail, it was proper for the state to impeach the wife's testimony by using testimony from her trial concerning the escape plan since the conversations between the wife and husband which occurred while he was in jail, were conducted through the jail window and were overheard by at least one other prisoner, so that they were not privileged confidential husband-wife conversations. Sumlin v. State, 273 Ark. 185, 617 S.W.2d 372 (1981).

The trial court in a murder prosecution properly allowed the defendant's wife to testify that after the defendant shot the victim, the defendant told her to tell the police that the victim had attacked her and that the defendant killed the victim in an effort to rescue her. Subsection (a) of this rule provides that a spousal communication is privileged only if it is not intended to be disclosed to any other person; here the fabricated story was intended to be disclosed to the police and therefore was not privileged. David v. State, 286 Ark. 205, 691 S.W.2d 133 (1985).

Where criminal proceedings had not begun when wife reported defendant's statement and she did not testify at trial, communication was not privileged. Halfacre v. State, 292 Ark. 331, 731 S.W.2d 179 (1987).

Where, following defendant's arrest, his wife visited him at the county jail and he told her "to dispose of some shells in their apartment or call his sister and get her to do something with them", the court held the statement was not confidential since it was intended for disclosure to defendant's sister. Findley v. State, 307 Ark. 53, 818 S.W.2d 242 (1991).

Letters written by defendant to his wife were not excluded from evidence on the basis of the marital privilege; the letters were admissible because defendant was charged with committing a crime against a person who resided in the couple's home. Munson v. State, 331 Ark. 41, 959 S.W.2d 391 (1998).

Statements made by appellant to his wife in letters were not confidential because the statements were intended for his wife to fabricate a story, to continue the fabrication, or to establish an alibi; these directions were intended for disclosure to a third party and, therefore, were not privileged communications. Ridling v. State, 360 Ark. 424, 203 S.W.3d 63 (2005).

In a murder trial, the court properly allowed defendant's wife to testify against him where defendant's communication to his wife about how she should act and what she should not disclose to the police was exempt from the privilege; further, by making statements to the police, defendant waived his privilege as he disclosed a significant part of the privileged matter. MacKool v. State, 365 Ark. 416, 231 S.W.3d 676 (2006).

Court did not err by allowing defendant's spouse to testify over defendant's marital privilege objections where one statement was made by defendant to his son, rather than his spouse, and other family members heard defendant say to his spouse that he had to go help his son, who was a suspect in the murders, thus, those statements were not confidential and did not constitute protected communications; further, one statement was an attempt to have the spouse fabricate a story as to defendant's and his son's whereabouts and were intended for the spouse to establish an alibi. Green v. State, 365 Ark. 478, 231 S.W.3d 638 (2006).

Confidential Communication.

In murder trial wife was a competent witness against defendant husband since the statutes prohibiting testimony of a wife against her husband in effect when the murder was committed had been repealed by § 2 of Acts 1975, No. 1143 which adopted the Uniform Rules of Evidence, Rule 501 of which provides that no person has the privilege to prevent another from being a witness and this rule which limits the husband and wife privilege to confidential communications which were not involved. Huckaby v. State, 262 Ark. 413, 557 S.W.2d 875 (1977).

In a prosecution for murder, the defendant's wife can be required to testify for the state where she is not asked to disclose any confidential communications. Metcalf v. State, 284 Ark. 223, 681 S.W.2d 344 (1984).

In a criminal trial for murder, the trial court erred by allowing defendant's wife to testify that defendant told her that he was going to "kill the other guy" as the statement was a privileged interspousal communication; however, the error was harmless in light of the overwhelming evidence of defendant's guilt. Walker v. State, 91 Ark. App. 300, 210 S.W.3d 157 (2005).

Invoking Privilege.

A trial court erred in invoking the husband-wife privilege for a prosecuting witness since such a privilege can only be exercised by the defendant in a criminal case. Scott v. State, 263 Ark. 669, 566 S.W.2d 737 (1978).

Because defendant and his wife were permanently separated without any semblance of a marital relationship at the time of the communication of information about a robbery, defendant was not entitled to invoke the privilege. United States v. Jackson, 939 F.2d 625 (8th Cir. 1991).

Residing in the Household.

Minor victim who was visiting her sister and brother-in-law for a week was "residing in the household" for the purposes of subdivision (d)(3) of this rule; the victim's temporary residence with the couple presented the same opportunity to the defendant brother-in-law that he would have had if the victim had intended to remain in the household indefinitely. Munson v. State, 331 Ark. 41, 959 S.W.2d 391 (1998).

Confidential statements fell within an exception, because the victim had been residing in the household of defendant and his wife. Colins v. State, 2013 Ark. App. 399 (2013).

Reversal of Conviction.

Where the invalidity of the statute adopting the Rules of Evidence was properly raised at the trial, the defendant's wife should not have been allowed to testify for the state under subsection (b) of this rule, as the earlier rule prohibiting a spouse from testifying against the other spouse should have been applied; therefore, the defendant's conviction was reversed. Ricarte v. State, 290 Ark. 100, 717 S.W.2d 488 (1986).

Where the issue in the trial court was limited to whether the wife's testimony was a confidential communication within the meaning of this rule, the petitioner was not entitled to a reversal of his conviction because his wife was permitted to testify against him at trial; Ricarte v. State, 290 Ark. 100, 717 S.W.2d 488 (1986), which held that the Rules of Evidence were not validly adopted by the Legislature, provides a remedy only when the issue of the validity of the uniform rules was raised in the trial court. Halfacre v. State, 290 Ark. 312, 718 S.W.2d 945 (1986).

Waiver.

Wife voluntarily waived the adverse testimony privilege where she was questioned outside the jury's presence to determine whether marital privilege protected her testimony and she stated that she and the defendant had nothing resembling a marital relationship after their separation, but they might still be legally married, and she then agreed to testify for the government. United States v. Jackson, 939 F.2d 625 (8th Cir. 1991).

In a capital murder trial, the spousal communication privilege did not prevent defendant's wife from testifying that she overheard him confess to a third party that he accidentally shot the victim; defendant waived the privilege by disclosing the matter to someone other than his spouse. Barrett v. State, 354 Ark. 187, 119 S.W.3d 485 (2003).

Under Ark. R. Evid. 510, defendant waived any spousal privilege available because he testified extensively about what he said to his wife on the night of the shooting for which defendant was on trial; further, defendant could not use an initial ruling to exclude marital communications as a means to commit perjury by way of a defense. Ross v. State, 96 Ark. App. 385, 242 S.W.3d 298 (2006).

Rule 505. Religious privilege.

(a) Definitions. As used in this rule:

(1) A “clergyman” is a minister, priest, rabbi, accredited Christian Science Practitioner, or other similar functionary of a religious organization, or an individual reasonably believed so to be by the person consulting him.

(2) A communication is “confidential” if made privately and not intended for further disclosure except to other persons present in furtherance of the purpose of the communication.

(b) General Rule of Privilege. A person has a privilege to refuse to disclose and to prevent another from disclosing a confidential communication by the person to a clergyman in his professional character as spiritual adviser.

(c) Who May Claim the Privilege. The privilege may be claimed by the person, by his guardian or conservator, or by his personal representative if he is deceased. The person who was the clergyman at the time of the communication is presumed to have authority to claim the privilege but only on behalf of the communicant.

CASE NOTESCommunication Not Privileged.

Where the clergyman sought out the defendant to confront him with the allegations of sexual abuse conveyed to him by the parents of two of the victims, although the clergyman had counseled with the defendant on previous occasions, the clergyman did not consider it to be a counseling session, but disciplinary in nature, evidence supported the trial court’s decision that it was not spiritual counseling, precluding the defendant from excluding the clergyman’s testimony at trial. Magar v. State, 308 Ark. 380, 826 S.W.2d 221 (1992).

Where witness was defendant’s employer, brother-in-law, and friend, and there was no evidence of ongoing counseling between witness and defendant which witness agreed to keep confidential, the communication was not made to witness in his capacity as a spiritual advisor. Bonds v. State, 310 Ark. 541, 837 S.W.2d 881 (1992).

Any error in the finding that communications between defendant and his pastor were not privileged was harmless because defendant himself testified about what he said to the pastor, the pastor was also defendant’s friend, and there was no evidence that defendant had expected that the communication would be kept confidential. Ross v. State, 96 Ark. App. 385, 242 S.W.3d 298 (2006).

Waiver.

Where defendant confessed murder to numerous other people as well as to minister, he waived his right to have confession to minister remain privileged. Perry v. State, 280 Ark. 36, 655 S.W.2d 380 (1983).

Rule 506. Political vote.

(a) General Rule of Privilege. Every person has a privilege to refuse to disclose the tenor of his vote at a political election conducted by secret ballot.

(b) Exceptions. This privilege does not apply if the court finds that the vote was cast illegally or determines that the disclosure should be compelled pursuant to the election laws of the State.

Rule 507. Trade secrets.

A person has a privilege, which may be claimed by him or his agent or employee, to refuse to disclose and to prevent other persons from disclosing a trade secret owned by him, if the allowance of the privilege will not tend to conceal fraud or otherwise work injustice. If disclosure is directed, the court shall take such protective measures as the interest of the holder of the privilege and of the parties and the interests of justice require.

Rule 508. Secrets of state and other official information -- Governmental privileges.

(a) If the law of the United States creates a governmental privilege that the courts of this State must recognize under the Constitution of the United States, the privilege may be claimed as provided by the law of the United States.

(b) No other governmental privilege is recognized except as created by the Constitution or statutes of this State.

(c) Effect of sustaining claim. If a claim of governmental privilege is sustained and it appears that a party is thereby deprived of material evidence, the court shall make any further orders the interests of justice require, including striking the testimony of a witness, declaring a mistrial, finding upon an issue as to which the evidence is relevant, or dismissing the action.

Rule 509. Identity of informer.

(a) Rule of Privilege. The United States or a state or subdivision thereof has a privilege to refuse to disclose the identity of a person who has furnished information relating to or assisting in an investigation of a possible violation of a law to a law enforcement officer or member of a legislative committee or its staff conducting an investigation.

(b) Who May Claim. The privilege may be claimed by an appropriate representative of the public entity to which the information was furnished.

(1) Voluntary disclosure; informer a witness. No privilege exists under this rule if the identity of the informer or his interest in the subject matter of his communication has been disclosed to those who would have cause to resent the communication by a holder of the privilege or by the informer's own action, or if the informer appears as a witness for the government.

(2) Testimony on relevant issue. If it appears in the case that an informer may be able to give testimony relevant to any issue in a criminal case or to a fair determination of a material issue on the merits in a civil case to which a public entity is a party, and the informed public entity invokes the privilege, the court shall give the public entity an opportunity to show in camera facts relevant to determining whether the informer can, in fact, supply that testimony. The showing will ordinarily be in the form of affidavits, but the court may direct that testimony be taken if it finds that the matter cannot be resolved satisfactorily upon affidavit. If the court finds there is a reasonable probability that the informer can give the testimony, and the public entity elects not to disclose his identity, in criminal cases the court on motion of the defendant or on its own motion shall grant appropriate relief, which may include one or more of the following: requiring the prosecuting attorney to comply, granting the defendant additional time or a continuance, relieving the defendant from making disclosures otherwise required of him, prohibiting the prosecuting attorney from introducing specified evidence, and dismissing charges. In civil cases, the court may make any order the interests of justice require. Evidence submitted to the court shall be sealed and preserved to be made available to the appellate court in the event of an appeal, and the contents shall not otherwise be revealed without consent of the informed public entity. All counsel and parties are permitted to be present at every stage of proceedings under this subdivision except a showing in camera at which no counsel or party shall be permitted to be present.

CASE NOTES

Identity of Informer Privileged.

Where there was no proof that more than one individual was involved in the robbery, the fact that the informant may have gotten his information shortly after the event was not sufficient to strip away the protection the law gives to informants not otherwise connected with the crime. Treadway v. State, 287 Ark. 441, 700 S.W.2d 364 (1985).

Rule 510. Waiver of privilege by voluntary disclosure.

A person upon whom these rules confer a privilege against disclosure waives the privilege if he or his predecessor while holder of the privilege voluntarily discloses or consents to disclosure of any significant part of the privileged matter. This rule does not apply if the disclosure itself is privileged.

CASE NOTES

Husband-Wife Privilege.

The husband-wife privilege was waived by the defendant in a murder prosecution and, therefore, his wife was properly permitted to testify that he told her that he had killed the two victims where another witness testified that, while they were both incarcerated, the defendant told him that he had killed the victims and described the killings to him, notwithstanding that the defendant denied that he had made such statements to the witness. Dansby v. State, 338 Ark. 697, 1 S.W.3d 403 (1999).

In a capital murder trial, the spousal communication privilege did not prevent defendant's wife from testifying that she overheard him confess to a third party that he accidentally shot the victim; defendant waived the privilege by disclosing the matter to someone other than his spouse. Barrett v. State, 354 Ark. 187, 119 S.W.3d 485 (2003).

In a murder trial, the court properly allowed defendant's wife to testify against him where defendant's communication to his wife about how she should act and what she should not disclose to the police was exempt from the privilege; further, by making statements to the police, defendant waived his privilege as he disclosed a significant part of the privileged matter. MacKool v. State, 365 Ark. 416, 231 S.W.3d 676 (2006).

Court did not err by allowing defendant's spouse to testify over defendant's marital privilege objections where one statement was made by defendant to his son, rather than his spouse, and other family members heard defendant say to his spouse that he had to go help his son, who was a suspect in the murders, thus, those statements were not confidential and did not constitute protected communications; further, one statement was an attempt to have the spouse fabricate a story as to defendant's and his son's whereabouts and were intended for the spouse to establish an alibi. Green v. State, 365 Ark. 478, 231 S.W.3d 638 (2006).

Defendant waived any spousal privilege available under Ark. R. Evid. 504(b) because defendant testified extensively about what he said to his wife on the night of the shooting for which defendant was on trial; further, defendant could not use an initial ruling to exclude marital communications as a means to commit perjury by way of a defense. Ross v. State, 96 Ark. App. 385, 242 S.W.3d 298 (2006).

Religious Privilege.

Where defendant confessed murder to numerous other people as well as to minister, he waived his right to have confession to minister remain privileged. Perry v. State, 280 Ark. 36, 655 S.W.2d 380 (1983).

CASE NOTES

Evidence Properly Excluded.

Trial court did not err by ruling that a therapist's testimony was barred by privilege under Ark. R. Evid. 503 because: (1) one victim admitted on cross-examination what she told the therapist after the state played a video of her conversation with the therapist; (2) defendant's argument that the second victim's statements to the therapist were not privileged, as they were part of a forensic investigation, was misplaced because on direct examination the therapist testified that the DHS worker or foster parents were involved in the family sessions she conducted; and (3) under this rule the privilege was not defeated by disclosure to the prosecutor. White v. State, 367 Ark. 595, 242 S.W.3d 240 (2006), cert. denied, 550 U.S. 904, 127 S. Ct. 2114, 167 L. Ed. 2d 815 (2007).

Rule 512. Comment upon or inference from claim of privilege -- Instruction.

(a) Comment or Inference Not Permitted. The claim of a privilege, whether in the present proceeding or upon a prior occasion, is not a proper subject of comment by judge or counsel. No inference may be drawn therefrom.

(b) Claiming Privilege Without Knowledge of Jury. In jury cases, proceedings shall be conducted, to the extent practicable, so as to facilitate the making of claims of privilege without the knowledge of the jury.

(c) Jury Instruction. Upon request, any party against whom the jury might draw an adverse inference from a claim or privilege is entitled to an instruction that no inference may be drawn therefrom.

CASE NOTES

Federal Privileges.

The reference to privilege in subsection (b) of this rule includes the Fifth Amendment privilege. Echols v. State, 326 Ark. 917, 936 S.W.2d 509 (1996), cert. denied, 520 U.S. 1244, 117 S. Ct. 1853, 137 L. Ed. 2d 1055 (1997).

Prejudice.

The prejudice this rule seeks to avoid is dissipated when the claim to privilege has not been sustained and the jury can actually hear and evaluate the testimony to which the privilege claim was directed; thus, any prejudice from a remark pertaining only to an unsuccessful attempt to claim a privilege was minimal at best. Johnson v. State, 298 Ark. 617, 770 S.W.2d 123 (1989).

In a tort action for inter alia, assault and battery, the court did not err in refusing to grant a mistrial on the basis of statements referring to the defendant's claim of his right to remain silent and his request for an attorney. Edwards v. Stills, 335 Ark. 470, 984 S.W.2d 366 (1998).

Witnesses.

A witness should not be compelled to invoke his Fifth Amendment privilege in front of the jury, and if forced to take the stand and invoke the privilege against self-incrimination question by question any probative value would be substantially outweighed by the possibility of confusing the jury. Echols v. State, 326 Ark. 917, 936 S.W.2d 509 (1996), cert. denied, 520 U.S. 1244, 117 S. Ct. 1853, 137 L. Ed. 2d 1055 (1997).

CASE NOTES

In General.

The trial court must begin with the presumption that every person is competent to be a witness. Jackson v. State, 290 Ark. 375, 720 S.W.2d 282 (1986).

Attorney as Witness.

An attorney who handled the insured corporation's claim against its insurance carrier arising out of conduct involving the handling of a claim for damages resulting from a fire, and who continued to represent the insured corporation in other suits brought against it, could testify in the retrial of the action against the insurer and also share in the contingent fee agreement provided that he completely withdrew from participation in the case other than as a witness. Aetna Cas. & Sur. Co. v. Broadway Arms Corp., 281 Ark. 128, 664 S.W.2d 463 (1984).

Burden of Proof.

The party alleging a witness is incompetent has the burden of persuasion. King v. State, 317 Ark. 293, 877 S.W.2d 583 (1994).

Child Witness.

Although the seven-year-old victim was hesitant and used child-like, but understandable words, the court could not conclude from her testimony that she did not understand the nature of an oath or the consequences of false swearing, or that she lacked the ability to receive or retain accurate impressions or transmit them to the fact finder; the mere fact that she did not answer some questions put to her and gave some inconsistent responses did not mean that she was not a competent witness. Chappell v. State, 18 Ark. App. 26, 710 S.W.2d 214 (1986); Conley v. State, 20 Ark. App. 56, 723 S.W.2d 841 (1987).

In a child-rape case, the matter of the competency of the child is primarily for the trial judge to decide, as he is better able than the appellate court to judge the child's intelligence and understanding of the necessity for telling the truth. It is the duty of the trial judge to evaluate the competency of a witness throughout her testimony and not to rely entirely upon preliminary questioning. Conley v. State, 20 Ark. App. 56, 723 S.W.2d 841 (1987); McArdell

v. State, 38 Ark. App. 261, 833 S.W.2d 786 (1992).

Mere inconsistencies or hesitation in testimony may affect the credibility of a child witness, but not her competency. Conley v. State, 20 Ark. App. 56, 723 S.W.2d 841 (1987).

Where a 14-year-old rape victim, who professional counselor assessed as having a mental age of six years, told the trial judge that she did not know what it meant “to state you will tell the truth,” but said she would be in trouble if she did not tell the truth, the trial judge did not abuse his discretion in finding her competent to testify. Richardson v. State, 33 Ark. App. 128, 803 S.W.2d 557 (1991).

The same presumption and standards for determining the competency of a witness apply in deciding the capacity of a child witness to testify. Holloway v. State, 312 Ark. 306, 849 S.W.2d 473 (1993).

The trial court did not err in finding a four-year-old and a six-year-old child competent to testify in a sexual abuse case; the variances in testimony did not warrant a finding of incompetence but were for the jury to resolve. Holloway v. State, 312 Ark. 306, 849 S.W.2d 473 (1993).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in finding a seven-year old girl who was sexually assaulted by her father competent to testify after determining that the child understood the need to tell the truth and that the child was capable of recounting the facts surrounding the offense. Clem v. State, 351 Ark. 112, 90 S.W.3d 428 (2002).

Where defendant murdered his wife and their children were the only witnesses, it was not necessary that defendant’s child, who was five at the time of the murder, understood the nature of an oath, the legal concept of false swearing, or why the child was holding up his hand; at the competency hearing, the child’s testimony showed a moral awareness of the obligation to tell the truth, and an ability to observe, remember and relate facts, and the trial court properly exercised its discretion in determining the child was competent. Modlin v. State, 353 Ark. 94, 110 S.W.3d 727 (2003).

Child rape victim was competent to testify where she stated that she was going to tell the truth, she remembered the discussion about swearing an oath to tell the truth, and she further indicated that she knew a lie was not telling the truth, that the truth meant to tell what really happened, and that she was required to answer truthfully. Warner v. State, 93 Ark. App. 233, 218 S.W.3d 330 (2005).

Defendant failed to preserve for review a claim that a trial court erred in denying his motion to have a pretrial determination of a child rape victim’s competency; defendant failed to object to the trial court’s finding regarding the victim’s competency. Turnbough v. State, 2013 Ark. App. 235 (2013).

Error in admitting an incompetent child’s incoherent testimony was harmless because the testimony was cumulative of the child’s mother’s uncontested testimony. Ward v. State, 2014 Ark. App. 408, 439 S.W.3d 56 (2014).

Although the child victim’s testimony was inconsistent at times and became more so upon extensive questioning, the child testified to knowing the difference between the truth and a lie, the trial court found that she could remember and relate facts to the jury, and her testimony never became incoherent, and thus, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in allowing the child to testify. Travis v. State, 2015 Ark. App. 572, 474 S.W.3d 93 (2015).

Criteria.

Mere inconsistencies or hesitation in testimony may affect credibility but not the competency of a witness. Chappell v. State, 18 Ark. App. 26, 710 S.W.2d 214 (1986).

The criteria for determining whether a witness is competent are: (1) the ability to understand the obligation of an oath; (2) an understanding of consequences of false swearing; (3) the ability to receive and retain accurate impressions; and (4) the capacity to transmit a reasonable statement of what has been seen, felt, or heard. Chappell v. State, 18 Ark. App. 26, 710 S.W.2d 214 (1986); Conley v. State, 20 Ark. App. 56, 723 S.W.2d 841 (1987); Logan v. State, 299 Ark. 266, 773 S.W.2d 413 (1989).

Under the guideline set forth by the Arkansas Supreme Court for determining the competency of a child witness, the challenging party bears the burden of establishing that the witness lacks at least one of the following: (1) the ability to understand the obligation of an oath and to comprehend the obligation imposed by it; or (2) an understanding of the consequences of false swearing; or (3) the ability to receive accurate impressions and to retain them, to the extent that the capacity exists to transmit to the factfinder a reasonable statement of what was seen, felt, or heard. Laughlin v. State, 316 Ark. 489, 872 S.W.2d 848 (1994).

Competency, as referred to in this rule, is not to be confused with reliability; the criteria for determining whether a witness is competent to testify are: (1) the ability to understand the obligation of an oath; (2) an understanding of consequences of false swearing; (3) the ability to receive and retain accurate impressions; and (4) the extent that the capacity exists to transmit to the fact-finder a reasonable statement of what was seen, felt, or heard. Byndom v. State, 344 Ark. 391, 39 S.W.3d 781 (2001).

Determination of Competency.

Where victim stated that she did not know what a lie was, nor what happens to a person when they tell a lie, her overall testimony showed her ability to understand the obligation of an oath and the consequences of false swearing, and judge did not abuse his discretion in refusing to declare the witness incompetent. Curtis v. State, 301 Ark. 208, 783 S.W.2d 47 (1990).

A witness' inability to speak does not render her incompetent to testify or violate the defendant's right to cross-examine witnesses so long as she is able to communicate the facts by other methods and otherwise meets the tests of legal competency; where a witness is able to communicate by other means and is otherwise competent, a defendant's contention that his constitutional right to confront witnesses was violated will be rejected. Byndom v. State, 344 Ark. 391, 39 S.W.3d 781 (2001).

In a rape case, an elderly victim was competent to testify because she demonstrated her ability to receive and retain accurate impressions and to relay them to the judge and the jury; her struggle to remember if the attacker was black or white was not dispositive on the issue of her competency, considering the evidence that it was dark, there had been a struggle, and she had been raped. Wooten v. State, 2015 Ark. App. 568, 494 S.W.3d 434 (2015).

Petitioner failed to show that his trial counsel was ineffective for failing to challenge the victim's competency, and therefore he was properly denied postconviction relief; the victim demonstrated that she had the ability to understand the obligation of an oath and comprehended the obligation imposed by it, as she testified that she knew that she was required to tell the truth or that she would be in trouble, and she testified in detail regarding what she saw, felt, and heard during the incidents of rape. Veneros-Figueroa v. State, 2021 Ark. App. 144, 623 S.W.3d 122 (2021).

Discretion of Court.

The trial court has broad discretionary powers in determining the competency of a witness and the Supreme Court will not reverse the trial court's ruling in the exercise of that discretion unless there is manifest error or a clear abuse has been demonstrated. Hamblin v. State, 268 Ark. 497, 597 S.W.2d 589 (1980).

The question of competency is a matter lying in the sound discretion of the trial court and, in the absence of clear abuse of discretion or manifest error, that exercise will not be disturbed on appeal. Chappell v. State, 18 Ark. App. 26, 710 S.W.2d 214 (1986); Conley v. State, 20 Ark. App. 56, 723 S.W.2d 841 (1987); Logan v. State, 299 Ark. 266, 773 S.W.2d 413 (1989); McArdell v. State, 38 Ark. App. 261, 833 S.W.2d 786 (1992).

The trial court has broad discretion in determining the competency of witnesses, particularly young ones, and in eliciting testimony from such witnesses, some latitude in asking leading questions is permitted. Chappell v. State, 18 Ark. App. 26, 710 S.W.2d 214 (1986); Conley v. State, 20 Ark. App. 56, 723 S.W.2d 841 (1987).

Mental Disability.

A witness suffering from mental impairment such as retardation is legally competent to testify so long as she has the capacity to observe, recollect, and communicate; the defendant cannot rely merely on the fact that the witness is retarded to challenge her competency. Byndom v. State, 344 Ark. 391, 39 S.W.3d 781 (2001).

Rule 602. Lack of personal knowledge.

A witness may not testify to a matter unless evidence is introduced sufficient to support a finding that he has personal knowledge of the matter. Evidence to prove personal knowledge may, but need not, consist of the testimony of the witness himself. This rule is subject to the provisions of Rule 703, relating to opinion testimony by expert witnesses.

CASE NOTES

Motion to Strike Testimony.

Where in a prosecution for carnal abuse in the first degree, the trial judge did not abuse his discretion when he denied the defendant's motion to strike the testimony of the owner of the hotel at which the offense allegedly occurred despite the owner's failure to identify the defendant or the motel room number in which the offense allegedly occurred, since the motion to strike came late, having been made after the motel owner had left the stand and had been excused from the trial. Hamblin v. State, 268 Ark. 497, 597 S.W.2d 589 (1980).

Opinions.

If a witness has the requisite personal knowledge necessary under this rule, any inferences or opinions he expresses must thereafter pass the rational connection and "helpful" tests of Evid. Rule 701. Carton v. Missouri Pac. R.R., 303 Ark. 568, 798 S.W.2d 674 (1990).

Where defendant was charged with murder after beating the victim, a lay witness was permitted to give his opinion testimony under Ark. R. Evid. 701 that he heard the sound of defendant driving a car over a human body; the testimony was admissible under this rule, because it was based on personal knowledge. The opinion testimony was rationally based on the perception of the witness and the surrounding circumstances. Marks v. State, 375 Ark. 265, 289 S.W.3d 923 (2008).

Personal Knowledge.

Defendant's conviction for murder in the second degree was proper because the admission of an officer's opinion that defendant would go from controlled to crying, back and forth, through the entire interview, was admissible. Because the officer was testifying not only about defendant's statement to the police but also her demeanor after the crime and the discrepancies that he noticed between her statements and the physical evidence, it was not an abuse of discretion to allow him to testify about his perception of the changes in defendant's demeanor during her statement. Johnson v. State, 2010 Ark. App. 153, 375 S.W.3d 12 (2010).

In defendant's trial for possession of ephedrine, pseudoephedrine, or phenylpropanolamine with intent to manufacture methamphetamine, in violation of § 5-64-1102(a), the trial judge erred in informing the jury that there was a child in the van when defendant was stopped because under Ark. R. Evid. 602, the judge had no independent personal knowledge of this fact. Hancock v. State, 2011 Ark. App. 174, 381 S.W.3d 908 (2011).

In a probation revocation hearing, the trial court did not err by sustaining the state's objections to testimony given by defendant's mother as to why he failed to report to his probation officer. This rule requires that a person must have personal knowledge of a matter about which he testifies. Williams v. State, 2012 Ark. App. 447 (2012).

Rule 603. Oath or affirmation.

Before testifying, every witness shall be required to declare that he will testify truthfully, by oath or affirmation administered in a form calculated to awaken his conscience and impress his mind with his duty to do so.

Rule 604. Interpreters.

An interpreter is subject to the provisions of these rules relating to qualification as an expert and the administration of an oath or affirmation that he will make a true translation.

In this dependency-neglect case, mother's counsel claimed that the Department of Human Services should have proven the termination of her rights to another child by written documentation, but that rule concerns authentication and identification of evidence and has nothing to do with the best-evidence rule, which applies only when a party tries to prove the content of a writing; while a document would have demonstrated termination, nothing prohibited the mother from testifying to any fact within her personal knowledge and the question of whether her rights had been terminated resided within her personal experience, and she admitted the same. Goodwin v. Ark. Dep't of Human Servs., 2014 Ark. App. 599, 445 S.W.3d 547 (2014).

Circuit court properly denied petitioner post-conviction relief because trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to object to testimony regarding the victim's incapacity due to ingesting amphetamines; the testimony, based on personal observations, met the requirements of admissibility under the Arkansas Rules of Evidence, and petitioner failed to allege sufficient facts demonstrating that an objection to the testimony would have been meritorious. McCulley v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 313, 525 S.W.3d 10 (2017).

In a FELA action, the circuit court was within its discretion to exclude a mechanical alert that was created after the incident because, inter alia, a proper foundation had not been laid for its admission; the plaintiff employee did not seek to introduce the alert through its author, and the employer's safety implementation leader testified merely that he knew what a mechanical alert was and he was unable to authenticate the particular alert. Sanders v. Union Pac. R.R., 2019 Ark. App. 386, 585 S.W.3d 713 (2019).

Rule 605. Competency of judge as witness.

The judge presiding at the trial may not testify in that trial as a witness. No objection need be made in order to preserve the point.

CASE NOTESCompetency of Judge as Witness.

In defendant's trial for possession of ephedrine, pseudoephedrine, or phenylpropylamine with intent to manufacture methamphetamine, in violation of § 5-64-1102(a), the trial judge erred in informing the jury that there was a child in the van when defendant was stopped because under this rule, the judge could not have been both a witness and a judge in one proceeding. Hancock v. State, 2011 Ark. App. 174, 381 S.W.3d 908 (2011).

knew a witness were not testimony under this rule where the revelation that the witness and the judge were Eagle Scouts together had nothing to do with his testimony as an expert witness in a medical malpractice case, the court's comments were made before the expert testifies, and the judge had not framed, construed, or otherwise added to the witness's testimony. McClard v. Smith, 2014 Ark. App. 272 (2014).

Rule 606. Competency of juror as witness.

(a) At the Trial. A member of the jury may not testify as a witness before that jury in the trial of the case in which he is sitting as a juror. If he is called so to testify, the opposing party shall be afforded an opportunity to object out of the presence of the jury.

(b) Inquiry into Validity of Verdict or Indictment. Upon an inquiry into the validity of a verdict or indictment, a juror may not testify as to any matter or statement occurring during the course of the jury's deliberations or to the effect of anything upon his or any other juror's mind or emotions as influencing him to assent to or dissent from the verdict or indictment or concerning his mental processes in connection therewith, nor may his affidavit or evidence of any statement by him concerning a matter about which he would be precluded from testifying be received, but a juror may testify on the questions whether extraneous prejudicial information was improperly brought to the jury's attention or whether any outside influence was improperly brought to bear upon any juror.

CASE NOTES

Constitutionality.

Subsection (b) of this rule is not unconstitutional and serves the important functions of securing private, frank jury deliberations, and protecting the finality of judgments. Miles v. State, 350 Ark. 243, 85 S.W.3d 907 (2002).

In General.

This rule attempts to balance the freedom of secret jury deliberations on one hand with the ability to correct an irregularity in those deliberations on the other; it provides that an irregularity in the jury room which is an internal occurrence may not be investigated, but that an irregularity due to some external event may be investigated. Borden v. St. Louis S.W. Ry., 287 Ark. 316, 698 S.W.2d 795 (1985); Watkins v. Taylor Seed Farms, Inc., 295 Ark. 291, 748 S.W.2d 143 (1988).

Petitioner was not entitled to writ of error coram nobis relief on the basis of his claim that the jury considered an extraneous statement made by a witness during trial; the court refused to delve into the jury's deliberations in order to determine whether any of them disregarded instructions to not consider the statement. Echols v. State, 360 Ark. 332, 201 S.W.3d 890 (2005).

Affidavit by Jurors.

Where trial court had under consideration a motion for new trial, it was proper for the judge not to read or consider an affidavit of six of the jurors concerning matters which occurred during their deliberations, since such an affidavit is improper under subsection (b) of this rule. Garner v. Finch, 272 Ark. 151, 612 S.W.2d 304 (1981).

Although a state trooper mistakenly testified that the reaction time between an automobile driver's sighting danger and hitting the brakes was four and one-half seconds rather than three-fourths of a second, it was improper for two jurors to file affidavits stating that they had based their finding of the plaintiffs' negligence in an automobile accident on this testimony, since this rule clearly prohibits a juror from testifying as to the effect of anything which influenced his verdict and he cannot submit an affidavit about such matters; moreover, it was improper for the attorney to interview the jurors after the trial in an effort to obtain inadmissible affidavits to impeach their own verdict. Sanson v. Pullum, 273 Ark. 325, 619 S.W.2d 641 (1981).

Subsection (b) of this rule and case law prohibited the trial court from considering a juror's affidavit submitted by a party in support of a new trial motion under Ark. R. Civ. P. 59; because the party had not alleged that some outside influence affected the jury's deliberations, the court could not consider the juror's affidavit or its allegations that the jury was confused when it awarded the party only a certain amount in damages. Machost v. Simkins, 86 Ark. App. 47, 158 S.W.3d 726 (2004).

Where a jury awarded punitive damages, but no compensatory damages, and one week after the jury had been discharged the jury foreman filed an affidavit to that effect, the trial court did not err in striking the juror's affidavit and in failing to correct the verdict because the jury had been discharged and there was a strict rule that a jury's verdict could not be corrected after the jury had been discharged; however, the court did err in not granting new trial as no fair-minded juror could have awarded no compensatory damages after having found in favor of appellant on all counts. Waste Mgmt. of Ark., Inc. v. Roll Off Serv., 88 Ark. App. 343, 199 S.W.3d 91 (2004).

Pursuant to subsection (b) of this rule, juror affidavits did not assert that the jury's deliberations were affected by extraneous information or outside influence; rather, the purpose of the affidavits was to explain the amount of damages that the jury intended to award landowners, such that the affidavits should be disregarded. Bingham v. City of Jonesboro, 89 Ark. App. 120, 201 S.W.3d 1 (2005).

In a condemnation case, the trial court properly struck juror affidavits as being barred by subsection (b) of this rule and denied appellants' motion for new trial based on jury misconduct; the trial court properly refused to consider the affidavits because they referred to events occurring during the internal deliberations of the jury and, without the juror affidavits, appellants could not prove jury misconduct. D.B. & J. Holden Farms, Ltd. P'ship v. Ark. State Highway Comm'n, 93 Ark. App. 202, 218 S.W.3d 355 (2005).

Although a trial court improperly considered parts of affidavits that referred to the internal deliberations of the jury on matters not relating to extraneous information thereby violating this rule, the trial court's order awarding appellee a new trial pursuant to Ark. R. Civ. P. 59(a)(2) in appellant's personal injury action against appellee was affirmed because it was not manifest abuse of discretion for the trial court to conclude that the jury failed to follow its instructions and considered evidence not introduced into evidence. Campbell v. Hankins, 2009 Ark. App. 479, 324 S.W.3d 358 (2009).

Driver's motion for new trial was properly denied, Ark. R. Civ. P. 59(a)(2), as juror affidavits ran afoul of the prohibition in subdivision (b) of this rule on inquiries into the effect of anything upon a juror's mind or emotions; it would be improper to question the jury's weighing of the evidence and the Arkansas Supreme Court had no means to understand the calculation of damages. Blake v. Shellstrom, 2012 Ark. 428, 424 S.W.3d 830 (2012).

Trial court did not err in denying a new trial on the ground of juror misconduct; the information in a juror's affidavit was not "extraneous" within the meaning of subsection (b) of this rule because the affidavit described the jurors' individual or collective thought processes; the affidavit merely described what happened in the jury room. Houchins v. Home Care Professionals of Ark., Inc., 2012 Ark. App. 553, 423 S.W.3d 655 (2012).

Alternate Jurors.

When an alternate juror entered the jury room for 15 minutes after the jury had retired and the defendant moved for a new trial, the testimony of the impaneled jurors which focused on whether improper influence was brought to bear on any of the jurors due to the presence of the alternate was proper. McDonald v. State, 37 Ark. App. 61, 824 S.W.2d 396 (1992).

Appellate Review.

Appellant did not obtain a ruling that application of subsection (b) of this rule violated his right to a fair trial, and the court had held that the failure to obtain a ruling precluded review on appeal. Arnold v. State, 2012 Ark. 400 (2012).

To the extent defendant complained that an extraneous instruction was physically interjected into the jury's deliberations, the trial court made no factual findings to that effect, and the court did not address this argument. Campbell v. State, 2014 Ark. App. 171, 432 S.W.3d 673 (2014).

Applicability.

This rule should apply whether a verdict is reached or a mistrial declared. This rule establishes an extraneous information exception which allows jurors to testify that one or more members of the jury brought to a trial specific personal knowledge about the parties or controversy or acquired such knowledge from sources outside the courtroom during the trial or deliberations. Witherspoon v. State, 322 Ark. 376, 909 S.W.2d 314 (1995).

Subsection (b) of this rule did not apply to the grant of a new trial where the jurors were not questioned about matters involving their formal deliberations and, instead, the hearing focused on discussions that occurred prior to formal deliberations. State v. Cherry, 341 Ark. 924, 20 S.W.3d 354 (2000).

Ex Parte Conversation with Jurors.

A trial judge, before ruling on a motion to modify the verdict, should not have an ex parte conversation with some of the jurors about anything which caused them to assent to the verdict. To do so is error. Coran v. Keller, 295 Ark. 308, 748 S.W.2d 349 (1988).

Extraneous Information.

Trial court did not err in finding that a juror's personal and professional background did not constitute extraneous information that had been brought to bear on the jury's deliberations. Campbell v. State, 2014 Ark. App. 171, 432 S.W.3d 673 (2014).

While this rule applies to inquiries into the jury's verdict or indictment, there is no reason that the same theory should not apply in a scenario regarding whether a juror is biased as well; thus, if evidence from life experiences, including knowledge obtained through a profession or vocation, is not considered "extraneous" for purposes of impeaching the jury's verdict under this rule, it is likewise not "extraneous" for impeaching the qualifications of a particular juror. Richardson v. State, 2015 Ark. App. 507, 471 S.W.3d 240 (2015).

Juror may testify on the question whether extraneous prejudicial information was improperly brought to the jury's attention, and what that information consisted of is an integral part of the testimony and is necessary for deciding whether a reasonable possibility of prejudice exists; there is nothing in either subsection (b) or any precedent that would prevent the circuit court from undertaking a reasonable inquiry into the nature of extraneous information when it is brought to its attention. Finch v. State, 2018 Ark. 111, 542 S.W.3d 143 (2018).

Circuit court did not abuse its discretion by denying defendant's motion for mistrial because there was no reasonable probability of prejudice to defendant when a juror used his cell phone to look up something (the definition of "hung jury"); subsection (b) of this rule did not preclude the questioning of the juror as to what he had researched on his cell phone and shared with the other jurors. Finch v. State, 2018 Ark. 111, 542 S.W.3d 143 (2018).

Circuit court properly denied defendant's motion for new trial because a juror's familiarity with the victim and the juror's own personal knowledge and experiences when considering the evidence presented at trial did not qualify as "extraneous prejudicial information"; furthermore, defendant could not show prejudice where the jury sentenced him below the maximum sentence for rape after his sentencing hearing, during which the State played a videotape of defendant's statement to police in which he confessed to sexually assaulting and raping his niece multiple times when she was between the ages of three and six. Lacy v. State, 2018 Ark. App. 66 (2018).

In prosecution for capital murder, where an investigator's file containing considerable information about the charge and with defendant's name on the tab was left in a witness room with the jurors, the trial court should have allowed defense counsel to question the jurors about the file. Hutcherson v. State, 262 Ark. 535, 558 S.W.2d 156 (1977).

Internet Research.

Although juror misconduct was grounds for a new trial under Ark. R. Civ. P. 59(a) on the issue of whether a driver's conduct fell within the intentional acts exclusion of a policy, and a juror committed misconduct in conducting a Google search for "intentional act" and sharing the information with the jury, the insured failed to show that the information was prejudicial, and therefore the juror's affidavit was inadmissible under subdivision (b) of this rule. Safeco Ins. Co. v. Southern Farm Bureau Cas. Ins. Co., 2013 Ark. App. 696, 430 S.W.3d 815 (2013).

Poll of Jury.

A jury can be polled pursuant to § 16-89-128, but the inquiry should be limited to determining that the verdict is that of each juror and "whether extraneous prejudicial information was improperly brought to the jury's attention or whether any outside influence was improperly brought to bear upon any juror"; it would be highly unrealistic to think that jurors do not consider the possibility of parole in arriving at a sentence in a criminal case and the outward expression of that by a juror was not grounds for a new trial where any information jurors had about possibility of parole was independent knowledge which they had prior to trial. Ashby v. State, 271 Ark. 239, 607 S.W.2d 675 (1980).

Circuit court's questioning of the jurors did not violate subsection (b) of this rule where the scope of the questioning was limited to the verdict and whether any outside source had influenced them. The appellate court did not read subsection (b) to preclude a question during polling on the jurors' unanimity, as the question did not require a juror to divulge his or her state of mind when reaching a verdict, nor did it expressly delve into matters or statements that occurred during deliberations. Garcia-Chicol v. State, 2020 Ark. 148, 597 S.W.3d 631, cert. denied, 141 S. Ct. 880, 208 L. Ed. 2d 442 (2020).

Prejudice.

Court would not presume prejudice as defendant argued. Campbell v. State, 2014 Ark. App. 171, 432 S.W.3d 673 (2014).

Props in Room with Jurors.

In an action arising from a motor vehicle collision, there was no reasonable possibility of prejudice resulting from the presence in the jury room of toy cars used by the jury in their deliberations and there was no abuse of discretion in the denial of a new trial motion. New Prospect Drilling Co. v. First Com. Trust, 332 Ark. 466, 966 S.W.2d 233 (1998).

Purpose.

Subsection (b) of this rule only permits inquiry into whether any external influence or information could have played a part in the jury's verdict; the purpose of this rule is to balance the freedom of secret jury deliberations with the ability to correct an irregularity in those deliberations. Davis v. State, 330 Ark. 501, 956 S.W.2d 163 (1997).

Questioning Jurors After Their Dismissal.

It was improper, under this rule, for plaintiff's attorney to question several jurors who returned to the courtroom, after the verdict was read and the jurors had been dismissed, to determine whether the jurors had attempted to increase or inflate the reward in a personal injury case to allow for what they thought would be only a 75 percent reduction of the $100,000 award due to the allocation of 75 percent negligence to the plaintiff, so that the final award would be approximately $25,000 to each plaintiff parent. Stull v. Ragsdale, 273 Ark. 277, 620 S.W.2d 264 (1981).

Where the defendant failed in a post-conviction petition, to provide factual support for his allegation that jurors engaged in extrajudicial communications, his prayer for an inquiry of the jury was properly denied. Pride v. State, 285 Ark. 89, 684 S.W.2d 819 (1985).

Remark by Bailiff.

Where a bailiff made a racist remark to a juror, although the juror testified upon questioning that the remark did not influence his deliberations, the possibility of prejudice was so great that a new trial must be granted. Lewis v. Pearson, 262 Ark. 350, 556 S.W.2d 661 (1977).

Remark by Juror.

Where insured homeowners brought an action against their insurer, a statement by one of the jurors during the jury deliberations that "it's lawsuits like this that will make all our insurance premiums go up" was simply an expression of opinion on the merits of the insureds' case, which therefore fell within the proscription of subsection (b) of this rule and could not be considered as the basis for the granting of a new trial on the grounds of jury misconduct. Farm Bureau Mut. Ins. Co. v. Smith, 5 Ark. App. 37, 632 S.W.2d 244 (1982).

It was not an indication of unfair prejudice for a juror to comment that she would pray for the accused, especially when she indicated that she would keep an open mind as to defendants' guilt or innocence until after she had heard all the evidence. Butler v. State, 303 Ark. 380, 797 S.W.2d 435 (1990).

In a case in which defendant appealed a circuit court's denial of his motion to set aside the verdict and reopen deliberations, the circuit court did not abuse its discretion in denying the motion. It would have been inappropriate for the circuit court to allow the jury foreperson to revisit the evidence admitted at trial and reexamine her vote; under subsection (b) of this rule, the foreperson could not testify as to the effect of anything upon her mind as influencing her to assent to the verdict. Noble v. State, 2010 Ark. App. 228 (2010).

Testimony Concerning Deliberations.

An affidavit from one juror stating remarks that allegedly were made by jurors and describing the discussions during the course of jury deliberations plainly violated subsection (b) of this rule and was inadmissible as evidence of jury misconduct. Waterfield v. Quimby, 277 Ark. 472, 644 S.W.2d 241 (1982).

Testimony of juror, at a post-trial hearing, that the court's "Allen" charge, upon impanelment of the entire jury, affected her vote during deliberations, was impermissible and clearly violated subsection (b) of this rule. Tosh v. State, 278 Ark. 377, 646 S.W.2d 6 (1983).

It was improper for a lawyer to try to impeach a jury verdict by affidavits obtained from members of the jury panel where the so called extraneous prejudicial information went only to the state of mind of a juror while deliberating. Aetna Cas. & Sur. Co. v. Broadway Arms Corp., 281 Ark. 128, 664 S.W.2d 463 (1984).

To show that extraneous matters were brought to the jury's attention, a judge may properly consider the content of the conversations that took place in the jury room. St. Louis S.W. Ry. v. White, 302 Ark. 193, 788 S.W.2d 483 (1990).

Exception to rule regarding competency of juror as witness was not applicable where no question was raised as to whether extraneous prejudicial information was improperly brought to the jury's attention or whether outside influence was improperly brought to bear upon any juror. National Bank of Commerce v. HCA Health Servs., 304 Ark. 55, 800 S.W.2d 694 (1990).

It was error for the court to grant a new trial on sentencing based on testimony by two jurors that they had voted for a life sentence based on information they believed to be valid, which they later found to be incorrect. State v. Osborn, 337 Ark. 172, 988 S.W.2d 485 (1999).

Where a juror stated during deliberations that he knew defendant had been convicted at his first trial but the convictions were reversed, and where the trial court knew about the statement and its context based on the court's colloquy with the juror, and the court admonished the jury about what it was to consider during deliberations, and was further reassured by the juror's note that juror was following the court's instructions, it could not be said that the trial court abused its discretion in refusing to grant defendant's motion for a mistrial. Butler v. State, 349 Ark. 252, 82 S.W.3d 152 (2002).

Juror's statement was essentially a characterization of the jury deliberations and fell squarely within the type of testimony prohibited by subsection (b) of this rule; the statement did not include any allegations that prejudicial information was given to the jury or that the jury was influenced by outside sources. Because the juror's statement was inadmissible, defendant failed to show that he was entitled to a new trial based on jury confusion. McBride v. State, 99 Ark. App. 146, 257 S.W.3d 914 (2007).

In a medical malpractice action, a juror's vocational knowledge of medical records and informed consent did not constitute extraneous prejudicial information under subsection (b) of this rule; the rule therefore prohibited the trial court from considering the patient's affidavits and testimony and, consequently, the trial court had no evidence on which to grant a new trial. Milner v. Luttrell, 2011 Ark. App. 297, 384 S.W.3d 1 (2011).

Trial court held that a juror's letter that she might have misunderstood the jury instructions went to the kind of information that subsection (b) of this rule said a juror could not testify about, and the letter did not reference any extraneous prejudicial information or outside influence; a juror's understanding of the jury instructions and its effect on her deliberation fall within this very prohibition, and thus the court did not find an abuse of discretion on the trial court's part in prohibiting the juror's testimony and in denying appellant's motion for a new trial. Arnold v. State, 2012 Ark. 400 (2012).

Unauthorized View of Accident Scene.

Where a juror, who had not been cautioned against visiting the scene of accident, went out to view accident site which was on the public highway and was open to inspection by everyone, there was no extraneous information brought to the jury's attention so as to render admissible the affidavit of another juror concerning such incident. B. & J. Byers Trucking, Inc. v. Robinson, 281 Ark. 442, 665 S.W.2d 258 (1984).

Once a juror has contaminated the jury's deliberations with extrinsic evidence, a new trial will be warranted if there is a reasonable possibility of resulting prejudice; a new trial is proper where jurors independently investigated the accident scene. Borden v. St. Louis S.W. Ry., 287 Ark. 316, 698 S.W.2d 795 (1985).

Understanding of Instructions.

Trial court did not err in refusing to allow certain jurors to testify about what the allegedly improperly introduced instruction stated and whether the jurors discussed defendant's intent to commit the crime; because the testimony went to the jurors' understanding of the instructions, the trial court correctly excluded this testimony. Campbell v. State, 2014 Ark. App. 171, 432 S.W.3d 673 (2014).

CASE NOTES

Admission of Prior Conviction by Defendant.

Where defendant took the stand and admitted he had been convicted of a felony, he could not then insist that he had been impeached and that no further questioning as to the number of prior convictions was permissible; to allow either party to head off the testimony of the other in such a manner would not be in keeping with the standard of fairness with which a trial should be conducted and this rule was not intended to allow either party to prevent the other party from testing the credibility of a party or witness in such a manner. Floyd v. State, 278 Ark. 342, 645 S.W.2d 690 (1983).

Admission of Prior Inconsistent Statement.

Where the state's witness admitted making a prior inconsistent statement, the trial judge correctly ruled that the prior statement was admissible solely for impeachment purposes. Lewis v. State, 288 Ark. 595, 709 S.W.2d 56 (1986), writ denied, Lewis v. Hobbs, 2014 Ark. 407, 443 S.W.3d 530 (2014).

Prior inconsistent statements were properly admissible for impeachment purposes, and defendant suffered no prejudice where no reference was made to a prior trial itself, but only to prior testimony. Laymon v. State, 306 Ark. 377, 814 S.W.2d 901 (1991).

Character Witnesses.

Where in a prosecution for rape, the defendant produced five character witnesses to prove his reputation for truthfulness, the trial court properly allowed the prosecutor to cross-examine the character witnesses as to the basis of their opinion, such as whether the witness had heard all the facts about the defendant on which to base his opinion. Caldwell v. State, 267 Ark. 1053, 594 S.W.2d 24 (Ct. App. 1980).

Credibility.

In a condemnation proceeding, an expert witness's knowledge, or lack of knowledge, and his record of accuracy regarding the value of property would go to the credibility to be given to his testimony as an expert witness. Arkansas State Hwy. Comm'n v. Pulaski Inv. Co., 265 Ark. 584, 580 S.W.2d 679 (1979).

Cross-Examination of Defendant.

The trial court did not err in allowing the state to question the defendant on cross-examination about details of his prior convictions. Pruett v. State, 282 Ark. 304, 669 S.W.2d 186, cert. denied, 469 U.S. 963, 105 S. Ct. 362, 83 L. Ed. 2d 298 (1984).

Where defendant filed an answer that generally denied the allegations of plaintiff's complaint, including that defendant was negligent in regard to the traffic accident, the fact that she did not file a counterclaim was not an assertion of fact and she could not be impeached on that point; consequently, the trial court properly excluded plaintiff's attempted cross-examination on that issue. Martinez v. Wright, 94 Ark. App. 1, 223 S.W.3d 71 (2006).

Expert Witnesses.

The extent to which one can examine one's own expert witness for purposes of impeachment is within the sound discretion of the trial court. Carton v. Missouri Pac. R.R., 303 Ark. 568, 798 S.W.2d 674 (1990).

Impeachment of Own Witness.

State was properly permitted to impeach its own witness under this rule for comparatively minor matter where the prosecution complied with Rule 613 by showing that the witness had made a prior inconsistent statement, even though the state may have waited too long before adducing the impeachment testimony on rebuttal, since that matter rested in the trial court's sound discretion. Heard v. State, 272 Ark. 140, 612 S.W.2d 312 (1981).

Where trial court allowed sheriff and his secretary to narrate statements made by sister of defendant during his investigation of murder case, and those statements had not been signed by her, but she had acknowledged the principal statement, it was error for the court to admit such evidence as recorded recollections under Rule 803 since her statements were not within the rule as reviving present recollection through a contemporaneously made memorandum; however, since the statements could be used to impeach inconsistent out-of-court statements made by defendant's sister under Rule 613, where the state impeaches its own witness under this rule, the ruling of the trial judge was correct for the wrong reasons and thus was not reversed. Chisum v. State, 273 Ark. 1, 616 S.W.2d 728 (1981).

A party can impeach his own witness by the use of a prior inconsistent hearsay statement if the probative value on the issue of impeachment outweighs the prejudicial effect arising from the danger that the jury will give substantive effect to the prior inconsistent statement. Roberts v. State, 278 Ark. 550, 648 S.W.2d 44 (1983).

There is no general prohibition against impeachment of one's own witness. Pemberton v. State, 292 Ark. 405, 730 S.W.2d 889 (1987).

In a negligence action where the dispute involved a mechanic's testimony as to the nature and time of the mechanic's inspections of the brakes on the subject vehicle, counsel replied upon objection that the insurer's attorney was attempting to impeach the insurer's own witness by having the mechanic contradict his own testimony; however, under this rule, attacking the credibility of one's own witness was allowed and the exclusion of the proffered testimony was grounds for reversal. Southern Farm Bureau Cas. Ins. Co. v. Daggett, 354 Ark. 112, 118 S.W.3d 525 (2003).

Prior Perjury.

Where plaintiff filed suit for malicious prosecution after defendant filed suit charging him with theft of property, which suit terminated in his favor, it was proper for plaintiff's attorney on redirect examination to seek to impeach defendant, under Rule 608 and this rule, by asking her questions about whether she had previously committed perjury, since the impeachment questions were asked only after defendant's attorney had fully developed all of her testimony offered in defense and after the trial judge had declared the defendant a hostile witness, without objection, for purposes of cross-examination. Tucker v. Rasdon, 272 Ark. 63, 612 S.W.2d 106 (1981).

Rule 608. Evidence of character and conduct of witness.

(a) Opinion and Reputation Evidence of Character. The credibility of a witness may be attacked or supported by evidence in the form of opinion or reputation, but subject to these limitations: (1) the evidence may refer only to character for truthfulness or untruthfulness, and (2) evidence of truthful character is admissible only after the character of the witness for truthfulness has been attacked by opinion or reputation evidence or otherwise.

(b) Specific Instances of Conduct. Specific instances of the conduct of a witness, for the purpose of attacking or supporting his credibility, other than conviction of crime as provided in Rule 609, may not be proved by extrinsic evidence. They may, however, in the discretion of the court, if probative of truthfulness or untruthfulness, be inquired into on cross-examination of the witness (1) concerning his character for truthfulness or untruthfulness, or (2) concerning the character for truthfulness or untruthfulness of another witness as to which character the witness being cross-examined has testified.

The giving of testimony, whether by an accused or by any other witness, does not operate as a waiver of his privilege against self-incrimination when examined with respect to matters which relate only to credibility.

CASE NOTES

In General.

Neither this rule, Evid. Rules 609, 613, nor 806 permit impeachment by extrinsic evidence on a collateral matter. Teas v. State, 23 Ark. App. 154, 744 S.W.2d 739 (1988).

Although defendant argued that a witness's testimony was extrinsic evidence, in violation of subsection (b) of this rule, and improper rebuttal evidence, defendant's argument was void of any mention of prejudice; thus, the trial court's decision to allow the testimony was affirmed. MacKool v. State, 363 Ark. 295, 213 S.W.3d 618 (2005).

Attack on Character.

Since it cannot be said that a defendant's truthfulness has been attacked simply because he takes the witness stand, a defendant who takes the witness stand cannot support his testimony by offering evidence that shows his character for truthfulness among his associates or in the community. Rios v. State, 262 Ark. 407, 557 S.W.2d 198 (1977).

The mere fact that a witness has been contradicted by other evidence does not constitute an attack upon the witness's character for truthfulness. Collins v. State, 11 Ark. App. 282, 669 S.W.2d 505 (1984).

Questions regarding witness' history of substance abuse held not probative of veracity. Echols v. State, 326 Ark. 917, 936 S.W.2d 509 (1996), cert. denied, 520 U.S. 1244, 117 S. Ct. 1853, 137 L. Ed. 2d 1055 (1997).

Construction.

Subsection (b) of this rule relates to inquiries into conduct on cross examination that are clearly probative of truthfulness or untruthfulness; the rule does not permit cross examination into specific instances that are merely probative of dishonesty. Laughlin v. State, 316 Ark. 489, 872 S.W.2d 848 (1994).

Cross-examination under subsection (b) of this rule is limited to specific instances of misconduct clearly probative of truthfulness or untruthfulness as distinguished from conduct probative of dishonesty. Green v. State, 59 Ark. App. 1, 953 S.W.2d 60 (1997).

Subsection (a) of this rule does not allow a state investigator to repeatedly vouch for the victim's credibility by making statements such as, "I don't have a single doubt about her credibility." Cox v. State, 93 Ark. App. 419, 220 S.W.3d 231 (2005).

Discretion of Court.

Trial judges should be permitted, under this rule, to exercise sound discretion to permit or deny a party the use of character evidence to support veracity. Collins v. State, 11 Ark. App. 282, 669 S.W.2d 505 (1984).

The matter of what constitutes an attack on the character of a witness should be left to the trial court's discretion. Maples v. State, 16 Ark. App. 175, 698 S.W.2d 807 (1985).

The matter of what constitutes an attack on the character of the witness should be left to the trial court's discretion; this was not a "slashing cross-examination" and the trial court erred in permitting the sheriff to testify as to the reputation of the victim for truthfulness and honesty before her character had been attacked by the defense. Maples v. State, 16 Ark. App. 175, 698 S.W.2d 807 (1985).

The court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to allow the defendant to question an officer about an incident in which he left the scene of an accident involving his girlfriend since such incident did not automatically translate into an example of untruthfulness. Bailey v. State, 334 Ark. 43, 972 S.W.2d 239 (1998).

In an action against an attorney for breach of contract in his representation of a client, the court properly excluded testimony that the attorney had previously wrongfully refused to return money to a person with whom he had a fiduciary relationship where the attorney's credibility was not at issue and the evidence was proffered only to justify punitive damages. Potter v. Magee, 61 Ark. App. 112, 964 S.W.2d 412 (1998).

Extrinsic Evidence.

Reference to a transcript of a prior proceeding involving the witness for the purpose of impeaching that same witness in the current trial is not the kind of extrinsic evidence prohibited by subsection (b) of this rule. Dillon v. State, 311 Ark. 529, 844 S.W.2d 944 (1993).

If a witness denies the facts claimed to show bias, the attacker has a right to prove those facts by extrinsic evidence; stated differently, the witness must first deny the bias before he or she can be impeached by extrinsic evidence. Williams v. State, 338 Ark. 178, 992 S.W.2d 89 (1999).

Failure to Object.

Denial of inmate's petition for postconviction relief was improper, in part, because the testimony at issue did not conform to the requirements of this rule, and any objection to that testimony would not necessarily have been without merit. The failure to object to the testimony is a matter to be considered upon remand. Montgomery v. State, 2011 Ark. 462, 385 S.W.3d 189 (2011).

Impeachment by Contradiction.

Subsection (b) of this rule has no application to the issue of impeachment by contradiction, but Rule 403, which permits the court to exclude relevant evidence if its probative value is substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice, is applicable. However, the Rule 403 issue must be specifically brought to the attention of the trial court. Shaver v. State, 37 Ark. App. 124, 826 S.W.2d 300 (1992).

The Rules of Evidence, and in particular subsection (b) of this rule, have no application to the issue of "impeachment by contradiction." Kellogg v. State, 37 Ark. App. 162, 827 S.W.2d 166 (1992).

In an action against an attorney for breach of contract in his representation of his client in a divorce matter, the client was properly precluded from presenting evidence about the attorney's dealings with another client, notwithstanding the contention that such evidence constituted impeachment by contradiction, since the credibility of the attorney was not at issue and the client sought to present such evidence solely to justify punitive damages based on more than one instance of the attorney committing a breach of fiduciary duty. Potter v. Magee, 61 Ark. App. 112, 964 S.W.2d 412 (1998).

Misconduct.

Impeachment related to character for truthfulness or untruthfulness is limited to cross-examination of the witness, and no extrinsic evidence of prior misconduct is admissible. Hamm v. State, 301 Ark. 154, 782 S.W.2d 577 (1990).

This rule expressly prohibits the introduction of extrinsic evidence to prove misconduct, even if the witness denies the event. Urquhart v. State, 30 Ark. App. 63, 782 S.W.2d 591 (1990).

Limitation of cross-examination where defense counsel sought to cross-examine prosecution witness concerning alleged instances of misconduct pursuant to this rule was improper. Urquhart v. State, 30 Ark. App. 63, 782 S.W.2d 591 (1990).

Defendant should have been allowed to cross-examine police detective concerning a false police report the detective filed where the intended questioning was being pursued in good faith and was related to the witness' veracity. Hill v. State, 54 Ark. App. 380, 927 S.W.2d 820 (1996).

While an absence of respect for another's person and property is an undesirable trait, a witness' possible participation in a robbery does not directly indicate an impairment of the trait of truthfulness. Green v. State, 59 Ark. App. 1, 953 S.W.2d 60 (1997).

Proffer of Evidence.

Defendant failed to preserve for appellate review his claim that the trial court erred by not allowing him to question an eyewitness about a specific act for the purpose of attacking his credibility under this rule because he did not proffer what the eyewitness's testimony would have been. Leach v. State, 2012 Ark. 179, 402 S.W.3d 517 (2012).

Defendant convicted of rape and given a life sentence failed to preserve his argument that the trial court abused its discretion in restricting defendant's cross-examination of the lead investigator concerning the circumstances of the investigator's departure from a previous law-enforcement job; defendant failed to proffer either the excluded testimony or the document that defense counsel alleged contained a lie by the investigator, and the substance of the excluded testimony was not clearly apparent from the record on appeal. Friday v. State, 2018 Ark. 339, 561 S.W.3d 318 (2018).

Reputation for Truthfulness.

The impeaching testimony of a witness should have been allowed where his testimony was proffered showing he was familiar with the reputation of the defendants' witnesses' truthfulness in the community in which they lived and it was not good, and the proffer was that plaintiff's witness had an opinion personally as to their truthfulness and he would not rely on their testimony. Garis v. Massey, 270 Ark. 646, 606 S.W.2d 109 (Ct. App. 1980).

The trial court, in a prosecution for carnal abuse of an 11-year-old, did not err in admitting evidence of the victim's truthful character, or rebuttal evidence, following the defendant's testimony that she was a liar. Collins v. State, 11 Ark. App. 282, 669 S.W.2d 505 (1984).

Where whether defendant-physician was telling the truth as to what he saw and what he did during the operation was made an issue by the plaintiffs, the testimony in response as to defendant-physician's reputation for truthfulness was specifically admissible in accordance with subsection (a) of this rule. Powell v. Burnett, 304 Ark. 698, 805 S.W.2d 50 (1991).

Whether witness had previously stolen a gun was not probative of his truthfulness; an absence of respect for the property rights of others, though an undesirable trait, does not directly indicate an impairment of the trait of truthfulness. Watkins v. State, 320 Ark. 163, 895 S.W.2d 532 (1995).

Trial judge abused her discretion in refusing to permit appellants to cross-examine appellee about appellee's affidavit in a will contest where appellee's claim in the affidavit that the rental value of the decedent's house was $100 per day could be shown to be false; because false swearing is probative of truthfulness, the evidence should have been admitted. Farr v. Henson, 79 Ark. App. 114, 84 S.W.3d 871 (2002), overruled in part, Tait v. Cmty. First Trust Co., 2012 Ark. 455, 425 S.W.3d 684 (2012).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in disallowing cross-examination that was, at best, only probative of dishonesty; the letter did not explain the specific allegations against the officer or how these allegations related to his truthfulness. Jacobs v. State, 2013 Ark. App. 177, 427 S.W.3d 83 (2013).

Circuit court erred by excluding under Ark. R. Evid. 411 the testimony of a witness as to the alleged sexual assault victim's reputation for dishonesty because the plain language of the rule prohibits the defendant, not the State, from introducing evidence of a witness's sexual history, and the State could have impeached the witness with his past sexual assault conviction, without reference to the fact that defendant's alleged victim was also the victim of the witness. However, the error did not result in prejudice, as the testimony would have been cumulative to other testimony. Taffner v. State, 2018 Ark. 99, 541 S.W.3d 430 (2018).

Specific Instances of Conduct.

The state could not call witnesses to contradict defendant's testimony on cross-examination with reference to a collateral matter by showing specific acts of infidelity. Chronister v. State, 265 Ark. 437, 580 S.W.2d 676 (1979).

Where the connection between a fraudulent conveyance and defendant's possible civil liability had a remote bearing upon a witness' credibility, the court should have disallowed cross-examination about the specific act. Morrison v. Lowe, 267 Ark. 361, 590 S.W.2d 299 (Ct. App. 1979).

Where the defendant in an aggravated robbery prosecution voluntarily testified as to his prior convictions, not for the purpose of showing the jury that he was not credible, but for the purposes of impressing the jury with his honesty and sincerity and of emphasizing the fact that his eligibility for parole would be postponed on account of these convictions, the defendant was not entitled to an instruction that the jury could not "consider any prior trouble in which the defendant may have been involved for any purpose other than in assessing his credibility as a witness" even if that instruction was a correct statement of the law. Smith v. State, 268 Ark. 282, 595 S.W.2d 671 (1980).

Where plaintiff filed suit for malicious prosecution after defendant filed suit charging him with theft of property, which suit terminated in his favor, it was proper for plaintiff's attorney on redirect examination to seek to impeach defendant, under this rule and Rule 607, by asking her questions about whether she had previously committed perjury, since the impeachment questions were asked only after defendant's attorney had fully developed all of her testimony offered in defense and after the trial judge had declared the defendant a hostile witness, without objection, for purposes of cross-examination. Tucker v. Rasdon, 272 Ark. 63, 612 S.W.2d 106 (1981).

Where defendant was questioned by his own counsel in rape trial as to whether he had ever been in any trouble before as far as being convicted of a felony, the prosecution could not on cross-examination question defendant as to his involvement in a fatal drug overdose of an unnamed woman, whether he had sold drugs and whether he was involved in a fatal automobile accident, since under this rule, these questions had no relevance to defendant's veracity or his character for truthfulness or untruthfulness, and the fact that these questions were left to the jury to consider constituted reversible error, notwithstanding the fact that defendant answered the questions in the negative. Cameron v. State, 272 Ark. 282, 613 S.W.2d 593 (1981).

Where in prosecution for rape, prosecutor questioned defendant about "touching" eight-year-old victim earlier in the day on the date of the incident, but there was no prior evidence about such conduct, such questioning was an improper attempt to impeach the witness under Rule 608, since the questions had no relationship to the truthfulness or untruthfulness of his testimony and the probative value of the answers did not outweigh their prejudicial effect, nor did the questions qualify under Rule 404 as tending to show motive, intent, preparation or plan, since there was no prior evidence of the conduct and Rule 404 cannot apply without evidence. Harper v. State, 1 Ark. App. 190, 614 S.W.2d 237 (1981).

Where defendant testified that he had done nothing illegal prior to the date in question, it was proper for the prosecution, under subsection (b) of this rule, to ask defendant if he were guilty of possessing marijuana with intent to deliver on a previous date, since specific instances of the conduct of the witness may be inquired into on cross-examination for the purpose of attacking or supporting his credibility, other than conviction of a crime; however, since the defendant did not admit guilt of the crime asked about and since there was no other evidence to show it, subsection (b) of Rule 404 did not apply to this question with respect to the defendant's prior knowledge and involvement with marijuana. Spicer v. State, 2 Ark. App. 325, 621 S.W.2d 235 (1981).

This rule limits the inquiry on cross-examination to specific instances of misconduct clearly probative of truthfulness or untruthfulness as distinguished from conduct probative of dishonesty. Rhodes v. State, 276 Ark. 203, 634 S.W.2d 107 (1982).

While an absence of respect for the property rights of others is an undesirable trait, it does not directly indicate an impairment of the trait of truthfulness, and cross-examination would not be allowed on specific acts of shoplifting for which there was no conviction. Rhodes v. State, 276 Ark. 203, 634 S.W.2d 107 (1982).

Where the state did not prove that the defendant's prior convictions for disorderly conduct, escape and criminal mischief, were for crimes punishable by imprisonment in excess of one year nor that they involved dishonesty or false statement, the trial court erred in allowing the state to use the prior convictions for impeachment purposes in the prosecution of defendant for burglary, aggravated assault, criminal mischief and battery. Hawksley v. State, 276 Ark. 504, 637 S.W.2d 573 (1982).

Where on cross-examination of sheriff in a prosecution for illegal manufacture of marijuana, defendant's counsel inquired of the sheriff as to whether he had substituted marijuana samples resulting in the fact that the marijuana tested by the crime lab was not the marijuana seized in the field and the sheriff responded that he had never substituted evidence in a case, including this case, the defendant was bound by the answers received from the sheriff on cross-examination and could not impeach his testimony by the introduction of contradictory evidence since the questioning concerned collateral matters. Vanderpool v.

State, 4 Ark. App. 93, 628 S.W.2d 576, rev'd, 276 Ark. 220, 633 S.W.2d 374 (1982).

Although the defendant's plea of guilty to forgery charge did not amount to a conviction for impeachment purposes because he was only given a suspended imposition of sentence, the state was not prevented from cross-examining about the act. Specific instances of misconduct which are clearly probative of truthfulness or untruthfulness, as distinguished from dishonesty, may be inquired into on cross-examination of a defendant; most forms of forgery in the second degree are probative of truthfulness or untruthfulness. David v. State, 286 Ark. 205, 691 S.W.2d 133 (1985).

Cross-examination about the use of false names or identities is permissible to show a lack of truthfulness. McKinnon v. State, 287 Ark. 1, 695 S.W.2d 826 (1985).

This rule provides that specific instances of misconduct, if probative of truthfulness or untruthfulness, may be inquired into on cross-examination. This has been construed to mean a lack of veracity rather than dishonesty in general. McKinnon v. State, 287 Ark. 1, 695 S.W.2d 826 (1985).

While subsection (b) of this rule prohibits the admission of extrinsic evidence of the misconduct of a witness, and the rule is given a restrictive interpretation, this rule does not apply in a case where the accused has testified that he or she has not engaged in certain misconduct extrinsic to the offense with which the accused is charged. McFadden v. State, 290 Ark. 177, 717 S.W.2d 812 (1986).

Where the defendant was charged with rape of his stepdaughter, and on direct examination he testified he had not raped her or any of the other children who had been living with him and their now deceased mother, it was not error to permit the prosecution to present rebuttal testimony from another, younger stepdaughter that she too had been raped by the defendant. McFadden v. State, 290 Ark. 177, 717 S.W.2d 812 (1986).

Even if misbehavior is denied by the witness and even if it is probative of truthfulness or untruthfulness, it may not be shown by extrinsic proof where there has been no criminal conviction for such conduct. Tubbs v. State, 19 Ark. App. 306, 720 S.W.2d 331 (1986).

Testimony that witness had said he knew the calf had been stolen when he bought it was not admissible for, although this evidence might tend to show that he was guilty of theft by receiving, it was a matter that could not be even inquired into on cross-examination because it was not probative of truthfulness or untruthfulness as required by subsection (b) of this rule. Tubbs v. State, 19 Ark. App. 306, 720 S.W.2d 331 (1986).

Attack on credibility of witness by extrinsic evidence of specific instances of conduct other than conviction of a crime prohibited. Free v. State, 293 Ark. 65, 732 S.W.2d 452 (1987).

Evidence regarding embezzlement by witness was not probative of untruthfulness and therefore could not be inquired about on cross examination. Sitz v. State, 23 Ark. App. 126, 743 S.W.2d 18 (1988).

An escape is not probative of truthfulness or untruthfulness, and is not admissible under subsection (b) of this rule. Hamm v. State, 301 Ark. 154, 782 S.W.2d 577 (1990).

Evidence of witness' abortions excluded where neither the pregnancy nor the abortions were relevant to any issue in the case, because they did not go to the credibility, believability, truthfulness, or veracity of the witness under Evid. Rules 401, 609, or this rule; and, in addition, even if relevant, the prejudicial impact would outweigh any probative value under Evid. Rule 403 because of the controversial nature of abortion. Billett v. State, 317 Ark. 346, 877 S.W.2d 913 (1994).

Evidence of a sexual affair between the victim and a witness held inadmissible where defendant failed to show how evidence of the alleged sexual affair would impeach the witness' credibility. Davlin v. State, 320 Ark. 624, 899 S.W.2d 451 (1995).

Under Evid. Rule 613, specific incidences of conduct may not be proved by extrinsic evidence. Lovelady v. State, 326 Ark. 196, 931 S.W.2d 430 (1996).

Impeachment by conduct under subsection (b) of this rule is a separate matter from impeachment by proof of bias and, therefore, the subsection does not apply to impeachment of a witness on the basis that his beliefs cast doubt on his obligation to tell the truth under oath. Fowler v. State, 339 Ark. 207, 5 S.W.3d 10 (1999), cert. denied, 529 U.S. 1055, 120 S. Ct. 1558, 146 L. Ed. 2d 462 (2000).

In a criminal trial, defendant was not permitted to cross-examine a state's witness concerning a burglary and theft without evidence of an actual conviction because the allegations were not probative of the witness' truthfulness. Ellison v. State, 354 Ark. 340, 123 S.W.3d 874 (2003).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in excluding a witness under subsection (b) of this rule that defendant wanted to call to demonstrate the victim's brother was a biased witness because the brother neither denied that he was biased nor that he was selling false documents and, as such, there was no basis for challenging the brother's credibility or showing a bias in his version of the events. Christian Adan Villagran v. State, 2011 Ark. App. 769 (2011).

In a capital murder case, although defendant argued that the witness opened the door to evidence of his other recent bad acts by testifying that he had previously robbed defendant at gunpoint but claimed that he had since changed and did not live that life anymore, that was essentially evidence impeaching the witness's credibility, and specific instances of the witness's conduct for the purpose of attacking his credibility, other than a conviction, could not be proved by extrinsic evidence. Allen v. State, 2013 Ark. 396 (2013).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion by refusing to allow defense counsel to impeach the State's witness because defendant failed to show that the prior conduct related to the witness's truthfulness, as a letter stating that the witness had a pending case involving theft charges and failure to give his name to a police officer was not sufficient proof that the witness lied during his prior testimony. Maiden v. State, 2014 Ark. 294, 438 S.W.3d 263 (2014).

Test of Admissibility.

The threefold test of admissibility is (1) the question must be asked in good faith, (2) the probative value must outweigh its prejudicial effect, and (3) the prior conduct must relate to the witness' truthfulness. Mackey v. State, 279 Ark. 307, 651 S.W.2d 82 (1983).

Evidence of bias which was not direct evidence, was not allowed as it was extrinsic evidence. Dansby v. State, 319 Ark. 506, 893 S.W.2d 331 (1995).

In an action to set aside or reform a warranty deed, the trial court erred under subsection (a) of this rule in admitting character evidence regarding one of the buyers because there was no attack on the character of the buyer; nonetheless, the error was not prejudicial to the sellers. Stalter v. Gibson, 2010 Ark. App. 801, 379 S.W.3d 710 (2010).

Allowing the State to question a defense witness's truthfulness by asking her directly about the phone calls made regarding defendant's violence toward her was not an abuse of discretion where defendant's counsel opened the door to question the witness's truthfulness when the witness testified she would not call the police and she had not known defendant to commit any crimes, and there were at least four instances when calls had been made to the police regarding defendant's violence and threats of violence toward the witness. Lewis v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 442, 528 S.W.3d 312 (2017).

Testimony Limited.

The trial court did not err in limiting the testimony of a witness for the defense which was offered for the purpose of attacking the credibility of the defendant's wife and apparent accomplice, where she was not present at the trial and testimony was proffered during direct testimony. Mackey v. State, 279 Ark. 307, 651 S.W.2d 82 (1983).

Victim's Character.

Although a defendant may impeach his own witnesses, even character witnesses, he cannot make one his witness, after he has cross-examined him, and impeach the witness's adverse testimony by asking about specific instances of conduct except he may inquire about the victim's reputation or traits of character on matters relating solely to violence. Peals v. State, 266 Ark. 410, 584 S.W.2d 1 (1979).

Where nothing in the record suggested that a question was not asked in good faith, the probative value of the query was high, given the critical need for the jury to evaluate the credibility of defendant versus that of the victim, no prejudice resulted to defendant because the question elicited nothing about other offenses, and the point of the inquiry on cross-examination was to explore defendant's propensity for truthfulness, the question was permissible. Dillon v. State, 311 Ark. 529, 844 S.W.2d 944 (1993).

In a family doctor's trial on two counts of second-degree sexual abuse, violations of § 5-14-125, there was no prejudice in disallowing evidence of one of the victims' hot-check charges because the evidence was merely speculative without a conviction. Arendall v. State, 2010 Ark. App. 358, 377 S.W.3d 404 (2010).

Trial court was clearly erroneous in finding the testimony of two witnesses was admissible character evidence because the testimony did not conform to the rule requirements, and the testimony was essentially expert testimony on whether the victim was being deceptive; as the evidence tended to establish that, despite the evidentiary error, the outcome of the trial would not likely have been different, prejudice for ineffective assistance purposes was not shown, and thus petitioner was not entitled to postconviction relief. Hayes v. State, 2014 Ark. 104, 431 S.W.3d 882 (2014).

Although defendant was improperly prohibited from introducing opinion evidence as to the alleged victim's character for untruthfulness, the error was harmless because the testimony of witnesses was sufficient to leave the jury with the firm impression that the victim was not a truthful person. Furthermore, defendant's admission to police that defendant engaged in behavior toward the victim that was factually consistent with the allegations provided by the victim supported the rape and sexual indecency with a minor charges against defendant. Walker v. State, 2019 Ark. App. 130, 571 S.W.3d 70 (2019).

Rule 609. Impeachment by evidence of conviction of crime.

(a) General Rule. For the purpose of attacking the credibility of a witness, evidence that he has been convicted of a crime shall be admitted but only if the crime (1) was punishable by death or imprisonment in excess of one [1] year under the law under which he was convicted, and the court determines that the probative value of admitting this evidence outweighs its prejudicial effect to a party or a witness, or (2) involved dishonesty or false statement, regardless of the punishment.

(b) Time Limit. Evidence of a conviction under this rule is not admissible if a period of more than ten [10] years has elapsed since the date of the conviction or of the release of the witness from the confinement imposed for that conviction, whichever is the later date.

(c) Effect of Pardon, Annulment, or Certificate of Rehabilitation. Evidence of a conviction is not admissible under this rule if (1) the conviction has been the subject of a pardon, annulment, certificate of rehabilitation, or other equivalent procedure based on a finding of the rehabilitation of the person convicted, and that person has not been convicted of a subsequent crime which was punishable by death or imprisonment in excess of one [1] year, or (2) the conviction has been the subject of a pardon, annulment, or other equivalent procedure based on a finding of innocence.

(d) Juvenile Adjudications. Evidence of juvenile adjudications is generally not admissible under this rule. Except as otherwise provided by statute, however, the court may in a criminal case allow evidence of a juvenile adjudication of a witness other than the accused if conviction of the offense would be admissible to attack the credibility of an adult and the court is satisfied that admission in evidence is necessary for a fair determination of the issue of guilt or innocence.

(e) Pendency of Appeal. The pendency of an appeal therefrom does not render evidence of a conviction inadmissible. Evidence of the pendency of an appeal is admissible.

CASE NOTES

In General.

The probative value must be weighed against the prejudicial effect on a case by case basis when evidence of prior convictions is admitted. Floyd v. State, 278 Ark. 342, 645 S.W.2d 690 (1983).

This rule makes no distinction between impeachment of character and contradiction of testimony. Hess v. Treece, 286 Ark. 434, 693 S.W.2d 792 (1985), cert. denied, 475 U.S. 1036, 106 S. Ct. 1245, 89 L. Ed. 2d 354 (1986).

Subsection (a) of this rule protects an accused person from cross-examination with respect to minor crimes. Reel v. State, 288 Ark. 189, 702 S.W.2d 809 (1986).

Neither this rule, Evid. Rules 608, 613, nor 806 permit impeachment by extrinsic evidence on a collateral matter. Teas v. State, 23 Ark. App. 154, 744 S.W.2d 739 (1988).

This rule concerns itself with the credibility of a witness who is offering testimony in the current case, and that admissibility must be decided on a case-by-case basis. Thomas v. State, 315 Ark. 518, 868 S.W.2d 85 (1994).

Applicability.

Subsection (a) of this rule did not apply where the reference to the prior conviction mentioned in cross-examination of a character witness was not made in an attempt to impeach either the testimony of the defendant or that of the witness on the stand. Reel v. State, 288 Ark. 189, 702 S.W.2d 809 (1986).

Subsection (d) of this rule precluding use of a juvenile adjudication to attack the credibility of a witness applies only when the witness is being examined about his or her own prior convictions rather than those of the accused. Wilburn v. State, 289 Ark. 224, 711 S.W.2d 760 (1986).

This rule applies only when one is attempting to show that the witness himself has been convicted of a crime. Barker v. State, 21 Ark. App. 56, 728 S.W.2d 204 (1987).

Evidence of witness' abortions excluded as not admissible under Evid. Rules 401, 608, and this rule. Billett v. State, 317 Ark. 346, 877 S.W.2d 913 (1994).

In a family doctor's trial on two counts of second-degree sexual abuse, violations of § 5-14-125, there was no prejudice in disallowing evidence of one of the victims' hot-check charges because the evidence was merely speculative without a conviction. Arendall v. State, 2010 Ark. App. 358, 377 S.W.3d 404 (2010).

Construction.

The state has a right to impeach the credibility of a witness with prior convictions under this rule; there is no justification for the dichotomy of permitting the state to introduce convictions for the rape of a child as probative evidence in its case-in-chief under the aegis of Evid. Rule 404(b), but to disallow the usage of these crimes for credibility purposes under this rule. Turner v. State, 325 Ark. 237, 926 S.W.2d 843 (1996).

Credibility of Witness.

When a defendant in a criminal case takes the witness stand in his own behalf, his credibility becomes an issue and the State may, under certain circumstances, test that credibility by asking the defendant if he has been convicted of certain crimes or if he is guilty of certain misconduct. Gustafson v. State, 267 Ark. 278, 590 S.W.2d 853 (1979), overruled in part as stated in Rogers v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 521, 536 S.W.3d 128 (2017).

Where a defendant in a criminal case testifies in his own behalf, his credibility is placed in issue, and the state may impeach his testimony by proof of prior felony convictions. Therefore, where the trial court in a murder prosecution determined that the probative value of the defendant's prior conviction for murder outweighed its prejudicial effect, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the prior felony conviction for purposes of impeaching the defendant's credibility. Washington v. State, 6 Ark. App. 85, 638 S.W.2d 690 (1982).

Evidence of prior criminal convictions is not admissible to bolster the prosecution's case by showing that the accused is a bad person but is limited for the purpose of discrediting the witness's testimony. Henry v. State, 278 Ark. 478, 647 S.W.2d 419, cert. denied, 464 U.S. 835, 104 S. Ct. 121, 78 L. Ed. 2d 119 (1983).

The purpose of subsection (a) of this rule is to allow the witness's credibility to be impeached; the rule does not permit proof of an earlier crime merely to bolster the prosecution's case by showing that the accused is of bad character and likely to commit other crimes. McDaniel v. State, 282 Ark. 170, 666 S.W.2d 400 (1984); Smith v. State, 283 Ark. 264, 675 S.W.2d 627 (1984).

The state has the right to impeach a witness's credibility with prior convictions. Such questions would not shift the burden of proof; the questions are used to impeach credibility, not to prove the existence of prior convictions. Robinson v. State, 295 Ark. 693, 751 S.W.2d 335 (1988).

This rule concerns itself with the credibility of a witness who is offering testimony in the current case, and admissibility must be decided on a case-by-case basis. Pollard v. State, 296 Ark. 299, 756 S.W.2d 455 (1988).

Prior convictions for burglary and theft of property could be used to impeach defendant in a murder trial when his credibility was at issue. Coleman v. State, 315 Ark. 610, 869 S.W.2d 713 (1994).

Where defendant in an attempted rape case denied his participation in the crime altogether, his credibility was a central issue in the case, and thus his prior convictions for sexual offenses were extremely probative and admissible for impeachment purposes. Turner v. State, 325 Ark. 237, 926 S.W.2d 843 (1996).

Admission of evidence of defendant's almost ten-year-old manslaughter conviction in his murder trial was not error given the assumption of subdivision (a)(1) of this rule that one who commits a serious offense is less worthy of belief. Defendant's credibility was a central issue in the case after he testified that he shot the victim in self-defense. Lovett v. State, 2011 Ark. App. 275 (2011).

In a capital murder case, although defendant argued that the witness opened the door to evidence of his other recent bad acts by testifying that he had previously robbed defendant at gunpoint but claimed that he had since changed and did not live that life anymore, that was essentially evidence impeaching the witness's credibility, and specific instances of the witness's conduct for the purpose of attacking his credibility, other than a conviction, could not be proved by extrinsic evidence. Allen v. State, 2013 Ark. 396 (2013).

Direct Testimony.

Where defendant's counsel alluded to his prior convictions in his opening statement and the defendant testified to his various criminal involvements during direct examination, it would be a vain and useless act for the trial court to weigh the probative value of admitting this evidence on cross-examination. Williams v. State, 304 Ark. 218, 800 S.W.2d 713 (1990).

Discretion of Court.

The trial court has considerable discretion in determining whether the probative value of a prior conviction outweighs its prejudicial effect and will not be reversed absent an abuse of discretion. Jones v. State, 15 Ark. App. 283, 692 S.W.2d 775 (1985); Pollard v. State, 296 Ark. 299, 756 S.W.2d 455 (1988); Tackett v. State, 298 Ark. 20, 766 S.W.2d 410 (1989), overruled in part, McCoy v. State, 347 Ark. 913, 69 S.W.3d 430 (2002); Griffin v. State, 307 Ark. 537, 823 S.W.2d 446 (1992).

Trial court has discretion in determining the admissibility of prior convictions for impeachment purposes; this rule places no limit on the number of convictions used. Kilpatrick v. State, 322 Ark. 728, 912 S.W.2d 917 (1995).

Dishonesty or False Statement.

Offenses involving dishonesty are admissible under subdivision (a)(2) of this rule regardless of whether they are felonies or misdemeanors; felony convictions may be admissible under subdivision (a)(1) of this rule regardless of their logical relation to dishonesty. Sims v. State, 27 Ark. App. 46, 766 S.W.2d 20 (1989).

Where there was no offer of proof as to the factual circumstances involved in the victim's conviction for hindering apprehension, the court was unable to determine whether the conviction should have been admissible as one involving dishonesty or false statements. West v. State, 27 Ark. App. 49, 766 S.W.2d 22 (1989).

Assaulting a police officer involves neither dishonesty nor false statement; therefore it is not useable for impeachment. Razorback Cab of Ft. Smith, Inc. v. Lingo, 304 Ark. 323, 802 S.W.2d 444 (1991).

Check-kiting is a crime involving dishonesty for purposes of subsection (a) of this rule. Wal-Mart Stores v. Regions Bank Trust Dep't, 347 Ark. 826, 69 S.W.3d 20 (2002).

Admission of evidence of prior convictions involving dishonesty and false statements is not a matter within the discretion of the court; such evidence is always admissible for impeachment and its exclusion is an abuse of discretion. Wal-Mart Stores v. Regions Bank Trust Dep't, 347 Ark. 826, 69 S.W.3d 20 (2002).

Because theft crimes involve dishonesty and are automatically admissible for impeachment purposes, it was unnecessary for defendant to proffer the factual circumstances underlying one victim's conviction, and the circuit court abused its discretion by refusing to admit this evidence; the error was not harmless because the case against defendant rested solely on the victims' credibility, and his three rape convictions were reversed and remanded for a new trial. Rogers v. State, 2018 Ark. 309, 558 S.W.3d 833 (2018) (sub. op. on reh'g).

Duty of Trial Court.

Once defense counsel raises the issue of whether the defendant's prior convictions should be excluded from trial, the trial judge has the duty to see that he is informed of the relevant considerations before admitting the evidence. Hawksley v. State, 276 Ark. 504, 637 S.W.2d 573 (1982).

Expunged Conviction.

Subsection (c) of this rule requires the court to refuse to allow a conviction which has been expunged to be used for testing the credibility of a witness. Steele v. State, 280 Ark. 51, 655 S.W.2d 381 (1983).

The trial court correctly ruled that the expungement of the prior proceedings involving witness, whether it was a conviction or not, rendered such record inadmissible and defendant was properly precluded from cross-examining the witness as to such prior record. Steele v. State, 280 Ark. 51, 655 S.W.2d 381 (1983).

Trial court abused its discretion in excluding evidence of plaintiff's expunged check-kiting conviction as the court did not find that she had been rehabilitated and check-kiting was a crime involving dishonesty and was admissible to impeach her. Wal-Mart Stores v. Regions Bank Trust Dep't, 347 Ark. 826, 69 S.W.3d 20 (2002).

Extent of Cross-Examination.

When an accused, or a witness, takes the stand he may be asked on cross-examination how many times he has been convicted, within the applicable restrictions set forth under this rule; however, to allow the state to go into the details of such convictions would be to defeat both the purpose and plain wording of this rule. Floyd v. State, 278 Ark. 342, 645 S.W.2d 690 (1983).

Where defendant took the stand and admitted he had been convicted of a felony, he could not then insist that he had been impeached and that no further questioning as to the number of prior convictions was permissible; to allow either party to head off the testimony of the other in such a manner would not be in keeping with the standard of fairness with which a trial should be conducted. Floyd v. State, 278 Ark. 342, 645 S.W.2d 690 (1983).

Prior convictions of similar crimes were admissible for impeachment purposes under subsection (a) of this rule. Schalski v. State, 322 Ark. 63, 907 S.W.2d 693 (1995).

For prior convictions involving crimes of dishonesty, the trial court need not weigh the prejudicial effect against the probative value. Schalski v. State, 322 Ark. 63, 907 S.W.2d 693 (1995).

During defendant's trial for the murder of defendant's stepfather, the court did not err under subsection (a) of this rule in permitting the prosecutor to inquire into the nature of defendant's prior felony convictions, which were for violent crimes and involved family members as the targets of the violence; the prosecutor's cross-examination was limited to determining the type of crime, whether a weapon was used, and defendant's relationship to the victim. Ellis v. State, 2012 Ark. 65, 386 S.W.3d 485 (2012).

Factors Governing Admissibility.

Some of the factors which should be considered by the trial court in determining extent to which state may impeach defendant's credibility by proof of prior convictions are the impeachment value of the prior crime, the date of the conviction and the witness's subsequent history, the similarity between the prior conviction and the crime charged, the importance of the defendant's testimony and the centrality of the credibility issue. Bell v. State, 6 Ark. App. 388, 644 S.W.2d 601 (1982); Golston v. State, 26 Ark. App. 176, 762 S.W.2d 398 (1988); Sims v. State, 27 Ark. App. 46, 766 S.W.2d 20 (1989).

In a negligence action, the trial court properly excluded evidence of a home health care employee's criminal convictions under subsections (a) and (b) of this rule because with one exception, none of the convictions showed that they were crimes involving dishonesty or were punishable by death or imprisonment in excess of one year; while a shoplifting conviction did involve dishonesty, it was more than 20 years old. Houchins v. Home Care Professionals of Ark., Inc., 2012 Ark. App. 553, 423 S.W.3d 655 (2012).

Circuit court did not abused its discretion in admitting defendant's prior convictions because, although the circuit court did not explicitly state that the prior convictions were more probative than prejudicial, credibility was a central issue and the circuit court made its ruling after hearing arguments from both the prosecutor and defendant's counsel regarding the probative-versus-prejudicial nature of the prior convictions. Henson v. State, 2014 Ark. App. 49 (2014), aff'd, 2015 Ark. 302, 468 S.W.3d 264 (2015).

Good Faith Inquiry.

It was proper under this rule for the prosecutor in a first-degree battery prosecution to introduce defendant's prior convictions and then ask defendant whether he had any other convictions, since the prosecutor was acting in good faith, based upon information which he had from another county prosecutor's office that defendant may have been convicted for other violations under an alias. Cook v. State, 2 Ark. App. 278, 621 S.W.2d 224 (1981).

Identification of Underlying Felony.

The bare fact of a conviction of a felony does not preclude the cross-examiner from identifying that felony and others underlying the previous convictions; to the contrary, this rule, by requiring that probative value be weighed against prejudice and by admitting all convictions involving dishonesty, undeniably contemplates that the jury will know just what crimes the witness has been convicted of. Simmons v. State, 278 Ark. 305, 645 S.W.2d 680, cert. denied, 464 U.S. 865, 104 S. Ct. 197, 78 L. Ed. 2d 173 (1983).

Limiting Instruction.

Where the defendant in an aggravated robbery prosecution voluntarily testified as to his prior convictions, not for the purpose of showing the jury that he was not credible, but for the purposes of impressing the jury with his honesty and sincerity and of emphasizing the fact that his eligibility for parole would be postponed on account of these convictions, the defendant was not entitled to an instruction that the jury could not "consider any prior trouble in which the defendant may have been involved for any purpose other than in assessing his credibility as a witness" even if that instruction was a correct statement of the law. Smith v. State, 268 Ark. 282, 595 S.W.2d 671 (1980).

Multiple Prior Convictions.

This rule contains limitations as to the time and nature of the convictions used for impeachment and as to their comparative probative value, but none as to their number; if proof that a witness has been convicted of murder or theft or perjury is admissible to impeach his veracity, as it usually is, then proof that he has committed such offenses time and time again may fairly be considered by the jury as further impairing his credibility. Simmons v. State, 278 Ark. 305, 645 S.W.2d 680, cert. denied, 464 U.S. 865, 104 S. Ct. 197, 78 L. Ed. 2d 173 (1983).

Preservation of Issue for Review.

To preserve for review the issue of admissibility of prior convictions for impeachment purposes, a defendant must at least, by a statement of his attorney, establish on the record that he will in fact take the stand and testify if his challenged prior convictions are excluded and sufficiently outline the nature of his testimony so that the trial court, and the reviewing court, can do the necessary balancing contemplated in this rule. If a defendant prefers not to outline his expected testimony at a pretrial hearing held before the prosecution's witnesses have testified, the trial judge may postpone a ruling upon the motion in limine until the State has rested and the time has come for the defendant to reach his final decision about testifying. Simmons v. State, 278 Ark. 305, 645 S.W.2d 680, cert. denied, 464 U.S. 865, 104 S. Ct. 197, 78 L. Ed. 2d 173 (1983).

A defendant must testify in order to raise and preserve for review the claim of improper impeachment with a prior conviction. Smith v. State, 300 Ark. 330, 778 S.W.2d 947 (1989).

Previous Misconduct.

While an absence of respect for the property rights of others is an undesirable trait, it does not directly indicate an impairment of the trait of truthfulness, and cross-examination would not be allowed on specific acts of shoplifting for which there was no conviction. Rhodes v. State, 276 Ark. 203, 634 S.W.2d 107 (1982).

Although the defendant's plea of guilty to forgery charge did not amount to a conviction for impeachment purposes because he was only given a suspended imposition of sentence, the state was not prevented from cross-examining about the act. Specific instances of misconduct which are clearly probative of truthfulness or untruthfulness, as distinguished from dishonesty, may be inquired into on cross-examination of a defendant; most forms of forgery in the second degree are probative of truthfulness or untruthfulness. David v. State, 286 Ark. 205, 691 S.W.2d 133 (1985).

In a criminal trial, defendant was not permitted to cross-examine a state's witness concerning a burglary and theft without evidence of an actual conviction because the allegations were not probative of the witness' truthfulness. Ellison v. State, 354 Ark. 340, 123 S.W.3d 874 (2003).

Circuit court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to allow defense counsel to question the mother's boyfriend about whether he had been in trouble with the law because defense counsel admitted he had no good-faith basis for asking the boyfriend the questions and admitted he knew nothing about the boyfriend's criminal history. Wilson v. State, 2018 Ark. App. 371, 554 S.W.3d 279 (2018).

Prior Convictions.

There was no requirement under this rule that the trial court weigh and consider the prejudicial effect that prior convictions would have against their probative value in impeaching the defendant, since such consideration is only required when a prior conviction is admissible because of the seriousness of the offense, and the offense does not involve dishonesty. James v. State, 274 Ark. 162, 622 S.W.2d 669 (1981).

Where the state did not prove that the defendant's prior convictions were for crimes punishable by imprisonment in excess of one year or that they involved dishonesty or false statement, the trial court erred in allowing the state to use the prior convictions for impeachment purposes. Hawksley v. State, 276 Ark. 504, 637 S.W.2d 573 (1982).

Prior forgery convictions were admissible for impeachment purposes since they involved dishonesty or false statement, despite the fact that almost ten years had elapsed since the convictions. Cooley v. State, 4 Ark. App. 238, 629 S.W.2d 311 (1982).

The trial court erred when it permitted the prosecuting attorney to inquire of the defendant if he had previously entered guilty pleas on two felony charges pending against him in another county, as this rule permits the impeachment of a witness' credibility by introducing evidence proving the conviction of certain crimes, not evidence of guilt. Bongfeldt v. State, 6 Ark. App. 102, 639 S.W.2d 70 (1982).

Where, if defendant had testified, his testimony would have been in direct conflict to the testimony of the state's principal witness, and defendant failed to show that any unfair prejudice would result from the state introducing prior felony conviction, there was no abuse of discretion in the trial court's decision to allow the state to impeach appellant's credibility by naming previous felony convictions. Bell v. State, 6 Ark. App. 388, 644 S.W.2d 601 (1982).

Trial court in rape prosecution did not err in denying defendant's motion in limine wherein he asked the court to order the state not to use evidence of his prior rape or sexual abuse conviction to impeach his credibility as a witness. Williams v. State, 6 Ark. App. 410, 644 S.W.2d 608 (1982).

Trial judge did not abuse his discretion in concluding that a prior conviction for kidnapping would be admissible if defendant elected to testify in prosecution for capital murder, in connection with kidnapping, rape and robbery. Simmons v. State, 278 Ark. 305, 645 S.W.2d 680, cert. denied, 464 U.S. 865, 104 S. Ct. 197, 78 L. Ed. 2d 173 (1983).

The trial court in a prosecution of defendant for theft by receiving and for being a habitual criminal did not err in allowing the State, during the guilt stage of the bifurcated trial, to question the appellant on cross-examination about the extent of his previous felony convictions. Taylor v. State, 9 Ark. App. 286, 658 S.W.2d 432 (1983).

The trial court has a great deal of discretion in determining whether the probative value of the evidence of a prior felony conviction outweighs its prejudicial effect, and the decision of the trial court should not be reversed absent an abuse of that discretion; this weighing process must be decided on a case-by-case basis. Lincoln v. State, 12 Ark. App. 46, 670 S.W.2d 819 (1984).

In a prosecution for possession with intent to deliver a controlled substance and criminal use of a prohibited weapon, trial court did not abuse its discretion in ruling on defendant's motion in limine, permitting evidence on cross-examination of defendant's prior drug-related convictions for impeachment purposes, in spite of defendant's contention that potential prejudice greatly outweighed any probative value and that such ruling forced him to give up his right to testify. Beck v. State, 12 Ark. App. 341, 676 S.W.2d 740 (1984).

A plea of guilty, coupled with a fine and a suspension of imposition of sentence, constitutes a conviction for purposes of impeaching a defendant's testimony. David v. State, 286 Ark. 205, 691 S.W.2d 133 (1985).

Subsection (a) of this rule provides that a witness's credibility can be attacked by proving certain prior convictions, and if the prior convictions involve false statement or dishonesty, the trial court does not determine whether the prejudicial effect of the prior convictions outweighs their probative value. Forgery is a crime involving dishonesty; thus, the trial court in a murder prosecution properly ruled that the state would be allowed to attack the credibility of the defendant on cross-examination by asking if he had been previously convicted of the crime of forgery. David v. State, 286 Ark. 205, 691 S.W.2d 133 (1985).

Where the defendant pleaded guilty and received a suspended sentence 14 years earlier than the trial date, it was error for the trial court to allow the cross-examination about his previous conviction for impeachment purposes. Smith v. State, 19 Ark. App. 188, 718 S.W.2d 475 (1986), overruled as stated in Velcoff v. State, 2006 Ark. App. LEXIS 729 (Ark. Ct. App. Nov. 8, 2006). But see Brown v. State, 63 Ark. App. 38, 972 S.W.2d 956 (1998).

Prosecution is limited to proof of one prior felony conviction in its case in chief where a felony conviction is an element of the offense, the proceedings are bifurcated, and the validity of the conviction is not in dispute. Tatum v. State, 21 Ark. App. 237, 731 S.W.2d 227 (1987).

Evidence of prior convictions of defendant was admissible for purpose of attacking credibility. Williams v. State, 22 Ark. App. 253, 739 S.W.2d 174 (1987).

This rule does not prevent the introduction of felony convictions more than 10 years old to show a propensity to violence in the penalty phase of a capital murder trial. Whitmore v. State, 296 Ark. 308, 756 S.W.2d 890 (1988).

Prior conviction properly admitted. Golston v. State, 26 Ark. App. 176, 762 S.W.2d 398 (1988).

Where the offenses were dissimilar, the prior conviction was recent, and the credibility issue was central, it could not be said that the trial court abused its discretion in admitting evidence of a prior conviction. Sims v. State, 27 Ark. App. 46, 766 S.W.2d 20 (1989).

Any prejudice to defendant was rendered harmless where a curative instruction was given concerning evidence on prior convictions, the defendant voluntarily took the stand where his prior conviction was brought out on cross-examination, and no further objection was made by the defense counsel that the defendant was in any way compelled to testify by introduction of the prior conviction. Ferrell v. State, 305 Ark. 511, 810 S.W.2d 29 (1991).

The trial court was not in error in waiting to rule on defendant's motion to exclude evidence of prior convictions until he had testified. Richardson v. State, 33 Ark. App. 128, 803 S.W.2d 557 (1991).

The trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the evidence of the defendant's previous conviction where: (1) while it was shown the prior conviction was for statutory rape, it was not shown that it involved a sibling of the victim in the case, (2) the jury was instructed that a prior conviction could only be used for the purpose of judging credibility and not as evidence of guilt, (3) the importance of defendant's credibility in the case where there were only two witnesses who knew what happened, and (4) the defendant's testimony that he had been alone in the house with the victim on many other occasions, from which the jury might infer that "nothing ever happened before." Richardson v. State, 33 Ark. App. 128, 803 S.W.2d 557 (1991).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion by allowing defendant's prior convictions of kidnapping, theft, and burglary to be used for impeachment purposes in his trial for rape and burglary. Griffin v. State, 307 Ark. 537, 823 S.W.2d 446 (1992).

When a defendant chooses to testify, prior convictions may be used for impeachment, even when the convictions are of crimes the same as or similar to those charged. Donald v. State, 310 Ark. 197, 833 S.W.2d 770 (1992).

Where a prior conviction was in 1971, but the release date was 1983, use of the conviction in a 1992 trial was within the ten-year limit of this rule. Thomas v. State, 315 Ark. 518, 868 S.W.2d 85 (1994).

The impeachment value of evidence of a prior cocaine conviction outweighed its prejudicial effect in defendant's first-degree murder trial. Hubbard v. State, 328 Ark. 658, 946 S.W.2d 663 (1997).

In the defendant's prosecution for murder, the court properly excluded evidence of the victim's prior felony conviction for driving under the influence of alcohol since the conviction occurred more than 10 years before the trial in the case. Hodge v. State, 332 Ark. 377, 965 S.W.2d 766 (1998).

Defendant's past convictions for rape, kidnapping and aggravated robbery were punishable by more than one year in prison and, thus, subject to the impeachment purposes of this rule; in denying defendant's motion in limine, the trial court properly weighed the probative value of defendant's prior convictions against any possible prejudice and concluded that, should he take the stand, his prior convictions could be used against him for impeachment purposes. Benson v. State, 357 Ark. 43, 160 S.W.3d 341 (2004).

Codefendant's 2002 misdemeanor conviction for domestic battery could be used to impeach codefendant's character, but was inadmissible to prove a similar act. Price v. State, 365 Ark. 25, 223 S.W.3d 817 (2006).

Defendant's convictions for possession of drug paraphernalia with intent to manufacture methamphetamine and possession of pseudoeephedrine were upheld where the trial court properly admitted evidence of his prior marijuana conviction for impeachment purposes; defendant attempted to establish that he had been clean since his 1988 convictions, but the state was permitted to impeach him with evidence of the marijuana charge, which was punishable by more than one year imprisonment and which occurred less than 10 years ago. Nelson v. State, 365 Ark. 314, 229 S.W.3d 35 (2006).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion by allowing company's attorney to question plaintiff owner about the extent of his felony conviction where the owner had already admitted that he was a convicted felon. Swink v. Lasiter Constr., Inc., 94 Ark. App. 262, 229 S.W.3d 553 (2006).

In defendant's rape case, the court properly admitted evidence of defendant's prior felony-theft conviction because the defense was a general denial, which made his credibility a central issue, the conviction fell within the ten-year time limitation, and the prior crime and the crime charged were dissimilar. Strong v. State, 372 Ark. 404, 277 S.W.3d 159 (2008).

In defendant's capital murder trial arising out of the beating death of the two-year-old child of defendant's girlfriend, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting evidence of defendant's prior felony conviction for aggravated assault because felony convictions where punishment was imprisonment for more than one year or death were admissible to impeach credibility. It was only where the punishment was less than one year that the conviction would be inadmissible unless it involved dishonesty or false statements. Smith v. State, 2009 Ark. 453, 343 S.W.3d 319 (2009).

Defendant's convictions for two counts of delivery of cocaine and one count of delivery of a narcotic drug were proper because the trial court did not abuse its discretion in failing to grant a mistrial, nor was there manifest prejudice to defendant. The state had a right to impeach the credibility of a witness with prior convictions under this rule and the trial court did not permit the State to inquire about the underlying facts of those convictions. Porter v. State, 2011 Ark. App. 545 (2011).

Witness's juvenile-delinquency adjudication was admissible because a direct link of the witness to the victim's murder was established by the witness's testimony that he was present at the scene of the murder when it occurred, and the witness was one of only two eyewitnesses who testified against appellee. State v. Harrison, 2012 Ark. 198, 404 S.W.3d 830 (2012).

At defendant's rape trial, the circuit court did not abuse its discretion in determining that evidence of his prior convictions for carnal abuse of a child, arson, terroristic threatening, and failure to register as a sex offender were admissible under this rule to impeach defendant. The prior convictions were highly probative of his credibility, which was at issue because he chose to testify at trial and claimed in defense that the victim offered to pay him to have sex with her. Jordan v. State, 2012 Ark. 277, 412 S.W.3d 150 (2012).

Because the time limit imposed by this rule applied to the introduction of prior convictions for purposes of impeachment in terms of truthfulness, and the trial court found that the evidence of his prior child molestation conviction was being offered, under the pedophile exception, to show the particular sexual depravity of defendant, and not to show that he was untruthful, the time limit in this rule did not preclude admission of defendant's prior child molestation conviction. Woods v. State, 2013 Ark. App. 739, 431 S.W.3d 343 (2013).

Trial court erred in preventing the defense from impeaching a witness with two prior convictions, one for improper use of evidence of registration or fictitious tags and one for criminal impersonation, as they were admissible as impeachment evidence. Fronterhouse v. State, 2015 Ark. App. 211, 463 S.W.3d 312 (2015), overruled in part, Weeks v. Thurston, 2020 Ark. 64, 594 S.W.3d 23 (2020).

Prior Convictions Improperly Admitted.

In a second-degree battery case, the trial court erred in allowing the State to introduce two misdemeanor convictions not involving dishonesty or false statement for impeachment purposes during defendant's testimony because defendant did not open the door to allow the State to impeach his credibility by contradiction, and, thus, the misdemeanor convictions were not admissible. The error was not harmless as it could not be said that there was overwhelming evidence of guilt because the case turned solely on the credibility of witnesses, no other person who witnessed the altercation testified at trial, and allowing improper misdemeanor convictions to be admitted into evidence was clearly prejudicial to defendant's credibility. Austin v. State, 2016 Ark. App. 194, 488 S.W.3d 555 (2016).

Reputation for Truthfulness.

The impeaching testimony of a witness should have been allowed where his testimony was proffered showing he was familiar with the reputation of the defendants' witnesses' truthfulness in the community in which they lived and it was not good, and the proffer was that plaintiff's witness had an opinion personally as to their truthfulness and he would not rely on their testimony. Garis v. Massey, 270 Ark. 646, 606 S.W.2d 109 (Ct. App. 1980).

Scope of Cross-Examination.

The proper scope of cross-examination pursuant to this rule is made on a case by case basis. Pruett v. State, 282 Ark. 304, 669 S.W.2d 186, cert. denied, 469 U.S. 963, 105 S. Ct. 362, 83 L. Ed. 2d 298 (1984).

The rule applies only when one is attempting to show that a witness herself has been convicted of a crime and, therefore, did not apply to a trial court ruling which permitted the State to question a defense character witness regarding her knowledge of a prior conviction of the defendant for which she was incarcerated more than 10 years earlier. Smith v. State, 334 Ark. 190, 974 S.W.2d 427 (1998).

Waiver.

The court in capital murder case did not abuse its discretion in allowing prior robbery conviction to be used for impeachment purposes where the defendant himself repeatedly mentioned his prior conviction during the course of the trial; this would constitute a waiver under the circumstances. Henry v. State, 278 Ark. 478, 647 S.W.2d 419, cert. denied, 464 U.S. 835, 104 S. Ct. 121, 78 L. Ed. 2d 119 (1983).

Rule 610. Religious beliefs or opinions.

Evidence of the beliefs or opinions of a witness on matters of religion is not admissible for the purpose of showing that by reason of their nature his credibility is impaired or enhanced.

CASE NOTESIn General.

Asserting the bias of a witness in closing argument is different from asserting a witness's impaired credibility due to religious beliefs under this rule. Hill v. State, 347 Ark. 441, 65 S.W.3d 408 (2002).

Garst v. Cullum, 291 Ark. 512, 726 S.W.2d 271 (1987).

Rule 611. Mode and order of interrogation and presentation.

(a) Control by Court. The court shall exercise reasonable control over the mode and order of interrogating witnesses and presenting evidence so as to (1) make the interrogation and presentation effective for the ascertainment of the truth, (2) avoid needless consumption of time, and (3) protect witnesses from harassment or undue embarrassment.

(b) Scope of Cross-Examination. Cross-examination should be limited to the subject matter of the direct examination and matters affecting the credibility of the witness. The court may, in the exercise of discretion, permit inquiry into additional matters as if on direct examination.

(c) Leading Questions. Leading questions should not be used on the direct examination of a witness except as may be necessary to develop his testimony. Ordinarily leading questions should be permitted on cross-examination. Whenever a party calls a hostile witness, an adverse party, or a witness identified with an adverse party, interrogation may be by leading questions.

CASE NOTESAbuse of Discretion.

To the extent the trial court limited the cross-examination because it was repetitive, the trial court abused its discretion because the questioning was not repetitive as the State suggested. Harris v. State, 2016 Ark. App. 173, 489 S.W.3d 172 (2016).

Control by Court.

The trial court's remarks to the plaintiff's attorney did not amount to an unmerited rebuke constituting prejudicial error. Berry v. St.

Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 328 Ark. 553, 944 S.W.2d 838 (1997).

In defendant's prosecution under § 5-14-103(a)(3)(A), it was not an abuse of discretion to allow the state to interrupt the victim's testimony when the victim became unresponsive and later recall the victim, or to overrule defendant's request to immediately cross-examine the victim because (1) § 16-43-703 [repealed] allowed reexamination of witnesses, (2) subdivision (a)(3) of this rule required the court to control the victim's interrogation, (3) subsection (b) of this rule limited the scope of the victim's cross-examination's to the victim's direct examination, and, when the victim was excused, the victim had given no testimony prejudicial to defendant, and (4) the victim's youth and timidity mitigated against finding an abuse of discretion. Elliott v. State, 2010 Ark. App. 810, 379 S.W.3d 101 (2010).

In a termination of parental rights proceeding, the trial court did not err under subdivision (a) of this rule in sua sponte admonishing the mother's counsel not to ask the child's father a question that had already been answered; the trial court was simply exercising control over its courtroom and moving the testimony along to information that had not already been disclosed. Duncan v. Ark. Dep't of Human Servs., 2013 Ark. App. 13 (2013).

Court of appeals declined to reverse on the basis that a physician offered a nonresponsive "soliloquy" during defendant's cross-examination in which the physician explained at length a 2010 ruling against him by the Arkansas Medical Board; the appellate court deferred to the circuit court's broad discretion to exercise reasonable control over the mode of interrogating witnesses. Razorback Cab of Fort Smith, Inc. v. Amon, 2016 Ark. App. 352, 498 S.W.3d 346 (2016).

Credibility of Expert.

In a condemnation proceeding, an expert witness' knowledge, or lack of knowledge, and his record of accuracy regarding the value of property would go to the credibility to be given to his testimony as an expert witness. Arkansas State Hwy. Comm'n v. Pulaski Inv. Co., 265 Ark. 584, 580 S.W.2d 679 (1979).

Credibility of Witness.

Matters affecting the credibility of a witness are always relevant, and because defendant's efforts to discredit a witness during her cross-examination were limited by the trial court as irrelevant, the trial court abused its discretion; however, because there was overwhelming evidence of defendant's guilt, independent of the witness's testimony, defendant did not suffer prejudice as a result of the trial court's error in limiting the cross-examination. Harris v. State, 2016 Ark. App. 173, 489 S.W.3d 172 (2016).

Discretion of Court.

Trial court did not abuse its discretion by denying plaintiff's request to call defendant, a former employee, as a witness because the evidence rule vested considerable discretion in the trial court and it explained that a witness list had been requested, and supplied, but defendant was not on that list, even though plaintiff should have known that it wanted to call her as a witness. PST Tax Inc. v. Tindall, 2021 Ark. App. 388 (2021).

A trial court may, in the exercise of its discretion, permit inquiry into matters outside the scope of direct examination. Parker v. State, 265 Ark. 315, 578 S.W.2d 206 (1979).

Although prosecutor did not address the value of stolen property on direct examination, the trial court did not abuse its discretion under § 16-43-703 [repealed] and subsection (a) of this rule in allowing reexamination on the point during redirect because the value of the goods was relevant to the state's case. Moore v. State, 362 Ark. 70, 207 S.W.3d 493 (2005).

Circuit court did not abuse its discretion in denying a mother's objection to the testimony of an occupational therapist where the mother had not explained why admitting the testimony was error, and the testimony regarding the child's unclean appearance had already come in through the child's foster mother. Schaible v. Ark. Dep't of Human Servs., 2014 Ark. App. 541, 444 S.W.3d 366 (2014).

Circuit court did not curtail counsel's attempt to establish the background and qualifications of a driver's expert witnesses because both experts testified extensively about their background and qualifications, and the circuit court simply exercised its wide discretion to limit further inquiry on an undisputed issue. Cantrell v. Toyota Motor Corp., 2018 Ark. App. 335, 553 S.W.3d 157 (2018).

Expert Testimony.

While the proposed cross-examination on expert's extraordinary findings in other cases might have had the effect of diminishing the expert's credibility, his findings in the prior cases were not consequential to a determination of whether his present theory was to be believed in this trial; for this reason, the trial court could restrict the scope of the cross-examination. Larimore v. State, 317 Ark. 111, 877 S.W.2d 570 (1994).

Harmless Error.

While a trial court erred in refusing to allow appellant to call a witness during a hearing on appellee's petition for an order of protection against appellant, appellant failed to show that he was prejudiced by the trial court's order. Pablo v. Crowder, 95 Ark. App. 268, 236 S.W.3d 559 (2006).

Leading Questions.

In cases involving very young females who are alleged to have been victims of crimes of a sexual nature, the Supreme Court will not disturb the action of the trial judge in permitting leading questions to be asked by the prosecution, if it appeared to him to be necessary to elicit the truth, unless his discretion has been abused; the youth, timidity and ignorance of the witness are important factors militating against the finding of an abuse of discretion.

Hamblin v. State, 268 Ark. 497, 597 S.W.2d 589 (1980).

It is always in the sound discretion of the trial judge to permit a witness to be asked leading questions on direct examination. Hamblin v. State, 268 Ark. 497, 597 S.W.2d 589 (1980).

Where the prosecuting witness in rape prosecution was 11 years of age and was nervous and upset at the intimate nature of the questions, this rule allowed the trial judge some discretion in permitting leading questions under those circumstances. Scantling v. State, 271 Ark. 678, 609 S.W.2d 925 (1981).

Where counsel for defendant in personal injury case asked doctor testifying for defense whether the difference between his five percent impairment rating given to plaintiff and the 25 percent to 50 percent impairment rating given by plaintiff's doctor resulted from the different meaning given the word "disability," such question was leading under this rule, and the trial court properly excluded the answer. Northwestern Nat'l Cas. Co. v. Mays, 273 Ark. 16, 616 S.W.2d 734 (1981).

A ruling permitting the prosecution to ask leading questions is a matter of state evidentiary law which is committed to the trial court's discretion; accordingly, the validity of such a ruling is reviewable in a federal habeas corpus proceeding only insofar as it results in a trial so fundamentally unfair as to deny the defendant due process. Wallace v. Lockhart, 701 F.2d 719 (8th Cir.), cert. denied, 464 U.S. 934, 104 S. Ct. 340, 78 L. Ed. 2d 308 (1983).

Where the victim of rape was 87 years of age, and she had some difficulty understanding, and she was reluctant to answer questions on a subject not normally discussed in public, the trial judge did not abuse his discretion in permitting the prosecutor's use of leading questions. D.D. v. State, 40 Ark. App. 75, 842 S.W.2d 62 (1992).

The court properly allowed the use of leading questions during the direct examination of the mother of the victim and the defendant where the court reporter and judge could not hear and understand her testimony. Chase v. State, 334 Ark. 274, 973 S.W.2d 791 (1998).

In the prosecution of the defendant for the murder of his brother, it was not error for the court to allow the prosecutor to use leading questions while examining the defendant's and his brother's mother where the use of leading questions was allowed because the court reporter and judge had difficulty hearing the mother's testimony and the jury could otherwise have been confused or misled. Chase v. State, 334 Ark. 274, 973 S.W.2d 791 (1998).

Trial court did not err in allowing certain questions; although the trial court warned the prosecutor that the questions were bordering on leading pursuant to subsection (c) of this rule, the questions objected to were used to clarify or highlight elements of the witness's previous testimony. Moore v. State, 362 Ark. 70, 207 S.W.3d 493 (2005).

Trial court did not err in denying appellant's petition for postconviction relief because appellant did not demonstrate that an objection that the prosecution was leading would have had merit. Bell v. State, 2010 Ark. 65, 360 S.W.3d 98 (2010).

According to the plain language of subdivision (c) of this rule, the circuit court erred when it ruled that one daughter was not entitled to ask leading questions of the daughter to whom property had been transferred before their father's death where the daughter called the receiving daughter, the adverse party, to testify as a witness during her case-in-chief. Montigue v. Jones, 2019 Ark. App. 237, 576 S.W.3d 46 (2019).

Order of Interrogation.

The trial court has considerable discretion in regulating the mode and order of interrogation and presentation of proof, and the trial court in an action arising from an automobile accident did not abuse its discretion when it allowed a police officer, at the defendant's request, to return to the stand and testify after his release from the witness rule and in the interruption of the plaintiffs' order of proof, in order to allow the officer to testify as to his considerable qualifications in the area of automobile body repair. Freeman v. Anderson, 279 Ark. 282, 651 S.W.2d 450 (1983).

There was no abuse of discretion when the circuit court allowed defendant to recall plaintiff, in personal injury action, for several additional questions on cross-examination while plaintiff was still putting on his case. Piercy v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc., 311 Ark. 424, 844 S.W.2d 337 (1993).

Scope of Cross-Examination.

Where, in a prosecution for rape, the defendant produced five character witnesses to prove his reputation for truthfulness, the trial court properly allowed the prosecutor to cross-examine the witnesses by asking whether their opinions as to the defendant's reputation would be altered by knowing of the defendant's prior conviction of sexual abuse, since such conviction had been brought out on direct examination of the defendant by his defense counsel. Caldwell v. State, 267 Ark. 1053, 594 S.W.2d 24 (Ct. App. 1980).

Once the defendant takes the stand, he has waived his right not to be a witness against himself and is subject to cross-examination; the state can properly cross-examine a defendant on his failure to deny guilt when he has raised the issue on direct. Hill v. State, 285 Ark. 77, 685 S.W.2d 495 (1985).

Where, during the cross-examination of the defendant's girlfriend, the defense counsel had elicited an admission from her that she was engaged in a legal battle about the custody of her children and the attorney later asked whether if the defendant was convicted, it would remove one potential witness that she would have a problem with, the court properly sustained the state's objection on the ground that the question was argumentative, and it contained unwarranted assumptions of fact on the part of the interrogator. Holland v. State, 288 Ark. 435, 706 S.W.2d 375 (1986).

The cross-examiner is given wide latitude, particularly in matters relating to the witness's credibility. Shaver v. State, 37 Ark. App. 124, 826 S.W.2d 300 (1992).

The trial judge has considerable discretion in determining the scope of cross-examination. Shaver v. State, 37 Ark. App. 124, 826 S.W.2d 300 (1992).

The trial court did not err in refusing to allow the condemning authority to impeach the property owners' expert witness on collateral issues that were not testified to on direct examination nor used by the expert in determining the value of the land. Board of Comm'rs v. Rollins, 57 Ark. App. 241, 945 S.W.2d 384 (1997).

Trial court did not err by allowing the state to cross-examine defense's expert witness about whether something other than a learning disability or emotional immaturity, such as drug abuse, could also lead to psychosis because the examination clarified the facts as to what could cause a psychosis. Holloway v. State, 363 Ark. 254, 213 S.W.3d 633 (2005).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying defense counsel's cross-examination of the investigating officer regarding arrest warrants in other child sex-abuse cases that the officer investigated and individuals who were wholly unrelated to the trial at hand; such cross-examination risked jury confusion as to defendant's charges, because the fact that not every single person the officer arrested was found guilty of a crime was not even marginally relevant to the question of whether defendant raped the victims in his case, and there was no evidence in the record that the officer ever acted improperly in his role as investigator in defendant's case or any other case in which he was involved. Jackson v. State, 2018 Ark. App. 222, 547 S.W.3d 753 (2018).

Because defendant did not make the argument in the trial court, his argument was not preserved for appeal that the exclusion of sexually explicit text messages and photographs from his cross-examination of a witness violated the federal and state Confrontation Clauses as well as subsection (b) of this section. Fowlkes v. State, 2020 Ark. 56, 592 S.W.3d 702 (2020).

Scope of Redirect.

In a termination of parental rights case, it was not reversible error to overrule an objection to the Arkansas Department of Human Services' redirect questions beyond the scope of cross-examination because subsection (a) of this rule gives the trial court control over the manner of interrogating witnesses to avoid needless consumption of time. Sanders v. Ark. Dep't of Human Servs., 503 S.W.3d 128 (Ark. Ct. App. 2016).

Rule 612. Writing or object used to refresh memory.

(a) While Testifying. If, while testifying, a witness uses a writing or object to refresh his memory, an adverse party is entitled to have the writing or object produced at the trial, hearing, or deposition in which the witness is testifying.

(b) Before Testifying. If, before testifying, a witness uses a writing or object to refresh his memory for the purpose of testifying and the court in its discretion determines that the interests of justice so require, an adverse party is entitled to have the writing or object produced, if practicable, at the trial, hearing, or deposition in which the witness is testifying.

(c) Terms and Conditions of Production and Use. A party entitled to have a writing or object produced under this rule is entitled to inspect it, to cross-examine the witness thereon, and to introduce in evidence those portions which relate to the testimony of the witness. If production of the writing or object at the trial, hearing, or deposition is impracticable, the court may order it made available for inspection. If it is claimed that the writing or object contains matters not related to the subject matter of the testimony, the court shall examine the writing or object in camera, excise any portions not so related, and order delivery of the remainder to the party entitled thereto. Any portion withheld over objections shall be preserved and made available to the appellate court in the event of an appeal. If a writing or object is not produced, made available for inspection, or delivered pursuant to order under this rule, the court shall make any order justice requires, but in criminal cases if the prosecution elects not to comply, the order shall be one striking the testimony or, if the court in its discretion determines that the interests of justice so require, declaring a mistrial.

CASE NOTES

Affidavit.

Surgeon did not preserve his argument that this rule precluded the patient's expert from reading his affidavit during his direct examination because the surgeon never objected on the grounds that reading from the affidavit would violate this rule. McCoy v. Montgomery, 370 Ark. 333, 259 S.W.3d 430 (2007).

Construction.

A witness may occasionally consult a writing to refresh his memory, but this does not mean that one may read from a transcript which is beyond the bounds of refreshing a recollection. Dillon v. State, 317 Ark. 384, 877 S.W.2d 915 (1994).

Discretion of Court.

Since subsection (b) of this rule provides that an adverse party is entitled to a writing used by a witness to refresh his memory before testifying and for that purpose, if the court in its discretion determines that the interests of justice require that it be produced, this was a matter lying within the sound judicial discretion of the trial judge, and will not be reversed unless there has been an abuse of discretion. Goodwin v. State, 263 Ark. 856, 568 S.W.2d 3 (1978).

Although the party offering the witness was willing to provide a copy of those records relied upon to refresh the witness' memory, the judge was within his discretion when he denied the witness the use of the records because the records were requested in discovery, but were not provided to the other party. Marvel v. Parker, 317 Ark. 232, 878 S.W.2d 364 (1994).

During defendant's trial for permitting the abuse of her minor child, the court did not abuse its discretion in allowing the use of a transcript of a child witness's former testimony to reflect the child witness's recollection; the 11-year-old child witness had been impeached and was testifying to matters the child witness had testified to some five years previously at the age of six years. Sullivan v. State, 2012 Ark. 74, 386 S.W.3d 507 (2012).

Hypnosis.

No abuse of discretion found in court's disallowing the use of witness' statements made under hypnosis to expand her testimony. Mills v. State, 322 Ark. 647, 910 S.W.2d 682 (1995).

Photographs.

It was not error for a police officer to refer to photographs he had taken of a crime scene, despite the fact that the photographs had previously been held to be inflammatory and inadmissible, since he referred to the photographs to refresh his memory of the scene while testifying at the trial, as permitted by this rule, and the photographs were never viewed by the jury. Singleton v. State, 274 Ark. 126, 623 S.W.2d 180 (1981), cert. denied, 456 U.S. 938, 102 S. Ct. 1996, 72 L. Ed. 2d 458 (1982), cert. denied, 459 U.S. 882, 103 S. Ct. 184, 74 L. Ed. 2d 149 (1982).

Police Reports or Notes.

There was no reason to allow the police incident/offense reports into evidence based on this rule, where the officer testified from her own memory and there was no indication from the record that she used these reports to refresh her memory. Bennett v. State, 307 Ark. 400, 821 S.W.2d 13 (1991).

Officer, who participated in a drug operation that involved 101 drug dealers and 224 drug purchases, understandably, was unable to remember the details of each purchase without the aid of his notes, and the use of his notes was proper under this rule. Sweat v. State, 307 Ark. 406, 820 S.W.2d 459 (1991).

Statement Reduced to Writing.

Where the defendant, after being given his Miranda rights, voluntarily gave a statement which the county sheriff reduced to writing, the sheriff could use the writing to refresh his own memory while testifying, despite the fact that the statement had not been signed by the defendant. Wilson v. State, 277 Ark. 43, 639 S.W.2d 45 (1982).

A statement made by the defendant to the police was reliably proven, even though the original signed copy of the confession had been destroyed and was therefore not available at the trial, where a copy of the statement was used to refresh the memory of the three officials who were present during the interrogation and all three witnesses testified that they remembered the statement being made by the defendant and recalled in general terms what was said. Smith v. State, 286 Ark. 247, 691 S.W.2d 154 (1985).

Time Line Exhibit.

A time-line premarked by defense counsel was admissible where it was used as demonstrative evidence, not to shape the witness's testimony. Berry v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 328 Ark. 553, 944 S.W.2d 838 (1997).

Strain v. State, 2012 Ark. 42, 394 S.W.3d 294 (2012).

Rule 613. Prior statements of witness.

(a) Examining Witness Concerning Prior Statement. In examining a witness concerning a prior statement made by him, whether written or not, the statement need not be shown nor its contents disclosed to him at that time, but on request the same shall be shown or disclosed to opposing counsel.

(b) Extrinsic Evidence of Prior Inconsistent Statement of Witness. Extrinsic evidence of a prior inconsistent statement by a witness is not admissible unless the witness is afforded an opportunity to explain or deny the same and the opposite party is afforded an opportunity to explain or deny the same and the opposite party is afforded an opportunity to interrogate him thereon, or the interests of justice otherwise require. This provision does not apply to admissions of a party-opponent as defined in Rule 801(d)(2).

CASE NOTES

In General.

Neither Evid. Rules 608, 609, 806, nor this rule permit impeachment by extrinsic evidence on a collateral matter. Teas v. State, 23 Ark. App. 154, 744 S.W.2d 739 (1988).

A prior inconsistent statement cannot be quoted into evidence as part of the impeachment process. Williams v. State, 55 Ark. App. 156, 934 S.W.2d 931 (1996).

This rule does not globally forbid the impeachment of a witness without first giving the witness an opportunity to explain or deny the evidence; rather, it specifically forbids impeaching a witness with a prior inconsistent statement without first affording that opportunity. Brigance v. State, 2018 Ark. App. 213, 548 S.W.3d 147 (2018).

Appellate Review.

In order for an appellate court to hold that testimony regarding an inconsistent statement was improperly excluded under this rule, appellant must have made a proffer of the evidence under Evid. Rule 103; where there was no proffer and the substance of the testimony was not apparent, the appellate court had no way of knowing whether the answer would have revealed an inconsistent statement. Patterson v. State, 318 Ark. 358, 885 S.W.2d 667 (1994).

In a rape case, appellant preserved an argument under this rule for appellate review because, even though the rule itself was never mentioned, a reference was made to a "prior inconsistent statement." Bystanders reported a victim's statements to court officials, and a lengthy hearing was conducted outside of the presence of the jury, where counsel and the trial court seemed very clear about the evidentiary problem. McClendon v. State, 2012 Ark. App. 479 (2012).

Applicability.

This rule did not apply to the introduction of the deposition of a psychiatrist who had evaluated a witness and codefendant, where the defendant did not attempt to impeach the codefendant with statements made to the psychiatrist. McArthur v. State, 309 Ark. 196, 830 S.W.2d 842 (1992).

Coconspirator's statements made to police officers and recorded on tape were clearly within the scope of this rule, where they were made during the course of criminal conduct, which occurred within a brief interval in time, and they were designed to further the specific objective of such conduct, i.e., a purchase by police officers of some 15 rocks of crack cocaine and by his statements the coconspirator was both promoting the product of his confederate and abetting a completion of the sale. Dixon v. State, 310 Ark. 460, 839 S.W.2d 173 (1992).

In murder case, trial court did not err in allowing extrinsic evidence to impeach a witness where witness's testimony left doubt as to whether she admitted her earlier statement was a lie. Threadgill v. State, 347 Ark. 986, 69 S.W.3d 423 (2002).

Argument that state's purpose was not to introduce a statement to impeach the child witness pursuant to subsection (b) of this rule, but to introduce the statement as substantive evidence of defendant's guilt, was rejected because there was no evidence that the state knew that, at trial, the child would deny making a statement to the police. Williams v. State, 2010 Ark. 89, 377 S.W.3d 168 (2010), writ denied, Williams v. Porch, 2018 Ark. 1, 534 S.W.3d 152 (2018).

Trial court incorrectly applied this rule and abused its discretion in excluding questions during the cross-examination of the investigating detective; defense counsel was not attempting to impeach the detective with a prior inconsistent statement but instead the purpose of the questions was to show that the homeowner got so poor a look at the intruder that she could not identify him as older than 16 and that her state of mind was prejudicially influenced by the media coverage. The exclusion of the evidence required reversal. Brigance v. State, 2018 Ark. App. 213, 548 S.W.3d 147 (2018).

Cumulative Evidence.

There was no abuse of discretion in the exclusion of a letter written by the co-defendant to a federal magistrate judge because it was consistent with co-defendant's testimony; since there was nothing in the letter which contradicted anything co-defendant said on the witness stand, the letter would have no impeachment value and would strictly be cumulative. Kilpatrick v. State, 322 Ark. 728, 912 S.W.2d 917 (1995).

Evidence of Bias.

Where the defendant wished to show that an undercover policeman had attempted to recruit him as an informer, promising to get all charges dismissed if he agreed, but vowing to see that he went to prison if he did not, it was reversible error to exclude it, as this testimony had a bearing on possible bias, but it was necessary that the officer first deny his bias. Goodwin v. State, 263 Ark. 856, 568 S.W.2d 3 (1978).

Extrinsic Evidence.

Where a witness admits having made a prior inconsistent statement, the court should not allow extrinsic evidence of the prior statement, nor evidence to prove the statement is incorrect. Rouse v. Goode, 293 Ark. 272, 737 S.W.2d 447 (1987); Ford v. State, 296 Ark. 8, 753 S.W.2d 258 (1988).

Trial court did not err in excluding testimony as further impeachment of the victim's credibility where, for the purpose of eliciting testimony that the events mentioned in the rape victim's prior statement had never occurred, the defendant attempted to call to the stand a witness alleged to have been mentioned and identified in the prior statement. Teas v. State, 23 Ark. App. 154, 744 S.W.2d 739 (1988).

The requirements for admitting extrinsic evidence of a witness's prior inconsistent statements were met where the witness demonstrated an inability to recall the facts or to remember what she had previously said to the police, admitted only that she had given a statement or interview to the police, and attempted to disavow that statement by stating that she told the police what she thought she knew, but that she was not "for sure" about what happened at the time of her prior statement. Kennedy v. State, 344 Ark. 433, 42 S.W.3d 407 (2001).

In a rape case, a trial court abused its discretion when it refused to allow appellant to introduce extrinsic evidence of a prior inconsistent statement under this rule; at least two disinterested persons reported that a victim stated that she had lied when she was leaving the courtroom. The evidence of rape rested primarily on the victim's testimony, and the assessment of her credibility was crucial to the outcome of the case; the evidence was not so overwhelming and the error so slight as to make it harmless. McClendon v. State, 2012 Ark. App. 479 (2012).

In a rape case, the trial court abused its discretion when it permitted the State to play to the jury, in its entirety, a 30-minute recording of a forensic interview of the accuser wherein the accuser had made the rape allegation. Under this rule, the inconsistent statements made by the accuser should not have been played to the jury until the accuser was first given the opportunity to explain or deny each statement and she in fact denied making the statements. By permitting the State to play the entire recording of the forensic interview to the jury, the trial court erroneously allowed the State to bolster the accuser's testimony with multiple prior consistent statements. Perez v. State, 2016 Ark. App. 54 (2016).

Harmless Error.

Although admission of extrinsic proof of witness's prior inconsistent statement violated subsection (b) of this rule, the error was harmless because the statement's key detail, defendant's threat, was brought before the jury only when the state sought to impeach the witness with her prior statement, and defendant did not object during her testimony or seek a limiting instruction; thus, the statement relating to defendant's alleged threat was put before the jury without objection. Likewise, defendant not object to the state's use of the statement as substantive evidence during closing argument. White v. State, 2010 Ark. App. 588 (2010).

Impeachment by Contradiction.

State was properly permitted to impeach its own witness under Rule 607 for comparatively minor matter where the prosecution complied with this rule by showing that the witness had made a prior inconsistent statement, even though the state may have waited too long before adducing the impeachment testimony on rebuttal, since that matter rested in the trial court's sound discretion. Heard v. State, 272 Ark. 140, 612 S.W.2d 312 (1981).

Where defendant's sister had made detailed statements to sheriff investigating murder case, but acknowledged only the principal one and did not sign any of them, and, further, at trial professed not to remember what she had told the sheriff, the state properly used the statements since they were admissible under this rule to impeach the sister, despite her asserted lack of memory, and such statements were admissible as substantive evidence under subdivision (d)(1) of Rule 801 even though the prior statement was not under oath. Chisum v. State, 273 Ark. 1, 616 S.W.2d 728 (1981).

Where the state's witness admitted making a prior inconsistent statement, the trial judge correctly ruled that the prior statement was admissible solely for impeachment purposes. Lewis v. State, 288 Ark. 595, 709 S.W.2d 56 (1986), writ denied, Lewis v. Hobbs, 2014 Ark. 407, 443 S.W.3d 530 (2014).

Statements are clearly relevant for impeachment purposes where they contradict testimony, and are therefore admissible under this rule. McDaniel v. State, 291 Ark. 596, 726 S.W.2d 679 (1987).

Where cross-examination related to alleged statements made by the defendant which would contradict his direct testimony, this was impeachment by contradiction; there is no express provision for it in the Uniform Rules of Evidence, although it is implicitly authorized by this rule. Shaver v. State, 37 Ark. App. 124, 826 S.W.2d 300 (1992).

Witness' assertions that she could not recall her unsworn statements to police were sufficiently inconsistent to allow her to be impeached at trial with her prior statement under subsection (b) of this rule. Roseby v. State, 329 Ark. 554, 953 S.W.2d 32 (1997), overruled, MacKintrush v. State, 334 Ark. 390, 978 S.W.2d 293 (1998).

Counterclaim filed by a property owner's predecessors in interest in an earlier lawsuit did not constitute a statement by the property owner, and therefore, could not be used to impeach the property owner's testimony. Parkerson v. Brown, 2013 Ark. App. 718, 430 S.W.3d 864 (2013).

Opportunity to Deny Statement.

Where witness claimed not to recollect defendant's participation in crime, he became unavailable, and thus his prior inconsistent statement was admissible as substantive evidence for the state; nevertheless, the witness was entitled to an opportunity to explain or deny his former statement and it was an abuse of the trial court's discretion to refuse the defendant the right to make a proffer of testimony during the in-chambers hearing. David v. State, 269 Ark. 498, 601 S.W.2d 864 (1980).

It was proper for investigator to testify to informant's prior inconsistent statement since the informant was given an opportunity to explain or deny that testimony, and there was a proper foundation to admit the testimony under this rule. Hackett v. State, 2 Ark. App. 228, 619 S.W.2d 687 (1981).

Out-of-Court Statements.

Where trial court allowed sheriff and his secretary to narrate statements made by sister of defendant during his investigation of murder case, and such statements had not been signed by her, but she had acknowledged the principal statement, it was error for the court to admit such evidence as recorded recollections under Rule 803 since her statements were not within the rule as reviving present recollection through a contemporaneously made memorandum; however, since the statements could be used to impeach inconsistent out-of-court statements made by the defendant's sister under this rule, where the state impeaches its own witness under Rule 607, the ruling of the trial judge was correct for the wrong reasons and thus was not reversed. Chisum v. State, 273 Ark. 1, 616 S.W.2d 728 (1981).

Although the witness's statement in question was signed, it was not given under oath and subject to the penalty of perjury, therefore, it was hearsay and inadmissible as substantive evidence. Harris v. State, 36 Ark. App. 120, 819 S.W.2d 30 (1991).

Unsworn prior statements made by a witness cannot be introduced as substantive evidence in a criminal case to prove the truth of the matter asserted therein. Lewis v. State, 41 Ark. App. 89, 848 S.W.2d 955 (1993).

The trial court acted correctly, where it did not rule that defense counsel could not ask the witness whether she had made the statement that was attributed to her by the police report, but simply would not allow counsel to reveal what the report stated the witness had said until after she had been asked whether she had made that statement. Lewis v. State, 41 Ark. App. 89, 848 S.W.2d 955 (1993).

In a case where defendant was convicted of the capital murder of a three-month-old child, the circuit court did not err in not allowing defendant to question a detective regarding whether a prior statement was made by the child's mother; although the mother testified regarding defendant's physical abuse toward her and making their daughter watch, the mother was never asked, including by defendant during her testimony, if she had previously told the detective about the abuse in front of their daughter during her interviews. Atwood v. State, 2020 Ark. 283 (2020).

Prior Inconsistent Statements.

Where there was nothing in the record to indicate that one witness ever made a remark either in accordance with, or in opposition to, the statement testified to by a second witness, no "prior inconsistent statement" was at issue. National Bank of Commerce v. Beavers, 304 Ark. 81, 802 S.W.2d 132 (1990).

Admissibility is not limited to the admission of prior inconsistent statements in which diametrically opposite assertions have been made, instead, a witness' prior statement is admissible whenever a reasonable man could infer on comparing the whole effect of the two statements that they have been produced by inconsistent beliefs. Truck Ctr. of Tulsa, Inc. v. Autrey, 310 Ark. 260, 836 S.W.2d 359 (1992).

If the defendant seeks to impeach the prosecuting witness with the latter's complaint filed in a civil action, the complaint qualifies as a prior inconsistent statement under this rule. Jernigan v. State, 38 Ark. App. 102, 828 S.W.2d 864 (1992).

In prosecution for rape, the victim's prior inconsistent statements were not admissible for purposes of impeachment since the victim admitted making them, and the statements were not admissible as substantive evidence because they had not been made under oath. Hinzman v. State, 53 Ark. App. 256, 922 S.W.2d 725 (1996).

The rule permits extrinsic evidence of prior inconsistent statements of a witness to be introduced for the purpose of impeachment only if the witness is afforded the opportunity to explain or deny the statement, and the other party is afforded the opportunity to interrogate the witness on that statement. Byrd v. State, 337 Ark. 413, 992 S.W.2d 759 (1999), overruled in part, McCoy v. State, 347 Ark. 913, 69 S.W.3d 430 (2002).

In an action against the workers' compensation carrier for the decedent's employer in which the plaintiffs alleged that the carrier committed the tort of outrage by interfering with their rights to promptly bury the decedent in accord with their wishes, a representative of the carrier opened the door to impeachment by a prior inconsistent statement when the representative testified that it was not true that the carrier believed its claims adjuster had misrepresented his actions in dealing with claims and, therefore, the plaintiffs were properly permitted to introduce into evidence a memorandum in which a manager of the carrier wrote that he was convinced that the adjuster had misrepresented his responses in a meeting pertaining to another claim. Travelers Ins. Co. v. State, 338 Ark. 81, 991 S.W.2d 591 (1999).

In a prosecution for robbery, it was reversible error for the court to refuse to allow the defendant to impeach a state witness with a prior inconsistent statement that the victim was intoxicated at the time of the robbery as the state's case boiled down to the testimony of only two witnesses and the excluded statement was an indispensable part of the defendant's case. Pryor v. State, 71 Ark. App. 87, 27 S.W.3d 440 (2000).

A witness's trial testimony was sufficiently inconsistent with her prior detailed statements to the police so as to allow impeachment of the witness with her prior statement where, at trial, she claimed loss of memory, which was conveniently favorable to the defendant, her husband's first cousin. Kennedy v. State, 344 Ark. 433, 42 S.W.3d 407 (2001).

Where victim admitted that her testimony at trial differed from her earlier written statement, subsection (b) of this rule did not allow introduction of the prior statement to impeach the victim's credibility. Garner v. State, 81 Ark. App. 309, 101 S.W.3d 857 (2003).

Trial court did not err by denying the admission of testimony from an impeachment witness as the witness defendant sought to impeach had already left the courthouse and had not been given an opportunity to explain or deny her allegedly inconsistent statement; further, defendant failed to argue at the trial level that the impeachment witness should have been allowed in the interests of justice, thus, he could not raise that argument for the first time on appeal. Yankaway v. State, 366 Ark. 18, 233 S.W.3d 136 (2006).

Because an ex-wife's testimony left doubt as to whether she admitted that an earlier statement was a lie, the statements which were made during a telephone conversation between the ex-wife and a victim could be used by the state for the purpose of impeaching the ex-wife during defendant's rape trial. The recorded statements directly contradicted the ex-wife's assertion that she never believed that the charges against defendant were true. Winkle v. State, 374 Ark. 128, 286 S.W.3d 147 (2008).

During defendant's trial for aggravated assault, his wife was given the opportunity to explain a prior inconsistent statement; she was asked about her 911 call to a dispatcher and explained her statements during that call, saying that she was “more mad than hurt.” Mathis v. State, 2021 Ark. App. 285, 423 S.W.3d 91 (2012).

In a sexual assault case, testimony regarding the victim’s prior inconsistent statement should have been allowed into evidence as impeachment evidence in accord with subdivision (b) of this rule because both sides had the opportunity to interrogate the victim about the statement, and she was given the opportunity to explain or deny. She clearly denied having made the statement. Scamardo v. State, 2013 Ark. 163, 426 S.W.3d 900 (2013).

Even if the trial court erred by refusing to allow defense counsel to impeach the sole eyewitness with his prior inconsistent statements, defendant failed to show he was prejudiced because the eyewitness’s testimony was riddled with inconsistencies and he admitted having given false prior statements. Maiden v. State, 2014 Ark. 294, 438 S.W.3d 263 (2014).

Fact that a child rape victim testified that she did not remember telling a therapist that she had been asleep when the incident that caused her injuries occurred was of no significance. The victim’s prior statement and her testimony were essentially the same and not inconsistent. Riggins v. State, 2021 Ark. App. 116, 619 S.W.3d 64 (2021).

Circuit court did not abuse its discretion by refusing to allow the defense to impeach a child rape victim’s testimony with the prior inconsistent statement that the victim and the family dog were the only ones in the room when the rape occurred. The appellate court noted the victim was not given the opportunity to admit or deny the statement. Riggins v. State, 2021 Ark. App. 116, 619 S.W.3d 64 (2021).

Circuit court did not err in refusing to allow defendant’s witness to testify in order to impeach other witness’ testimony by introducing their prior inconsistent statements because nothing in the record reflected that defendant asked the circuit court for any relief regarding his failure to serve his witness with a subpoena, such as asking for a recess or continuance to have her served or secure her presence to testify. Barnum v. State, 2020 Ark. App. 523, 614 S.W.3d 453 (2020).

Prosecutor’s Testimony.

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying the defense’s request to call the prosecutor to testify; the prosecutor’s testimony would not have provided a means to attack witness credibility on one point, as the prosecutor said she would not be able to verify every single detail the witnesses conveyed to her, and as to another point, having the prosecutor testify would not achieve the goal of impeaching that witness’s testimony, as the summary was not materially different when considered in light of the witness’s explanation. Detherow v. State, 2014 Ark. App. 478, 444 S.W.3d 867 (2014).

Rule 614. Calling and interrogation of witnesses by court.

(a) Calling by Court. The court, at the suggestion of a party or on its own motion, may call witnesses, and all parties are entitled to cross-examine witnesses thus called.

(b) Interrogation by Court. The court may interrogate witnesses, whether called by itself or by a party.

(c) Objections. Objections to the calling of witnesses by court or to interrogation by it may be made at the time or at the next available opportunity when the jury is not present.

CASE NOTES

Interrogation by Court.

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in asking questions designed merely to confirm testimony previously given by officer. Hillard v. State, 321 Ark. 39, 900 S.W.2d 167 (1995).

The court did not abuse its discretion in its questioning of witnesses where (1) the occasional questioning of witnesses before the State’s response to a defense objection did not impugn or bolster the credibility of the witnesses, and (2) the questioning of the medical examiner did not intimate an opinion as to his credibility. Britt v. State, 334 Ark. 142, 974 S.W.2d 436 (1998).

A trial court did not abuse its discretion in recalling and interrogating two of the state’s witnesses in order to confirm previous testimony because defendant had the opportunity to cross-examine the witnesses, the trial court allowed defendant a continuance to rebut the testimony they offered, and defendant failed to demonstrate prejudice. Bradley v. State, 2009 Ark. App. 714, 370 S.W.3d 263 (2009).

In an adoption proceeding, the circuit court did not abuse its discretion in requesting additional testimony by witnesses after all parties had rested their respective cases because appellants could show no prejudice from the manner in which the court procured the additional testimony. While the court did not conduct all of the questioning, appellants were allowed to cross-examine the witnesses, and the circuit court took charge of the questioning of one witness and also stated that appellants had the right to speak with the witness privately if they felt it was necessary. Cowan v. Ark. Dep't of Human Servs., 2012 Ark. App. 576, 424 S.W.3d 318 (2012).

Rule 615. Exclusion of witnesses.

At the request of a party the court shall order witnesses excluded so that they cannot hear the testimony of other witnesses, and it may make the order of its own motion. This rule does not authorize exclusion of (1) a party who is a natural person, or (2) an officer or employee of a party that is not a natural person designated as its representative by its attorney, or (3) a person whose presence is shown by a party to be essential to the presentation of his cause.

CASE NOTES

In General.

The defendant was not entitled to a mistrial because a witness for the state testified on cross-examination that he asked another witness, who had already testified, what questions were asked of her. Porter v. State, 308 Ark. 137, 823 S.W.2d 846 (1992).

Trial court did not err in plaintiff's adverse possession action in denying plaintiff's request that plaintiff's daughter be allowed to sit at counsel's table and assist in the presentation of the case because plaintiff was illiterate and suffering from Alzheimer's disease; under subdivision (3) of this rule, there was no proof that the daughter was essential to the presentation of plaintiff's case. Cleary v. Sledge Props., 2010 Ark. App. 755, 379 S.W.3d 680 (2010).

Prejudice not shown.

Appellant failed to show prejudice from the trial court's exclusion of appellant's daughter and a forensics expert from the courtroom upon invocation of this rule. Cogswell v. Cooper, 2021 Ark. App. 336, 634 S.W.3d 555 (2021).

Attorney.

In an action to foreclose a purchase-money mortgage on farmlands, the mortgagors were not prejudiced by the trial court's exclusion of the mortgagors' only Arkansas attorney from the proceedings at the request of the mortgagee who indicated an intention to call the local attorney as an adverse witness, where the facts were undisputed and the legal question was adequately presented, and where on appeal no attempt was made to offer evidence that had not been offered at the trial or to present any legal argument that had not been made. McCoy Farms, Inc. v. McKee, 263 Ark. 20, 563 S.W.2d 409, cert. denied, 439 U.S. 862, 99 S. Ct. 184, 58 L. Ed. 2d 171 (1978).

Where defendant sought to prove he had had ineffective assistance of counsel, his former counsel was not a party to the action, but merely a witness and should have been excluded, at the defendant's request, pending his call to testify. Chambers v. State, 264 Ark. 279, 571 S.W.2d 79 (1978).

A party's only lawyer falls within the category of essential persons under subdivision (3) of this rule; the rule against the attorney who becomes a witness continuing as an advocate was not designed to permit a lawyer to call opposing counsel as a witness and thereby disqualify him. Foster v. State, 285 Ark. 363, 687 S.W.2d 829 (1985).

This rule does not prohibit an attorney, in the course of preparing his or her witness, from describing in any way what another witness has said on the stand; such a broad prohibition would unduly restrict an attorney's ability to consult with witnesses before examining them at trial. Bayless v. State, 326 Ark. 869, 935 S.W.2d 534 (1996).

Trial lawyers, in the course of preparing their witnesses, must be careful not to indicate specifically what other witnesses have testified about, since the sequestration rule may be circumvented in the guise of attorneys “preparing” their witnesses; whether an attorney violates this rule in the course of preparing a witness must be determined on a case-by-case basis. Bayless v. State, 326 Ark. 869, 935 S.W.2d 534 (1996).

Construction.

This rule must be construed as mandatory. Chambers v. State, 264 Ark. 279, 571 S.W.2d 79 (1978); Breeden v. State, 270 Ark. 90, 603 S.W.2d 459 (Ct. App. 1980); Menard v. City of Carlisle, 309 Ark. 522, 834 S.W.2d 632 (1992).

The rule on sequestering witnesses is mandatory when requested by one or both of the parties. Morton v. Wiley, 271 Ark. 319, 609 S.W.2d 322 (1980); Dillard v. State, 20 Ark. App. 35, 723 S.W.2d 373 (1987) (but see Menard v. City of Carlisle, 309 Ark. 522, 834 S.W.2d 632 (1992)).

This rule does not specifically require that the exclusionary request be made at any particular state of the trial and the trial court does not have discretion to refuse to grant the rule solely because the trial has commenced; overruling Dillard v. State, 20 Ark. App. 35, 723 S.W.2d 373 (1987). Menard v. City of Carlisle, 309 Ark. 522, 834 S.W.2d 632 (1992).

Exception in subdivision (3) of this rule applies to such persons as an agent who handled the transaction being litigated or an expert needed to advise counsel in the management of the litigation. Cleary v. Sledge Props., 2010 Ark. App. 755, 379 S.W.3d 680 (2010).

Description of Testimony.

This rule does not prohibit an attorney, in the course of preparing his or her witness, from describing in any way what another witness has said on the stand; such a broad prohibition would unduly restrict an attorney’s ability to consult with witnesses before examining them at trial. Bayless v. State, 326 Ark. 869, 935 S.W.2d 534 (1996).

Trial lawyers, in the course of preparing their witnesses, must be careful not to indicate specifically what other witnesses have testified about, since the sequestration rule may be circumvented in the guise of attorneys “preparing” their witnesses; whether an attorney violates this rule in the course of preparing a witness must be determined on a case-by-case basis. Bayless v. State, 326 Ark. 869, 935 S.W.2d 534 (1996).

Discretion of Court.

The discretion of the trial court in refusing the testimony of a rebuttal witness is narrow even when the witness has violated the rule of sequestration of witnesses and more readily abused by excluding the testimony than by admitting it. McCorkle v. State, 270 Ark. 679, 607 S.W.2d 655 (1980).

Where a party seeks to exempt an expert witness pursuant to this rule, the decision is within the discretion of the trial judge which should not normally be disturbed on appeal absent an abuse of discretion. Arkansas Power & Light Co. v. Melkovitz, 11 Ark. App. 90, 668 S.W.2d 37 (1984); Martin v. State, 22 Ark. App. 126, 736 S.W.2d 287 (1987).

This rule, providing for the exclusion of witnesses, may involve three different types of rulings by a trial judge, and each type presents a different standard for the judge. The standard of discretion given to the trial judge by the first sentence of the rule is that of no discretion; if a party requests the rule, it must be granted. Under the rest of the rule, on deciding whether a person should be sequestered because he is an officer or employee of a party, or person whose presence is necessary, the standard of discretion afforded a trial judge is average discretion. The third standard arises when a witness has been ordered sequestered, but does not comply; the rule does not mention the consequences of noncompliance with an order of exclusion, and therefore the sanctions are a matter of case law; the three possible methods of enforcement available to the trial judge are: (1) citing the witness for contempt, (2) permitting comment on the witness’s noncompliance in order to reflect on his credibility, and (3) refusing to let him testify. Blaylock v. Strecker, 291 Ark. 340, 724 S.W.2d 470 (1987).

A trial court has a very narrow discretion to exclude the testimony of a noncomplying witness. Daniels v. State, 293 Ark. 422, 739 S.W.2d 135 (1987).

Under first sentence of this rule, trial judge has no discretion; use of the word “shall” makes exclusion of the witnesses mandatory, if a party requests exclusion. Martin v. State, 22 Ark. App. 126, 736 S.W.2d 287 (1987).

When dealing with the exemption from this rule, the trial judge has average discretion. City of Crossett v. Pacific Bldgs., Inc., 298 Ark. 520, 769 S.W.2d 730 (1989).

Rulings dealing with the exemptions from this rule are within a trial court’s discretion. Parker v. Holder, 315 Ark. 307, 867 S.W.2d 436 (1993).

The standard of narrow discretion to exclude witnesses remains as it has been for many years. Swanigan v. State, 316 Ark. 16, 870 S.W.2d 712 (1994), writ denied, No. CR 93-1127, 2002 Ark. LEXIS 443 (Ark. Sept. 12, 2002).

The trial court’s discretion is more readily abused by excluding the testimony than by admitting it. Swanigan v. State, 316 Ark. 16, 870 S.W.2d 712 (1994), writ denied, No. CR 93-1127, 2002 Ark. LEXIS 443 (Ark. Sept. 12, 2002).

The controlling rationale regarding the rarely exercised discretion to exclude testimony for noncompliance with this rule is this: with the offending witness subject to punishment for contempt and the adverse party free to raise the issue of credibility in argument to the jury, the party who is innocent of the rule's violation should not ordinarily be deprived of the testimony. Swanigan v. State, 316 Ark. 16, 870 S.W.2d 712 (1994), writ denied, No. CR 93-1127, 2002 Ark. LEXIS 443 (Ark. Sept. 12, 2002).

Even when there has been a clear violation of this rule, the trial court does not abuse its discretion in permitting the witness's testimony when exercising its option of allowing comment on the witness's violation in order to reflect on his credibility. Swanigan v. State, 316 Ark. 16, 870 S.W.2d 712 (1994), writ denied, No. CR 93-1127, 2002 Ark. LEXIS 443 (Ark. Sept. 12, 2002).

Effect of Violation.

A violation of this witness exclusion rule goes to credibility, rather than competency. Cooley v. State, 4 Ark. App. 238, 629 S.W.2d 311 (1982); Daniels v. State, 293 Ark. 422, 739 S.W.2d 135 (1987); Martin v. State, 22 Ark. App. 126, 736 S.W.2d 287 (1987).

Where in violation of the witness exclusion rule the deputy prosecuting attorney and a police officer engaged in a discussion outside the courtroom with a witness and showed him a prior statement in which he said he and the defendant were at the victim's home two weeks before the incident, and following that discussion the witness was recalled and testified that he had erred in his previous testimony when he testified that he and the defendant were in the victim's home the night before the incident, the admission of the revised testimony was not reversible error since both the witness and the police officer who allegedly refreshed the witness' memory were thoroughly cross-examined and admitted what had happened outside the courtroom. Cooley v. State, 4 Ark. App. 238, 629 S.W.2d 311 (1982).

Even if there has been a clear violation of this rule, the trial court has the option of permitting comment on the witness's violation of the rule in order to reflect on his credibility. Graham v. State, 296 Ark. 400, 757 S.W.2d 538 (1988).

Trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion for a mistrial where a later witness admitted that he spoke to the state's first witness in the hallway after that first witness had testified in defendant's murder trial because the later witness admitted that there was no discussion of his upcoming testimony and because the trial court permitted defense counsel to question the witness about the conversation, reflecting upon the witness's credibility. Pollard v. State, 2009 Ark. 434, 336 S.W.3d 866 (2009).

Enforcement of Order.

There are three possible methods of enforcement of an exclusion order that are available to a trial judge: (1) citing the witness for contempt; (2) permitting comment on the witness's noncompliance in order to reflect on his credibility; and (3) refusing to let the witness testify. Swanigan v. State, 316 Ark. 16, 870 S.W.2d 712 (1994), writ denied, No. CR 93-1127, 2002 Ark. LEXIS 443 (Ark. Sept. 12, 2002).

Defendant could not show prejudice as result of the trial court's exclusion of a defense witness's rebuttal testimony due to the witness's previous presence in the courtroom during an eyewitness's testimony. The defense witness's testimony would have attacked the eyewitness's credibility only on whether the eyewitness spoke with defendant about implicating the victim's girlfriend for the victim's death, but at trial, both the girlfriend and the eyewitness testified that defendant shot the victim in their apartment, and when asked about the alleged conversation, the eyewitness denied it. Jones v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 286, 524 S.W.3d 1 (2017).

Erroneous Exclusion.

Since error is generally presumed to be prejudicial unless the opposite is affirmatively shown, where the issue was negligent design of a lawn mower still in existence and subject to view, exclusion from the courtroom of defendant's employee in charge of safety design of equipment was contrary to this rule and reversible error. International Harvester Corp. v. Hardin, 264 Ark. 717, 574 S.W.2d 260 (1978).

The trial court improperly excluded the testimony of a defense witness who violated a sequestration rule in a negligence action arising from a motor vehicle accident where the plaintiff's attorney immediately informed the court when he learned that the witness was in the courtroom, while asserting that the witness heard no testimony that was pertinent to her own testimony, the witness testified that she was unaware of the sequestration rule and was told in the clerk's office to go to the courtroom, and the trial court stated that the violation was unintentional. Lowe v. Ralph, 61 Ark. App. 231, 966 S.W.2d 283 (1998).

Expert Witnesses.

The trial judge did not abuse his discretion in refusing to exempt experts, under Evid. Rule 703, from sequestration pursuant to this rule, where there was no indication that these witnesses intended to base their opinion on the testimony of other witnesses heard in the courtroom and would be unable or hindered in some way to give opinion testimony if excluded but, on the contrary, the record indicated that the opinions of both witnesses were based on independent observations and differed from opposing witnesses only as to conclusion. Arkansas Power & Light Co. v. Melkovitz, 11 Ark. App. 90, 668 S.W.2d 37 (1984).

In a condemnation proceeding, trial court did not err in ruling that presence of condemnor's expert witnesses was not essential to presentation of the case, where there was no showing that witnesses had such specialized expertise or intimate knowledge of the facts of the case that the party's attorney could not effectively function without the presence and aid of the witnesses or that the witnesses would be unable to present essential testimony without hearing the testimony of all other witnesses. Arkansas Power & Light Co. v. Melkovitz, 11 Ark. App. 90, 668 S.W.2d 37 (1984).

It was not error to allow an investigator to testify after he appeared on the stand to read another witness' prior testimony into evidence, where the defendant did not demonstrate that the investigator's testimony related to the other witness' prior testimony in such a way that the investigator's answers could have been affected by his presence in the courtroom. Lewis v. State, 288 Ark. 595, 709 S.W.2d 56 (1986), writ denied, Lewis v. Hobbs, 2014 Ark. 407, 443 S.W.3d 530 (2014).

Party is free to challenge the credibility of the experts' testimony on the basis that they have heard testimony by prior witnesses. Martin v. State, 22 Ark. App. 126, 736 S.W.2d 287 (1987).

The exception provided by subdivision (3) of this rule is not automatic and depends upon the extent to which the expert will base his opinion upon testimony presented in court. Martin v. State, 22 Ark. App. 126, 736 S.W.2d 287 (1987).

The exception provided by subdivision (3) of this rule applied where a party showed that an expert witness would be unable to present essential testimony without hearing the testimony of other witnesses. McGraw v. Weeks, 326 Ark. 285, 930 S.W.2d 365 (1996).

Failure to Exclude Witness.

Where there was no showing that presence of prosecution witness, who was the first witness in prosecution for second-degree battery, was necessary to prosecution of the case and defendant argued that presence of such witness, who was city marshal, may have affected testimony of defense witnesses, the error must be assumed to be prejudicial and the conviction would be reversed. Breeden v. State, 270 Ark. 90, 603 S.W.2d 459 (Ct. App. 1980).

The trial court did not err in failing to exclude a witness who was no longer active in the operation of defendant corporation but was still listed on record as secretary-treasurer of the corporation, where he was intricately involved in all the transactions between the parties in the action. Dyson v. Ferncliff Properties, Inc., 16 Ark. App. 64, 696 S.W.2d 767 (1985).

Family service worker, not qualified to remain in the courtroom under any exception, should have been excluded from the court room. Clark v. State, 323 Ark. 211, 913 S.W.2d 297 (1996).

The defendant was entitled to a new hearing on her motion for postconviction relief where the court improperly refused to exclude her trial counsel from the courtroom during her testimony with regard to his alleged ineffective assistance. Finch v. State, 335 Ark. 254, 984 S.W.2d 360 (1998).

In a prosecution for four counts of rape involving three children younger than age fourteen, it was not error for the court to allow the children's foster parents and one caseworker to remain in the courtroom after the defendant invoked this rule, as such witnesses were covered by the exceptions stated in Rule 616 and as the defendant never called such witnesses to take the stand; therefore, there was no prejudice. Hill v. State, 337 Ark. 219, 988 S.W.2d 487 (1999).

In a first-degree murder case involving defendant's killing of his ex-wife, although the trial court erred in allowing the victim's mother to remain in the courtroom and observe the testimony of other witnesses and in refusing to exclude her from the courtroom, and the plain language of this rule is mandatory and contains no exception for the victim's close relatives, defendant's challenge on appeal failed as he did not demonstrate that the trial court's failure to exclude the victim's mother was prejudicial; the victim's mother did not provide any negative or disparaging testimony about defendant and did not testify about any material issues related to the defense of mental disease or defect, and reversal was not warranted. Johnson v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 373, 523 S.W.3d 908 (2017).

Harmless Error.

It may have been only harmless error for the trial judge to permit the prosecuting attorney's investigator to remain in the courtroom, where the investigator testified after the first witness had been called for the state and his testimony did not appear to relate in any way to the testimony of the first witness. Gustafson v. State, 267 Ark. 278, 590 S.W.2d 853 (1979), overruled in part as stated in Rogers v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 521, 536 S.W.3d 128 (2017).

Where the need for the rebuttal testimony did not arise until after defendant testified, the witness was in the courtroom only briefly and did not hear the appellant testify and there was no contention that the testimony he did hear, a policeman's, was in any way related to the matter about which the witness testified, there was no error in allowing the rebuttal testimony. McCorkle v. State, 270 Ark. 679, 607 S.W.2d 655 (1980).

Court erred by not sequestering victim-impact witnesses but the error was harmless; the witnesses gave victim-impact testimony limited to previously written statements concerning how the loss of their family member affected their lives. Lard v. State, 2014 Ark. 1, 431 S.W.3d 249, cert. denied, 574 U.S. 836, 135 S. Ct. 76, 190 L. Ed. 2d 67 (2014).

Objections.

Invocation of mandatory right to exclude witness pursuant to this rule sufficed to bring this issue to the attention of the trial court. Party was not procedurally barred from raising this issue by his failure to object when the trial court refused to exclude witness. King v. State, 322 Ark. 51, 907 S.W.2d 127 (1995), different results reached on reh'g, 325 Ark. 313, 925 S.W.2d 159 (1996).

Officer or Employee of Party.

In an action against a defendant corporation, shareholder witnesses could only be exempt from exclusion under this rule if the corporate party's attorney had designated any one of them as the corporation's officer or employee or if their presence was shown by the corporation to be essential to the presentation of its cause. Fite v. Friends of Mayflower, Inc., 13 Ark. App. 213, 682 S.W.2d 457 (1985).

Parent.

Court did not err in refusing to declare mistrial where mother of victims remained in the courtroom after other witnesses had been excluded under this rule, and heard the testimony of her daughters before she testified, since Rule 616 provides that the parent of a minor victim has the right to be present during the trial. McArdell v. State, 38 Ark. App. 261, 833 S.W.2d 786 (1992).

Purpose.

The sequestration or exclusion of witnesses is employed to expose inconsistencies in their testimonies and to prevent the possibility of one witness' shaping his or her testimony to match that given by other witnesses at trial. Fite v. Friends of Mayflower, Inc., 13 Ark. App. 213, 682 S.W.2d 457 (1985); Dyson v. Ferncliff Properties, Inc., 16 Ark. App. 64, 696 S.W.2d 767 (1985); Clark v. State, 323 Ark. 211, 913 S.W.2d 297 (1996).

The purpose of this rule is to expose inconsistencies in the testimonies of different witnesses and to prevent the possibility of one witness's shaping his or her testimony to match that given by other witnesses at trial. Solomon v. State, 323 Ark. 178, 913 S.W.2d 288 (1996).

Rebuttal Evidence.

Witness's testimony was true rebuttal evidence limited to refuting defendant's new allegation that he was beaten by the officers while handcuffed; although the witness's presence in the courtroom violated this rule, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in permitting the State to call the witness for the purpose of denying defendant's accusation. Jackson v. State, 2015 Ark. App. 603, 474 S.W.3d 525 (2015).

Relatives of Victim.

Victim's daughters, prosecution witnesses, were not exempted from the application of this rule by Evid. Rule 616, since none of the victim's daughters were victims and no minor victim was involved. Solomon v. State, 323 Ark. 178, 913 S.W.2d 288 (1996).

Sequestration After Commencement of Trial.

Where neither of the parties in an action to recover for personal injuries desired to invoke the rule on sequestering witnesses when inquiry was made by the trial court at the beginning of the trial, but where counsel for defendant requested the rule after the defendant was called by the plaintiffs as their first witness, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in granting the request for sequestration of witnesses after the trial had begun. Morton v. Wiley, 271 Ark. 319, 609 S.W.2d 322 (1980).

This rule was not violated where the sequestered witnesses did not discuss the facts of the case or what their testimony would be or had been, but one merely returned to the witness room after testifying and said it was "rough." Cox v. State, 305 Ark. 244, 808 S.W.2d 306 (1991).

Sequestration Before Trial.

This rule is only applicable during an evidentiary hearing presided over by the court, and it does not require that the witnesses for either party during the investigation or preparation of a case be sequestered; accordingly, there was no technical violation of this rule where the prosecutor assembled all of the state's witnesses in a criminal trial, without the knowledge of the defense attorney or the trial judge, in the courtroom four days before the trial and questioned each under oath and in the presence of the other witnesses regarding the crime. Cook v. State, 274 Ark. 244, 623 S.W.2d 820 (1981).

Subsequent Motion to Remain in Courtroom.

Where both sides in a prosecution for theft had requested the exclusion of witnesses pursuant to this rule, the trial court was correct in denying the defendant's subsequent motion, made over the state's objection, that a prosecution witness be allowed to remain in the courtroom during the trial. Wilson v. State, 277 Ark. 43, 639 S.W.2d 45 (1982).

Supersession of Statutes.

This rule superseded former statutes governing witness exclusion in civil and criminal cases. Cooley v. State, 4 Ark. App. 238, 629 S.W.2d 311 (1982).

Victims.

Evidence Rule 616 allows the victim to be present notwithstanding the witness-exclusion provisions of this rule, and Evid. Rule 616 purports to leave no discretion to the trial court. Golston v. State, 26 Ark. App. 176, 762 S.W.2d 398 (1988).

Victim of the crime had the right to be present notwithstanding this rule. Brandon v. State, 300 Ark. 32, 776 S.W.2d 345 (1989).

This rule deals with exclusion of witnesses from the courtroom upon a motion or upon the initiative of a trial court, but says nothing about allowing a victim-witness to sit at counsel's table. Mask v. State, 314 Ark. 25, 869 S.W.2d 1 (1993).

The trial court committed reversible error by allowing a robbery victim to sit at counsel's table during the trial, as neither Evid. Rule 616 nor this rule says anything about allowing a victim of a crime to sit at counsel's table, and permitting the victim to sit there in this case may have unfairly prejudiced the defendant. Mask v. State, 314 Ark. 25, 869 S.W.2d 1 (1993).

Rule 616. Right of victim to be present at hearing.

Notwithstanding any provision to the contrary, in any criminal prosecution, the victim of a crime, and in the event that the victim of a crime is a minor child under eighteen (18) years of age, that minor victim's parents, guardian, custodian or other person with custody of the alleged minor victim shall have the right to be present during any hearing, deposition, or trial of the offense.

Publisher's Notes.

Prior to the 1986 adoption of the Arkansas Rules of Evidence by the Supreme Court, Acts 1985, No. 462, § 1, added this rule by amending Acts 1975 (Extended Sess., 1976), No. 1143, § 1. Neither the court's opinion in Ricarte v. State, 290 Ark. 100, 717 S.W.2d 488 (1986), nor its accompanying per curiam of October 13, 1986, which adopted the rules "as set forth" in the 1976 act, specifically refers to this amendment and it is unclear whether the court intended to include it in its adoption of the pre-existing rules.

CASE NOTES

Constitutionality.

This rule is not unconstitutional; nothing in the constitution touches on the exclusion of witnesses during criminal trials. United States Const., Amend. 6 and Ark. Const., Art. 2, § 10, guarantee an accused a speedy and public trial and to be confronted with the witnesses against him; otherwise, neither document contains anything that might be seen as a right to limit those who may want to attend the trial. Stephens v. State, 290 Ark. 440, 720 S.W.2d 301 (1986).

In General.

This rule allows the victim of a crime the right to be present during a trial, notwithstanding Evid. Rule 615 which permits the exclusion of witnesses when requested by either party. Stephens v. State, 290 Ark. 440, 720 S.W.2d 301 (1986); Golston v. State, 26 Ark. App. 176, 762 S.W.2d 398 (1988).

Court did not err in refusing to declare mistrial where mother of victims remained in the courtroom after other witnesses had been excluded under Rule 615, and heard the testimony of her daughters before she testified, since this rule provides that the parent of a minor victim has the right to be present during the trial. McArdell v. State, 38 Ark. App. 261, 833 S.W.2d 786 (1992).

The trial court committed reversible error by allowing a robbery victim to sit at counsel's table during the trial, as neither this rule nor Evid. Rule 615 says anything about allowing a victim of a crime to sit at counsel's table, and permitting the victim to sit there in this case may have unfairly prejudiced the defendant. Mask v. State, 314 Ark. 25, 869 S.W.2d 1 (1993).

Although the presence of a victim in the courtroom throughout the trial conceivably could put the fairness of the trial in jeopardy under some circumstances, there is no error in allowing victim to remain where defendant fails to show how fairness would be jeopardized by the victim's presence. Mitchell v. State, 323 Ark. 116, 913 S.W.2d 264 (1996), overruled, MacKintrush v. State, 334 Ark. 390, 978 S.W.2d 293 (1998).

Custodian.

Where the Department of Human Services had custody of the victim at the time of trial, the Department of Human Services social worker could stand next to the victim while she testified. Gadberry v. State, 46 Ark. App. 121, 877 S.W.2d 941 (1994).

Discretion of Court.

This rule purports to leave no discretion to the trial court. Stephens v. State, 290 Ark. 440, 720 S.W.2d 301 (1986); Golston v. State, 26 Ark. App. 176, 762 S.W.2d 398 (1988).

Relatives of Victim.

Victim's daughters, state's witnesses, were not exempted from the application of Evid. Rule 615 by this rule, since none of the victim's daughters were victims and no minor victim was involved. Solomon v. State, 323 Ark. 178, 913 S.W.2d 288 (1996).

In a prosecution for four counts of rape involving three children younger than age fourteen, it was not error for the court to allow the children's foster parents and one caseworker to remain in the courtroom after the defendant invoked this rule, as such witnesses were covered by the exceptions stated in this rule and as the defendant never called such witnesses to take the stand; therefore, there was no prejudice. Hill v. State, 337 Ark. 219, 988 S.W.2d 487 (1999).

Request Not Required.

No request to remain in the courtroom is required by this rule. Golston v. State, 26 Ark. App. 176, 762 S.W.2d 398 (1988).

Victim.

Evidence supported finding individuals in question were victims. Harris v. State, 308 Ark. 150, 823 S.W.2d 860 (1992).

One victim was allowed to remain in the courtroom at the suppression hearing while another victim identified defendant. Claiborne v. State, 319 Ark. 537, 893 S.W.2d 324 (1995).

The "victim of the crime" language in this rule does not refer to any one other than the primary victims. Williams v. State, 320 Ark. 67, 894 S.W.2d 923 (1995).

Police officer in full uniform, as a victim of an offense, was entitled to remain in the courtroom during the trial, and his presence did not prejudice the defendant. Robinson v. State, 49 Ark. App. 58, 896 S.W.2d 442 (1995).

Circuit court did not err in denying defendant's motion for directed verdict because defendant threatened both a pharmacist and a pharmacy technician with a gun in order to gain possession of drugs that were under their control, the court correctly designated the pharmacist and technician as victims, and defendant was not prejudiced by their presence in the courtroom. Harris v. State, 2014 Ark. App. 448, 439 S.W.3d 715 (2014).

Eldest daughter, as a victim, had the right to be present during the trial under this rule regardless of the fact that the trial included other counts involving other victims; and defendant's constitutional right to a fair trial was not violated as the material parts of the testimony offered by the middle and eldest daughters were based on their own personal knowledge. Dominguez v. State, 2020 Ark. 286 (2020).

CASE NOTES

In General.

This rule is not a rule against opinions, but is a rule that conditionally favors them. Moore v. State, 323 Ark. 529, 915 S.W.2d 284 (1996).

Cause of Death.

In action for damages of loss of decedent’s services and future earnings where only evidence that accident was the cause of death was the testimony of lay witnesses with no previous exposure to sudden death occurrence, decedent’s estate failed to make a prima facie case. McAway v. Holland, 266 Ark. 878, 599 S.W.2d 387 (1979).

Lay witnesses are permitted to give their own opinion as to the cause of death or other physical condition if the witness is qualified by experience and observation with regard to the subject matter; however, where the subject matter is so complex that expert knowledge is necessary to give a knowledgeable opinion, only an expert could give evidence as to the cause of death or physical condition. McAway v. Holland, 266 Ark. 878, 599 S.W.2d 387 (1979).

Cumulative Evidence.

Defendant’s conviction for murder in the second degree was proper because her argument regarding an officer’s footprint analysis was without merit since, at the time the officer testified regarding that issue, unchallenged testimony and photographic exhibits had already established which shoes were worn by the victim and which were worn by defendant. Blood on the shoes and the differences in the treads were obvious and that same evidence, and specifically, unchallenged testimony from a certified crime-scene technician, had established that there were pools of blood at the crime scene that contained shoe prints matching defendant’s shoes and appeared to have been made by those shoes. Johnson v. State, 2010 Ark. App. 153, 375 S.W.3d 12 (2010).

During defendant’s trial for attempted rape of his 13-year-old stepdaughter, the court did not err in disallowing the lay opinion of defendant’s wife, who was presumably going to testify that she believed the victim’s motive to lie about the incident was so she could be permanently moved to her grandmother’s house, because the point had already been clearly brought to the jury’s attention. Forrest v. State, 2010 Ark. App. 686 (2010).

Description of Property.

In an action to set aside a deed, testimony by a witness that his land was similar to the property in issue and that he was familiar with land prices in the area was not irrelevant and should have been admitted. Garis v. Massey, 270 Ark. 646, 606 S.W.2d 109 (Ct. App. 1980).

Expert Testimony.

Where the consulting engineer to the industrial park, from which a right-of-way for a freeway was taken, testified that he told the developers not to locate a sewerage treatment plant on the valuable industrial land, the engineer never expressed an opinion as to the monetary value of the industrial land, and therefore, his testimony was not improper since the trial court found that his expert testimony would assist the jury in understanding the other evidence. Arkansas State Hwy. Comm’n v. First Pyramid Life Ins. Co. of Am., 269 Ark. 278, 602 S.W.2d 609 (1980).

A witness who worked for a heavy equipment manufacturer for six years, was service manager for the equipment for three years, performed the predelivery inspection on the piece of equipment in question, showed rental customers how to operate the equipment, drove, maintained and serviced the piece of equipment in question; and operated all similar equipment, had the knowledge, skill, experience and training and was qualified to testify as either an expert or lay witness. Dildine v. Clark Equip. Co., 285 Ark. 325, 686 S.W.2d 791 (1985).

Where the pathologist had been allowed to testify, without objection, that powder stippling had occurred on the forehead, but not the hands, of the victim, and that such stippling occurs only when a gun is fired at a very close range, her opinion that the hands were not within inches of the forehead was rationally based on her perceptions and was helpful in making a determination as to whether the victim had been able to use his hands in attempting to ward off the shot; therefore, the trial court did not err in overruling defendant's objection to the testimony. Biniores v. State, 16 Ark. App. 275, 701 S.W.2d 385 (1985).

Intoxication.

The trial court in a murder prosecution did not err in allowing a layman, who had been drinking beer, to give his opinion about the defendant's state of intoxication, since lay persons and police officers have been allowed for some time to give an opinion regarding intoxication. The fact that the witness had consumed some beer goes to the weight to be given his testimony and not to its admissibility. David v. State, 286 Ark. 205, 691 S.W.2d 133 (1985).

Lay Opinion Admissible.

The testimony of the county clerk as to the number of qualified voters in the area proposed for incorporation was properly admitted, whether the testimony of the county clerk be considered opinion testimony of a lay witness, or an opinion of an expert. Dunkum v. Moore, 265 Ark. 544, 580 S.W.2d 183 (1979).

Lay opinion testimony held admissible. Townsend v. State, 292 Ark. 157, 728 S.W.2d 516 (1987); Echo, Inc. v. Stafford, 21 Ark. App. 201, 730 S.W.2d 913 (1987); Thompson v. Perkins, 322 Ark. 720, 911 S.W.2d 582 (1995).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in excluding opinion evidence of nonexpert concerning safe following distance of vehicles, given the obvious reluctance of the witness to express an opinion as to what following distances were appropriate for an oncoming vehicle under extraordinary weather conditions, the absence of any proof that the difference between 250 feet and 300 feet would have had any bearing on defendant's ability to avoid both a truck and plaintiff's vehicle and, finally, the fact that the trial court carefully considered the proffered testimony in camera before excluding it. Scoggins v. Southern Farmers' Ass'n, 304 Ark. 426, 803 S.W.2d 515 (1991), limited, Druckenmiller v. Cluff, 316 Ark. 517, 873 S.W.2d 526 (1994). But see Druckenmiller v. Cluff, 316 Ark. 517, 873 S.W.2d 526 (1994).

Where expert witness was not recognized as an expert, his technical knowledge and experience could have qualified him as an expert with specialized knowledge to assist the jury in determining a fact in issue under Rule 702 or as a lay witness whose opinion was helpful in the determination of a fact issue under this rule. Ferrell v. State, 305 Ark. 511, 810 S.W.2d 29 (1991).

Opinion testimony by lay witnesses is allowed concerning observation of everyday occurrences, or matters within the common experience of most persons. Felty v. State, 306 Ark. 634, 816 S.W.2d 872 (1991).

A lay witness may give an opinion with two (2) limitations: (1) there must be firsthand knowledge or observation; and (2) the opinion must be phrased in terms of requiring testimony to be helpful in resolving issues. Felty v. State, 306 Ark. 634, 816 S.W.2d 872 (1991).

The requirements of this rule regarding the admissibility of lay opinions are satisfied if the opinion or inference is one which a normal person would form on the basis of the observed facts, but if an opinion without the underlying facts would be misleading, then an objection to its admission should be sustained. Brown v. State, 316 Ark. 724, 875 S.W.2d 828 (1994); Moore v. State, 323 Ark. 529, 915 S.W.2d 284 (1996).

Officer properly allowed to give lay opinion testimony to show that the defendant's shoe print matched the picture of print found on center of victim's bedroom floor, even though the officer was not an expert in that field, where the officer had some experience in that area and was clearly testifying that the patterns matched. Moore v. State, 323 Ark. 529, 915 S.W.2d 284 (1996).

Coroner's lay-opinion testimony regarding his process of matching bullets to victim's wound, and stating the size of bullet that matched the wound, held admissible. Moore v. State, 58 Ark. App. 120, 947 S.W.2d 395 (1997).

The trial court did not abuse its discretion when it allowed a witness to testify about a conversation he had with the defendant in which the defendant said "I got him" and further allowed the witness to testify that he understood such statement to be a threat since the testimony was rationally based on his perception, which was based on his familiarity with the defendant and with neighborhood terminology. Parker v. State, 333 Ark. 137, 968 S.W.2d 592 (1998).

Trial court did not err in admitting a detective's opinion that a window of a truck, which was involved in a capital murder, was broken from the inside because the opinion was rationally based on the detective's prior law enforcement experience, forensic training, and personal observation. Flowers v. State, 373 Ark. 127, 282 S.W.3d 767 (2008).

Where defendant was charged with murder after beating the victim, a lay witness was permitted to give his opinion testimony under this rule that he heard the sound of defendant driving a car over a human body; the testimony was admissible under Ark. R. Evid. 602, because it was based on personal knowledge. The opinion testimony was rationally based on the perception of the witness and the surrounding circumstances. Marks v. State, 375 Ark. 265, 289 S.W.3d 923 (2008).

Trial court did not err in allowing a police officer to render a lay opinion that the amount of money that was found on defendant at the time of defendant's arrest was consistent with drug sales; the officer's testimony that the officer had been involved in many undercover drug deals established a rational basis upon which to express an opinion, and the testimony helped flesh out the issue of whether defendant possessed the cocaine with intent to deliver. Williams v. State, 2012 Ark. App. 310, 420 S.W.3d 487 (2012).

In a termination of parental rights proceeding, the trial court did not err in allowing a caseworker to be questioned about whether the caseworker believed the mother still continued to have contact with the child's father despite no-contact orders; the caseworker's opinion was rationally based on the caseworker's perception based on the fact that the father was arrested at the mother's house. Duncan v. Ark. Dep't of Human Servs., 2013 Ark. App. 13 (2013).

Parent's testimony that their spouse pleaded guilty to battery because the spouse did it for the reason that the spouse loved the parent and the spouse would do anything for the parent, when the parent contended that their spouse was not an abuser of their children, was admissible in that it was non-expert testimony that provided a clearer understanding of the testimony of the witness or a fact at issue. Nguyen v. Ark. Dep't of Human Servs., 2014 Ark. App. 565 (2014).

In a case involving the revocation of suspended impositions of sentence, counsel was allowed to withdraw because there was no merit to an appeal of an adverse ruling based on the rules concerning lay testimony and testimony on the ultimate issue; the Arkansas Rules of Evidence did not apply in revocation proceedings. Even if the Rules did apply, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by permitting a witness to opine as to whether defendant resembled a man in a photograph on a memory card found in a stolen truck; such opinion testimony was not objectionable merely because it embraced an ultimate issue to be decided by the trier of fact, and there was no prejudice. Humphrey v. State, 2015 Ark. App. 179, 458 S.W.3d 265 (2015).

In an attempted capital murder case, not only did defendant fail to preserve his argument for review, but alternatively, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by allowing a paramedic to offer his opinion that the victim's injury was most likely from a high-velocity projectile because paramedics are allowed to testify as lay witnesses concerning the cause of injuries they observe based on their experience; the jury saw photographs of the victim's clothing and injury; and the victim both told the paramedic at her home and testified at trial that she had been shot. Doll v. State, 2020 Ark. App. 153, 598 S.W.3d 47 (2020).

Lay Opinion Inadmissible.

Trial court did not abuse its discretion by excluding the proffered testimony of the real party in interest's expert, which could have amounted to his opinion as a lawyer about whether the term "mental illness" was ambiguous. Williams v. First Unum Life Ins. Co., 358 Ark. 224, 188 S.W.3d 908 (2004).

Trial court did not err in disallowing a witness's opinion about the effects of carbon monoxide poisoning where the witness testified that his personal knowledge consisted only of treating one person more than ten years earlier. Morton v. State, 2011 Ark. App. 432, 384 S.W.3d 585 (2011).

It was not an error for an investigator to testify about the difficulties in interviewing victims of sexual abuse because he was not offered as an expert, defendant was given an opportunity to test the investigator's qualifications through cross-examination, and he gave no opinion as to whether the victim was truthful in her claims. Fukunaga v. State, 2014 Ark. App. 4 (2014).

Circuit court erred when it permitted a state trooper to give his opinion that the driver was not wearing her seat belt at the time of the accident; the trooper's opinion failed to meet subdivision (1) of this rule, as it was based only on a firefighter's hearsay report that the driver was found outside the vehicle when emergency services arrived and the trooper admitted that he did not examine the seat belt or observe the types and locations of the driver's injuries. Cantrell v. Toyota Motor Corp., 2018 Ark. App. 335, 553 S.W.3d 157 (2018).

Mental Condition.

Even though the strict rules of evidence would not have governed in the sentencing phase of the defendant's trial for capital murder, had defendant been found guilty of capital murder, any error in the court's ruling which sustained the state's objection to the questioning of a lay witness as to whether he felt that the defendant had some mental problems was harmless, since the jury's verdict found the defendant guilty of the lesser offense of first degree murder, since no proffer of the testimony that the lay witness would have given about his "feelings" as to whether or not the defendant had some mental problems was ever made, and since the question asked called for speculation. Titus v. State, 268 Ark. 9, 593 S.W.2d 164 (1980).

In prosecution for aggravated robbery, it was prejudicial error to refuse to allow the defendant's mother and grandmother to testify during the guilt-innocence phase of the trial to the effect that under pressure the defendant "goes to pieces," as purposeful intent is an essential element of aggravated robbery. Graham v. State, 290 Ark. 107, 717 S.W.2d 203 (1986).

At defendant's probation revocation hearing, a trial court did not err in allowing an arresting officer to testify that defendant was not retarded over defendant's objection that the officer was not qualified. The officer could relate his experiences and perceptions of defendant reading and signing Miranda forms on prior occasions, pursuant to this rule. Green v. State, 2010 Ark. App. 174 (2010).

Observation of Shooting.

Where an eyewitness was in a position from which she could observe the struggle over a gun between her daughter and the defendant, with whom her daughter was living, the witness was properly allowed to testify as to whether she felt the shooting was accidental or intentional, since such observations were rationally perceived and were helpful to the trier of fact in determining the defendant's intent. Mathis v. State, 267 Ark. 904, 591 S.W.2d 679 (Ct. App. 1979), overruled, Rogers v. State, 10 Ark. App. 19, 660 S.W.2d 949 (1983).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion by refusing to allow lay opinion testimony by an eyewitness that the shooting by defendant was accidental; all of the witness's testimony up to the conclusion was admitted and the trial court's reasoning that the jury could reach its own conclusion was rational and not arbitrary or groundless. Simpson v. State, 119 S.W.3d 83 (Ark. Ct. App. 2003).

Personal Knowledge.

Any inferences or opinions a witness expresses that pass the rational connection and "helpful" tests of this rule, must also pass the personal knowledge test of Rule 602. Carton v. Missouri Pac. R.R., 303 Ark. 568, 798 S.W.2d 674 (1990).

Testimony of emergency medical technician concerning the instrument with which victim's injuries were inflicted based on his personal knowledge and the observation of her wounds was properly admitted; the opinion was one which a normal person who had previously seen puncture wounds made by screwdrivers would form; and his opinion was helpful to the determination of a fact in issue, the cause of the victim's wounds. Russell v. State, 306 Ark. 436, 815 S.W.2d 929 (1991).

Where witnesses had ample contact with defendant to make an identification and to develop opinions based on their perceptions, trial court did not abuse its discretion in permitting them to relay their opinions to the jury. Nooner v. State, 322 Ark. 87, 907 S.W.2d 677 (1995), cert. denied, 517 U.S. 1143, 116 S. Ct. 1436, 134 L. Ed. 2d 558 (1996).

Trial court did not err in admitting certain testimony because the questioning of an officer did not necessarily call for information outside the scope of the officer's knowledge and the officer's opinion on the matter would not have helped the jury determine an issue of fact. Moore v. State, 362 Ark. 70, 207 S.W.3d 493 (2005).

Circuit court properly denied petitioner post-conviction relief because trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to object to testimony regarding the victim's incapacity due to ingesting amphetamines; the testimony, based on personal observations, met the requirements of admissibility under the Arkansas Rules of Evidence, and petitioner failed to allege sufficient facts demonstrating that an objection to the testimony would have been meritorious. McCulley v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 313, 525 S.W.3d 10 (2017).

Purpose.

This rule conditionally favors opinions by seeking to balance the need for relevant evidence against the danger of admitting unreliable testimony and recognizing that necessity and expedience may dictate receiving opinion evidence, but that a factual account insofar as feasible may further the values of the adversary system. Carton v. Missouri Pac. R.R., 303 Ark. 568, 798 S.W.2d 674 (1990).

Rational Connection.

The rational connection test means only that the opinion or inference is one which a normal person would form on the basis of the observed facts. Carton v. Missouri Pac. R.R., 303 Ark. 568, 798 S.W.2d 674 (1990).

Sanity of Defendant.

A nonexpert witness may testify as to the sanity of a defendant if a proper foundation is laid; however, the trial court should exclude the opinion testimony of a nonexpert witness whose association with the accused and opportunities for observation for a sufficient length of time are not adequately shown. Avery v. State, 271 Ark. 584, 609 S.W.2d 52 (1980).

Speculative Testimony.

Eyewitness' testimony that defendant was "going like a bat out of hell" prior to the collision of two automobiles was correctly excluded from the jury since it was speculative and not helpful to a clear understanding of the testimony or to a determination of a fact in issue. Miller v. Tipton, 272 Ark. 1, 611 S.W.2d 764 (1981).

Although this rule provides for opinion testimony rationally based on the perception of the witness, there was no abuse of discretion where the trial court disallowed testimony by plaintiff in response to a hypothetical question that did not pertain to the circumstances which, plaintiff contended, caused the accident that injured him. Piercy v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc., 311 Ark. 424, 844 S.W.2d 337 (1993).

Stated another way, evidence is “speculative” under this rule where it is not helpful to a clear understanding of the testimony or to a determination of a fact in issue. Diffie v. State, 319 Ark. 669, 894 S.W.2d 564 (1995).

During defendant’s trial for the armed robbery of a convenience store, he raised a speculation objection under this rule to an officer’s testimony characterizing defendant’s behavior in custody as a “fishing expedition;” the objection was sufficient to preserve the matter for appellate review. Because defendant’s evasiveness in custody was not a fact in issue at trial, any error in the “fishing expedition” testimony was harmless. Dunahue v. State, 2009 Ark. App. 810 (2009).

State of Mind.

The trial court in a first-degree murder case properly excluded the opinion of the arresting officer that the defendant was “scared to death” at the time of his arrest, despite the fact that this rule permits even lay witnesses to describe whether a defendant was angry, nervous or scared, since the defendant’s state of mind after the shooting has no relevance under Rule 401 and Rule 402 tending to make the existence of a consequential fact more or less probable than it would be without the evidence, and since the excluded testimony was merely repetitious to that presented by the defendant himself as to his actions after the shooting. Graham v. State, 2 Ark. App. 266, 621 S.W.2d 4 (1981).

Testimony of Detective.

In a case in which a jury convicted defendant of rape and aggravated assault on a family or household member, the circuit court did not abuse its discretion by admitting a detective’s opinion testimony on the cause of the victim’s bruise. The detective’s testimony about a bruise depicted in photographs that she took of the victim only hours after the attack was rationally based on her perception of the victim’s appearance at that time. Pitman v. State, 2021 Ark. App. 80, 618 S.W.3d 205 (2021).

Testimony of Narcotics Investigator.

Supreme Court could not say that the circuit court abused its discretion in allowing a narcotics investigator to give his lay-opinion testimony about the drug terminology in defendant’s text messages because the circuit court determined that the officer possessed some experience in that area. The testimony met the requirements of this rule. Hill v. State, 2018 Ark. 194, 546 S.W.3d 483 (2018).

Testimony of Police Officer.

For a police officer to give a “qualified lay opinion” the showing of a “rational basis” for his opinion would have to consist of evidence which would be little different from that which would show him to be an expert. Stapleton v. Holiman, 268 Ark. 1101, 598 S.W.2d 453 (Ct. App. 1980).

The court in a burglary prosecution did not err in allowing a deputy to give an opinion that the defendants’ car had backed from the driveway of the burglarized house just before he saw it, since whether the car had backed from the driveway was a relevant issue and its diagonal position in the highway, relative to the driveway, and its movement as he observed it, provided a rational basis for the opinion he gave. Tillman v. State, 275 Ark. 275, 630 S.W.2d 5 (1982), cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1201, 103 S. Ct. 1185, 75 L. Ed. 2d 432 (1983).

Where the witness’ opinion was rationally based on his perception of the victim’s body when it was removed from the water and on his past experience with drowned persons as a police investigator, in light of the fact that the judge gave the jury a cautionary instruction, and the fact that two pathologists testified that determining time of death was not an exact science, the judge did not err in allowing the police investigator to give his opinion as to when the drowning victim died. Gruzen v. State, 276 Ark. 149, 634 S.W.2d 92, cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1020, 103 S. Ct. 386, 74 L. Ed. 2d 517 (1982).

Where an officer investigated a vehicle accident, observed sufficient relevant evidence such as skid marks, debris from the vehicles, position of the vehicles, or made other observations, and where he could rationally form an opinion about the point of impact, he should have been allowed to testify as to that opinion; it was for the trial court to determine whether proper foundation had been laid for the testimony. Smith v. Davis, 281 Ark. 122, 663 S.W.2d 165 (1983).

The testimony of police officers, one of them the intended victim, that a handgun was fired point blank at an officer and that the defendant appeared to be shooting to kill is admissible opinion testimony. Salley v. State, 303 Ark. 278, 796 S.W.2d 335 (1990).

Court erred in ruling that state trooper could not state her opinion about the location of the vehicles at the moment of impact where her opinion was based on position of wrecked vehicles, skid marks and scuff marks. Sledge v. Meyers, 304 Ark. 301, 801 S.W.2d 650 (1991).

Where an officer testified that the defendant made an illegal left turn based upon his investigation of the accident, but the officer was not an eyewitness to the accident, and there was no way to tell from investigating the scene of the accident whether the defendant used his left turn signal or whether the plaintiff sounded his horn before he attempted to pass the defendant, the officer's testimony did not help the fact finder determine the facts and reach his decision on who was responsible for the accident, and thus, was inadmissible under this rule. Butler v. Dowdy, 304 Ark. 481, 803 S.W.2d 534 (1991).

Where the case was tried to the court without a jury and the record reflected competent evidence existed that supported the judgment, it was not reversible error that officer's testimony was admitted where it should have been inadmissible under this rule. Butler v. Dowdy, 304 Ark. 481, 803 S.W.2d 534 (1991).

Officer's reading of defendant's diary and explanation of notations concerning crossbows was admissible because his response was based at least in part from his investigation and his acquired knowledge of crossbows and their brand names. Crow v. State, 306 Ark. 411, 814 S.W.2d 909 (1991).

The trial court properly allowed a police officer to testify that a shotgun barrel appeared to have been cut. Bridges v. State, 327 Ark. 392, 938 S.W.2d 561 (1997).

In a prosecution for robbery, the court properly refused to allow a police officer to testify as to whether the defendant could have carried certain items without anyone seeing those items since such testimony was not necessary to assist the jury in understanding the officer's testimony or in making a determination of fact. Skiver v. State, 336 Ark. 86, 983 S.W.2d 931 (1999).

In a murder trial, officer was not offered as an expert, and officer's testimony on rebuttal regarding the amount of blood loss in similar cases was rationally based on the officer's years of experience as a homicide investigator; therefore, the testimony was admissible as a lay opinion. Robinson v. State, 353 Ark. 372, 108 S.W.3d 622 (2003).

In defendant's trial for aggravated robbery, his argument, that the trial court erred in allowing a sergeant to testify that cigarettes found in defendant's vehicle during his arrest were those stolen from the liquor store, was not preserved for review because it was only after the last question that defendant's counsel objected, arguing that the sergeant was not qualified to tell the jury what the numbers on the cigarette pack signified; defendant should have objected at the first opportunity to that line of questioning. McClain v. State, 361 Ark. 133, 205 S.W.3d 123 (2005).

In defendant's murder case, the court properly allowed a detective to testify that there was no blood found on the screwdriver recovered from defendant's home and that it was not unusual to not find blood or fingerprints on objects, even after they had been touched or penetrated into a body, because the detective testified as to his opinion, rationally based on his thirteen years of experience as an investigator. Navarro v. State, 371 Ark. 179, 264 S.W.3d 530 (2007).

Defendant's conviction for murder in the second degree was proper because the admission of an officer's opinion that defendant would go from controlled to crying, back and forth, through the entire interview, was admissible. Because the officer was testifying not only about defendant's statement to the police but also her demeanor after the crime and the discrepancies that he noticed between her statements and the physical evidence, it was not an abuse of discretion to allow him to testify about his perception of the changes in defendant's demeanor during her statement. Johnson v. State, 2010 Ark. App. 153, 375 S.W.3d 12 (2010).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion by allowing the agent to testify that when he took photographs of defendant at the crime scene he had what appeared to be blood on his hand because the agent's opinion was based on his personal experience as a law enforcement officer and observing defendant at that particular crime scene, it was rationally based on the agent's observations at the crime scene, and it was helpful for him in explaining why he took photographs of defendant's hands and to determine a fact issue. Leach v. State, 2012 Ark. 179, 402 S.W.3d 517 (2012).

Circuit court did not abuse its discretion in admitting an officer's opinion testimony that defendant was the aggressor where the officer arrived immediately after the incident, observed the scene and parties, and took statements from defendant. Stockstill v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 29, 511 S.W.3d 889 (2017).

Underlying Observations.

A witness may express an opinion or inference rather than the underlying observations if the expression would be "helpful to a clear understanding of his testimony or the determination of a fact in issue where is"; if, however, an opinion without the underlying facts would be misleading, then an objection may be properly sustained. Carton v. Missouri Pac. R.R., 303 Ark. 568, 798 S.W.2d 674 (1990).

Value of Property.

Testimony of department store superintendent as to value of stolen department store property held admissible. Williams v. State, 29 Ark. App. 61, 781 S.W.2d 37 (1989).

Rule 702. Testimony by experts.

If scientific, technical, or other specialized knowledge will assist the trier of fact to understand the evidence or to determine a fact in issue, a witness qualified as an expert by knowledge, skill, experience, training, or education, may testify thereto in the form of an opinion or otherwise.

CASE NOTES

In General.

Where a psychologist was never qualified as an expert witness and where it became apparent that his report on a battery of tests administered to the defendant could not be admitted without its approval by a supervising psychiatrist or consulting psychologist, it was proper for the trial judge to limit the witness to testifying as a psychological examiner and layman, and to allow him to give a description and the results of the tests the defendant took, but exclude his findings. Robinson v. State, 274 Ark. 312, 624 S.W.2d 435 (1981).

A determination under this rule of whether the evidence might confuse or mislead the jury is separate from a Rule 403 weighing. Prater v. State, 307 Ark. 180, 820 S.W.2d 429 (1991).

Accident Reconstruction.

The determination of an expert witness' qualifications is a matter lying within the trial judge's discretion, to be upheld on appeal absent an abuse of that discretion; with regard to accident reconstruction, the important consideration is whether the situation is beyond the jurors' ability to understand the facts and draw their own conclusions. B. & J. Byers Trucking, Inc. v. Robinson, 281 Ark. 442, 665 S.W.2d 258 (1984); Drope v. Owens, 298 Ark. 69, 765 S.W.2d 8 (1989).

Attempts to reconstruct traffic accidents are viewed with disfavor, and in the absence of anything to indicate it was beyond the ability of the jury to understand the facts and draw their own conclusions, expert testimony is not admissible. Sims v. Safeway Trails, Inc., 297 Ark. 588, 764 S.W.2d 427 (1989); Drope v. Owens, 298 Ark. 69, 765 S.W.2d 8 (1989).

While attempts to reconstruct accidents by means of an expert testimony are viewed with disfavor, with the enactment of this rule the emphasis of inquiry became whether the expert could assist the jury in that endeavor, providing a broader, more expansive window for the admissibility of reconstructionist testimony than under the former standard. Banks v. Jackson, 312 Ark. 232, 848 S.W.2d 408 (1993).

Where there was directly contradictory testimony from the persons involved in the collision and one eyewitness, disputes concerning the damage sustained by the car and bicycle involved in the collision, as well as the speed of the vehicles, the testimony of an expert reconstructionist satisfied the criteria of this rule by aiding the jury in understanding the evidence, and the circuit court did not abuse its discretion in allowing the expert to testify. Banks v. Jackson, 312 Ark. 232, 848 S.W.2d 408 (1993).

Insured's proffer of accident reconstruction expert's testimony made it abundantly clear that the expert would not be offering expert opinion solely on the issue of how fast the employee was driving, rather, the proffered testimony contained the expert's opinion that the 123 feet of straight skid marks left by the tractor-trailer at the scene of the accident showed that the brakes on both the left and right sides of the axle were braking equally and that the brakes on the tractor and the brakes on the trailer were both working properly; therefore, the trial court erred in ruling that the expert's entire testimony was inadmissible. Southern Farm Bureau Cas. Ins. Co. v. Daggett, 354 Ark. 112, 118 S.W.3d 525 (2003).

Arson Detection.

The trial court did not abuse its discretion in qualifying a witness as an expert in the field of arson detection and allowing his testimony regarding the nature of the fire, where in its attempt to prove that the fire was not of accidental origin but had been intentionally set, the state called this witness who had been employed at the state fire marshal's office from September, 1978, through September, 1979, where he stated that he had attended several training sessions at the Arkansas Fire Training Academy and had on-the-job training under the direct supervision of the state fire marshal, and where he also testified that he had not only attended classes but had taught classes on the investigation of fires. Parris v. State, 270 Ark. 269, 604 S.W.2d 582 (Ct. App. 1980).

Autopsy.

Expert in forensic pathology, who observed injuries on the murder victim while performing an autopsy on the victim, was permitted to testify about the likely cause of death, even though he had not been qualified as a reconstructionist, because his opinion helped determine how the victim died. MacKintrush v. State, 60 Ark. App. 42, 959 S.W.2d 404 (1997), aff'd, 334 Ark. 390, 978 S.W.2d 293 (1998).

Basis of Opinion.

The relative weakness or strength of the factual underpinning of the expert's opinion goes to the weight and credibility, rather than admissibility. Arkansas State Hwy. Comm'n v. Schell, 13 Ark. App. 293, 683 S.W.2d 618 (1985); Killian v. Hill, 32 Ark. App. 25, 795 S.W.2d 369 (1990).

When an expert's testimony is based on hearsay, the lack of personal knowledge on the part of the expert does not mandate the exclusion of the opinion but, rather presents a jury question as to the weight which should be assigned the opinion. Arkansas State Hwy. Comm'n v. Schell, 13 Ark. App. 293, 683 S.W.2d 618 (1985).

A state trooper should not have been permitted to testify concerning his opinion on the speed issue absent some indication that his opinion was based on information that went beyond the experience and understanding of the average juror, where the question before the jury was whether the defendant was driving negligently when he collided with the decedent's car. Higgs v. Hodges, 16 Ark. App. 146, 697 S.W.2d 943 (1985).

Where the testimony shows a questionable basis for the opinion of the expert, the issue becomes one of credibility for the fact finder, rather than a question of law. Killian v. Hill, 32 Ark. App. 25, 795 S.W.2d 369 (1990).

A county deputy sheriff was properly declared an expert on the issue of who had caused a motor vehicle collision, notwithstanding his modest refusal to declare himself an expert, where he detailed his academy training and work experience and described his investigation at the scene that led him to reach his conclusions. New Prospect Drilling Co. v. First Com. Trust, 332 Ark. 466, 966 S.W.2d 233 (1998).

In defendant's manslaughter case, the court properly admitted expert regarding the effects of methamphetamine because the trial court conducted a Daubert hearing and the expert testified to his training and experience and also testified to the fact that his opinion testimony was widely accepted by the scientific community. Hoyle v. State, 371 Ark. 495, 268 S.W.3d 313 (2007).

In the parents' action after their child developed a rare form of leukemia, a test used by a doctor had not been subjected to peer review and, allowing the doctor to take samples from homes and present them as school samples would have grossly misled the jury. Therefore, the parents failed to carry their burden of proof regarding the admissibility on the issue of reliability. Green v. Alpharma, Inc., 373 Ark. 378, 284 S.W.3d 29 (2008).

Blood-Splatter Analysis.

State's blood-splatter expert witness had received extensive training and education in blood-splatter analysis, as well as experience in conducting that analysis at crime scenes, blood-splatter analysis was a well-recognized science which has been in existence for many years, and the expert had previously been certified by a trial court in Arkansas as an expert and had testified regarding blood-pattern analysis; thus, the reliability of the expert's testimony was established and, additionally, the expert's testimony was also relevant because it not only corroborated other evidence regarding the murder, but also assisted the jury in understanding the manner of the attack and what was found at the crime scene. Hudson v. State, 85 Ark. App. 85, 146 S.W.3d 380 (2004).

Trial court did not err in allowing a police detective to testify as to blood spatter because the detective had specialized training that would have provided her with more than ordinary knowledge in blood-spatter analysis. Flowers v. State, 373 Ark. 127, 282 S.W.3d 767 (2008).

Burden of Proof.

Evidence Rules 702 through 705 emphasize the function of cross-examination, with the burden being placed upon the opponent of the testimony to show that the expert's conclusion lacks adequate support and is subject to being stricken by the trial court. Collins v. Hinton, 327 Ark. 159, 937 S.W.2d 164 (1997).

Chiropractor.

In a slip and fall case, a chiropractor's causation testimony was properly allowed where voir dire testimony of his medical training laid a proper foundation and he had treated plaintiff for several years; thus, he was familiar with her condition before and after the fall. Dollar Gen. Corp. v. Elder, 2020 Ark. 208, 600 S.W.3d 597 (2020).

Construction With Other Law.

The requirements of § 16-114-206(a) are not in direct conflict with the requirements of this rule; the facts of any given case determine whether expert testimony is required in a medical malpractice claim for negligence. Haase v. Starnes, 323 Ark. 263, 915 S.W.2d 675 (1996).

Because the language, "By means of expert testimony provided only by a medical care provider of the same specialty as the defendant" in § 16-114-206(a) adds requirements to this rule, attempts to dictate procedure, and invades the province of the judiciary's authority to set and control procedure, it violates the separation-of-powers doctrine, Ark. Const. Amend. 80, § 3, and the inherent authority of the courts to protect the integrity of proceedings and the rights of the litigants. Broussard v. St. Edward Mercy Health Sys., 2012 Ark. 14, 386 S.W.3d 385 (2012).

Cross-Examination.

Once the trial court determined witness qualified as an expert, he was entitled to testify in the form of an opinion or otherwise give his reasons without prior disclosure of underlying facts or data; he was required, however, to disclose the underlying facts or data on cross-examination. Bull v. Brantner, 10 Ark. App. 229, 662 S.W.2d 476 (1984).

In defendant's murder trial, the court properly limited the scope of defendant's questioning of the state's expert witness where the court determined that the expert was not qualified to testify about the psychology of the crime and, when testifying, the expert did express his opinion that the attempted decapitation was "overkill" and that the killer could have inflicted the wound to the victim's neck due to "emotional things"; thus, the testimony that defendant sought, that his wife might have killed the victim for emotional reasons, was before the jury. MacKool v. State, 365 Ark. 416, 231 S.W.3d 676 (2006).

Cumulative Evidence.

Defendant's conviction for murder in the second degree was proper because defendant's argument regarding an officer's footprint analysis was without merit since, at the time the officer testified regarding that issue, unchallenged testimony and photographic exhibits had already established which shoes were worn by the victim and which were worn by defendant. Blood on the shoes and the differences in the treads were obvious and that same evidence, and specifically, unchallenged testimony from a certified crime-scene technician, had established that there were pools of blood at the crime scene that contained shoe prints matching defendant's shoes and appeared to have been made by those shoes. Johnson v. State, 2010 Ark. App. 153, 375 S.W.3d 12 (2010).

Damages.

Rice farmers' expert's testimony on the farmers' past and future damages due to contamination of their rice seed with genetically engineered rice seed was admissible under this rule. The engineered rice's manufacturer's objections to the expert's methods of calculation went to the weight of the testimony, not its admissibility. Bayer CropScience LP v. Schafer, 2011 Ark. 518, 385 S.W.3d 822 (2011).

Daubert.

In a breach of contract case, a trial court did not abuse its discretion by allowing an expert to testify under this rule about repair costs, even though the factors set forth in Daubert v. Merrell Dow Pharmaceuticals, Inc., 509 U.S. 579, 113 S. Ct. 2786, 125 L. Ed. 2d 469 (1993), were not used; the trial court performed its role as a gatekeeper where it took reasonable measures to evaluate the reliability and relevance of testimony before allowing it. A ruling that the expert reasonably relied on information from a sales representative was implicit in the trial court's ruling. Derry Berrigan & Co. v. KBS Leasing, Inc., 2013 Ark. App. 196 (2013).

It was not necessary for the trial court to engage in a Daubert analysis relating to the reliability of experts' causation opinions, as they did not employ any novel scientific evidence, theories, or methodology, and their opinions were based on their experience, training, observations, other medical providers' opinions, and generally accepted testing. Dundee v. Horton, 2015 Ark. App. 690, 477 S.W.3d 558 (2015).

In a first-degree murder case, admission of a special agent's testimony about where a cell phone had been used was upheld on appeal where the special agent acknowledged that the analysis produced estimates of the phone's location and the trial court found that defendant's objections went more to the evidence's weight than its admissibility. Terrell v. State, 2019 Ark. App. 433, 587 S.W.3d 594 (2019).

In a products liability action against a tire manufacturer, the trial court did not err by finding that the defense expert's additional opinion that the size of the rim contributed to the tire's failure was unreliable; the expert testified at his deposition that he was not aware of any articles that specifically addressed whether an oversized rim could contribute to a tire's failure and admitted that he had not done any testing to support his theory and had not quantified his opinion, and the untimeliness of the additional opinion also undermined its reliability. Hankook Tire Co. v. Philpot, 2020 Ark. App. 316, 603 S.W.3d 614 (2020).

Discretion of Court.

Circuit court did not err by allowing the testimony of an expert witness to bolster that of a nurse practitioner because the expert's testimony was clinical in nature, was based on her own observations, and it did not comment on the nurse's findings or her credibility. Tiarks v. State, 633 S.W.3d 788 (Ark. Ct. App. 2021).

Whether a witness qualifies as an expert is a matter to be decided within the sound discretion of a trial court, and in the absence of abuse of that discretion, the Supreme Court will not reverse the decision of the trial court. Parker v. State, 268 Ark. 441, 597 S.W.2d 586 (1980).

The determination of the qualifications of an expert witness lies within the discretion of the trial court, and his decision will not be reversed unless that discretion has been abused. Dixon v. State, 268 Ark. 471, 597 S.W.2d 77 (1980); Phillips v. Clark, 297 Ark. 16, 759 S.W.2d 207 (1988); Montgomery v. Butler, 309 Ark. 491, 834 S.W.2d 148 (1992); Hendrix v. State, 40 Ark. App. 52, 842 S.W.2d 443 (1992); Mearns v. Mearns, 58 Ark. App. 42, 946 S.W.2d 188 (1997).

The determination of an expert's qualifications as a witness is within the sound discretion of the trial court and, absent an abuse of this discretion, his decision will not be reversed on appeal. Whaley v. State, 11 Ark. App. 248, 669 S.W.2d 502 (1984); Gregory v. State, 37 Ark. App. 135, 825 S.W.2d 269 (1992).

Whether a witness is qualified to testify as an expert upon a particular question is a matter to be decided within the discretion of the trial court. Cathey v. Williams, 290 Ark. 189, 718

S.W.2d 98 (1986); Duncan v. State, 38 Ark. App. 47, 828 S.W.2d 847 (1992).

Since the admissibility of expert testimony rests largely on the broad discretion of the trial court, on appeal, the appellant has the burdensome task of demonstrating that the trial court has abused its discretion. Sims v. Safeway Trails, Inc., 297 Ark. 588, 764 S.W.2d 427 (1989); Mearns v. Mearns, 58 Ark. App. 42, 946 S.W.2d 188 (1997).

Whether to allow a witness to give expert testimony rests largely within the sound discretion of the trial court, and that determination will not be reversed absent an abuse of that discretion. Swadley v. Krugler, 67 Ark. App. 297, 999 S.W.2d 209 (1999).

In defendant's murder case, the court did not abuse its discretion in its decision not to conduct a Daubert hearing to determine the admissibility of expert testimony because the expert testified that he was the chief latent examiner for the Arkansas State Crime Lab, and he had attended numerous sessions on latent prints and tire and shoe-pattern impressions. The expert described the methodology he used — photographs and overlay documentation — in comparing the recovered tennis shoes and the bloody imprint he found on the shirt. Berks v. State, 2013 Ark. App. 203, 427 S.W.3d 98 (2013).

DNA Testing.

DNA tests should not be ruled admissible before the accused's expert has had a chance to examine the evidence, procedures, and protocol; ideally, an accused should even be provided with the actual DNA samples in order to reproduce the tests, but an accused must be given the opportunity for independent expert review before a determination of reliability is made. Prater v. State, 307 Ark. 180, 820 S.W.2d 429 (1991).

DNA profiling evidence should no longer be viewed as novel scientific evidence requiring a preliminary inquiry, beyond the showing that the expert properly performed a reliable methodology in creating the DNA profiles. Moore v. State, 323 Ark. 529, 915 S.W.2d 284 (1996).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in determining that short tandem repeat of the Y chromosome (Y-STR) DNA testing was a valid science that could be properly applied to the case; although the testimony did not cover all of the Daubert factors, there was no denial that the testing was valid and legitimate science, and the State's expert had explained that the national database, which was used with both Y-STR and autosomal DNA testing, was the best methodology available. Britt v. State, 2019 Ark. App. 145, 573 S.W.3d 567 (2019).

Exclusion of Expert Testimony.

Where, in a prosecution for rape, the defense offered the testimony of a qualified expert in the field of human perception for the purposes of aiding the jury in understanding how human perception works mechanically and what factors influence the perception and the ability of an individual to later recall that perception, and for the purpose of an opinion as to the reliability of the victim's perception and recall under the circumstances of her attack, the expert's testimony was properly excluded by the trial court as an invasion into the province of the trier of fact. Caldwell v. State, 267 Ark. 1053, 594 S.W.2d 24 (Ct. App. 1980).

An expert witness in crime scene investigation and in the scientific examination of minute physical evidence should not have been permitted to testify that in his opinion the murder victim met her death in the defendant's house, where the expert's conclusion seemed to be based solely on the proof that the victim had at some time been in the defendant's house and that she did not walk out of the house on her own feet. Maxwell v. State, 279 Ark. 423, 652 S.W.2d 31 (1983).

Expert testimony properly excluded where defendant was given adequate opportunity to cross-examine the eyewitnesses and expert testimony could have hindered the jury's ability to judge impartially the credibility of witnesses and the weight to be accorded their testimony. Utle v. State, 308 Ark. 622, 826 S.W.2d 268 (1992).

Expert witness testimony of a maritime and marine safety expert was not allowed where nothing indicated that the knowledge was so specialized that it was beyond the ability of the trier of fact to understand and draw its own conclusions. Williams v. Ingram, 320 Ark. 615, 899 S.W.2d 454 (1995).

Testimony from a maritime and marine safety expert regarding the requisite standard of care and the danger of river currents was not allowed as there was no indication that the witness had specialized knowledge that went beyond the general knowledge of an average person. Wade v. Grace, 321 Ark. 482, 902 S.W.2d 785 (1995).

Psycho-social history prepared by interviewing people who knew defendant properly excluded. Bowen v. State, 322 Ark. 483, 911 S.W.2d 555 (1995), cert. denied, 517 U.S. 1226, 116 S. Ct. 1861, 134 L. Ed. 2d 960 (1996).

The trial court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to allow testimony in a murder prosecution by a forensic psychologist who would have testified about the unreliability of eyewitness testimony. Parker v. State, 333 Ark. 137, 968 S.W.2d 592 (1998).

Court did not err in refusing to allow defendant's expert witness to testify regarding the credibility and weight of defendant's custodial statement because defendant had the opportunity to cross-examine the investigating officers regarding the custodial interrogation, he took the stand and testified to his version of the events surrounding his custodial interrogation, and the prejudice that would have resulted from the testimony regarding his opinion of the voluntariness of the confession would have far outweighed the probative value of the evidence because such testimony would have usurped the jury's role as the trier of fact. Flowers v. State, 362 Ark. 193, 208 S.W.3d 113 (2005).

In a medical malpractice suit against a pediatrician arising from the treatment of a child during an emergency room visit, an expert witness on emergency room care was not qualified to offer expert testimony where, in her practice, she did not perform vitals on neonates nor did she examine children; thus, the trial court properly excluded her expert witness deposition. Hill v. Billups, 92 Ark. App. 259, 212 S.W.3d 53 (2005).

Although the circuit court abused its discretion in refusing to qualify a doctor as an expert witness, the doctor's affidavit was not sufficient to overcome a summary-judgment motion; although the doctor's affidavit stated that he was familiar with the standard of care required of physical therapists under Arkansas law, it did not state the relevant standard of care with specificity and it did not state with any reasonable degree of medical certainty that the patient's injuries were proximately caused by the therapist's alleged negligence. Fryar v. Touchstone Physical Therapy, Inc., 365 Ark. 295, 229 S.W.3d 7 (2006).

Trial court did not err by excluding the testimony of a defense expert witness because of an alleged discovery violation as defense counsel failed to properly prepare the witness's findings and give them to the state well in advance of the trial so that the state could prepare its cross-examination and any rebuttal witness; the trial court correctly noted that the witness's findings did not provide anything more than common knowledge where, in two exhibits, the witness stated that she claimed that an interviewer led the child victims with her questions and the expert failed to suggest how she would have conducted the interviews of the victims. White v. State, 367 Ark. 595, 242 S.W.3d 240 (2006), cert. denied, 550 U.S. 904, 127 S. Ct. 2114, 167 L. Ed. 2d 815 (2007).

Denial of the class member's motion to strike in an action against cellular providers was inappropriate, in part because expert testimony focused on one provider's damages and how other costs might increase if the early termination fees were invalidated; thus, the expert's opinion was concerned with the underlying merits of the case and it was improper to consider the underlying merits at the class-certification stage of proceedings. Moreover, the expert opinion contained conclusions that invaded the role of the circuit court. Rosenow v. Alltel Corp., 2010 Ark. 26, 358 S.W.3d 879 (2010).

Circuit court abused its discretion by applying too rigid a standard in excluding the testimony of a company's experts because the expert witnesses possessed greater-than-ordinary knowledge of floor-plan lending and banking in general and could have assisted a fact-finder in interpreting the ambiguous interest-rate clause, both witnesses were veteran bankers with practical experience in commercial lending and floor-plan financing, and they were no strangers to Arkansas banking practices; although neither witness professed to be an expert in contract interpretation, that did not disqualify their testimony, and because they had superior knowledge to offer the jury, gained from their experience in the commercial banking industry, it remained the jury's prerogative to interpret the contract, with the aid of the experts. Tri-Eagle Enters. v. Regions Bank, 2010 Ark. App. 64, 373 S.W.3d 399 (2010).

Circuit court did not err in granting the state's motion in limine to exclude the proffered testimony a neuropsychologist and expert in forensic psychology, and an expert in psychology and developmental disabilities because defendant had ample opportunity to cross-examine the officers who took his statements and the jury viewed a videotape of one of defendant's statements and heard an audio recording of two others. The proffered testimony was not beyond the ability of the jury to understand and draw its own conclusions. Vance v. State, 2011 Ark. 243, 383 S.W.3d 317 (2011).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion by granting the railroad company's motion in limine excluding the testimony of the employee's experts under this rule in the employee's action under the Federal Employers' Liability Act because the fact that some studies showed that higher levels of benzene could cause multiple myeloma did not prove that the lower levels of that chemical found in diesel exhaust and fuel played a role in causing the employee's cancer; the employee produced no reliable data of his actual exposure to diesel exhaust or benzene. The physician's reliance on a particular study was misplaced in view of the fact that it analyzed chemical workers, not railroad employees, with direct exposure to nearly-pure benzene; the toxicologist relied only on anecdotal testimony, refused to consider the employee's test results, and defined "excessive exposure" as anything above ambient levels. Richardson v. Union Pac. R.R. Co., 2011 Ark. App. 562, 386 S.W.3d 77 (2011).

Court properly granted the state's motion in limine to exclude defendant's expert testimony because, in the proffer, the expert testified that he could not tell the jury what actually happened, but that he could illuminate defendant's reactions, mental capabilities, deficits, and reasons for those deficits. The testimony was simply an attempt to make a mental-disease-or-defect defense after the fact, or, at the very least, confusing as to the point of its admission. Laswell v. State, 2012 Ark. 201, 404 S.W.3d 818 (2012).

At defendant's trial for internet stalking of a child, the jury did not need expert testimony on his intentions because the chat logs spoke for themselves and this was not an issue beyond the jury's ability to understand or draw its own conclusions. Therefore, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by excluding expert testimony under this rule on the issue of defendant's mental state. Todd v. State, 2012 Ark. App. 626, 425 S.W.3d 25 (2012).

Eyewitness Perception.

Although the trial court refused to allow expert witness to testify concerning factors affecting eyewitness perception concerning identification of defendant in a police lineup, such expert testimony, touching only generally on factors which influence eyewitness perception, was not so essential to the jury that its exclusion constituted an abuse of discretion. Jones v. State, 314 Ark. 289, 862 S.W.2d 242 (1993).

There was a reasonable basis to conclude that a sergeant had knowledge of fingerprint collection beyond that of ordinary knowledge, and defense counsel was allowed to cross-examine him on the issue; thus, the circuit court did not abuse its discretion in allowing the sergeant to testify as an expert on the collection of fingerprints. Miller v. State, 2018 Ark. App. 614, 567 S.W.3d 68 (2018).

Firearm and Toolmark Examination.

Expert witness's testimony that the seven bullets found in the victim's head and the four shell casings found near his body had been fired from defendant's gun was admissible because the expert had received extensive training and education in firearm and toolmark examinations and had vast experience in conducting those examinations; firearm and toolmark science had been in existence for many years and was a well-recognized and generally accepted science; it had been studied and tested numerous times; there had been multiple peer-review journals published on the topic; a low rate of error had been established after much testing; and the expert explained that standards and guidelines had been established to control the technique. Northern v. State, 2015 Ark. App. 426, 467 S.W.3d 755 (2015).

Foundation.

Experts reached their causation opinions based on the history provided by the patient, their examinations of her, the results of their examinations and objective testing, their review of other medical providers' opinions, and their review of her past medical records; this was a sufficient foundation for their causation opinions. Dundee v. Horton, 2015 Ark. App. 690, 477 S.W.3d 558 (2015).

Funeral Director.

In wrongful death action trial court erred in allowing a funeral home director to testify as an expert witness on the issue of what is more than normal grief where funeral director's only expert qualifications were that he had participated in approximately 200 funerals over the past 24 years and that he had attended an institute of mortuary science. Williams v. Carr, 263 Ark. 326, 565 S.W.2d 400 (1978).

Harmless Error.

While the psychologist should not have been allowed to testify that the history given by the victim was consistent with sexual abuse, the testimony merely provided the jurors with a hint of the testimony which they would receive from the victim; therefore, the error was harmless and did not affect the judgment. Russell v. State, 289 Ark. 533, 712 S.W.2d 916 (1986).

Trial court committed harmless error in allowing police officer to testify regarding contributing factors to automobile accident. Muskogee Bridge Co. v. Stansell, 311 Ark. 113, 842 S.W.2d 15 (1992).

Trial court's decision allowing expert testimony involving the examination of two photographs for similarity was correct as the techniques involved were not novel and the predicate for the testimony concerning the expert's examination was laid outside the jury's presence by his testimony that his technique was accepted by the scientific community; the techniques had been used by the expert for six years, had been used in Arkansas for nearly 20 years, and had been accepted as reliable by courts in Arkansas and Texas. Ridling v. State, 360 Ark. 424, 203 S.W.3d 63 (2005).

In a rape case, a trial court erred by admitting expert testimony regarding whether a child victim was being truthful as this invaded the province of the jury; however, the error was harmless since the victim's testimony was sufficient and it was corroborated by independent eyewitnesses. Buford v. State, 368 Ark. 87, 243 S.W.3d 300 (2006).

Impeachment of Expert.

In a medical malpractice action, the court did not abuse its discretion in excluding evidence that the defendant had failed a board certification examination on a number of occasions; although evidence of a physician's lack of board certification may be used to impeach the physician's credibility as an expert witness, a trial court must still properly weigh the interests under Rule 403 and may exclude relevant evidence if its probative value is substantially outweighed by the possibility of unfair prejudice or confusion of the issues. Jackson v. Buchman, 338 Ark. 467, 996 S.W.2d 30 (1999).

Insurance Industry Expert.

In the insured's action against the insurer for defamation, the trial court did not err in allowing the insured's insurance industry expert to testify because there was a sufficient connection between his testimony national practices and the insured's scenario for the testimony to have some relevancy. Allstate Ins. Co. v. Dodson, 2011 Ark. 19, 376 S.W.3d 414 (2011).

Knowledge of Facts.

Where the state offered testimony of an expert on the child abuse syndrome and, by the time she testified, there was strong evidence on the record that a child abuse case was before the court and evidence of the behavior of abused children generally was relevant to explain the conduct of the alleged victims in this action, including their unwillingness to discuss it until after their father and mother separated, the expert testimony was admissible even though the expert witness had no knowledge of the facts in the case before the court. Poyner v. State, 288 Ark. 402, 705 S.W.2d 882 (1986).

Legal Insanity.

Expert testimony regarding the legal standard for criminal insanity, and the expert's opinion that the defendant was not criminally insane, held admissible as rebuttal evidence on the issue of whether the defendant was mentally competent at the time of the offense. Matthews v. State, 327 Ark. 70, 938 S.W.2d 545 (1997).

In a second degree murder case, a trial court did not abuse its discretion by allowing testimony from a second doctor that personality disorders were not mental diseases in the context of this statute because testimony about what constituted a mental disease had previously been accepted; the challenged testimony simply embraced the issue of mental disease from a medical point of view, and it did not mandate a legal conclusion. Moreover, because a first doctor opined that a personality disorder was a mental disease in her report, and the report was entered into evidence, her opinion, despite being written and not oral, was evidence properly subject to rebuttal. Hajek-McClure v. State, 2014 Ark. App. 690, 450 S.W.3d 259 (2014).

Medical Doctors.

In a rape case, testimony from two doctors that a tear to a child's vaginal wall was consistent with an intentional injury caused by penetration by a blunt force object was not subject to the Daubert standard as it was based on experience and observation, not anything novel; moreover, even though the testimony touched on the ultimate issue, it was allowable because it did not mandate a legal conclusion. Turbyfill v. State, 92 Ark. App. 145, 211 S.W.3d 557 (2005).

During defendant's trial for permitting the abuse of her minor child, the court did not err in allowing a pediatrician to testify; as a medical expert in the field of child abuse, the pediatrician was familiar with how the child's hand injuries would have appeared at the time they were incurred and whether their appearance at that time would have been apparent to a caregiver, something the jury could not have determined from the photographs taken of the child. Sullivan v. State, 2012 Ark. 74, 386 S.W.3d 507 (2012).

Even if the circuit court erred in allowing an expert in the field of child-abuse pediatrics to testify about the victim's lack of physical injuries, the error would have been harmless because the evidence of defendant's guilt was overwhelming, and the error was slight, as defendant could not demonstrate prejudice; the expert's testimony was cumulative to a nurse's testimony that the absence of physical signs of trauma did not mean that a sexual assault did not occur. Barnum v. State, 2020 Ark. App. 523, 614 S.W.3d 453 (2020).

Circuit court did not err in allowing an expert in the field of child-abuse pediatrics to testify about the victim's lack of physical injuries; rather than expressing an opinion that the victim was telling the truth, the expert merely stated that in the vast majority of pediatric sex abuse cases, there would not be any signs of physical trauma. The expert properly rendered a medical explanation based on the findings of the physical examination she performed on the victim. Barnum v. State, 2020 Ark. App. 523, 614 S.W.3d 453 (2020).

Medical Examiner.

A medical examiner was properly permitted to testify in a murder prosecution that the cause of the victim's death was strangulation where he based his opinion on the presence of petechial hemorrhages on the surfaces of the eyes and in the surfaces of the eyelids and the presence of hemorrhages in the cricoid thyroid muscle and behind both horns of the thyroid and went on to state that these particular types of hemorrhages are caused by pressure that is applied from outside the neck and that some of the external injuries were indicative of a struggle. MacKintrush v. State, 334 Ark. 390, 978 S.W.2d 293 (1998).

Motorists.

It was not an abuse of the trial court's discretion to allow a state agency representative to testify concerning the reaction time of motorists. Redman v. St. Louis S.W. Ry., 316 Ark. 636, 873 S.W.2d 542 (1994).

Nurses.

Nurse's expert testimony was properly allowed under this rule as the testimony was helpful as a lay person might otherwise think that, because a victim alleged that the abuse occurred over a period of several years, there had to have been some physical manifestation found upon examination; the testimony was not an impermissible opinion regarding the victim's credibility as the nurse never implied that an assault had occurred or that any injury had ever been sustained, but testified as to why the absence of physical evidence did not necessarily mean that the victim had not suffered sexual abuse. Strickland v. State, 2010 Ark. App. 599, 378 S.W.3d 157 (2010).

Pharmacologists.

A pharmacologist was properly qualified as an expert in the field of pharmacology and, specifically, on the matter of the drug Rohypnol where his private lab was hired by the drug manufacturer of Rohypnol to develop testing procedures to detect the presence of the drug in humans, his testimony detailed the physiological effects of the drug on humans, and his familiarity with the effects of the drug came from his testing and research. Sera v. State, 341 Ark. 415, 17 S.W.3d 61, cert. denied, 531 U.S. 998, 121 S. Ct. 495, 148 L. Ed. 2d 466 (2000).

Police Officer.

Officer's testimony regarding his training that dealt in depth with the horizontal gaze nystagmus test was sufficient to establish him as an expert witness qualified to discuss the details and results of the test. Brown v. State, 38 Ark. App. 18, 827 S.W.2d 174 (1992).

Law enforcement officers are allowed to testify based on their education and experience. Redman v. St. Louis S.W. Ry., 316 Ark. 636, 873 S.W.2d 542 (1994).

Police officer permitted to testify about the drug trade where the officer had specialized training and experience in the drug trade and could assist the jury in determining whether the defendant might have murdered the victim to obtain property to buy drugs. Martin v. State, 328 Ark. 420, 944 S.W.2d 512, overruled, State v. Bell, 329 Ark. 422, 948 S.W.2d 557 (1997).

A police officer can qualify as a drug-recognition expert. Mace v. State, 328 Ark. 536, 944 S.W.2d 830 (1997).

This rule applied to a gang intelligence detective's testimony regarding gang activity and, because the detective's expertise came from his personal experiences, a Daubert analysis was not required; while it was abuse of discretion to allow the detective to testify that defendant was a "slinger" and a "banger" under Ark. R. Evid. 403, the error was harmless because the evidence was cumulative. Jackson v. State, 359 Ark. 297, 197 S.W.3d 468 (2004), cert. denied, 544 U.S. 1039, 125 S. Ct. 2266, 161 L. Ed. 2d 1070 (2005).

In a case involving the manufacturing of methamphetamine, the trial court did not err by allowing a police officer to testify as an expert witness regarding the manufacturing process; it was relevant as defendant disputed whether or not the items found could have been used to manufacture drugs. Saul v. State, 92 Ark. App. 49, 211 S.W.3d 1 (2005), rev'd, 365 Ark. 77, 225 S.W.3d 373 (2006).

In defendant's trial for manufacturing methamphetamine in violation of § 5-64-401(a) [repealed], a detective could testify as an expert and offer opinions about whether methamphetamine was manufactured under this rule because defendant disputed whether or not the items could have been used to manufacture methamphetamine, and thus, the process was relevant in the trial. Saul v. State, 92 Ark. App. 49, 211 S.W.3d 1 (2005), rev'd, 365 Ark. 77, 225 S.W.3d 373 (2006).

Defendant's conviction for DWI was upheld where the trial court did not err in giving the jury an expert-witness instruction; there was a reasonable basis from which it could be said that two police officers had knowledge beyond that of ordinary knowledge, and the officers' specialized training and knowledge aided the jury in determining whether defendant was a danger. Weisenfels v. State, 102 Ark. App. 191, 283 S.W.3d 622 (2008).

Where defendant, a police officer, was charged with second-degree assault for choking an arrestee during the booking process, assuming that a special agent of the state police was qualified as an expert to testify as to the appropriate charging decision, the proffered testimony was properly excluded as it would have invaded the role of the jury as to the determination of the ultimate issue. Clark v. State, 2012 Ark. App. 496, 423 S.W.3d 122 (2012).

In an attempted capital murder case, the defendant did not preserve the issue for appeal, and, in any event, a detective did not testify regarding bullet trajectory, which usually requires expert testimony; the detective testified that the bullet that made the hole was fired from outside the closet, and no specialized training was required for a person to see the position of the sheetrock and paint around the bullet hole in the photograph. Doll v. State, 2020 Ark. App. 153, 598 S.W.3d 47 (2020).

Qualifications.

No firm rule can be derived which would serve uniformly as a means of measuring the qualifications of an expert, but too rigid a standard should be avoided, and if some reasonable basis exists from which it can be said the witness has knowledge of the subject beyond that of persons of ordinary knowledge, his evidence is admissible. Dildine v. Clark Equip. Co., 282 Ark. 130, 666 S.W.2d 692 (1984).

Where a witness possessed significant experience and training in the field of mechanical engineering in that he held a Ph.D. degree, a master's degree in machinery design, and was Chairman of the Engineering Department at Arkansas State University, was then teaching machinery design, was otherwise experienced in machinery design, and professed to have a general and working knowledge of agricultural machinery and where witness had tested machines similar to one involved in accident giving rise to products liability action, his credentials to give an expert opinion in the context of this case were beyond serious question and his testimony should have been admitted. Dildine v. Clark Equip. Co., 282 Ark. 130, 666 S.W.2d 692 (1984).

The trial court did not abuse its discretion simply because it allowed a witness to qualify for the first time as an expert, where the witness testified that he had specialized in fingerprint work for six years and that he had 80 hours of training at the FBI Academy in latent fingerprint analysis. Blair v. State, 284 Ark. 330, 681 S.W.2d 374 (1984).

The trial court, in a manslaughter prosecution arising from an automobile accident, did not err in admitting the expert testimony of a state trooper as to the speed at which the defendant's vehicle was traveling at the time of the accident where the officer testified that he had been a state trooper for 15 years and had worked many similar accidents during that period, that he had received training in investigation of accidents, and that the training coupled with his years of experience enabled him to determine how accidents occur and speeds of automobiles from skid marks and other physical evidence. Whaley v. State, 11 Ark. App. 248, 669 S.W.2d 502 (1984).

Whether a witness qualifies as an expert is a matter to be decided by the trial court, and in the absence of abuse of that discretion, the court will not reverse the trial court's decision. Beck v. State, 12 Ark. App. 341, 676 S.W.2d 740 (1984).

Where a witness testified that he had worked for the U.S. Treasury Bureau of Alcohol, Firearms and Tobacco for 13 years and that he had attended Automatic Weapons School, was qualified to use an automatic weapon, and had fired between 20 and 25 different automatic weapons, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in finding him an expert or in permitting him to testify that the weapon in question was an automatic weapon. Beck v. State, 12 Ark. App. 341, 676 S.W.2d 740 (1984).

In an action to determine the proper distribution of funds and assets among redistricted school districts, the testimony of, and an exhibit prepared by, a Department of Education employee were admissible as specialized knowledge under this rule, where the employee had many years experience in the business of fixing the value of the kind of property involved and he gave a full explanation of how he arrived at the values shown on the exhibit introduced. Koelzer v. Bagley, 13 Ark. App. 48, 680 S.W.2d 111 (1984).

A witness who worked for a heavy equipment manufacturer for six years; was service manager for the equipment for three years; performed the predelivery inspection on the piece of equipment in question; showed rental customers how to operate the equipment; drove, maintained and serviced the piece of equipment in question; and operated all similar equipment, had the knowledge, skill, experience and training and was qualified to testify as either an expert or lay witness. Dildine v. Clark Equip. Co., 285 Ark. 325, 686 S.W.2d 791 (1985).

Where the qualifications of the expert witness on the child abuse syndrome included a college degree in special education, a master's degree in school psychology, and three and a half years experience as a school counsellor during which she had been involved in 25 to 50 child abuse cases, her education and experience with respect to child abuse were greater than those of ordinary persons, and her testimony about child abuse in general was thus admissible. Poyner v. State, 288 Ark. 402, 705 S.W.2d 882 (1986).

In a medical malpractice action, the general practitioner who had treated the patient for ten years was competent to testify as to whether the patient needed an immediate CT (computerized tomography) scan, where the doctor testified that as part of his regular practice he had to decide whether or not to recommend CT scans, he explained that various neurological tests are used to determine whether there are neurological abnormalities, and he demonstrated his own knowledge of the tests. Cathey v. Williams, 290 Ark. 189, 718 S.W.2d 98 (1986).

When the particular issue relates to a question lying within the general practitioner's own area of expertise, he or she is not prohibited from testifying upon that question as an expert. Cathey v. Williams, 290 Ark. 189, 718 S.W.2d 98 (1986).

If there is a reasonable basis for saying a witness knows more of the subject at hand than a person of ordinary knowledge, his evidence is admissible. Courteau v. Dodd, 299 Ark. 380, 773 S.W.2d 436 (1989); Gregory v. State, 37 Ark. App. 135, 825 S.W.2d 269 (1992).

Where expert witness was not recognized as an expert, his technical knowledge and experience could have qualified him as an expert with specialized knowledge to assist the jury in determining a fact in issue under this rule, or as a lay witness whose opinion was helpful in the determination of a fact issue under A.R.E. Rule 701. Ferrell v. State, 305 Ark. 511, 810 S.W.2d 29 (1991).

Court erroneously granted motion precluding state from introducing evidence of officer concerning use of antenna, found on the defendant, as drug paraphernalia. Crutchfield v. State, 1991 Ark. LEXIS 670 (Ark. Oct. 14, 1991).

There was a reasonable basis for qualifying witness as an expert, as automobile mechanic and parts manager. Duncan v. State, 38 Ark. App. 47, 828 S.W.2d 847 (1992).

Trial court erred in allowing police officer to state his opinion that substance discovered in defendant's possession was cocaine, where the testimony was admitted over defendant's continuing objection that there had not been a proper foundation laid establishing the officer's qualifications in the matter. Hendrix v. State, 40 Ark. App. 52, 842 S.W.2d 443 (1992).

Expert testimony may be given by individuals qualified by experience, knowledge or training; they need not be licensed professionals. John H. Parker Constr. Co. v. Aldridge, 312 Ark. 69, 847 S.W.2d 687 (1993).

It was not necessary that the trial court state formally that the witness was qualified as an expert; that omission did not constitute error. Redman v. St. Louis S.W. Ry., 316 Ark. 636, 873 S.W.2d 542 (1994).

The trial court erred in permitting a witness certified in chiropractic roentgenology to testify as to a medical radiologist's definition of "subluxation" where there was no evidence that the witness was competent to testify on matters regarding medical radiology. Hill v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 56 Ark. App. 67, 937 S.W.2d 684 (1997).

In a medical malpractice case in which a child's delivery was complicated by a shoulder dystocia and the child was diagnosed with a permanent brachial plexus injury, the trial court properly refused to grant plaintiffs' motion in limine seeking to prohibit defendant's expert, who had delivered almost 11,000 babies and had published scientific articles that dealt with the problems of brachial plexus injury and shoulder dystocia, from testifying at trial. Regions Bank v. Hagaman, 79 Ark. App. 88, 84 S.W.3d 66 (2002).

Trial court did not err in qualifying a witness as an expert witness in electricity because the witness was a journeyman electrician, the head electrician at a plant for 18 years, and had inspected the concession trailer where a high school custodian was injured by an electrical shock; the questions surrounding the staleness of the witness's electrical experience affected the weight to be given to the testimony and not to whether the witness should have been qualified as an expert. Coca-Cola Bottling Co. v. Gill, 352 Ark. 240, 100 S.W.3d 715 (2003).

Finding in favor of the administratrix in her wrongful death action against the manufacturer of a medical device was proper where, pursuant to this rule, the opinion by her physician witness did not require him to be an expert in any field other than the one in which he was unquestionable qualified, the field of medicine; further, Ark. R. Evid. 704 permitted the physician witness to rely on information provided by others in the formulation of his opinion. Arrow Int'l v. Sparks, 81 Ark. App. 42, 98 S.W.3d 48 (2003).

In a negligence action involving a propane explosion, the propane company's owner was qualified as an expert witness because of his experience in propane delivery. Miller v. Hometown Propane Gas, Inc., 86 Ark. App. 189, 167 S.W.3d 172 (2004).

Trial court did not err in admitting plaintiff's expert's testimony where defendant never objected to the expert's qualifications but instead objected to the use of hearsay testimony in the basis of the opinion that was allowed by Ark. R. Evid. 703. Jackson v. Pitts, 93 Ark. App. 466, 220 S.W.3d 265 (2005).

Court did not abuse its discretion in allowing officers to testify as experts regarding the manufacture of methamphetamine where they both had specialized knowledge relating to methamphetamine production. Saul v. State, 365 Ark. 77, 225 S.W.3d 373 (2006).

In defendant's rape case, the court properly admitted the testimony of a sexual assault nurse because she testified that she had earned bachelor's, master's, post-master's, and doctoral degrees in nursing, that she was a college professor in the field of nursing and also taught sexual assault nurse examiner courses, and that she had performed over 2,000 sexual-abuse examinations on children. Strong v. State, 372 Ark. 404, 277 S.W.3d 159 (2008).

Where the patient alleged that a doctor and a medical center's nursing staff were negligent in connection with a fall she sustained while a patient at the medical center, the trial court did not err by denying the patient's proffered instruction that would have allowed the jury to consider the testimony of her physician expert on the standard of care for the nursing staff; the physician was never qualified as an expert on nursing. Furthermore, the patient did not appeal the circuit judge's ruling that § 16-114-206(a) controlled the admissibility of the doctor's testimony as to the standard of care for nurses rather than this rule. Nelson v. Stubblefield, 2009 Ark. 256, 308 S.W.3d 586 (2009).

Circuit court's concern that experts' opinions were based merely on their experience was not well founded because this rule recognizes that an expert's testimony could be based on experience in addition to knowledge and training; the circuit court's reservations about the quality of the witnesses' knowledge and training should go to the weight of their testimony and not to its admissibility. Tri-Eagle Enters. v. Regions Bank, 2010 Ark. App. 64, 373 S.W.3d 399 (2010).

Pursuant to this rule, in an eminent domain case, the trial court did not err in treating the landowner's appraiser as an expert when questioning him about his appraisal as he possessed specialized knowledge that would assist the trier of fact and he had knowledge, skill, or experience that would qualify him to testify in the form of an opinion. Centerpoint Energy Gas Transmission Co. v. Green, 2012 Ark. App. 326, 413 S.W.3d 867 (2012).

What a person experiences when shooting another person is a subject beyond that of ordinary knowledge, but nothing in a witness's history or law enforcement background indicated that he was qualified to testify concerning what happened in one's mind when he shoots another, and the court found no abuse of discretion on the trial court's part in excluding this testimony, for purposes of this rule. Gordon v. State, 2012 Ark. 398 (2012).

Appellant did not proffer anything to show some basis why a witness was qualified to testify as an expert on a certain issue, and the failure to proffer the testimony precluded review of the issue, and the court found no abuse of discretion and affirmed on this issue. Gordon v. State, 2012 Ark. 398 (2012).

In a termination of parental rights proceeding, a caseworker was essentially an expert witness; hence, the trial court did not err in letting the caseworker testify, based on the caseworker's experience and training, on how the parent-child bond could be affected. Campbell v. Ark. Dep't of Human Servs., 2013 Ark. App. 84, 426 S.W.3d 501 (2013).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in finding that a supervisor of the Firearm and Toolmark Section of the Arkansas State Crime Laboratory qualified as an expert witness because he had worked in the firearm-and-toolmark-examination field for 36 years and was currently the chief firearm and toolmark examiner at the Arkansas State Crime Laboratory; he had been certified by the Association of Firearm and Toolmark Examiners and had attended 21 annual training seminars between 1979 and 2012; and he could offer specialized information about the science of firearm and toolmark examinations beyond the common knowledge of the jury and had vast training and experience in the field. Northern v. State, 2015 Ark. App. 426, 467 S.W.3d 755 (2015).

In a second-degree murder case in which there was evidence that defendant had been smoking the synthetic cannabinoid K2 on the night of the shooting, a forensic pathologist's testimony did not range too far outside his area of expertise and he demonstrated knowledge beyond that of ordinary knowledge regarding the effects of K2 on a user. Thus, the pathologist was properly allowed to testify as an expert regarding the effects of K2 on someone who ingests it. Raglon v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 267, 522 S.W.3d 814 (2017).

Admitting a forensic DNA analyst's testimony pursuant to Ark. R. Evid. 702 was not an abuse of discretion where she testified extensively about her experience and training and her familiarity with the methodology of short tandem repeat of the Y chromosome (Y-STR) DNA testing. Britt v. State, 2019 Ark. App. 145, 573 S.W.3d 567 (2019).

Reversible Error.

Trial court's exclusion of the causation testimony of plaintiff's medical providers prejudiced her, as she was precluded from presenting a crucial element of her claim, that her injuries were caused by the accident for which defendant admitted liability, and reversal was required. Dundee v. Horton, 2015 Ark. App. 690, 477 S.W.3d 558 (2015).

Causation opinions of a doctor and a physician assistant qualified as expert witness testimony, as both had specialized knowledge regarding the treatment of orthopedic injuries and both were board certified, such that the trial court abused its discretion in excluding their testimony; they did not have to be experts in physics, vehicular biomechanics, engineering, or kinetics to give expert causation testimony in this motor vehicle accident case and their causation opinions did not require them to be experts in any field other than the ones in which they were unquestionably qualified. Dundee v. Horton, 2015 Ark. App. 690, 477 S.W.3d 558 (2015).

Standard of Review.

Abuse-of-discretion standard is applicable to an appeal from a trial court's ruling on the scientific validity underpinning expert opinion. Richardson v. Union Pac. R.R. Co., 2011 Ark. App. 562, 386 S.W.3d 77 (2011).

Test of Admissibility.

The general test regarding the admissibility of expert testimony is whether the jury can receive "appreciable help" from such testimony; and the balancing of the probative value of the tendered expert testimony evidence against its prejudicial effect is committed to the "broad discretion" of the trial judge and his action will not be disturbed on appeal unless manifestly erroneous. Caldwell v. State, 267 Ark. 1053, 594 S.W.2d 24 (Ct. App. 1980).

The general test for admissibility of expert testimony is whether the testimony will aid the trier of fact in understanding the evidence or in determining a fact issue; an important consideration in determining whether the testimony will aid the trier of fact is whether the situation is beyond the trier of fact's ability to understand and draw its own conclusions. Russell v. State, 289 Ark. 533, 712 S.W.2d 916 (1986); Utey v. State, 308 Ark. 622, 826 S.W.2d 268 (1992); Montgomery v. Butler, 309 Ark. 491, 834 S.W.2d 148 (1992).

Evidence was insufficient to show that testimony was improper under the standard of this rule that it assist the trier of fact to understand the evidence. Dawson v. Fulton, 294 Ark. 624, 745 S.W.2d 617 (1988).

The test for admissibility of expert testimony is whether specialized knowledge will aid the trier of fact in understanding the evidence or in determining a fact in issue. Swadley v. Krugler, 67 Ark. App. 297, 999 S.W.2d 209 (1999).

The test for admissibility of expert testimony is whether specialized knowledge would aid the trier of fact in understanding the evidence or in determining a fact in issue. Auger Timber Co. v. Jiles, 75 Ark. App. 179, 56 S.W.3d 386 (2001).

Allowing distributor's experts to testify regarding damages was not an abuse of discretion where both experts' knowledge and experience were sufficient to assist the jury in understanding the evidence and in determining the fact issues. Miller Brewing Co. v. Ed Roleson, Jr., Inc., 365 Ark. 38, 223 S.W.3d 806 (2006).

During defendant's trial for internet stalking of a child, the trial court did not err in admitting the testimony of a digital evidence analyst with the state of Arkansas Crime Laboratory as expert testimony where the analyst's testimony was based on the analyst's own experience and observation. The testimony was helpful to the trier of fact. Gikonyo v. State, 102 Ark. App. 223, 283 S.W.3d 631 (2008).

Trial court erred in a medical malpractice action in permitting a personal representative's expert to testify as to the meaning of dignity, as it was used in § 20-10-1204(a)(21); the word dignity, simply because it was part of the statute, was not complex and did not mean something different than its ordinary and usually accepted meaning in common language. Bedell v. Williams, 2012 Ark. 75, 386 S.W.3d 493 (2012).

Wills.

In a will dispute, a trial court did not abuse its discretion by refusing to allow two attorneys to testify; extrinsic evidence was not admissible because the will had been determined to be unambiguous. The fact that one of the attorneys was an expert in tax law did not mean that his testimony was admissible; the testimony should have been proffered at an earlier hearing, and the trial court could have looked up tax law on its own. Patton v. Fulmer, 2016 Ark. App. 260, 492 S.W.3d 512 (2016).

Rule 703. Basis of opinion testimony by experts.

The facts or data in the particular case upon which an expert bases an opinion or inference may be those perceived by or made known to him at or before the hearing. If of a type reasonably relied upon by experts in the particular field in forming opinions or inferences upon the subject, the facts or data need not be admissible in evidence.

CASE NOTES

In General.

The governing rule of evidence permits an expert witness to base his opinion upon, or to draw an inference from, facts or data in the particular case perceived or made known to him at or before the hearing. Campbell v. State, 265 Ark. 77, 576 S.W.2d 938 (1979).

Social worker did not qualified as a medical expert and her testimony was not admissible pursuant to Ark. R. Evid. 803(4); however, the testimony was generally admissible under this rule where the social worker was an expert witness and the children’s statements to the social worker about remarks their father made about their mother and stepfather helped form the basis of her opinion that the animosity between the parents caused the children to be stressed and that visitation exchanges should occur on neutral territory. Meins v. Meins, 93 Ark. App. 292, 218 S.W.3d 366 (2005).

Arson Detection.

The trial court did not abuse its discretion in qualifying a witness as an expert in the field of arson detection and allowing his testimony regarding the nature of the fire, where in its attempt to prove that the fire was not of accidental origin but had been intentionally set, the state called this witness who had been employed at the state fire marshal’s office from September, 1978, through September, 1979, where he stated that he had attended several training sessions at the Arkansas Fire Training Academy and had on-the-job training under the direct supervision of the state fire marshal, and where he also testified that he had not only attended classes but had taught classes on the investigation of fires. Parris v. State, 270 Ark. 269, 604 S.W.2d 582 (Ct. App. 1980).

Ballistics Evidence.

Court properly allowed an expert to testify that the crime lab was asked to determine whether the two spent cartridge cases were fired from a particular gun because the expert was cross-examined, the jury was aware that he had not performed the test firing, and he had relied on a case-numbering system regularly used by the crime lab to verify that the test cartridges had been fired from that particular gun. Martin v. State, 2013 Ark. App. 371 (2013).

Burden of Proof.

Evidence Rules 702 through 705 emphasize the function of cross-examination, with the burden being placed upon the opponent of the testimony to show that the expert's conclusion lacks adequate support and is subject to being stricken by the trial court. Collins v. Hinton, 327 Ark. 159, 937 S.W.2d 164 (1997).

Causation.

Causation opinions of a doctor and a physician assistant qualified as expert witness testimony, as both had specialized knowledge regarding the treatment of orthopedic injuries and both were both board certified, such that the trial court abused its discretion in excluding their testimony; they did not have to be experts in physics, vehicular biomechanics, engineering, or kinetics to give expert causation testimony in this motor vehicle accident case and their causation opinions did not require them to be experts in any field other than the ones in which they were unquestionably qualified. Dundee v. Horton, 2015 Ark. App. 690, 477 S.W.3d 558 (2015).

Cost of Replacement Trees.

Where witness in the landscaping and tree business was permitted to give his opinion as an expert as to the replacement cost of the trees allegedly destroyed by defendant but did not examine the site, and his values were determined on the basis of plaintiff's testimony in the case and upon information given him by plaintiff prior to his court appearance, the trial court properly allowed the witness to give his opinion on the basis of information he obtained before the trial and information he gained from the testimony of other witnesses during the trial. Bowman v. McFarlin, 1 Ark. App. 235, 615 S.W.2d 383 (1981).

Cost of Supplies.

In a suit brought by homeowners against the residential contractor to recover damages for defects in their house the court did not err in allowing the plaintiffs' expert witness to testify concerning the cost of installing copper pans to remedy drainage problems even though the expert based his opinion on the cost of the required pieces of metal on an estimate provided by a supplier. Dixon v. Ledbetter, 262 Ark. 758, 561 S.W.2d 294 (1978).

DNA Testing.

Expert testimony concerning DNA blood testing by a lab supervisor using her supervisee's report held admissible under this rule and Evid. Rule 803(8). Goff v. State, 329 Ark. 513, 953 S.W.2d 38 (1997).

Excludable Testimony.

Where documents were held to be not relevant, a witness' testimony regarding those documents was properly stricken. Bryant v. Arkansas Pub. Serv. Comm'n, 54 Ark. App. 157, 924 S.W.2d 472 (1996).

Trial court did not err by excluding the testimony of a defense expert witness because of an alleged discovery violation as defense counsel failed to properly prepare the witness's findings and give them to the state well in advance of the trial so that the state could prepare its cross-examination and any rebuttal witness; the trial court correctly noted that the witness's findings did not provide anything more than common knowledge where, in two exhibits, the witness stated that she claimed that an interviewer led the child victims with her questions and the expert failed to suggest how she would have conducted the interviews of the victims. White v. State, 367 Ark. 595, 242 S.W.3d 240 (2006), cert. denied, 550 U.S. 904, 127 S. Ct. 2114, 167 L. Ed. 2d 815 (2007).

Patient sought to introduce a statement from an expert, her urologist, which would address the suturing of the patient's bladder during a hysterectomy; the expert had passed away before the medical malpractice trial began. The trial court did not err in refusing to admit the patient's expert's affidavit because the affidavit was inadmissible hearsay, and the physician had not had an opportunity to cross-examine the expert. Crowell v. Barker, 369 Ark. 428, 255 S.W.3d 858 (2007).

Trial court's exclusion of a therapist's testimony as to a custody preference expressed by a daughter was not harmless because although the trial court erred in excluding the therapist's testimony as hearsay, it was not required to attach any weight to the testimony, and the trial court also found that the daughter was not sufficiently mature to express an opinion as to custody. Stacks v. Stacks, 2009 Ark. App. 862, 377 S.W.3d 265 (2009).

Factual Basis.

The relative weakness or strength of the factual underpinning of the expert's opinion goes to the weight and credibility, rather than admissibility. Arkansas State Hwy. Comm'n v. Schell, 13 Ark. App. 293, 683 S.W.2d 618 (1985); Carter v. Saint Vincent Infirmary, 15 Ark. App. 169, 690 S.W.2d 741 (1985); Killian v. Hill, 32 Ark. App. 25, 795 S.W.2d 369 (1990); Duncan v. State, 38 Ark. App. 47, 828 S.W.2d 847 (1992).

Expert must be allowed to disclose to the trier of fact the basic facts on which his opinion is based; otherwise the opinion is left unsupported and trier of fact is left with little means of evaluating its correctness. Arkansas State Hwy. Comm'n v. Schell, 13 Ark. App. 293, 683 S.W.2d 618 (1985); Carter v. Saint Vincent Infirmary, 15 Ark. App. 169, 690 S.W.2d 741 (1985); Morris v. State, 21 Ark. App. 228, 731 S.W.2d 230 (1987).

Expert may base his opinion upon facts learned from others, even though those facts are themselves hearsay. Morris v. State, 21 Ark. App. 228, 731 S.W.2d 230 (1987).

Where the testimony shows a questionable basis for the opinion of the expert, the issue becomes one of credibility for the fact finder, rather than a question of law. Killian v. Hill, 32 Ark. App. 25, 795 S.W.2d 369 (1990).

Even though the court refused to allow expert witness to refer to an interview with defendant regarding coercive influence of interrogation, defendant did not show that he was prejudiced by the court's ruling where the expert was allowed to identify all other matters on which he based his opinion, and where witness testified that he had formed a preliminary opinion regarding the coercive nature of the interrogation based on the materials available to him which included his having interviewed defendant. Misskelley v. State, 323 Ark. 449, 915 S.W.2d 702 (1996).

Evidence adduced at trial and by deposition that (1) a short in a field shed receptacle was not by itself the cause of an electrical shock injury to a high school custodian when the custodian opened a concession trailer window, which trailer was plugged into the shed receptacle, and (2) the trailer should have been grounded with a metal rod, gave an expert witness a sufficient basis of data upon which the witness was able to construct an expert opinion; the witness read the depositions, studied relevant photographs, personally observed the cord connected to the trailer and saw the trailer four months after the accident, all of which caused the court to conclude that the witness's testimony was competent. Coca-Cola Bottling Co. v. Gill, 352 Ark. 240, 100 S.W.3d 715 (2003).

Court properly allowed testimony regarding defendant's other acts because the testimony of the State's experts revealing the other bad acts committed by defendant was offered to support the opinions reached by the State's experts by apprising the jury of the factual basis underlying the diagnosis of antisocial personality disorder. Lard v. State, 2014 Ark. 1, 431 S.W.3d 249, cert. denied, 574 U.S. 836, 135 S. Ct. 76, 190 L. Ed. 2d 67 (2014).

Hearsay as Basis.

When an expert's testimony is based on hearsay, the lack of personal knowledge on the part of the expert does not mandate the exclusion of the opinion but, rather presents a jury question as to the weight which should be assigned the opinion. Arkansas State Hwy. Comm'n v. Schell, 13 Ark. App. 293, 683 S.W.2d 618 (1985);

Bowen v. State, 322 Ark. 483, 911 S.W.2d 555 (1995), cert. denied, 517 U.S. 1226, 116 S. Ct. 1861, 134 L. Ed. 2d 960 (1996).

An expert may base his opinion on facts learned from others despite their being hearsay. Carter v. Saint Vincent Infirmary, 15 Ark. App. 169, 690 S.W.2d 741 (1985).

This rule is not intended to give an expert witness license to merely repeat hearsay for the sake of bringing such information before the fact finder; rather, it is to enable the expert to make certain assumptions for the purpose of arriving at an opinion within the witness's area of expertise. Sims v. Safeway Trails, Inc., 297 Ark. 588, 764 S.W.2d 427 (1989).

Statements of an expert were not inadmissible as based on hearsay, where he had read similar information in trade magazines relied upon by persons skilled or having responsibility in his field, and there was no indication that trade magazines subscribed to by persons in a particular trade were less than reliable. Duncan v. State, 38 Ark. App. 47, 828 S.W.2d 847 (1992).

Although it is true that this rule is not intended to give an expert witness license to merely repeat hearsay for the sake of bringing such information before the fact-finder, an expert must be allowed to disclose to the trier of fact the factual basis for his opinion because the opinion would otherwise be left unsupported, and the trier of fact would be left with little if any means of evaluating its correctness. Lawhon v. Ayres Corp., 67 Ark. App. 66, 992 S.W.2d 162 (1999).

Trial court did not err in admitting plaintiff's expert's testimony where defendant never objected to the expert's qualifications but instead objected to the use of hearsay testimony in the basis of the opinion that was allowed by this rule. Jackson v. Pitts, 93 Ark. App. 466, 220 S.W.3d 265 (2005).

Expert's testimony as to a capital murder defendant's previous acts of violence based on hearsay was properly allowed because the doctor stated that having such background information was critical in rendering a forensic evaluation because it indicated any behavioral patterns and any actions taken in the past. This was permissible under this rule. Miller v. State, 2010 Ark. 1, 362 S.W.3d 264 (2010).

Hypothetical.

Questions calling for the opinion of an expert witness are not necessarily subject to objection because they are not in the hypothetical. Bowman v. McFarlin, 1 Ark. App. 235, 615 S.W.2d 383 (1981).

Licensed Pharmacist.

In a prosecution for obtaining a controlled substance with a fraudulent prescription, the testimony of licensed pharmacist who filled the prescription was authorized by this rule. Armstrong v. State, 5 Ark. App. 96, 633 S.W.2d 51 (1982).

Medical Diagnosis.

Although defendant argued that physician's opinion as to the cause or aggravation of plaintiff's knee injury was based entirely on plaintiff's statement, and that such a statement was hearsay and not included as an exception to the hearsay rule found in Evid. Rule 803(4) because it was made to the doctor after litigation had begun and was, therefore, self-serving, there is no provision in Evid. Rule 803(4) that prohibits statements given after litigation has begun; also, the statement was admissible under this rule. Collins v. Hinton, 327 Ark. 159, 937 S.W.2d 164 (1997).

In a rape case, testimony from two doctors that a tear to a child's vaginal wall was consistent with an intentional injury caused by penetration by a blunt force object was not subject to the Daubert standard as it was based on experience and observation, not anything novel; moreover, even though the testimony touched on the ultimate issue, it was allowable because it did not mandate a legal conclusion. Turbyfill v. State, 92 Ark. App. 145, 211 S.W.3d 557 (2005).

Circuit court did not err in allowing defendant to paraphrase letters from two of plaintiff's doctors regarding plaintiff's 1999 injuries, which had been excluded from evidence as hearsay, because the defendant used the prior opinions of the doctors to test the reliability of plaintiff's current doctor; the use of the records during cross-examination allowed defense counsel to show that the symptoms on which plaintiff's doctor based his opinions had existed prior to the 2001 accident. House v. Volunteer Transp., Inc., 365 Ark. 11, 223 S.W.3d 798 (2006).

During defendant's trial for the rape of a nine-year-old girl, the trial court did not err in allowing an examining physician to testify that the victim tested positive for chlamydia because the physician's testimony was based upon a lab report containing data reasonably relied upon by physicians. Kelley v. State, 375 Ark. 483, 292 S.W.3d 297 (2009).

Novel Scientific Evidence.

The traditional standard for determining the admissibility of novel scientific evidence requires a showing that the scientific principle or discovery had been generally accepted in the particular field to which it relates. Middleton v. State, 29 Ark. App. 83, 780 S.W.2d 581 (1989).

Photographs.

Trial court did not err in allowing expert in accident reconstruction to testify using photographs. Clark v. State, 26 Ark. App. 268, 764 S.W.2d 458 (1989).

Presence in Court.

This rule implies that the particular expert witness will be present in court to hear the evidence. Martin v. State, 22 Ark. App. 126, 736 S.W.2d 287 (1987).

Purpose.

The very purpose of this rule is to allow the courts to follow the same practice as do experts themselves in forming their opinions, illustrated, for example, by allowing a physician to base his diagnosis on reports from other medical sources; moreover, when an expert's testimony is based on hearsay, the lack of personal knowledge on the part of the expert does not mandate the exclusion of the testimony, but rather presents a jury question as to the weight of the testimony. Scott v. State, 318 Ark. 747, 888 S.W.2d 628 (1994).

In a capital murder case, the trial court did not err in allowing the testimony of a medical examiner from the state crime laboratory who relied upon an autopsy report prepared by another medical examiner as this type of testimony was in line with the purpose of this rule; defendant was able to cross-examine the state's expert and there was nothing to indicate that defendant's right to confront the witnesses against him was violated, nor that the testimony of the state's expert was hearsay. Sauerwin v. State, 363 Ark. 324, 214 S.W.3d 266 (2005).

Real Estate Appraisal.

Appraiser, as expert witness, properly used several appraisals of a property, done by other appraisers, to determine its market value. City of Ft. Smith v. Findlay, 48 Ark. App. 197, 893 S.W.2d 358 (1995).

Repair Costs.

In a breach of contract case, a trial court did not abuse its discretion by allowing an expert to testify under Ark. R. Evid. 702 about repair costs, even though the factors set forth in Daubert v. Merrell Dow Pharmaceuticals, Inc., 509 U.S. 579, 113 S. Ct. 2786, 125 L. Ed. 2d 469 (1993), were not used; the trial court performed its role as a gatekeeper where it took reasonable measures to evaluate the reliability and relevance of testimony before allowing it. A ruling that the expert reasonably relied on information from a sales representative was implicit in the trial court's ruling. Derry Berri-gan & Co. v. KBS Leasing, Inc., 2013 Ark. App. 196 (2013).

Sobriety Tests.

Officer's testimony was insufficient to establish that gaze nystagmus testing is reliable and generally accepted in the scientific community. Middleton v. State, 29 Ark. App. 83, 780 S.W.2d 581 (1989).

Rule 704. Opinion on ultimate issue.

Testimony in the form of an opinion or inference otherwise admissible is not objectionable because it embraces an ultimate issue to be decided by the trier of fact.

CASE NOTESIn General.

This rule applies regardless of whether the witness is lay or expert. Mathis v. State, 267 Ark. 904, 591 S.W.2d 679 (Ct. App. 1979), overruled, Rogers v. State, 10 Ark. App. 19, 660 S.W.2d 949 (1983).

Finding in favor of the administratrix in her wrongful death action against the manufacturer of a medical device was proper where, pursuant to Ark. R. Evid. 702, the opinion by her physician witness did not require him to be an expert in any field other than the one in which he was unquestionable qualified, the field of medicine; further, this rule permitted the physician witness to rely on information provided by others in the formulation of his opinion. Arrow Int'l v. Sparks, 81 Ark. App. 42, 98 S.W.3d 48 (2003).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion by refusing to allow lay opinion testimony by an eyewitness that the shooting by defendant was accidental; all of the witness's testimony up to the conclusion was admitted and the trial court's reasoning that the jury could reach its own conclusion was rational and not arbitrary or groundless. Simpson v. State, 119 S.W.3d 83 (Ark. Ct. App. 2003).

Burden of Proof.

Evidence Rules 702 through 705 emphasize the function of cross-examination, with the burden being placed upon the opponent of the testimony to show that the expert's conclusion lacks adequate support and is subject to being stricken by the trial court. Collins v. Hinton, 327 Ark. 159, 937 S.W.2d 164 (1997).

Causation.

Causation opinions of a doctor and a physician assistant qualified as expert witness testimony, as both had specialized knowledge regarding the treatment of orthopedic injuries and both were both board certified, such that the trial court abused its discretion in excluding their testimony; they did not have to be experts in physics, vehicular biomechanics, engineering, or kinetics to give expert causation testimony in this motor vehicle accident case and their causation opinions did not require them to be experts in any field other than the ones in which they were unquestionably qualified. Dundee v. Horton, 2015 Ark. App. 690, 477 S.W.3d 558 (2015).

Guilt of Defendant.

Where the witness, a former sheriff, in effect, stated after he had made his own investigation of the allegations in the indictment and information, had concluded they were true, the only logical conclusion to be reached from this testimony was that the witness believed defendant was guilty. Patterson v. State, 267 Ark. 436, 591 S.W.2d 356 (1979), cert. denied, 447 U.S. 923, 100 S. Ct. 3014, 65 L. Ed. 2d 1115 (1980).

In a personal injury action arising out of the drilling of a well, a trial court did not err in excluding the well driller's employee's statement that the accident was "our fault" under this rule, because the statement went beyond embracing the underlying issue and mandated a legal conclusion. W.E. Pender & Sons, Inc. v. Lee, 2010 Ark. 52, 370 S.W.3d 163 (2010).

Identification.

Witnesses had ample contact with defendant to be able to make an identification to develop opinions based on their perceptions and the trial court did not abuse its discretion in permitting them to relay their opinions to the jury.

Nooner v. State, 322 Ark. 87, 907 S.W.2d 677 (1995), cert. denied, 517 U.S. 1143, 116 S. Ct. 1436, 134 L. Ed. 2d 558 (1996).

Intent.

Expert testimony on the ability of a defendant to form specific intent to murder is not admissible under this rule. Stewart v. State, 316 Ark. 153, 870 S.W.2d 752 (1994); DeGracia v. State, 321 Ark. 530, 906 S.W.2d 278 (1995).

Opinion in Technical Field.

Testimony of Detective.

In a case in which a jury convicted defendant of rape and aggravated assault on a family or household member, the circuit court did not abuse its discretion by admitting a detective's opinion testimony on the cause of the victim's bruise. The detective's testimony about a bruise depicted in photographs that she took of the victim only hours after the attack was rationally based on her perception of the victim's appearance at that time and did not mandate a legal conclusion. Pitman v. State, 2021 Ark. App. 80, 618 S.W.3d 205 (2021).

To permit an expert to state an opinion in a technical field, which the trial court feels may be of assistance to the jury, is not an invasion of province of jury, merely because the opinion has relation to some ultimate fact on which the verdict of the jury may depend. United States Borax & Chem. Co. v. Blackhawk Warehousing & Leasing Co., 266 Ark. 831, 586 S.W.2d 248 (Ct. App. 1979).

Testimony of a law professor which informed the jury of the basic remedies available for the breaches of an installment sales contract and lease agreement was acceptable where the trial court specifically ruled that the professor could not couch his testimony in terms of any opinion comparing the remedies under the lease with the normal remedies for an installment sale. Sutton v. Ryder Truck Rental, Inc., 305 Ark. 231, 807 S.W.2d 905 (1991).

It was within the discretion of the court to allow the state to present testimony of 2 experienced narcotics officers concerning the delivery and sale of methamphetamine generally and the significance of the way in which the drugs seized from the defendant were packaged since the testimony did not mandate a legal conclusion and did not tell the jury what to do. Marts v. State, 332 Ark. 628, 968 S.W.2d 41 (1998).

Ultimate Issue.

It was not intended that all opinions would be admissible under this rule; the line must be drawn between opinion testimony that merely embraces the ultimate issue and opinion testimony that tells the jury which result to reach. Gramling v. Jennings, 274 Ark. 346, 625 S.W.2d 463 (1981).

Where both the defendant doctor in a malpractice suit and his expert witness testified that it was their opinion that the doctor had not acted negligently in severing the plaintiff's ureter, such opinion testimony constituted bald statements of an opinion as to the ultimate issue in the case and were inadmissible under this rule. Gramling v. Jennings, 274 Ark. 346, 625 S.W.2d 463 (1981).

The use of the word "embraces" as a word of limitation in this rule suggests that opinion testimony which simply tells the jury what to do is not permitted; however, it also means that opinion testimony should not be rejected simply because it touches upon the ultimate issue, as expert testimony does frequently. Gramling v. Jennings, 274 Ark. 346, 625 S.W.2d 463 (1981).

This rule does not allow an expert to give an opinion on an ultimate fact issue, but rather it merely states that testimony in the form of an opinion "otherwise admissible" is not objectionable because it embraces an ultimate issue; accordingly, in a manslaughter prosecution where the question for the jury was whether the defendant driver caused the policeman's death by a gross deviation from the standard of care that a reasonable person would have observed in the same situation, the trial court erred when it allowed a state police investigator to testify that in his opinion the death could have been prevented if the defendant had been alert and practicing reasonable safety. Ethridge v. State, 9 Ark. App. 111, 654 S.W.2d 595 (1983).

The unmistakable trend of authority is not to exclude opinion testimony because it amounts to an opinion on the ultimate issue; while the opinion testimony of a police officer who testified that defendant was intoxicated embraced the ultimate issue, it did not mandate a legal conclusion, and there was no error in its admission. Long v. State, 284 Ark. 21, 680 S.W.2d 686 (1984).

In a prosecution for rape, the physician who examined the victim was properly allowed to testify that the victim's history and examination were consistent with intercourse with an adult or a 14-year-old, depending on the maturity of the male, even though the defense was that the victim's 14-year-old half-brother had had sexual intercourse with the victim; the opinion given by the physician was not the ultimate issue to be decided, that being whether the defendant was guilty. Jennings v. State, 289 Ark. 39, 709 S.W.2d 69 (1986).

Opinion of expert that child had been sexually abused was not objectionable on basis that it was an opinion on the ultimate issue, but it was nonetheless inadmissible where based only on the child's testimony. Johnson v. State, 292 Ark. 632, 732 S.W.2d 817 (1987).

It was not error to allow police to testify that confessions were voluntary. Fairchild v. Lockhart, 675 F. Supp. 469 (E.D. Ark. 1987), aff'd, 857 F.2d 1204 (8th Cir. 1988).

Where physician's testimony in a rape case embraced the ultimate issue of forced sex, but did not mandate a legal conclusion because the testimony did not exclude other causes for the victim's injuries, it was not inadmissible opinion testimony on the ultimate issue. Davlin v. State, 320 Ark. 624, 899 S.W.2d 451 (1995).

In the prosecution of the defendant for the murder of her two year old son, who died as the result of being burned when he was dipped in hot water, it was not error for the court to allow a doctor to state his opinion that the manner of death was homicide since, by so testifying, the doctor did no more than offer an opinion that the child's life was ended by the act of another person. Brown v. State, 66 Ark. App. 215, 991 S.W.2d 137 (1999).

Testimony by one of the state's witnesses should have been excluded where the witness, while a bona fide expert on domestic abuse, exceeded her expertise by profiling batterers who would kill and by conveying to the jury that the defendant fell within that profile. Brunson v. State, 349 Ark. 300, 79 S.W.3d 304 (2002).

Testimony from a police officer, who had specialized training in DWI arrests, that the officer believed a defendant was intoxicated was admissible at defendant's DWI trial because the jury was specifically instructed that it was not bound to accept an expert opinion as conclusive and although the testimony embraced an ultimate issue, the testimony did not mandate a legal conclusion. Clay v. State, 2009 Ark. App. 740, 361 S.W.3d 286 (2009).

Denial of the class member's motion to strike in an action against cellular providers was inappropriate, in part because expert testimony focused on one provider's damages and how other costs might increase if the early termination fees were invalidated; thus, the expert's opinion was concerned with the underlying merits of the case and it was improper to consider the underlying merits at the class-certification stage of proceedings. Moreover, the expert opinion contained conclusions that invaded the role of the circuit court. Rosenow v. Alltel Corp., 2010 Ark. 26, 358 S.W.3d 879 (2010).

Circuit court abused its discretion by applying too rigid a standard in excluding the testimony of a company's experts because the expert witnesses possessed greater-than-ordinary knowledge of floor-plan lending and banking in general and could have assisted a fact-finder in interpreting the ambiguous interest-rate clause, both witnesses were veteran bankers with practical experience in commercial lending and floor-plan financing, and they were no strangers to Arkansas banking practices; although neither witness professed to be an expert in contract interpretation, that did not disqualify their testimony, and because they had superior knowledge to offer the jury, gained from their experience in the commercial banking industry, it remained the jury's prerogative to interpret the contract, with the aid of the experts. Tri-Eagle Enters. v. Regions Bank, 2010 Ark. App. 64, 373 S.W.3d 399 (2010).

Where defendant, a police officer, was charged with second-degree assault for choking an arrestee during the booking process, assuming that a special agent of the state police was qualified as an expert to testify as to the appropriate charging decision, the proffered testimony was properly excluded as it would have invaded the role of the jury as to the determination of the ultimate issue. Clark v. State, 2012 Ark. App. 496, 423 S.W.3d 122 (2012).

In a case involving the revocation of suspended impositions of sentence, counsel was allowed to withdraw because there was no merit to an appeal of an adverse ruling based on the rules concerning lay testimony and testimony on the ultimate issue; the Arkansas Rules of Evidence did not apply in revocation proceedings. Even if the Rules did apply, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by permitting a witness to opine as to whether defendant resembled a man in a photograph on a memory card found in a stolen truck; such opinion testimony was not objectionable merely because it embraced an ultimate issue to be decided by the trier of fact, and there was no prejudice. Humphrey v. State, 2015 Ark. App. 179, 458 S.W.3d 265 (2015).

Defendant's conviction for raping a nine-year-old girl was proper because a doctor's testimony that her findings were consistent with sexual assault was properly admitted; there were physical findings to support the doctor's opinion and opinion testimony that was otherwise admissible was not objectionable if it embraced an ultimate issue to be decided by the trier of fact. Cox v. State, 2015 Ark. App. 462 (2015).

Circuit court did not abuse its discretion in admitting an officer's opinion testimony that defendant was the aggressor where the officer arrived immediately after the incident, observed the scene and parties, and took statements from defendant. Stockstill v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 29, 511 S.W.3d 889 (2017).

Circuit court erred when it permitted a state trooper to give his opinion that the driver was not wearing her seat belt at the time of the accident; the trooper's opinion failed to meet Ark. R. Evid. 701(1), as it was based only on a firefighter's hearsay report that the driver was found outside the vehicle when emergency services arrived and the trooper admitted that he did not examine the seat belt or observe the types and locations of the driver's injuries. Cantrell v. Toyota Motor Corp., 2018 Ark. App. 335, 553 S.W.3d 157 (2018).

Workers' Compensation Proceeding.

Where in a workers' compensation proceeding the opinion of the treating physician, that the claimant was permanently and totally disabled and that an arm injury was the final factor in creating the total disability, was received without objection and the factors upon which the opinion was predicated were detailed, such opinion was not objectionable because it went beyond functional impairment nor because it embraced an ultimate issue to be decided by the commission. Revere Copper & Brass, Inc. v. Birdsong, 267 Ark. 922, 593 S.W.2d 54 (Ct. App. 1979).

Rule 705. Disclosure of facts or data underlying expert opinion.

The expert may testify in terms of opinion or inference and give his reasons therefor without prior disclosure of the underlying facts or data, unless the court requires otherwise. The expert may in any event be required to disclose the underlying facts or data on cross-examination.

CASE NOTES

Based on Hearsay.

When an expert's testimony is based on hearsay, the lack of personal knowledge on the part of the expert does not mandate the exclusion of the opinion but, rather presents a jury question as to the weight which should be assigned the opinion. Arkansas State Hwy. Comm'n v. Schell, 13 Ark. App. 293, 683 S.W.2d 618 (1985).

Exclusion.

Circuit court did not abuse its discretion in excluding a doctor's deposition testimony because a driver was unable to conduct a thorough cross-examination of the doctor with regard to her expert opinion, and, consequently, the jury did not have an opportunity to fully evaluate the basis for the doctor's expert opinion. Razorback Cab of Fort Smith, Inc. v. Amon, 2016 Ark. App. 352, 498 S.W.3d 346 (2016).

Support.

Evidence Rules 702 through 705 emphasize the function of cross-examination, with the burden being placed upon the opponent of the testimony to show that the expert's conclusion lacks adequate support and is subject to being stricken by the trial court. Collins v. Hinton, 327 Ark. 159, 937 S.W.2d 164 (1997).

Rule 706. Court appointed experts.

(a) Appointment. The court, on motion of any party or its own motion, may enter an order to show cause why expert witnesses should not be appointed, and may request the parties to submit nominations. The court may appoint any expert witnesses of its own selection. An expert witness shall not be appointed by the court unless he consents to act. A witness so appointed shall be informed of his duties by the court in writing, a copy of which shall be filed with the clerk, or at a conference in which the parties shall have opportunity to participate. A witness so appointed shall advise the parties of his findings, if any; his deposition may be taken by any party; and he may be called to testify by the court or any party. He shall be subject to cross-examination by each party, including a party calling him as a witness.

(b) Compensation. Expert witnesses so appointed are entitled to reasonable compensation in whatever sum the court may allow. The compensation thus fixed is payable from funds which may be provided by law in criminal cases and civil actions and proceedings involving just compensation for the taking of property. In other civil actions and proceedings the compensation shall be paid by the parties in such proportion and at such time as the court directs, and thereafter charged in like manner as other costs.

(c) Disclosure of Appointment. In the exercise of its discretion, the court may authorize disclosure to the jury of the fact that the court appointed the expert witness.

(d) Parties' Experts of Own Selection. Nothing in this rule limits the parties in calling expert witnesses of their own selection.

CASE NOTES

Applicability.

This rule is not applicable where there is no indication that a report or recommendation was prepared at the direction of the trial court. Trammell v. Isom, 25 Ark. App. 76, 753 S.W.2d 281 (1988).

Appointment Proper.

Where, although the trial judge did not specifically state the basis for his suspicion that will was forged, it appeared from the report of the expert that such suspicion had a reasonable basis since the trial judge had before him the proffered will and numerous known specimens of the deceased's signature and handwriting and, during the trial, the judge freely exercised his prerogative to interrogate the witnesses, the trial judge did not abuse his discretion in exercising his right under this rule to appoint a handwriting expert to examine the will. Wilson v. Kemp, 7 Ark. App. 44, 644 S.W.2d 306 (1982).

CASE NOTES

In General.

That hearsay is objectionable, does not necessarily mean that it is incompetent; absent an objection, hearsay, if relevant, is competent and entitled to consideration by the trial court and by a reviewing court in support of its findings. Wilson v. Kemp, 7 Ark. App. 44, 644 S.W.2d 306 (1982).

A statement is not hearsay when the statement is offered not for its truth but merely to show the fact of the assertion. Owens v. State, 318 Ark. 61, 883 S.W.2d 471 (1994).

Admission by Party-Opponent.

In a murder case, the circuit court did not abuse its discretion by admitting electronic messages because they were sufficiently authenticated under Ark. R. Evid. 901(b)(4) on the basis of their content when considered in conjunction with the circumstantial evidence presented to corroborate defendant's identity as the sender. Defendant's emails were not hearsay, because a statement made by a defendant and offered against him at trial constitutes an admission of a party opponent under Ark. R. Evid. 801(d)(2)(i). Crockett v. State, 2021 Ark. App. 422, 634 S.W.3d 821 (2021).

In a personal injury action arising from an accident involving the plaintiff's son and an employee of defendant employer, a statement made by another employee as to whether the employee involved in the accident was within the scope of his employment did not constitute an admission that could be introduced by the plaintiff because the defendant employer never denied the facts contained in the statement. Ashmore v. Ford, 267 Ark. 854, 591 S.W.2d 666 (Ct. App. 1979), limited, Druckemiller v. Cluff, 316 Ark. 517, 873 S.W.2d 526 (1994).

This rule insures the trustworthiness and reliability of the admission of a party-opponent by providing that such statements are admissible only if made during the existence of the agency or employment relationship since an employee is unlikely to jeopardize his job by making false statements which are costly to his employer. Houston Gen. Ins. Co. v. Arkansas La. Gas Co., 267 Ark. 544, 592 S.W.2d 445 (1980).

Where an employee of the defendant gas company allegedly made several statements to the plaintiff's insured, prior to an explosion and fire in an alley which damaged the insured's property, that there was "one helluva leak in that alley" and that he was "checking for a gas leak," the trial court erred in refusing to admit the statements on the ground they were hearsay, since the proffer was sufficient to establish that the statements were made during the existence of the employment relationship and related to a matter within the scope of the employment, and therefore should have been admitted as an admission of a party-opponent. Houston Gen. Ins. Co. v. Arkansas La. Gas Co., 267 Ark. 544, 592 S.W.2d 445 (1980).

Where the plaintiff, who was struck by a cabinet that fell from its display in a store, returned to the store the following day with her husband and an in-store security guard questioned them about the circumstances surrounding the accident and told the husband that the cabinet display was unsafe, the security guard had the apparent authority to investigate the accident since the store subsequently ratified his investigation by paying the plaintiff's medical bills; and, therefore, the statements made by the security guard to the plaintiff's husband concerning the guard's investigation of the accident were admissible under subdivision (d)(2)(iv) of this rule in an action brought against the store. Fleming v. Wal-Mart, Inc., 268 Ark. 559, 595 S.W.2d 241 (Ct. App. 1980).

Testimony of creditor's employee as to managing partner's directions for application of partnership funds to his personal account was not hearsay, where partner was agent of partnership, statement was made while agency existed, and statement was against the interest of the other partner. Inmon v. Southwest Auto Supply, Inc., 268 Ark. 1140, 599 S.W.2d 420 (Ct. App. 1980).

In case involving conversion of escrow funds by bank president, where defendant president also acted as real estate broker in purchase of farm financed by his bank, the testimony of purchasers, without objection, that they had never agreed to the real estate commission and that defendant had disclaimed any interest in a commission prior to closing the sale of the farm, was not hearsay, since defendant was a party-opponent in the action and the statement attributed to him was clearly admissible as an admission under this rule, and further, even if he had not been a party-opponent, defendant's statement would be permitted as a statement which at the time it was made was contrary to defendant's pecuniary or proprietary interest and thus an exception to the hearsay rule under subdivision (b)(3) of Rule 804. First Nat'l Bank v. Nash, 2 Ark. App. 135, 617 S.W.2d 24 (1981).

Where landowner testified that railroad claims agent told him that it was less expensive to settle landowners' claims than to prevent fires from starting by mowing rights-of-way, such statements were not hearsay but fell within the definition of an admission of a party opponent under subdivision (d)(2)(iv) of this rule. Missouri Pac. R.R. v. Arkansas Sheriff's Boys' Ranch, 280 Ark. 53, 655 S.W.2d 389 (1983).

The statement made by the defendant, which was overheard by the policemen through the body mike, to a confidential informant, who was not made available for trial, was an admission of a party-opponent under subdivision (d)(2) of this rule; therefore, the statement was admissible. Russell v. State, 18 Ark. App. 45, 709 S.W.2d 825 (1986).

The statements of the president of a corporation made in reference to business of the corporation that he was authorized to manage, were admissible against the corporation. American Pioneer Life Ins. Co. v. Allender, 18 Ark. App. 234, 713 S.W.2d 249 (1986).

The statements by the employee which were signed by him and furnished to the employment security agency in the course of applying for unemployment compensation were clearly admissible, even in a court of law, as admissions by a party. Haynes v. Director of Labor, 19 Ark. App. 71, 719 S.W.2d 437 (1986).

Statement was hearsay and not an admission by a party-opponent. Dean v. State, 293 Ark. 75, 732 S.W.2d 855 (1987).

Statements made during the recorded conversation were properly admitted into evidence as admissions of a party opponent under subdivision (d)(2) of this rule. Mock v. State, 20 Ark. App. 72, 723 S.W.2d 844 (1987).

If the defendant takes the stand, a statement given to the police is not admissible under subdivision (d)(1) of this rule but is admissible under subdivision (d)(2)(i) as an admission by a party-opponent. Edwards v. State, 315 Ark. 126, 864 S.W.2d 866 (1993).

Statement held admissible as an admission of a party-opponent. Bowen v. State, 322 Ark. 483, 911 S.W.2d 555 (1995), cert. denied, 517 U.S. 1226, 116 S. Ct. 1861, 134 L. Ed. 2d 960 (1996).

Statements by a decedent indicating that decedent's spouse would be the sole beneficiary of certain annuities were admissible, in suit by decedent's heir, under subdivision (d)(2) of this rule as statements against the interest of decedent's estate. Easterling v. Weedman, 54 Ark. App. 22, 922 S.W.2d 735 (1996).

Statement by nurse taking a court-ordered blood sample from defendant, that defendant commented on how painless the procedure was and that he would like for her to be the one to give his lethal injection, found to be an admission under subdivision (d)(2) of this rule; it was up to the jury to decide whether the statement was made seriously, indicating some guilty knowledge of the homicides, or as a joke. Webb v. State, 327 Ark. 51, 938 S.W.2d 806 (1997).

Where the patient brought a medical negligence suit against a doctor and a medical center, the trial court did not err by permitting defendants to admit at trial the video-deposition testimony of the patient as an admission against a party opponent under subdivision (d)(2) of this rule. Nelson v. Stubblefield, 2009 Ark. 256, 308 S.W.3d 586 (2009).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting computer printouts of defendant's internet conversations with an alleged 14 year old, who was really an undercover officer, into evidence during defendant's trial for internet stalking of a child because defendant's statements were not hearsay under subdivision (d)(2) of this rule. Dirickson v. State, 104 Ark. App. 273, 291 S.W.3d 198 (2009).

In a termination of parental rights matter, a caseworker's testimony that the mother was asked to leave rehabilitation was admissible where the caseworker obtained the information from the mother herself; the testimony fell within the hearsay exception in Ark. R. Evid. 801(d)(2) for statements by a party-opponent. Cheney v. Ark. Dep't of Human Servs., 2012 Ark. App. 209, 396 S.W.3d 272 (2012).

In a first-degree-forgery case, the admission of the translator's statement to the officer wherein appellant identified herself by her real name was proper as an admission by a party opponent under subdivision (d)(2) of this rule because the translation was attributable to appellant as her own admission, and as the translation did not prejudice appellant as she identified herself by her real name when she signed her name on the Miranda waiver-of-rights form. Barron-Gonzalez v. State, 2013 Ark. App. 120, 426 S.W.3d 508 (2013).

In a case where defendant was convicted of one count of sexual indecency with a child, the trial court did not err in permitting the victim, defendant's younger stepdaughter, to testify to the general content of messages and the stories that defendant sent to the victim about a sexual relationship between a stepfather and stepdaughter because, given that defendant admitted having sent one story to the victim, that explicit story constituted an admission of a party opponent, which was not hearsay. Campbell v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 59, 512 S.W.3d 663 (2017).

Adoptive Admission.

The sole question in determining whether statements made by another person are admissible against a party as an admission by silence or acquiescence is whether a reasonable person, under the circumstances, would naturally have been expected to deny them, if the statements were untrue. Thomas v. State, 10 Ark. App. 294, 663 S.W.2d 745 (1984).

Before hearsay evidence of an adoptive admission can fit within the exception of subdivision (d)(2)(ii) of this rule, it must have been shown that the accused heard the statement, that he understood it, and that he failed to deny it. Thomas v. State, 10 Ark. App. 294, 663 S.W.2d 745 (1984).

Where, in a prosecution for the theft of cigarettes valued at more than $100, the testimony indicated that the defendant was present, and was standing within four feet of a person when that person said that the defendant had cigarettes for sale, and the defendant failed to object to the statement or otherwise deny that he was attempting to sell the cigarettes, adequate foundational facts were presented so as to render the statement admissible as an adoptive admission under subdivision (d)(2)(ii) of this rule. Thomas v. State, 10 Ark. App. 294, 663 S.W.2d 745 (1984).

Before admitting certain evidence as an adoptive admission pursuant to subdivision (d)(2)(ii) of this rule, a trial court must find that sufficient foundational facts have been introduced so that the jury can reasonably infer that the accused heard and understood the statement and the statement was such that, under the circumstances, if the accused did not concur in the statement, he would normally respond. Once such a foundation has been established, the question is left to the jury to determine whether the accused acquiesced in the statement. Morris v. State, 302 Ark. 532, 792 S.W.2d 288 (1990); United S. Assurance Co. v. Beard, 320 Ark. 115, 894 S.W.2d 948 (1995).

Where victim told defendant's parents, while defendant was present, that defendant had "put his pee pee in her pee pee," and defendant responded by saying, "Mother, do you know what you are doing to me?" he had not adopted victim's statement as his own nor had he believed in its truth; therefore, the trial court erred in admitting parents' hearsay testimonies. United S. Assurance Co. v. Beard, 320 Ark. 115, 894 S.W.2d 948 (1995).

The utterer of words which have been adopted as an admission by the defendant, pursuant to this rule, is subject to impeachment under Rule 806. Lewis v. Gubanski, 50 Ark. App. 255, 905 S.W.2d 847 (1995).

Testimony by a witness that he was told by a third party that the defendant was involved in a robbery and shot the victim was properly introduced where such statement was made in the defendant's presence, but he did not deny the truthfulness of the statement. Box v. State, 74 Ark. App. 82, 45 S.W.3d 415 (2001), aff'd in part, rev'd, 348 Ark. 116, 71 S.W.3d 552 (2002).

Basis for Determination.

Where the defendant argued that his conversation with a confidential informant was hearsay, the fact that the confidential informant did not testify at trial did not have any effect on the characterization of these statements. Russell v. State, 18 Ark. App. 45, 709 S.W.2d 825 (1986).

Statements that would be inadmissible if offered for the truth of the matter asserted in the statement are admissible when offered to show the basis of an officer's action. Bragg v. State, 328 Ark. 613, 946 S.W.2d 654 (1997).

Judgment for hog farmer was reversed and dismissed where hog farmer relied on inadmissible hearsay evidence to prove that a hog food producer caused a hog purchaser to reject a hog shipment, causing hog farmer's damages; there was no direct evidence on the issue, only an inadmissible hearsay memo and conversation. Archer-Daniels-Midland Co. v. Beadles Enters., 92 Ark. App. 462, 215 S.W.3d 675 (2005), superseded, 367 Ark. 1, 238 S.W.3d 79 (2006).

Coconspirator's Statements.

Codefendant's text message to his girlfriend was made in furtherance of the conspiracy, and therefore the trial court did not err by admitting it into evidence, because it was sent the night the victim went missing and the conspiracy between defendant and the codefendant had not yet concluded when the codefendant sent the text as defendant moved the victim's vehicle after the text was sent and the victim's body had not yet been found. Smith v. State, 2022 Ark. 95 (2022).

Where the actual sales of heroin were made by the defendant's accomplice, the accomplice's statements made during the transactions were admissible as statements of a coconspirator. Foxworth v. State, 263 Ark. 549, 566 S.W.2d 151 (1978).

Where the witness was being tied up by the defendant during a store robbery when she observed an unidentified woman who came into the store, reached over the counter and took the money out of the cash register, the evidence strongly implicated the unidentified woman as a coconspirator and therefore the witness was properly allowed to testify about the unidentified woman's actions. Jackson v. State, 267 Ark. 891, 591 S.W.2d 685 (Ct. App. 1979).

There need not be a conspiracy count in the defendant's indictment to make the provisions of subdivision (d)(2)(v) of this rule applicable, and it is irrelevant whether the state uses the word "conspire" or not in the indictment; a coconspirator's statements are admissible where the conspiracy is not contained in the indictment but is proved at the trial through independent evidence. Smithey v. State, 269 Ark. 538, 602 S.W.2d 676 (1980).

Where an individual had no knowledge that two other persons were police officers, and he willingly participated in the scheme to sell marijuana to defendants, assisting in introducing the officers to the defendants and in maintaining communications between them, he came within the definition of a coconspirator, and therefore his statements were an exception to the hearsay rule. Sweat v. State, 5 Ark. App. 284, 635 S.W.2d 296 (1982).

Admissions and statements of a codefendant are admissible as against the other defendant even in the absence of a conspiracy charge where there is independent evidence of a concert of action, and the rule is not confined to those who are codefendants at the same trial; accordingly, where, without considering any statement or admission of coconspirator, there was evidence that defendant asked third person to take him and coconspirator to cash a check, that they rode together to store where coconspirator tried to cash a check made out to a woman who testified she never received the check and never signed it, and that, when the clerk in the store became suspicious, the defendant and coconspirator left together, statement by coconspirator was supported by other evidence establishing conspiracy. Williams v. State, 7 Ark. App. 151, 645 S.W.2d 697 (1983).

Coconspirator's statements that the defendant had "put her up" to cashing forged check, although made to store manager during course of conspiracy, could not help further the attempt to cash the check, divide the proceeds, conceal the crime, help the escape, or enlist the store manager in the conspiracy and, accordingly, was not made in furtherance of the conspiracy and was not admissible. Williams v. State, 7 Ark. App. 151, 645 S.W.2d 697 (1983).

The absence of a conspiracy charge has no bearing on the competency of a coconspirator's testimony. Spears v. State, 280 Ark. 577, 660 S.W.2d 913 (1983).

Testimony concerning statements by coconspirators about their activities after completion of a burglary and armed robbery were admissible since neither coconspirator implicated the other so that the statements were admissions and since the conspiracy was not complete at the time the statements were made in that the stolen goods had not yet been sold nor the proceeds distributed. Spears v. State, 280 Ark. 577, 660 S.W.2d 913 (1983).

A coconspirator's testimony that the defendant had told him that he wished to extend an existing operation involving the purchase and sale of stolen goods as long as it was profitable, and to establish a similar one in another county after defendant was elected sheriff were admissions against penal interest by defendant as to his participation in the acts complained of in the charge and intent to continue them and were admissible under subdivision (d)(2)(i) of this rule. Woodward v. State, 16 Ark. App. 18, 696 S.W.2d 759 (1985).

Subdivision (d)(2) of this rule provides that a declaration is not hearsay if made by a coconspirator of a party during the course and in furtherance of the conspiracy and the taped statements fall clearly within that exception. Mock v. State, 20 Ark. App. 117, 725 S.W.2d 1 (1987).

Coconspirator's statements made to police officers and recorded on tape were clearly within the scope of this rule, where they were made during the course of criminal conduct, which occurred within a brief interval in time, and they were designed to further the specific objective of such conduct, i.e., a purchase by police officers of some 15 rocks of crack cocaine and by his statements the coconspirator was both promoting the product of his confederate and abetting a completion of the sale. Dixon v. State, 310 Ark. 460, 839 S.W.2d 173 (1992).

Trial court's finding that statements made by coconspirator to his wife were "in furtherance of a conspiracy" was erroneous, and wife's testimony was therefore inadmissible against defendant as hearsay. Leach v. State, 38 Ark. App. 117, 831 S.W.2d 615 (1992), aff'd, 311 Ark. 485, 845 S.W.2d 11 (1993).

Defendant's Sixth Amendment rights were not violated when the court allowed the state to play undercover tapes containing statements by a go-between without calling the go-between as a witness; because the taped out-of-court statement is that of a coconspirator, it is not hearsay. Pyle v. State, 314 Ark. 165, 862 S.W.2d 823 (1993), cert. denied, 510 U.S. 1197, 114 S. Ct. 1306, 127 L. Ed. 2d 657 (1994).

Where an actual criminal act is performed by an alleged accomplice, the accomplice's statements made during the transactions are admissible as a statement of a coconspirator. Pyle v. State, 314 Ark. 165, 862 S.W.2d 823 (1993), cert. denied, 510 U.S. 1197, 114 S. Ct. 1306, 127 L. Ed. 2d 657 (1994).

Because statements by a coconspirator derive exemption from the hearsay rule under the definition of "admission by a party opponent," they must in effect be vicarious admissions. Pyle v. State, 314 Ark. 165, 862 S.W.2d 823 (1993), cert. denied, 510 U.S. 1197, 114 S. Ct. 1306, 127 L. Ed. 2d 657 (1994).

A coconspirator's testimony can be deemed competent even without a criminal charge, but the alleged coconspirator must be connected to the conspiracy by evidence independent of the statement. Pyle v. State, 314 Ark. 165, 862 S.W.2d 823 (1993), cert. denied, 510 U.S. 1197, 114 S. Ct. 1306, 127 L. Ed. 2d 657 (1994).

Statements by a coconspirator are not hearsay, if made during the course of and in furtherance of a conspiracy; moreover, subdivision (d)(2)(v) of this rule applies when a conspiracy is proved at trial by evidence independent of the statement regardless of whether the declarant is charged as a conspirator. Henderson v. State, 329 Ark. 526, 953 S.W.2d 26 (1997).

Statements were admissible as evidence both of the furtherance of a conspiracy and probative of defendant's existing state of mind which the state contended was an intent to commit robbery. Haire v. State, 340 Ark. 11, 8 S.W.3d 468 (2000).

In a prosecution for murder, there was prima facie evidence of a conspiracy between the defendant and a deceased coemployee, to murder the defendant's husband; therefore, the court properly allowed the introduction into evidence of statements made by the coemployee to his wife and son that they would receive some money as payment for his role as a hit man. Dyer v. State, 343 Ark. 422, 36 S.W.3d 724 (2001).

A witness's testimony of what the shooter told him defendant said failed to meet the requirements of subdivision (d)(2)(v) of this rule as the testimony was not a statement of a coconspirator of the party; however, defendant failed to show he was prejudiced by the inadmissible testimony where there was overwhelming evidence that defendant was doing precisely what the hearsay evidence was offered to prove. Cook v. State, 350 Ark. 398, 86 S.W.3d 916 (2002).

Trial court properly admitted that portion of a written statement in which a witness told police that defendant admitted being involved in a robbery because the statement qualified as a recorded recollection under Ark. R. Evid. 803(5) where the witness told police that the statement was true at the time it was made and an officer testified that the statement was accurately recorded; it was, however, error to admit that portion of the written statement in which a third party implicated both himself and defendant in the robbery because the statement was not made in furtherance of the conspiracy, as required by subdivision (d)(2)(v) of this rule, and was not a statement against the declarant's interest within the meaning of Ark. R. Evid. 804(b)(3). Lawrence v. State, 81 Ark. App. 390, 104 S.W.3d 393 (2003).

Pursuant to subdivision (d)(2)(v) of this rule, the co-conspirator's recitation of another co-conspirator's statements explaining the robbery plan would not be hearsay if the co-conspirator was a co-conspirator of defendant and if the co-conspirator made these statements during the course and in furtherance of the conspiracy; overwhelming evidence supported the conclusion that defendant conspired with the others, and the statements made by the co-conspirator to which another testified were clearly offered against defendant and were made during the course and in furtherance of that conspiracy. Moore v. State, 372 Ark. 579, 279 S.W.3d 69 (2008).

In an aggravated robbery and capital murder case, the circuit court did not err by admitting a witness's statement to another person about the crime because the witness was a coconspirator; thus, her statements were not hearsay pursuant to subdivision (d)(2)(v) of this rule. Ventry v. State, 2009 Ark. 300, 318 S.W.3d 576 (2009), cert. denied, 559 U.S. 949, 130 S. Ct. 1531, 176 L. Ed. 2d 130 (2010).

Trial court did not err in allowing a witness's testimony regarding statements made by defendant's brother, as there was sufficient evidence of a conspiracy between defendant and his brother, including evidence that the brothers carried out the robbery and murder exactly as they described to the witness. Perry v. State, 2014 Ark. 406 (2014).

Construction.

The requirement of authentication in Ark. R. Evid. 901 is separate from the requirement that a hearsay document must satisfy an applicable hearsay exception for admissibility. Columbia Mut. Ins. Co. v. Patterson, 320 Ark. 584, 899 S.W.2d 61, 904 S.W.2d 218 (1995).

It is evident that each subdivision in subdivision (d)(2) of this rule, connected by the conjunction "or," is an alternative way of demonstrating statements that are admissible as admissions by party opponents. Webb v. State, 327 Ark. 51, 938 S.W.2d 806 (1997).

Inmate who was convicted of murder argued that he received ineffective assistance of counsel in that counsel failed to impeach testimony by his stepmother on account of bias; however, although the court agreed with defendant that Ark. R. Evid. 806 did not have to be read in conjunction with subdivision (d)(2) of this rule, the argument failed because defendant did not present evidence that the stepmother was, in fact, angry or biased. Johnson v. State, 356 Ark. 534, 157 S.W.3d 151, cert. denied, 543 U.S. 932, 125 S. Ct. 326, 160 L. Ed. 2d 235 (2004).

Deposition.

Once one party has used part of a deposition at trial, an opposing party may introduce any other parts regardless of that declarant's availability, subject, of course, to the rules of evidence. Ouachita Mining & Exploration, Inc. v. Wigley, 318 Ark. 750, 887 S.W.2d 526 (1994).

Evidence of Bias.

Where the defendant wished to show that an undercover policeman had attempted to recruit him as an informer, promising to get all charges dismissed if he agreed, but vowing to see that he went to prison if he did not, it was reversible error to exclude it, as this testimony had a bearing on possible bias, but it was necessary that the officer first deny his bias. Goodwin v. State, 263 Ark. 856, 568 S.W.2d 3 (1978).

Exact Quotation Unnecessary.

It is not permissible for a witness to relate information he obtained from someone else rather than by his own observation, and counsel cannot avoid the rule by asking a witness for the substance of an out-of-court statement by someone else rather than for an exact quotation. Morrison v. Lowe, 267 Ark. 361, 590 S.W.2d 299 (Ct. App. 1979).

Extrajudicial Identification.

Where neither court nor prosecutor could remember any agreement made with the defense at a suppression hearing not to allow the prosecution to mention a line-up identification of defendant unless it was first mentioned by the defense, the victim was, under subdivision (d)(1) of this rule, properly allowed to testify on direct examination that she had previously identified the defendant and could relate where and when such identification took place; thus, it was not error to allow the prosecuting attorney to offer original testimony by the victim that she had made extrajudicial identification of the defendant. Conley v. State, 272 Ark. 33, 612 S.W.2d 722 (1981).

Where there is no defect in the identification procedure used, and where each of the persons making the extrajudicial identification is present at the trial and subject to cross-examination, recall or subject to being called as a hostile witness by the defense, then a witness to the extrajudicial identification may testify as to the existence and circumstances of the extrajudicial identification; accordingly, where police officer testified at trial that two weeks after the crime he had shown a six-photograph lineup to five bank tellers and that each had picked defendant as the person who passed forged checks, such testimony as to extrajudicial identifications was proper under subdivision (d)(1)(iii) of this rule even where the tellers themselves could have testified as to their identification. Martin v. State, 272 Ark. 376, 614 S.W.2d 512 (1981).

Under subdivision (d)(1)(iii) of this rule, a police officer can properly testify as to the existence and circumstances of an extrajudicial identification by witnesses if there is no defect in the identification procedure used, and if the person making the extrajudicial identification is present at trial and subject to cross-examination, recall, or is subject to being called as a hostile witness by the defense. Hilton v. State, 278 Ark. 259, 644 S.W.2d 932 (1983).

Fabrication of Evidence.

The principle that testimony rebutting an implied charge of recent fabrication is not hearsay applies when there is a charge that the witness has fabricated a statement he is now making under oath and permits a showing that the same statement was made before there was a motive for fabrication, but where the statement sought to be admitted as rebuttal was made when the motive for fabrication already existed, the statement was self-serving hearsay and not admissible. Brown v. State, 262 Ark. 298, 556 S.W.2d 418 (1977).

A party's attempt to fabricate evidence is admissible, not merely as an admission under subdivision (d)(2) of this rule but as proof relevant to show his own belief that his case is weak. Kellensworth v. State, 276 Ark. 127, 633 S.W.2d 21 (1982).

Testimony of a rebuttal witness called by the state, that at an earlier trial of the same case, which ended in a mistrial, he had appeared as a defense witness and had given a false alibi for the defendant, that the defendant had asked him to tell the story, that they had made it up together, and that he had lied to help a friend, the witness' testimony was not inadmissible as improperly putting defendant's character in issue or as constituting proof of a specific instance of misconduct, but was clearly admissible. Kellensworth v. State, 276 Ark. 127, 633 S.W.2d 21 (1982).

Ordinarily, evidence of prior consistent statements is not admissible to bolster credibility because it is hearsay; however, subdivision (d)(1)(ii) of this rule provides an exception to that rule where there has been a charge of recent fabrication or improper influence. Todd v. State, 283 Ark. 492, 678 S.W.2d 345 (1984); Terrell v. State, 26 Ark. App. 8, 759 S.W.2d 46 (1988).

Statement by parole officer to the defendant that he could not possess a firearm while on parole fits within the definition of hearsay under subsection (c) of this rule; the "matter asserted" was that he had been told that he could not possess a firearm while on parole. Fisher v. State, 290 Ark. 490, 720 S.W.2d 900 (1986).

An out of court statement is not hearsay if it is offered to show the basis of action. Dandridge v. State, 292 Ark. 40, 727 S.W.2d 851 (1987).

Statements not offered to prove the truth of the matters asserted, but rather offered to put into context and explain defendant's statement, were not hearsay as defined in subsection (c) of this rule. Mock v. State, 20 Ark. App. 72, 723 S.W.2d 844 (1987).

Pursuant to subdivision (d)(1)(ii) of this rule, when there is an express or implied charge that a witness has fabricated a statement that he is making under oath during a trial, it is proper, and not hearsay, to show that he made the same statement before the motive for fabrication came into existence. Henderson v. State, 311 Ark. 398, 844 S.W.2d 360 (1993).

When there is an express or implied charge that a witness has fabricated a statement that he is now making under oath, it is then proper, and not hearsay, to show that he made the same statement before the motive for fabrication came into existence; for this rule to apply, the prior consistent statement must be made before a motive to falsify has arisen or before the witness would forsee its effect upon the fact issue. Beavers v. State, 345 Ark. 291, 46 S.W.3d 532 (2001).

Grand-Jury Testimony.

Accomplice's grand-jury testimony did not violate the Confrontation Clause of the Sixth Amendment of the United States Constitution because it was given under oath and was subject to the penalty of perjury at another proceeding and, because the accomplice was subject to cross-examination at defendant's trial, the testimony did not qualify as hearsay under subdivision (d)(1) of this rule. Jackson v. State, 359 Ark. 297, 197 S.W.3d 468 (2004), cert. denied, 544 U.S. 1039, 125 S. Ct. 2266, 161 L. Ed. 2d 1070 (2005).

Harmless Error.

Defendant's conviction for capital-felony murder was appropriate because the supreme court did not need to decide whether testimony was hearsay because any error in its admission was harmless under subsection (c) of this rule. The availability of a declarant for cross-examination rendered harmless any error caused by the admission of hearsay. Dixon v. State, 2011 Ark. 450, 385 S.W.3d 164 (2011).

Even if testimony was hearsay and did not qualify as a hearsay exception, the appellate court did not have to decide whether the statements were hearsay, as any error in the admission of the statements was harmless; the declarant testified on behalf of the defense and was cross-examined by the State of Arkansas regarding the very statements which the declarant made to which a witness testified. B.J. v. State, 2015 Ark. App. 310, 462 S.W.3d 709 (2015).

Although a trial court erred in a dependent-neglect case by allowing hearsay evidence in the form of a counselor's report, prejudice was not presumed. There was other evidence introduced to show that two children had improved while in the custody of their father; therefore, any error committed by the trial court in referencing the counselor's letter was harmless. Cogburn v. Arkansas Dep't of Human Servs., 2015 Ark. App. 271, 461 S.W.3d 380 (2015).

Identification Testimony.

In a prosecution for robbery six years after the event, where the only evidence linking the defendant to the crime was the store manager's identification of the defendant at a line up, the manager's testimony by way of video taped deposition due to his being stationed at a distant military post was not hearsay, and was sufficient to support a conviction. Davis v. State, 284 Ark. 557, 683 S.W.2d 926 (1985).

Police officer's testimony, that witness identified defendant, was admissible under subdivision (d)(1)(iii) of this rule. Jacobs v. State, 316 Ark. 698, 875 S.W.2d 52 (1994).

Detective's identification of defendant in a photo array was admissible, because it was not hearsay offered for the truth of the matter asserted, but was offered to show the reason for furthering the investigation of defendant. Keister v. State, 2011 Ark. App. 71 (2011).

Interrogatories.

Answers to interrogatories may qualify as admissions by a party-opponent which are not hearsay, as defined, and therefore may constitute substantive evidence and be admissible in a party's case-in-chief; if an objection to such answers is raised on foundational or other grounds, it then becomes a matter for the trial court's discretion. Piercy v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc., 311 Ark. 424, 844 S.W.2d 337 (1993).

In a fraud case, the circuit court did not err by admitting a party's responses to interrogatories into evidence because they qualified as admissions by a party-opponent; they constituted substantive evidence and were admissible during the case-in-chief. Archer-Daniels-Midland Co. v. Beadles Enters., 367 Ark. 1, 238 S.W.3d 79 (2006).

Medical Records.

While it could be inferred that police officer was basing his opinion regarding a party's injury in part on hospital medical records, his statement was not one made by other than the declarant, and was admissible. Piercefield v. State, 316 Ark. 128, 871 S.W.2d 348 (1994).

Nonverbal Conduct.

Parole officer's silence on the question of whether the defendant could lawfully possess a firearm after the completion of his parole was a "statement" only if it was nonverbal conduct intended as an assertion under subdivision (a)(2) of this rule. Fisher v. State, 290 Ark. 490, 720 S.W.2d 900 (1986).

Objections.

Where the same evidence was introduced by another witness without objection, it was properly before the jury for consideration, and subsequent hearsay testimony about the evidence by a police officer constituted harmless error. Hopes v. State, 306 Ark. 492, 816 S.W.2d 167 (1991).

In a negligence action involving a propane explosion, the exclusion of evidence that the homeowner had left messages on the propane company's answering machine before the explosion was not error; although the messages were not hearsay because they were offered only to show that the propane company had notice of a possible problem, the homeowner's counsel failed to object to their exclusion on that ground and made a state of mind objection, under Ark. R. Evid. 803(3), which lacked merit. Miller v. Hometown Propane Gas, Inc., 86 Ark. App. 189, 167 S.W.3d 172 (2004).

It was not an abuse of discretion to deny defendant's motion to exclude a detective's testimony about the businesses defendant called after the robbery and murder, where the detective testified that particular phone numbers on defendant's phone record belonged to certain businesses, because defendant objected on hearsay grounds but failed to challenge the source of the detective's knowledge about the businesses. Finley v. State, 2019 Ark. 336, 587 S.W.3d 223 (2019).

Other Proceeding.

Where state at manslaughter trial sought to introduce a prior inconsistent statement by a witness, given under oath to the deputy prosecuting attorney, such statement was admissible for its substantive content and a limiting instruction was not required since it was given to the prosecuting attorney as provided in § 16-43-212, in an official proceeding as defined by § 5-53-101, and the witness was subject to perjury penalties under § 5-53-102; thus, it met all of the requirements for an "other proceeding" under subdivision (d)(1)(i) of this rule. Slavens v. State, 1 Ark. App. 245, 614 S.W.2d 529 (1981).

Physical Objects.

The hearsay rule has no application to physical objects; it applies to out-of-court statements only. Redman v. State, 265 Ark. 774, 580 S.W.2d 945 (1979).

In a criminal case, a witness may testify concerning tangible objects which are involved without producing the articles, and this is not a violation of the best evidence rule, which applies only to writings, photographs and recordings, nor does it violate the hearsay rule. Johnson v. State, 289 Ark. 589, 715 S.W.2d 441 (1986).

In a check forgery case, a store employee who accepted a forged check was permitted to testify, over hearsay objections, that he recognized appellant from a yearbook picture; because the yearbook was a physical object and not a statement, it was not subject to the hearsay rule. Taylor v. State, 88 Ark. App. 269, 197 S.W.3d 31 (2004).

Prior Statement of Witness.

Where a witness had made a written statement at the request of the prosecuting attorney two or three days before the trial, and this statement was introduced into evidence and copies furnished to the jury, the statement was hearsay since the state offered it for the purpose of proving the guilt or innocence of defendant. Patterson v. State, 267 Ark. 436, 591 S.W.2d 356 (1979), cert. denied, 447 U.S. 923, 100 S. Ct. 3014, 65 L. Ed. 2d 1115 (1980).

Where in a worker's compensation action the only evidence, that the trip on a motorcycle driven by the employee with the employer's son as a rider was business-connected, was the testimony of an attorney and the deceased employee's brother as to prior statements made by the employer's son, to the effect that the son had told the attorney that he had asked the employee to take him to a certain destination to look at some cattle for his father's slaughterhouse operations, their testimony was not inadmissible as hearsay since the statements by the son fall within the definition of a prior statement by a witness as set forth in subdivision (d)(1)(i) of this rule. Hawthorne v. Davis, 268 Ark. 131, 594 S.W.2d 844 (1980).

Where witness claimed not to recollect defendant's participation in crime, he became unavailable, and thus his prior inconsistent statement was admissible as substantive evidence for the state; nevertheless, the witness was entitled to an opportunity to explain or deny his former statement and it was an abuse of the trial court's discretion to refuse the defendant the right to make a proffer of testimony during the in-chambers hearing. David v. State, 269 Ark. 498, 601 S.W.2d 864 (1980).

For a prior consistent statement to be admissible under the exception of subdivision (d)(1)(ii) of this rule, the statement must predate the motive to fabricate and where any improper motive attributable to witness in murder trial would likely flow from her close relationship with the decedent which predated her prior written statement as well as her testimony under oath at trial, the statement would be no more trustworthy than her in-court testimony and was not admissible. George v. State, 270 Ark. 335, 604 S.W.2d 940 (1980).

Where defendant's sister had made detailed statements to sheriff investigating murder case but only acknowledged principal one and did not sign any of them, then at trial professed not to remember what she had told the sheriff, the state properly used the statements since they were admissible under Rule 613 to impeach the sister, despite her asserted lack of memory, and such statements were admissible as substantive evidence under subdivision (d)(1) of this rule even though the prior statement was not under oath. Chisum v. State, 273 Ark. 1, 616 S.W.2d 728 (1981).

Unsworn out-of-court pretrial statements made by a witness in a criminal case could not be a part of the proof in the criminal prosecution because they were hearsay and expressly excluded as substantive evidence under subdivision (d)(1)(i) of this rule. Roberts v. State, 278 Ark. 550, 648 S.W.2d 44 (1983).

The trial court, in a prosecution for capital murder, erred when it allowed the prosecution to read a witness' prior written statement to the jury over the objection of the defense, where the prior statement was not given under oath or subject to the penalty of perjury and was therefore inadmissible hearsay and where it was manifest from the record that the statement was read to the jury, not for purposes of impeachment, but as substantive evidence to prove the truth of the matters asserted in it. Smith v. State, 279 Ark. 68, 648 S.W.2d 490 (1983).

Where accomplice had twice denied under oath that she had heard any noises indicating police mistreatment of defendant during interrogation, but defense counsel wanted her to state her denial a third time before the jury so that he could show by a defense investigator that she had made a contrary unsworn statement to him, the court properly denied request to call accomplice for limited testimony; the inconsistent out-of-court statement was not admissible as substantive evidence in a criminal case, because it was not under oath, nor was it admissible for impeachment, because counsel did not want accomplice to give any testimony except the bare denial so her credibility would not have been in issue. Allen v. State, 281 Ark. 1, 660 S.W.2d 922 (1983).

Where two defendants were jointly charged with burglary and aggravated robbery but were tried separately, trial court did not abuse its discretion in permitting the use of prior testimony of first defendant in trial of second defendant, where first defendant refused to testify at second trial professing he was unable to remember second defendant's part in the crime and thus his testimony was inconsistent, and where first defendant was subject to cross-examination at second trial. Jones v. State, 283 Ark. 308, 675 S.W.2d 825 (1984).

In a prosecution for capital murder where, in order to impeach testimony of police officer, defendant called witness who testified that officer had previously made a different statement and then sought to introduce a prior consistent statement by such witness, since such statement met neither of the criteria set out in subdivision (d)(1) of this rule and was cumulative of the oral testimony, trial court did not err in refusing its admission. McDaniel v. State, 283 Ark. 352, 676 S.W.2d 732 (1984).

In civil cases subdivision (d)(1) of this rule effectively allows all prior inconsistent statements to be introduced as substantive evidence in addition to any impeachment value they may have. Flynn v. McIlroy Bank & Trust Co., 287 Ark. 190, 697 S.W.2d 114 (1985).

Confession could be admitted as a prior statement under subdivision (d)(1) of this rule. Spears v. State Farm Fire & Cas. Ins., 291 Ark. 465, 725 S.W.2d 835 (1987).

While there was no basis for admitting the statements in transcript of plea hearing in another county under URE 803, the evidence would come in substantively under subdivision (d)(1) of this rule as an admission. McDaniel v. State, 291 Ark. 596, 726 S.W.2d 679 (1987).

Where codefendant was a witness for the defense, it is reasonable to assume that counsel was aware that he had pleaded guilty in the case, and it was not improper for the state to inquire as to whether the codefendant had made a prior statement inconsistent with his testimony pursuant to subdivision (d)(1)(i) of this rule. Howard v. State, 291 Ark. 633, 727 S.W.2d 830 (1987).

Out-of-court statement, though notarized, does not meet the requirements of subdivision (d)(1)(i) of this rule that it must be subject to the penalty of perjury. Accordingly, the statement would not be admissible at trial as substantive evidence. Ford v. State, 296 Ark. 8, 753 S.W.2d 258 (1988).

The theory underlying subdivision (d)(1)(ii) of this rule is that evidence which counteracts a suggestion that the witness has changed his story in response to some threat, scheme, bribe, or other motive for fabrication, by showing that his story was the same prior to the external pressure being applied, is highly relevant in shedding light on the witness's credibility at trial. Pennington v. State, 24 Ark. App. 70, 749 S.W.2d 680 (1988).

The exception under subdivision (d)(1)(ii) of this rule had no application where the victim had the same motive for fabrication when she made the allegation as she had when she testified in the case. Cole v. State, 307 Ark. 41, 818 S.W.2d 573 (1991).

Although the witness's statement in question was signed, it was not given under oath and subject to the penalty of perjury, therefore, it was hearsay and inadmissible as substantive evidence. Harris v. State, 36 Ark. App. 120, 819 S.W.2d 30 (1991).

Where unavailable witnesses' statements during a phone conversation were inconsistent with his deposition testimony, and he was subject to cross-examination about these statements at the deposition, there was error in the substantive admission of witnesses' prior statements under subdivision (d)(1) of this rule, when utilized at trial pursuant to Ark. R. Civ. P. 32. Truck Ctr. of Tulsa, Inc. v. Autrey, 310 Ark. 260, 836 S.W.2d 359 (1992).

Because defense counsel cast doubt on the veracity of victim's allegations against defendant and since victim was subject to cross-examination concerning the statement at trial, the trial judge correctly ruled that the prosecutor could ask witness about victim's prior consistent statement. Cooper v. State, 317 Ark. 485, 879 S.W.2d 405 (1994).

Where defense counsel made every attempt to show state witness's trial testimony was inconsistent with his earlier statements, fairness dictated that the prosecutor be allowed to explore this area of inquiry to clarify any confusion or misapprehension that may have lingered in the jury's mind from defense counsel's examination; thus, it was proper to allow into evidence a transcribed, pretrial statement by such witness. Frazier v. State, 323 Ark. 350, 915 S.W.2d 691 (1996).

In prosecution for rape, victim's prior inconsistent statements were not admissible for purposes of impeachment since the victim admitted making them, and the statements were not admissible as substantive evidence because they were not made under oath as required by this rule. Hinzman v. State, 53 Ark. App. 256, 922 S.W.2d 725 (1996).

A prior consistent statement by a robbery and kidnapping victim was properly introduced into evidence in order to rehabilitate her testimony after defense counsel questioned the victim about whether her prior statement was inconsistent with her testimony. Harris v. State, 339 Ark. 35, 2 S.W.3d 768 (1999).

Where defendant, on cross-examination, had questioned the witness about the witness's felony record in order to imply that the witness had recently fabricated his denial that defendant shot the decedent in self-defense, the state was certainly entitled, under subdivision (d)(1)(ii) of this rule, to rebut the allegation with evidence that the witness had made the same statement about the shooting being in "cold blood" immediately after the offense and before the motive for fabrication came into existence. Anderson v. State, 354 Ark. 102, 118 S.W.3d 574 (2003).

Because counsel failed to object on hearsay grounds to the use of the written police report as substantive evidence of guilt, the issue was waived on appeal, but in any event, given the substantial evidence to support defendant's conviction for assault on a family member, there was not a meritorious argument to be made. Nelson v. State, 84 Ark. App. 373, 141 S.W.3d 900 (2004).

Although defendant argued that a witness's two prior statements should not have been read into the evidence, because defendant had made an allegation of recent fabrication in relation to those prior statements, the entire prior statements were properly read into evidence pursuant to subdivision (d)(1)(ii) of this rule. Hudson v. State, 85 Ark. App. 85, 146 S.W.3d 380 (2004).

During defendant's rape trial, the court properly refused to allow defendant to cross-examine a witness, who was allegedly raped by defendant in a prior incident, using a police case summary because the proffered statement made by the witness did not fall within the hearsay exception of subsection (d) of this rule; the statement that defendant had threatened the witness during the incident was made by a police detective, not the witness. Fells v. State, 362 Ark. 77, 207 S.W.3d 498 (2005).

Defendant's first-degree murder conviction was overturned and the case was remanded for a new trial where a witness's prior inconsistent statement, taken by a detective, was not taken during an "official proceeding" contemplated by subdivision (d)(1)(i) of this rule; hence, the statement was improperly admitted during defendant's trial. Stephens v. State, 98 Ark. App. 196, 254 S.W.3d 1 (2007).

Trial court did abuse its discretion in admitting a victim's prior consistent testimony so that the state could clarify any confusion or misapprehension that could have lingered in the jury's mind because defense counsel repeatedly attempted to show that the victim's current trial testimony was inconsistent with her earlier statements given during defendant's federal trial. Winkle v. State, 374 Ark. 128, 286 S.W.3d 147 (2008).

When defendant sought a writ of certiorari after a trial court denied defendant's motion to continue defendant's trial in a death penalty case, defendant's argument that direct testimony by defense witnesses and cross-examination of State witnesses in a first trial, which might be flawed by lack of information or a full understanding of the case, could be admissible in a retrial under subdivision (d)(1) of this rule, failed because this concern applied to every criminal case reversed on appeal and remanded for retrial. Pedraza v. Circuit Court of Drew County, 2013 Ark. 116, 426 S.W.3d 441 (2013).

Victim's prior inconsistent statement was properly admitted because it was not offered to prove the truth of the matter asserted, that the victim was being made to lie. Rather, it was offered as impeachment evidence—to contradict the victim's previous testimony on cross-examination that she never said that to her mother and to attempt to lessen her credibility. Scamardo v. State, 2013 Ark. 163, 426 S.W.3d 900 (2013).

In a felon in possession of a firearm case in which defendant's now wife gave a pretrial statement to law enforcement that defendant had been shot in the face, and that he had a large black gun with him and put it on the couch, even assuming, without deciding, that the audio and transcript of the prior statement of the wife was impermissible hearsay, the trial court did not err in admitting that evidence because it was merely cumulative to the wife's testimony presented to the jury without objection; and defendant could not show that he was prejudiced by the admission of that evidence, as the mere fact that the evidence was cumulative was not a basis for holding that its admission, otherwise proper, constituted an abuse of discretion. Washington v. State, 2019 Ark. App. 224, 575 S.W.3d 626 (2019).

Proper Exclusion.

Where a party denied at trial the basic facts upon which statements contained in a letter were made, the letter was properly excluded as hearsay. Duke v. Lovell, 262 Ark. 290, 556 S.W.2d 416 (1977).

Where, in will contest, it was stipulated that the testatrix was fully competent, but it was alleged that the principal beneficiary exerted undue influence over the testatrix, the testatrix' statement that "my will isn't the way I want it, but it is the only way (the principal beneficiary) will have it" could only be offered to prove the truth of the matter asserted rather than merely to show that the statement was made, and thus was excluded as hearsay under this rule. Gautney v. Rapley, 2 Ark. App. 116, 617 S.W.2d 377 (1981).

Where testimony was obviously an attempt to prove the truth of the matter asserted, it was error for the court to allow this hearsay testimony. Missouri Pac. R.R. v. Mackey, 297 Ark. 137, 760 S.W.2d 59 (1988), cert. denied, 490 U.S. 1067, 109 S. Ct. 2067, 104 L. Ed. 2d 632 (1989).

Reviewing court overruled defendant's assertion that the trial court erred in excluding the letter which his mother sought to read for him at the sentencing hearing, because defendant sought to have his mother read his words for him, which was classic hearsay and fell well within the definition set in the Arkansas Rules of Evidence; defendant refused to take the stand and read his own letter. Perry v. State, 371 Ark. 170, 264 S.W.3d 498 (2007), overruled as stated in Holian v. State, 2013 Ark. 7 (2013).

Proper Inclusion.

In an action to recover for personal injuries, the testimony of an orthopedic specialist that he had been notified by a reviewing committee of the state medical society that his charges were three times the maximum charge of the average orthopedist was relevant to the credibility of the specialist's assertion that his bill for treatment of the plaintiff was reasonable. Hubbard v. Sharpe, 261 Ark. 829, 552 S.W.2d 21 (1977).

In the prosecution of a food store employee for theft, the testimony of the store supervisor concerning statements made to him by a customer who claimed she had paid defendant for certain groceries, was not hearsay since the out-of-court statements the supervisor testified the customer made to him were not offered to prove the truth of the statements. Williams v. State, 270 Ark. 513, 606 S.W.2d 75 (Ct. App. 1980).

In a hearing to determine whether exigent circumstances existed which would validate a warrantless and nonconsensual entry into the defendant's home to make a routine arrest, testimony by a police officer about the information he relied upon to justify the warrantless arrest and seizure of evidence was admissible to show the basis of his action, rather than to prove its truthfulness; accordingly, such evidence was not hearsay. Jackson v. State, 274 Ark. 317, 624 S.W.2d 437 (1981).

Where state's witness testified concerning a conversation between herself and a woman who was in the car with defendant's husband when defendant shot and killed him, which conversation concerned the woman's intention of purchasing a weapon from the victim as a gift for her husband, the testimony was not hearsay under this rule since the obvious intent of eliciting the statement was to corroborate the woman's testimony as to her reason for meeting the victim rather than to prove the truth of the matter asserted. Worring v. State, 2 Ark. App. 27, 616 S.W.2d 23 (1981).

Where a gasoline station owner testified that, after defendant paid him for towing his car to the station and left in the car, he heard over a police scanner that a store had been robbed and that a stolen car fitting the description of the defendant's had been used, such testimony was not hearsay under subsection (c) of this rule since it was not offered to prove that the car was stolen; accordingly, it was admissible in defendant's robbery trial. Robinson v. State, 3 Ark. App. 153, 623 S.W.2d 534 (1981).

The informant's statement that he wanted to "buy some weed" was not offered for the truth of the matter asserted, i.e., that the informant actually wanted to buy marijuana, but was offered to explain and put in context the defendant's statement that he had some and would go and get it; therefore, the informant's statements were not hearsay under the definition of subsection (c) of this rule. Russell v. State, 18 Ark. App. 45, 709 S.W.2d 825 (1986).

Trial court did not err in allowing the introduction of witness testimony because the testimony was offered to explain why the officers were investigating the parked car and not for the truth of the matter asserted; because it was introduced for the purpose of showing the basis for their actions and was relevant to the issue of probable cause, the testimony was not hearsay. West v. State, 82 Ark. App. 165, 120 S.W.3d 100 (2003).

Evidence that defendant flirted with a guard after he killed his ill live-in companion was not unfairly prejudicial as it was a statement against interest under subdivision (d)(2)(i) of this rule; the guard's testimony suggested that defendant's state of mind hours after the murder was not one of grief, but of relief. Boyle v. State, 363 Ark. 356, 214 S.W.3d 250 (2005).

Circuit court properly allowed car manufacturer to introduce Japanese and Canadian reports on sudden acceleration into evidence in mother's defective design action as the reports were not hearsay; they were not offered for their truth but were offered to support the car manufacturer's position that it did not act with malice. Chapman v. Ford Motor Co., 368 Ark. 328, 245 S.W.3d 123 (2006).

In a capital murder trial, a trial court did not err in admitting statements that were made at an accident scene because the statements explained why a witness, who had to stopped to render aid, left the scene and called 911. Flowers v. State, 373 Ark. 127, 282 S.W.3d 767 (2008).

In an aggravated robbery and capital murder case, the circuit court did not err in admitting into evidence a police officer's statement, "I know what happened," because it was not offered to prove the truth of the matter asserted, but was rather part of the officer's interrogation technique. Even if there were merit to defendant's argument that the police officer's statement was hearsay, he failed to show that he was prejudiced by the statement. Ventry v. State, 2009 Ark. 300, 318 S.W.3d 576 (2009), cert. denied, 559 U.S. 949, 130 S. Ct. 1531, 176 L. Ed. 2d 130 (2010).

In a termination of parental rights hearing, a caseworker's affidavit was not inadmissible hearsay under subsection (c) of this rule because a prior adjudication order contained specific factual findings that the allegations in the affidavit were true, and in any event, there was no prejudice since statements in the affidavit were cumulative of other evidence at the hearing. Stedman v. Ark. Dep't of Human Servs., 2009 Ark. App. 805 (2009).

In a divorce and custody hearing, the admission of a newspaper article and the wife's testimony that the husband and a companion had been arrested for drugs, although hearsay, was not an abuse of discretion because it did not prejudice the husband where the husband admitted that he had been charged with drug crimes and had been acquitted of those crimes. Poole v. Poole, 2009 Ark. App. 860, 372 S.W.3d 420 (2009).

In a divorce and custody hearing, the admission of a videotape and the wife's testimony that the husband's nephew placed a harassing note on the wife's car during work, although hearsay, was not an abuse of discretion because the evidence was cumulative to the wife's extensive testimony about the husband's pattern of harassment and, thus, the husband suffered no prejudice from its admission. Poole v. Poole, 2009 Ark. App. 860, 372 S.W.3d 420 (2009).

In a divorce and custody hearing, although hearsay testimony by the parties' daughter was allowed stating that the father told the daughter it was acceptable to smoke marijuana, any harm from its admission was later cured when the daughter was subject to cross-examination by the father. Poole v. Poole, 2009 Ark. App. 860, 372 S.W.3d 420 (2009).

Termination of the mother's parental rights to two of her sons was appropriate because, although recording of phone conversations between a religious leader and women at the ministry did not qualify as business records under Ark. R. Evid. 803(6), the recordings were admissible since they were not hearsay under subsection (c) of this rule. The portion of the conversations played for the court essentially pertained to the day-to-day operations of the ministry and what the members of the ministry would or would not be allowed to do, in some instances even dictating what the members should be eating; those conversations were not offered for the truth of what was actually asserted by those being recorded but instead were being offered to illustrate the leader's continued control of the ministry. Myers v. Ark. Dep't of Human Servs., 2011 Ark. 182, 380 S.W.3d 906, cert. denied, 565 U.S. 943, 132 S. Ct. 403, 181 L. Ed. 2d 258 (2011).

In a child custody case, the attorney ad litem's report could be considered hearsay under subdivisions (a)(1) and (c) of this rule because it revealed many statements made by persons other than the ad litem, including the child's father, mother, stepmother, and grandfather, which led to the ad litem's recommendation on custody. The circuit court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the attorney ad litem's report into evidence over a hearsay objection because the report's contents and recommendation were admissible by law under Administrative Order of the Supreme Court No. 15, § V. Tracy v. Dennie, 2012 Ark. 281, 411 S.W.3d 702 (2012).

Psychologist Report.

In a trial for termination of the mother's parental rights, where the psychologist did not testify, but the psychologist's report contained information based on interviews with the mother, the children, and others, it was impossible to determine which conclusions relied upon by the trial court were based on hearsay, or even double-hearsay, and because the trial judge relied upon the report to reach conclusions concerning the mother before the report was even admitted into evidence, the trial court's judgment was reversed. Rodriguez v. Ark. Dep't of Human Servs., 84 Ark. App. 177, 137 S.W.3d 432 (2003), rev'd, 360 Ark. 180, 200 S.W.3d 431 (2004).

Rebuttal Evidence.

Motel register which showed defendant's use of a fictitious name and reference to a Buick automobile, which was the same make of car that confidential informant drove, was admissible as its purpose was to illustrate that the room was registered under an assumed name — a fact which confidential informant denied. Henderson v. State, 322 Ark. 402, 910 S.W.2d 656 (1995).

Recent Fabrication.

As subdivision (d)(1)(ii) of this rule indicates, a charge of recent fabrication may be either express or implied. Jones v. State, 318 Ark. 704, 889 S.W.2d 706 (1994).

The word "recent" in subdivision (d)(1)(ii) of this rule, describing the fabrication, is merely a relative term meaning that the challenged testimony was supposedly fabricated to meet the exigencies of the case, but the principle has no application when a witness had the same motive for fabrication when the statement was made as he had when he testified in the case. Jones v. State, 318 Ark. 704, 889 S.W.2d 706 (1994).

Statement by Agent.

It is no longer necessary that an agent be authorized by his principal to make a statement. Missouri Pac. R.R. v. Arkansas Sheriff's Boys' Ranch, 280 Ark. 53, 655 S.W.2d 389 (1983).

Where it is undisputed that statements were made by an agent during the existence of the agency relationship, in order to determine if the statements fall within the exception to the hearsay rule and would be admissible evidence, it is only necessary to make a preliminary determination concerning whether the statements involved a matter within the scope of that agency relationship. Such decision does not involve a question of fact; rather, it involves a question of law based upon the facts that have been presented. Dixie Ins. Co. v. Joe Works Chevrolet, Inc., 298 Ark. 106, 766 S.W.2d 4 (1989).

One spouse is not necessarily the agent of the other solely by virtue of the marital relationship. Parrish v. Newton, 298 Ark. 404, 768 S.W.2d 17 (1989).

Documents were not hearsay because they were memos from an employee of plaintiff; thus, they were statements against interest by a party. Potlatch Corp. v. Missouri Pac. R.R., 321 Ark. 314, 902 S.W.2d 217 (1995).

Statement by Child.

In deciding the admissibility of out-of-court statements made by a child to a Department of Human Services employee concerning sexual abuse, the trial court erred in allowing the child's statements into evidence against the father under subdivision (d)(2) of this rule, where the father and child, although nominally parties in an action to remove custody and declare the child to be dependant-neglected, have interests that are in reality adverse, and, moreover, the child's statements went to the heart of the dispute and the father never acquiesced in or adopted them. Cochran v. Arkansas Dep't of Human Servs., 43 Ark. App. 116, 860 S.W.2d 748 (1993).

In defendant's prosecution under § 5-14-103(a)(3)(A), it was not an abuse of discretion to admit an anatomical chart completed at the child victim's direction with defendant's name on the chart because (1) the name was not hearsay, under subsection (c) of this rule, as the name was not offered to prove defendant abused the victim, (2) if hearsay, the name was admissible, as Ark. R. Evid. 803(4) permitted statements in a medical exam identifying a perpetrator in a child's household, and (3) Ark. R. Evid. 403 did not exclude the exhibit as the victim identified defendant as the victim's abuser at trial, and any error was harmless, as the exhibit was cumulative. Elliott v. State, 2010 Ark. App. 810, 379 S.W.3d 101 (2010).

Statement by Decedent.

Testimony of two defense witnesses who offered statements of party deceased at the time of trial, which were self-serving as to such party, was properly excluded as hearsay. L.L. Cole & Son v. Hickman, 282 Ark. 6, 665 S.W.2d 278 (1984).

Testimony, the only purpose of which was to show that decedent had made a written statement on check or stub that he had bought tenant-in-common's interest in the land, fell squarely within the statutory definition of hearsay and was properly excluded. Hill v. Brown, 283 Ark. 185, 672 S.W.2d 330 (1984).

Statement by Defendant.

Plaintiff properly objected to defense counsel's request on cross-examination that the police officer repeat a statement defendant gave him at the scene about the way the accident occurred. Luedemann v. Wade, 323 Ark. 161, 913 S.W.2d 773 (1996).

In defendant's capital murder trial arising out of the beating death of the two-year-old child of defendant's girlfriend, the trial court did not err in refusing to declare a mistrial when the state in its opening statement referred to a witness's testimony that defendant tried to awaken the child and stated that he could not go back to jail because the statement was not hearsay but was an admission or statement by a party-opponent under subdivision (d)(2)(i) of this rule. Because defendant's statement was admissible at trial, the state was entitled to refer to it during opening statement. Smith v. State, 2009 Ark. 453, 343 S.W.3d 319 (2009).

Defendant's text message was read to the jury by the victim and thereby offered against him, even though the writing itself was inexplicably never provided to the jury and made part of the record. Rodriguez v. State, 2014 Ark. App. 660, 449 S.W.3d 306 (2014).

Statement by Informant.

Any statement made by informant, or in the presence of defendant, indicative of the fact that informant was using persuasion or other means to induce a normally law-abiding person to deliver controlled substances was admissible, not to show the truth of informant's statements, but to show that they were made. Spears v. State, 264 Ark. 83, 568 S.W.2d 492 (1978); Hill v. State, 314 Ark. 275, 862 S.W.2d 836 (1993).

In a proceeding to revoke the defendant's suspended sentence based, inter alia, on his possession of methamphetamine with the intent to deliver, a statement by a narcotics officer that a confidential informant told him that the defendant was selling methamphetamine at a specified location was not hearsay as the statement was not offered for truth and, instead, was offered to explain the officer's conduct in contacting the defendant at that location, which contact led to the discovery that the defendant was in possession of methamphetamine. Brock v. State, 70 Ark. App. 107, 14 S.W.3d 908 (2000).

Statement by Victim.

Testimony concerning statement made by the victim over his police radio that the defendant and his companion were "acting squirrely" was hearsay but, even though the statement should have been inadmissible in capital murder case, its admission was not prejudicial. Henry v. State, 278 Ark. 478, 647 S.W.2d 419, cert. denied, 464 U.S. 835, 104 S. Ct. 121, 78 L. Ed. 2d 119 (1983).

Since statement that victim was too emotionally unstable to testify at time of report was introduced only for the purpose of overcoming a charge of prosecutorial delay, it was not introduced to prove the matter stated, and it was not prejudicial error to introduce the letter at a hearing on motion to dismiss for prosecutorial delay. Bliss v. State, 282 Ark. 315, 668 S.W.2d 936 (1984).

Testimony concerning victim's statement made after alleged incident held admissible. Bing v. State, 23 Ark. App. 19, 740 S.W.2d 156 (1987).

Witness' conversation with homicide victim, who informed him that he and the defendant had had an argument, and that the victim was planning to attack defendant, was not hearsay under subsection (c) of this rule in that it was not offered for the truth of the matter asserted; the testimony was admissible under Evid. Rule 405(b) as an essential element of defendant's claim of self-defense. Simpkins v. State, 48 Ark. App. 14, 889 S.W.2d 37 (1994).

Murder victim's statements to detective regarding his being robbed by defendant's cousin did not constitute hearsay under subsection (c) of this rule and their admission in defendant's trial for murder was not barred by the Confrontation Clause where they were admitted to demonstrate the basis of detective's actions in seeking an arrest warrant for defendant's cousin and to establish defendant's motive for killing the victim, rather than for the truth of the matter asserted in the statements. Dednam v. State, 360 Ark. 240, 200 S.W.3d 875 (2005).

During defendant's capital murder trial, the court erred in admitting written recordings from a notebook found in the victim's apartment after the victim's death because the diary entries were offered to prove that defendant did and said what was recorded in the notebook; the notebook was offered to prove the truth of the matters asserted within it and constituted inadmissible hearsay under subsection (c) of this rule. Wedgeworth v. State, 2012 Ark. 63 (2012).

Statement by Witness.

Where a handwritten statement was not offered for the truth of the matter asserted, but was offered to show that items contained in witness' trial testimony were not included in the statement she made to the sheriff's investigator shortly after the homicide she witnessed, the argument supported by admission of the statement into evidence was that she did not include the facts tending to exculpate defendant when her memory of the event must have been quite fresh, and the jury was properly instructed not to consider it as being offerred for the truth of the matter asserted, no error was committed with respect to admitting the statement into evidence. Buchanan v. State, 315 Ark. 227, 866 S.W.2d 395 (1993).

Uncontradicted testimony by a child support enforcement office employee that he believed defendant's child turned 17 did not meet the definition of hearsay under subsection (c) of this rule because it was merely an opinion. Hampton v. State, 357 Ark. 473, 183 S.W.3d 148 (2004).

Trial court did not err by allowing two witnesses to testify during sentencing that they had seen defendant "acting suspiciously" in the neighborhood park on the day of his initial contact with police because the trial court specifically instructed the jury that the testimony was only to be considered to show why the witnesses called the police and was not offered for the truth of the matter asserted, the testimony was not unduly prejudicial, and the testimony went to defendant's character. Adkins v. State, 371 Ark. 159, 264 S.W.3d 523 (2007).

In a second-degree murder case under § 5-10-103, defendant's rights under the federal and state Confrontation Clauses were violated by the admission of an incriminating testimonial statement made by defendant's sister relating to his motive and statement of mind; although the sister was unavailable, defendant did not have an opportunity for cross-examination. Moreover, the statement was not offered for a non-hearsay purpose, and the admission of such was not harmless. Seaton v. State, 101 Ark. App. 201, 272 S.W.3d 854 (2008).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in overruling defendant's hearsay objection, because at trial, the neighbor testified that the men he observed coming out of the residence were not supposed to be there. Lewis v. State, 2009 Ark. App. 504, 323 S.W.3d 640 (2009).

Termination of the father's parental rights to his child was appropriate even though the admission of testimony from the child's foster mother was erroneously admitted and was not admissible; the foster mother testified that hospital personnel said that the child was a high-risk and failure-to-thrive baby and that they were concerned about whether the child would make it. The erroneous admission of that testimony was harmless and took nothing away from the remaining evidence that supported the termination; the hearsay evidence was actually somewhat cumulative to the foster mother's own observations about the child's low weight and his appearing to have been a premature baby. Tadlock v. Ark. Dep't of Human Servs., 2009 Ark. App. 821, 373 S.W.3d 361 (2009).

Witness's testimony about viewing a screen-shot was not hearsay because the statements were made by the witness, who was at trial and could be questioned; in describing the screen-shot, she was providing testimony about her own first-hand experience; and the hearsay rule is not violated when a witness testifies about a physical object, such as a picture, that is not presented in court. Williams v. State, 2021 Ark. App. 89, 618 S.W.3d 200 (2021).

Summary Judgment Evidence.

Appellant, contending that defendant appellee was an assisted living facility rather than an apartment complex, appended documents to her response to the motion for summary judgment, including internet postings; the trial court properly held that the postings were of unknown origin and not reliable, and there was no proper evidence to rebut the defense witness's sworn testimony. Hadder v. Heritage Hill Manor, Inc., 2016 Ark. App. 303, 495 S.W.3d 628 (2016).

Testimony Proper.

Where witness's statement to his mother was consistent with his testimony at trial and was made before he had contact with the police or the prosecutors, it was admissible as elicited in testimony from the mother under subdivision (d)(1)(ii) of this rule to rebut the implied charges of recent fabrication or improper influence or motive. Gaines v. State, 340 Ark. 99, 8 S.W.3d 547 (2000).

Trial court did not err in denying defendant's objection because the witness could testify to hearsay to explain why she went to the police. Howard v. State, 348 Ark. 471, 79 S.W.3d 273, cert. denied, 537 U.S. 1051, 123 S. Ct. 606, 154 L. Ed. 2d 528 (2002).

Trial court did not err in allowing a statement into evidence because it was not offered to show the truth of the matter asserted but was offered to explain the victim's actions and, thus, the statement was not hearsay. Moore v. State, 362 Ark. 70, 207 S.W.3d 493 (2005).

Truth of the Matter Asserted.

Statement about a fence line being the boundary line was not offered to prove the truth of the matter asserted, and thus was not hearsay. Laster v. Williams, 2012 Ark. App. 282 (2012).

As testimony was offered to prove the truth of the matter asserted, it was hearsay. Laster v. Williams, 2012 Ark. App. 282 (2012).

In a first-degree-forgery case, there was no abuse of discretion in permitting the officer's testimony about his telephone contact with the victim because the out-of-court statement was not hearsay if it was offered to show the basis of an officer's actions, and, thus, was admissible to explain what prompted his investigation of appellant and not for the truth of the matter asserted. Barron-Gonzalez v. State, 2013 Ark. App. 120, 426 S.W.3d 508 (2013).

Introduction of the video and transcript of defendant's interview with police did not violate her right to confront witnesses against her under the Confrontation Clause because the statements made by the police regarding the statements of co-defendants who did not testify at trial were not hearsay as they were not introduced into evidence to prove the truth of the matters asserted, but instead those statements were introduced to give context to defendant's responses, make those responses intelligible, and demonstrate how defendant's responses changed as she was confronted with what the detectives had already been told. Swain v. State, 2015 Ark. 132, 459 S.W.3d 283, cert. denied, 577 U.S. 876, 136 S. Ct. 266, 193 L. Ed. 2d 135 (2015).

Trial court erred in concluding the proffered testimony was hearsay, given that the statements were not being offered to prove the truth of the matter asserted, but simply to show that the child made the statements; the error was not prejudicial, however, because the evidence supporting the mother's alienation theory was before the trial court even though the child's statements were excluded. Tanner v. Tanner, 2015 Ark. App. 668, 476 S.W.3d 832 (2015).

In a case where defendant was convicted of one count of sexual indecency with a child, the trial court did not err in permitting the victim, defendant's younger stepdaughter, to testify to the general content of messages and the stories that defendant sent to the victim about a sexual relationship between a stepfather and stepdaughter, as that was not to prove the truth of the messages or the truth of the fictional stories, but, instead, it gave context to how the victim came to be in possession of the stories and provided the basis for her having suspicions that the sender was her stepfather. Campbell v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 59, 512 S.W.3d 663 (2017).

Trial court did not err in permitting the State to introduce into evidence a DVD of defendant's interview with the police because, based on the hearsay rule, the interviewer's questions were not offered for the truth of the matter asserted but were questions to place defendant's admissible answers into context; the DVD was not a statement; and the visual location of the scene of the interview and the sights and sounds associated with the scene were not statements; and because defendant did not present any discernible prejudice resulting from allowing the DVD into evidence when his incriminating statements were conceded to be admissible. Campbell v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 59, 512 S.W.3d 663 (2017).

Circuit court did not err in admitting a counselor's testimony about the six-year-old child's outburst at school that defendant had touched her inappropriately and the counselor's subsequent conversation with the child that prompted a call to the child-abuse hotline, as the testimony was offered as a basis for the counselor's actions; the circuit court gave a limiting instruction that the testimony not be taken for the truth of the matter asserted, and understanding the basis for the counselor's actions was important given defendant's claim of fabrication. Mondy v. State, 2019 Ark. App. 290, 577 S.W.3d 460 (2019).

There was no abuse of discretion in the trial court's handling of the evidence where, after the witnesses for the State concerning the gun did not appear, the trial court instructed the jury that the officers' testimony tracing the gun's path to the defendant was to be considered only to show the investigative steps taken by the officers and not for the truth of the matter asserted. Jemison v. State, 2019 Ark. App. 475, 588 S.W.3d 359 (2019).

Use of Statement Contents.

Testimony by police officers of the description of the robber given by witnesses to a robbery, given to show what information the police had acted on and not for the truth of the statements therein, was not hearsay. Jones v. State, 15 Ark. App. 283, 692 S.W.2d 775 (1985).

Testimony is not hearsay where it is admitted solely to prove the fact that the words were said, not to prove that they were true. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v. Dolph, 308 Ark. 439, 825 S.W.2d 810 (1992).

Where police officer was working undercover at the request of a sheriff and the information given to him by the sheriff relating to defendant's description and name was necessary in conducting the investigation, the admission of these statements to show the basis of the officer's action was not error. White v. State, 39 Ark. App. 52, 837 S.W.2d 479 (1992).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion by allowing the state to introduce the transcript of police interviews with the victim, which included parts of the statement that were not introduced by the state, because the defense expressly referred to selective portions of the interviews while attempting to show that the investigator coaxed or cajoled the victim into giving incriminating testimony; thus, the entire transcript of the two interviews were properly admitted to refute a charge of improper influence and to provide context. Hamm v. State, 365 Ark. 647, 232 S.W.3d 463 (2006).

Store owner properly based her calculation of the amount stolen on business records, under Ark. R. Evid. 803(6) when she pulled the register receipts showing the total amount of sales made by the store on the date of the theft, then subtracted the credit-card sales and the amount collected during the second shift. Thus, although the store owner did not personally count the money before the theft, the testimony was not inadmissible hearsay under this rule. Scott v. State, 2010 Ark. App. 114 (2010).

CASE NOTES

Evidence Admissible.

Accomplice's grand-jury testimony did not violate the Confrontation Clause of the Sixth Amendment of the United States Constitution because it was given under oath and was subject to the penalty of perjury at another proceeding and, because the accomplice was subject to cross-examination at defendant's trial, the testimony did not qualify as hearsay under Ark. R. Evid. 801(d)(1). Jackson v. State, 359 Ark. 297, 197 S.W.3d 468 (2004), cert. denied, 544 U.S. 1039, 125 S. Ct. 2266, 161 L. Ed. 2d 1070 (2005).

In a check forgery case, a store employee who accepted a forged check was permitted to testify, over hearsay objections, that he recognized appellant from a yearbook picture; because the yearbook was a physical object and not a statement, it was not subject to the hearsay rule. Taylor v. State, 88 Ark. App. 269, 197 S.W.3d 31 (2004).

Trial court did not err in overruling defendant's objections during a deputy's testimony when the deputy told the trial court about a call he received regarding suspects because such testimony was not hearsay when it was offered to show the basis of the deputy's actions. Holley v. State, 2010 Ark. App. 47 (2010).

In a child custody case, the attorney ad litem's report could be considered hearsay under this rule because it revealed many statements made by persons other than the ad litem, including the child's father, mother, stepmother, and grandfather, which led to the ad litem's recommendation on custody. The circuit court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the attorney ad litem's report into evidence over a hearsay objection because the report's contents and recommendation were admissible by law under Administrative Order of the Supreme Court No. 15, § V. Tracy v. Dennie, 2012 Ark. 281, 411 S.W.3d 702 (2012).

In a case involving rape, aggravated robbery, and kidnapping, an officer's testimony relating to appellant's acts against his victim was properly admitted as an excited utterance under Ark. R. Evid. 803(2) because the victim's statement in the hospital was made shortly after the crimes occurred and while the victim was still under the stress of excitement that they caused. The victim was upset when the officer first spoke to her, and she remained upset after she was transported to a hospital. Dillard v. State, 2013 Ark. App. 87 (2013).

Evidence Inadmissible.

Testimony properly excluded as hearsay. Ward v. State, 293 Ark. 88, 733 S.W.2d 728 (1987), overruled, MacKintrush v. State, 334 Ark. 390, 978 S.W.2d 293 (1998).

Admission of hearsay evidence was not harmless error. Davis v. State, 38 Ark. App. 115, 828 S.W.2d 863 (1992).

Testimony of murder victim's cousin that accomplice told him defendant shot the victim held inadmissible. Lanes v. State, 53 Ark. App. 266, 922 S.W.2d 349, overruled, Bradford v. State, 325 Ark. 278, 927 S.W.2d 329 (1996).

A party's recollection of the contents of a letter written in 1975 constituted hearsay evidence, which was properly excluded under this rule. Hopper v. Daniel, 72 Ark. App. 344, 38 S.W.3d 870 (2001).

Where injured person was hit from behind by an employee in a tractor-trailer rig and the jury held in favor of the employee, the injured person contended that the trial court erroneously allowed the investigating trooper to testify that he gained information from another police officer who tried to chase down the third vehicle that abruptly stopped or slowed in front of the injured person's vehicle; the appellate court agreed that the testimony resulted in prejudice because it gave the impression that the authorities thought the driver of the third vehicle was responsible for the accident. Dovers v. Stephenson Oil Co., 81 Ark. App. 92, 98 S.W.3d 462 (2003).

Harmless Error.

Although an officer's testimony regarding an altercation between defendant and a victim constituted hearsay, an appellate court did not reverse a conviction for murder in the first degree because there was overwhelming evidence of defendant's guilt. Winbush v. State, 82 Ark. App. 365, 107 S.W.3d 882 (2003).

Although it was a Confrontation Clause error to admit a videotaped interview of defendant's former wife to police as an excited utterance under this rule, the error was harmless because the offenses were proven by testimonial and physical evidence that was completely independent from the evidence contained in the interview. Snider v. State, 2009 Ark. App. 472, 323 S.W.3d 635 (2009).

Termination of the father's parental rights to his child was appropriate even though the admission of testimony from the child's foster mother was erroneously admitted and was not admissible; the foster mother testified that hospital personnel said that the child was a high-risk and failure-to-thrive baby and that they were concerned about whether the child would make it. The erroneous admission of that testimony was harmless and took nothing away from the remaining evidence that supported the termination; the hearsay evidence was actually somewhat cumulative to the foster mother's own observations about the child's low weight and his appearing to have been a premature baby. Tadlock v. Ark. Dep't of Human Servs., 2009 Ark. App. 821, 373 S.W.3d 361 (2009).

Even if testimony was hearsay and did not qualify as a hearsay exception, the appellate court did not have to decide whether the statements were hearsay, as any error in the admission of the statements was harmless; the declarant testified on behalf of the defense and was cross-examined by the State of Arkansas regarding the very statements which the declarant made to which a witness testified. B.J. v. State, 2015 Ark. App. 310, 462 S.W.3d 709 (2015).

Question Calling for Hearsay Answer.

Question calling for a hearsay answer was properly excluded. McGee v. State, 280 Ark. 347, 658 S.W.2d 376 (1983).

Rule 803. Hearsay exceptions -- Availability of declarant immaterial.

The following are not excluded by the hearsay rule, even though the declarant is available as a witness:

(1) Present Sense Impression. A statement describing or explaining an event or condition made while the declarant was perceiving the event or condition, or immediately thereafter.

(2) Excited Utterance. A statement relating to a startling event or condition made while the declarant was under the stress of excitement caused by the event or condition.

(3) Then Existing Mental, Emotional, or Physical Condition. A statement of the declarant's then existing state of mind, emotion, sensation, or physical condition, such as intent, plan, motive, design, mental feeling, pain, and bodily health, but not including a statement of memory or belief to prove the fact remembered or believed unless it relates to the execution, revocation, identification, or terms of declarant's will.

(4) Statements for Purposes of Medical Diagnosis or Treatment. Statements made for purposes of medical diagnosis or treatment and describing medical history, or past or present symptoms, pain, or sensation, or the inception or general character of the cause or external source thereof insofar as reasonably pertinent to diagnosis or treatment.

(5) Recorded Recollection. A memorandum or record concerning a matter about which a witness once had knowledge but now has insufficient recollection to enable him to testify fully and accurately, shown to have been made or adopted by the witness when the matter was fresh in his memory and to reflect that knowledge correctly. If admitted, the memorandum or record may be read into evidence but may not itself be received as an exhibit unless offered by an adverse party.

(6) Records of Regularly Conducted Business Activity. A memorandum, report, record, or data compilation, in any form, of acts, events, conditions, opinions, or diagnoses, made at or near the time by, or from information transmitted by, a person with knowledge, if kept in the course of a regularly conducted business activity, and if it was the regular practice of that business activity to make the memorandum, report, record, or data compilation, all as shown by the testimony of the custodian or other qualified witness, unless the source of information or the method or circumstances of preparation indicate lack of trustworthiness. The term “business” as used in this paragraph includes business, institution, association, profession, occupation, and calling of every kind, whether or not conducted for profit.

(7) Absence of Entry in Records Kept in Accordance With the Provisions of Paragraph (6). Evidence that a matter is not included in the memoranda, reports, records, or data compilations, in any form, kept in accordance with the provisions of paragraph (6), to prove the nonoccurrence or nonexistence of the matter, if the matter was of a kind of which a memorandum, report, record, or data compilation was regularly made and preserved, unless the sources of information or other circumstances indicate lack of trustworthiness.

(8) Public Records and Reports. To the extent not otherwise provided in this paragraph, records, reports, statements, or data compilations in any form of a public office or agency setting forth its regularly conducted and regularly recorded activities, or matters observed pursuant to duty imposed by law and as to which there was a duty to report, or factual findings resulting from an investigation made pursuant to authority granted by law. The following are not within this exception to the hearsay rule: (i) investigative reports by police and other law enforcement personnel; (ii) investigative reports prepared by or for a government, a public office, or an agency when offered by it in a case in which it is a party; (iii) factual findings offered by the government in criminal cases; (iv) factual findings resulting from special investigation of a particular complaint, case, or incident; and (v) any matter as to which the sources of information or other circumstances indicate lack of trustworthiness.

(9) Records of Vital Statistics. Records or data compilations, in any form, of birth, fetal deaths, deaths, or marriages, if the report thereof was made to a public office pursuant to requirements of law.

(10) Absence of Public Record or Entry. To prove the absence of a record, report, statement, or data compilation, in any form, or the nonoccurrence or nonexistence of a matter of which a record, report, statement, or data compilation, in any form, was regularly made and preserved by a public office or agency, evidence in the form of a certification in accordance with Rule 902, or testimony, that diligent search failed to disclose the record, report, statement, or data compilation, or entry.

(11) Records of Religious Organizations. Statements of births, marriages, divorces, death, legitimacy, ancestry, relationship by blood or marriage, or other similar facts of personal or family history, contained in a regularly kept record of a religious organization.

(12) Marriage, Baptismal, and Similar Certificates. Statements of fact contained in a certificate that the maker performed a marriage or other ceremony or administered a sacrament, made by a clergyman, public official, or other person authorized by the rules or practices of a religious organization or by law to perform the act certified, and purporting to have been issued at the time of the act or within a reasonable time thereafter.

(13) Family Records. Statements of fact concerning personal or family history contained in family Bibles, genealogies, charts, engravings on rings, inscriptions on family portraits, engravings on urns, crypts, or tombstones, or the like.

(14) Records of Documents Affecting an Interest in Property. The record of a document purporting to establish or affect an interest in property, as proof of the content of the original recorded document and its execution and delivery by each person by whom it purports to have been executed, if the record is a record of a public office and applicable statute authorizes the recording of documents of that kind in that office.

(15) Statements in Documents Affecting an Interest in Property. A statement contained in a document purporting to establish or affect an interest in property if the matter stated was relevant to the purpose of the document, unless dealings with the property since the document was made have been inconsistent with the truth of the statement or the purport of the document.

(16) Statements in Ancient Documents. Statements in a document in existence twenty (20) years or more the authenticity of which is established.

(17) Market Reports, Commercial Publications. Market quotations, tabulations, lists, directories, or other published compilations, generally used and relied upon by the public or by persons in particular occupations.

(18) Learned Treatises. To the extent called to the attention of an expert witness upon cross-examination or relied upon by him in direct examination, statements contained in published treatises, periodicals, or pamphlets on a subject of history, medicine, or other science or art, established as a reliable authority by testimony or admission of the witness or by other expert testimony or by judicial notice. If admitted, the statements may be read into evidence but may not be received as exhibits.

(19) Reputation Concerning Personal or Family History. Reputation among members of his family by blood, adoption, or marriage, or among his associates, or in the community, concerning a person's birth, adoption, marriage, divorce, death, legitimacy, relationship by blood, adoption, or marriage, ancestry, or other similar fact of his personal or family history.

(20) Reputation Concerning Boundaries or General History. Reputation in a community, arising before the controversy, as to boundaries of or customs affecting lands in the community, and reputation as to events of general history important to the community or state or nation in which located.

(21) Reputation as to Character. Reputation of a person's character among his associates or in the community.

(22) Judgment of Previous Conviction. Evidence of a final judgment, (entered after a trial or upon a plea of guilty,) adjudging a person guilty of a crime punishable by death or imprisonment in excess of one (1) year, to prove any fact essential to sustain the judgment, but not including, when offered by the state in a criminal prosecution for purposes other than impeachment, judgments against persons other than the accused. The pendency of an appeal may be shown but does not affect admissibility.

(23) Judgment as to Personal, Family or General History, or Boundaries. Judgments as proof of matters of personal, family or general history, or boundaries, essential to the judgment, if the same would be provable by evidence of reputation.

(24) Other Exceptions. A statement not specifically covered by any of the foregoing exceptions but having equivalent circumstantial guarantees of trustworthiness, if the court determines that (i) the statement is offered as evidence of a material fact; (ii) the statement is more probative on the point for which it is offered than any other evidence which the proponent can procure through reasonable efforts; and (iii) the general purposes of these rules and the interests of justice will best be served by admission of the statement into evidence. However, a statement may not be admitted under this exception unless the proponent of it makes known to the adverse party sufficiently in advance to provide the adverse party with a fair opportunity to prepare to meet it, his intention to offer the statement and the particulars of it, including the name and address of the declarant.

(25) Child Hearsay When Declarant is Available at Trial and Subject to Cross-examination. A statement made by a child under the age of ten (10) years concerning any type of sexual offense, or attempted sexual offense, with, on, or against that child, which is inconsistent with the child's testimony and offered in a criminal proceeding, provided:

(A) The trial court conducts a hearing outside the presence of the jury and finds that the statement offered possesses a reasonable guarantee of trustworthiness considering the competency of the child both at the time of the out of court statement and at the time of the testimony.

(B) The proponent of the statement gives the adverse party reasonable notice of his intention to offer the statement and the particulars of the statement.

(C) This section shall not be construed to limit the admission of an offered statement under any other hearsay exception or applicable rule of evidence.

HISTORY: Amended May 11, 1992.

Publisher's Notes.

Prior to adoption of the Arkansas Rules of Evidence by the Supreme Court in 1986, this rule, as enacted by Acts 1975 (Extended Sess., 1976), No. 1143, § 1, was amended by Acts 1985, No. 405, § 1, which added subdivision (25). The 1985 amendment is set out above. Neither the court's opinion in Ricarte v. State, 290 Ark. 100, 717 S.W.2d 488 (1986), nor the accompanying per curiam of October 13, 1986, which adopted the Uniform Rules of Evidence "as set forth" in the 1976 act, refers specifically to this amendment and it is unclear whether the court intended to include it in its adoption of the pre-existing rules.

The former version of subsection (25)(A) was held unconstitutional in George v. State, 306 Ark. 360, 813 S.W.2d 792, modified, 306 Ark. 374-A, 818 S.W.2d 951 (1991).

Acts 1992 (1st Ex. Sess.), No. 66, § 1 amends § 16-41-101 [repealed], Rule 803(25). There is no corresponding amendment of Rule 803(25) by the Supreme Court of Arkansas. See § 16-41-101 [repealed], Rule 803.

Acts 1992 (1st Ex. Sess.), No. 66, § 1 amended § 16-41-101 [repealed], Rule 803 (25). The Supreme Court of Arkansas amended subdivision (25) of this rule by Per Curiam dated May 11, 1992. The amendments to § 16-41-101 [repealed], Rule 803(25) by Acts 1992 (1st Ex. Sess.), No. 66, § 1, and to subdivision (25) of this rule by the Per Curiam Order dated May 11, 1992 are not identical.

CASE NOTESConstitutionality.

Application of subdivision (25) of this rule to defendant who was charged prior to the 1985 amendment which added the subdivision did not violate constitutional prohibition against ex post facto laws. Cogburn v. State, 292 Ark. 564, 732 S.W.2d 807 (1987).

Former subdivision (25)(A)1. I held unconstitutional; the balance of subdivision (25) remained intact. George v. State, 306 Ark. 360, 813 S.W.2d 792, amended, 306 Ark. 374, 818 S.W.2d 951 (1991).

Subdivision (25) of this rule as it existed prior to the 1992 amendment violated the Confrontation Clause of U.S. Const., Amend. 6, in criminal cases. Vann v. State, 309 Ark. 303, 831 S.W.2d 126 (1992).

Subdivision (25) of this rule as it existed prior to the 1992 amendment denied the criminal defendant his right of confrontation since it provided that the hearsay statement of a child is admissible upon showing only that it possesses a "reasonable likelihood of trustworthiness," which is a far lesser standard than is required by the Confrontation Clause of U.S. Const., Amend. 6. Vann v. State, 309 Ark. 303, 831 S.W.2d 126 (1992).

Hearsay evidence which does not fall within a firmly rooted hearsay exception and is thus presumptively unreliable and inadmissible for Confrontation Clause purposes, U.S. Const., Amend. 6, may nonetheless meet Confrontation Clause reliability standards if it is supported by a showing of particularized guarantees of trustworthiness. Vann v. State, 309 Ark. 303, 831 S.W.2d 126 (1992).

In General.

This rule requires that certain foundation requirements be established before records may be admitted into evidence. Shipley v. State, 25 Ark. App. 262, 757 S.W.2d 178 (1988).

Witnesses offering testimony under this rule must be available for cross-examination. Nahlen v. State, 330 Ark. 1, 953 S.W.2d 877 (1997).

Business Records.

Circuit court in a divorce proceeding did not abuse its discretion by excluding on hearsay grounds correspondence to the wife from the U.S. Office of Personnel Management (OPM)—which correspondence the wife claimed showed that the wife's postal retirement payments were reduced—because the correspondence was not admissible as a business record in that the wife failed to present any admissible testimony whatsoever from the custodian or other qualified witness from OPM relating to whether the business-record requirements were met. Chism v. Chism, 2021 Ark. App. 373 (2021).

Admission of city police radio logs was not error, where the logs were authenticated by testimony of the dispatcher who recorded them and the chief of police who identified the logs as official city records kept in the due course of business. Dyas v. State, 260 Ark. 303, 539 S.W.2d 251 (1976).

Under this rule, seven factors must be present for business records to be admissible: (1) record or other compilation, (2) of acts or events, (3) made at or near the time the act occurred, (4) by a person with knowledge (or from information transmitted by such a person), (5) kept in the course of a regularly conducted business, (6) which has a regular practice of recording such information, (7) all as shown by the testimony of the custodian or other qualified witness. Cates v. State, 267 Ark. 726, 589 S.W.2d 598 (Ct. App. 1979); Hooper v. State, 311 Ark. 154, 842 S.W.2d 850 (1992).

Where the microfilm copies of bank records were adequately identified by the bank's officer as being copies of records kept in the normal course of business, they were competent evidence. Reed v. State, 267 Ark. 1017, 593 S.W.2d 472 (Ct. App. 1980).

Party could not object to the introduction of report on the grounds that it was hearsay and not a business record in the sense of subdivision (6) of this rule since neither of these objections was made in the trial court, for error cannot be predicated on a ruling admitting evidence in the absence of a specific objection, if the specific objection was not apparent from the context. Enterprise Sales Co. v. Barham, 270 Ark. 544, 605 S.W.2d 458 (1980).

The trial court in a prosecution for the theft of some copper wire from the victim railroad did not err in allowing a railroad employee to testify as to the catalogue price of the copper wire, after the stock catalogue, customarily used by the railroad for replenishment purposes, was acquired. Beard v. State, 277 Ark. 35, 639 S.W.2d 52 (1982).

Hearsay testimony as to the contents of medical reports made by the insureds' doctors during the two years preceding the issuance of the insurance policy should not have been admitted since the reports were not compiled in the insurer's normal course of business but rather for the specific purpose of investigating the insureds' claim. Ward v. Union Life Ins. Co., 9 Ark. App. 131, 653 S.W.2d 153 (1983), disapproved, Southern Farm Bureau Life Ins. Co. v. Cowger, 295 Ark. 250, 748 S.W.2d 332 (1988).

Computer printouts were admissible as evidence of a store inventory. Tandy Corp. v. Bone, 283 Ark. 399, 678 S.W.2d 312 (1984), limited, City of Green Forest v. Morse, 316 Ark. 540, 873 S.W.2d 155 (1994).

Where bookkeeper did not testify concerning ledger cards, but managing partner testified extensively regarding the ledger cards, demonstrating a knowledge of and detailed familiarity with the itemized transactions chronologically listed on them, the trial judge did not abuse his discretion in admitting the cards and allowing partner to testify. Smith v. Chicot-Lipe Ins. Agency, 11 Ark. App. 49, 665 S.W.2d 907 (1984).

Testimony that pawnshop owner victim customarily made entries on the day they occurred, the absence of any alteration appearing in the records, and the requirement of the federal agency making the timely entry of such transactions mandatory satisfied the court that the elements of this rule were substantially met. Snell v. State, 290 Ark. 503, 721 S.W.2d 628 (1986), cert. denied, 484 U.S. 872, 108 S. Ct. 202, 98 L. Ed. 2d 153 (1987).

It is the fact that regularly kept business records are relied upon for business decisions that makes them trustworthy enough to be admissible as an exception to the hearsay rule. Wildwood Contractors v. Thompson-Holloway Real Estate Agency, 17 Ark. App. 169, 705 S.W.2d 897 (1986).

In order to be admissible under subdivision (6) of this rule, audit report must be made at or near the time of the examination of the records upon which it is based and not necessarily when the activity shown in the audit records was performed. Wildwood Contractors v. Thompson-Holloway Real Estate Agency, 17 Ark. App. 169, 705 S.W.2d 897 (1986).

It is not necessary that the sponsoring witness have knowledge of the actual creation of the document in question; the personal knowledge of the sponsoring witness regarding preparation of the business record goes to the weight rather than the admissibility of the evidence. Wildwood Contractors v. Thompson-Holloway Real Estate Agency, 17 Ark. App. 169, 705 S.W.2d 897 (1986).

The business records exception does not mandate that the custodian be able to explain the record-keeping procedures in question. Wildwood Contractors v. Thompson-Holloway Real Estate Agency, 17 Ark. App. 169, 705 S.W.2d 897 (1986).

It is questionable whether a confession is a business record; the Court of Appeals has held that a public office is not a business. Spears v. State Farm Fire & Cas. Ins., 291 Ark. 465, 725 S.W.2d 835 (1987).

Summary was admissible as a business record. Ward v. Gerald E. Prince Constr., Inc., 293 Ark. 59, 732 S.W.2d 163 (1987).

Memos did not qualify as business records where evidence did not show that they were made at or near the time of transaction and there was no evidence identifying the custodian of the records or an otherwise qualified witness through whom the memos could be introduced. Womack v. First State Bank, 21 Ark. App. 33, 728 S.W.2d 194 (1987).

Although there is no prohibition against one company integrating records made by another into its own business records, party offering record must still establish by a competent witness that its content is worthy of belief. Marshall Trucking Co. v. State, 23 Ark. App. 110, 743 S.W.2d 16 (1988).

Mere fact that memorandum was retained in defendant's files did not supply required foundation for admission as business record. Marshall Trucking Co. v. State, 23 Ark. App. 110, 743 S.W.2d 16 (1988).

A foundation must be laid for the admission of a business record, and the elements of the foundation must be shown by testimony of the custodian or another qualified witness. Branscomb v. State, 299 Ark. 482, 774 S.W.2d 426 (1989).

Foundation requirements of subdivision (6) of this rule were satisfied for hospital records. Terry v. State, 309 Ark. 64, 826 S.W.2d 817 (1992).

The length of a witness' prior employment at the business whose records were used at trial, coupled with his knowledge of how the work records were maintained, qualified him as a witness under subdivision (6) of this rule. Michael v. State, 309 Ark. 151, 828 S.W.2d 351 (1992).

The appellate court would not reverse defendant's conviction, where, although the testimony of the individuals who received or sent wire transfers of money may not have been proper to lay the foundation for the business record exception, the defendant had failed to show prejudice. Hooper v. State, 311 Ark. 154, 842 S.W.2d 850 (1992).

An independent chemical analysis test was a record acquired and maintained by a supplier in the regular course of business where the government required an independent test of the product used to fulfill military contracts by the purchasing parties. Precision Steel Whse., Inc. v. Anderson-Martin Mach. Co., 313 Ark. 258, 854 S.W.2d 321 (1993).

Subdivision (6) of this rule indicates a foundation must be laid for the admission of a business record, and the elements of the foundation must be shown by testimony of the custodian or other qualified witness. Wilburn v. State, 317 Ark. 73, 876 S.W.2d 555 (1994).

The "chain of custody" requirement does not require every person who came in contact with scientific evidence to account for it at trial; it is only necessary that the trial court be satisfied that the evidence was not tampered with by anyone. Caldwell v. State, 319 Ark. 243, 891 S.W.2d 42 (1995).

Geneticist's testimony provided a sufficient foundation to establish the chain of custody for blood samples because he was the custodian of records which were kept in the normal course of business activity. Caldwell v. State, 319 Ark. 243, 891 S.W.2d 42 (1995).

Subdivision (6) of this rule does not require that a custodian or keeper of the record be the record's sponsoring witness; in addition to the custodian of the record, a "qualified witness" may provide the testimony required to lay the foundation for the admission of a business record. Columbia Mut. Ins. Co. v. Patterson, 320 Ark. 584, 899 S.W.2d 61, 904 S.W.2d 218 (1995).

Admission of invoice stating charge to repair broken glass was not harmless admission of hearsay evidence. Eichelberger v. State, 323 Ark. 551, 916 S.W.2d 109 (1996).

Expert testimony concerning DNA blood testing by a lab supervisor using her supervisee's report held admissible under this rule and Evid. Rule 703. Goff v. State, 329 Ark. 513, 953 S.W.2d 38 (1997).

In a tort action for inter alia, assault and battery, the court properly permitted the introduction into evidence of notes of a psychologist who counseled the defendant under the business-records exception where the foundation for such evidence was provided by testimony of the psychologist's office manager. Edwards v. Stills, 335 Ark. 470, 984 S.W.2d 366 (1998).

Trial court erred in admitting a partner's hearsay testimony regarding contributions made to a partnership; the compilation of the figures was not kept in the course of a regularly conducted business activity and did not fit within business records exception to hearsay rule. Paine v. Walker, 76 Ark. App. 217, 61 S.W.3d 925 (2001).

The fact that a piece of evidence falls within the business records exception to the hearsay rule does not equate to automatic admissibility; thus, the trial court properly excluded a home study report as too prejudicial in the absence of someone who could be cross-examined as to its contents. Ark. Dep't of Human Servs. v. Huff, 347 Ark. 553, 65 S.W.3d 880 (2002).

Trial court's decision not to include a father's gambling losses in the calculation of child support was not clearly erroneous because the father was unable to substantiate his losses by keeping a diary, as required by the Internal Revenue Service; moreover, the father's ATM withdrawal slips were not records of regularly conducted business activity under subdivision (6) of this rule. McWhorter v. McWhorter, 351 Ark. 622, 97 S.W.3d 408, cert. denied, 540 U.S. 904, 124 S. Ct. 261, 157 L. Ed. 2d 189 (2003).

Finding in favor of the beneficiaries and against intestate heirs in a will-contest action was proper where the beneficiaries satisfied the requirements of subdivision (6) of this rule and proved that the bank's records were admissible as an exception to the hearsay rule and, even though the officer was not the custodian of the records, that did not bar their admission; further, the records were adequately authenticated under Ark. R. Evid. 901 because the officer repeatedly testified that the copies were true and accurate copies of the records that they depicted. Metzgar v. Rodgers, 83 Ark. App. 354, 128 S.W.3d 5 (2003).

In a negligence suit relating to a vehicle collision, a driver's cell phone records were properly admitted to show his inattentiveness. Jones v. Currens, 289 S.W.3d 506 (Ark. Ct. App. 2008).

Trial court did not err in holding that a daughter's statements of preference as to custody contained in a therapist's business records, which were admitted without objection, could not be considered as evidence of preference because a father could not show that he was prejudiced by the exclusion of the records. Stacks v. Stacks, 2009 Ark. App. 862, 377 S.W.3d 265 (2009).

Although the circuit court abused its discretion in allowing intoxication testimony under the business-records exception to hearsay evidence, found in subdivision (6) of this rule, a father suffered no actual prejudice by the testimony, and its admission was harmless; the testimonies of the son's mother, a police officer, the son's therapist, and his caseworker, coupled with the father's driving while intoxicated convictions and his admissions about use of alcohol, were more than sufficient to substantiate findings that the father's neglect and parental unfitness arose from alcohol abuse and had a negative effect on the child. Hays v. Ark. HHS, 2009 Ark. App. 864, 372 S.W.3d 830 (2009).

Store owner properly based her calculation of the amount stolen on business records, under subdivision (6) of this rule when she pulled the register receipts showing the total amount of sales made by the store on the date of the theft, then subtracted the credit-card sales and the amount collected during the second shift. Thus, the testimony was not inadmissible hearsay under Ark. R. Evid. 801. Scott v. State, 2010 Ark. App. 114 (2010).

Trial court did not err in convicting defendant of theft of property with a value less than $2,500 but more than $500 in violation of § 5-36-103(a)(1) and (b)(2)(A) for stealing merchandise from a department store because a manager's testimony, in conjunction with the testimony of another employee, who was also a manager, was sufficient to lay the foundation for the introduction of a register receipt under the business-records exception to the hearsay rule, subdivision (6) of this rule, as proof of the value of the stolen merchandise; the employee's testimony indicated that he knew the recovered items were stolen because they did not bear certain labels or electronic receipts that the store regularly places on all merchandise, the manager testified that he knew the value of the stolen merchandise by following the store's standard practice of adding up the value by ringing it up on the store's register, and the receipt bore an electronic date and time stamp, as well as other numeric information about the merchandise, including the label information from each item. Pace v. State, 2010 Ark. App. 491, 375 S.W.3d 751 (2010).

Termination of the mother's parental rights to two of her sons was appropriate because, although recording of phone conversations between a religious leader and women at the ministry did not qualify as business records under subdivision (6) of this rule, the recordings were admissible since they were not hearsay under Ark. R. Evid. 801(c). The portion of the conversations played for the court essentially pertained to the day-to-day operations of the ministry and what the members of the ministry would or would not be allowed to do, in some instances even dictating what the members should be eating; those conversations were not offered for the truth of what was actually asserted by those being recorded but instead were being offered to illustrate the leader's continued control of the ministry. Myers v. Ark. Dep't of Human Servs., 2011 Ark. 182, 380 S.W.3d 906, cert. denied, 565 U.S. 943, 132 S. Ct. 403, 181 L. Ed. 2d 258 (2011).

Defendant waived any error in admitting without a proper foundation photos of defendant using a victim's bank card because he failed to get a specific ruling that the photos were considered authenticated under Ark. R. Evid. 901 or under the hearsay exception in subdivision (6) of this rule for business records described by a custodian. Settles v. State, 2011 Ark. App. 241 (2011).

Trial court abused its discretion in admitting an estimate for the costs of cleaning up an oil spill under the business records exception, Ark. R. Evid. 803(6), where there was no admissible testimony from the record custodian as to whether the business record requirements were met, and the affidavit of the employee who allegedly made the repair estimate was inadmissible hearsay. Jones v. John B. Dozier Land Trust, 2017 Ark. App. 23, 511 S.W.3d 869 (2017).

Orthodontic and dental estimates were not admissible under subdivision (6) of this rule where plaintiff failed to cite Ark. Code Ann. § 16-46-108(a) or explain how his proffered certificate of acknowledgement met the statutory requirements. Dale v. White, 2018 Ark. App. 172, 545 S.W.3d 812 (2018).

Circuit court properly admitted hearsay, in the form of an invoice, to prove the amount of actual damages under § 5-38-203, the criminal mischief statute; while there was no testimony regarding how the invoice was prepared, it was introduced under the business-records hearsay exception, subdivision (6) of this rule, through a qualified and knowledgeable witness who testified that she was authorized to submit the invoice by the hospital administrator, the invoice represented the actual replacement cost paid by the hospital to replace the telemedicine device and glass cabinet that defendant damaged, the witness had knowledge of the process involved in paying for the equipment, and the invoice was created about two months after defendant destroyed the equipment. Patton v. State, 2019 Ark. App. 440, 586 S.W.3d 708 (2019).

Retail store receipts were admissible into evidence at defendant's trial for theft of property from a retail store because the receipts satisfied the criteria for the business-records exception to the hearsay rule as a loss-prevention employee for the store described watching defendant conceal items and attempt to leave the store with them, the employee described the standard procedure for having a manager ring up the items to determine their value, and the employee reviewed the receipt to confirm that it matched the found items. Harvey v. State, 2021 Ark. App. 143, 619 S.W.3d 902 (2021).

Child Abuse, Etc.

Circuit court's ruling to admit the victim's prior recorded statement based on the inconsistencies articulated by the circuit court in its ruling was proper, because of these inconsistencies between the victim's recorded statement and his testimony at trial, the circuit court did not err in admitting the recorded interview; the circuit court expressly noted its consideration of the victim's competency in evaluating the reasonable guarantee of trustworthiness of the prior recorded statement. Warner v. State, 2021 Ark. 215 (2021).

Statements of child victims held admissible. Poyner v. State, 288 Ark. 402, 705 S.W.2d 882 (1986); Chappell v. State, 18 Ark. App. 26, 710 S.W.2d 214 (1986); Stallnacker v. State, 19 Ark. App. 9, 715 S.W.2d 883 (1986); Hughes v. State, 292 Ark. 619, 732 S.W.2d 829 (1987); Johnson v. State, 292 Ark. 632, 732 S.W.2d 817 (1987).

Pretrial proceedings met the requirements of subdivision (25) of this rule. Cogburn v. State, 292 Ark. 564, 732 S.W.2d 807 (1987).

The instruction required by former subdivision (25)(A)3. of this rule should be given before the testimony is offered, in the nature of an admonition, rather than given at conclusion of case with packet of jury instructions. Cogburn v. State, 292 Ark. 564, 732 S.W.2d 807 (1987).

Former subdivision (25)(A) of this rule did not require declarant to be less than ten years old at the time of trial as opposed to time when statement was made. Johnson v. State, 292 Ark. 632, 732 S.W.2d 817 (1987).

Requirement that witness be unavailable as prerequisite to admission of out-of-court statements did not apply in child abuse case where there were sufficient indicia of reliability of victim's statements. Johnson v. State, 292 Ark. 632, 732 S.W.2d 817 (1987).

While it is true that the exception in former subdivision (25) of this rule was enacted to alleviate the trauma and distress of child victims by not requiring direct testimony from the child, there is nothing in this rule which prohibits a child from testifying. When the legislature enacted this hearsay exception, it did not mean to create "an either/or situation," that is, the child may testify or the child's hearsay statements to others may be introduced at trial, but not both. Smart v. State, 297 Ark. 324, 761 S.W.2d 915 (1988).

Former subdivision (25)(A) of this rule was not applicable where the court was not asked to, and did not, hold a hearing outside the jury's presence to determine whether the evidence was reasonably trustworthy, the state did not give notice of its intent to offer the statement, and the jury was not instructed as to the manner in which it should determine the weight and credit to be given to the statement, all of which are required by that rule. Pennington v. State, 24 Ark. App. 70, 749 S.W.2d 680 (1988).

Trial court was required to give the instruction pursuant to former subdivision 25(A)3. of this rule and erred in failing to do so, but where defendant failed to ask for instruction or object to court's failure to give it and did not give court opportunity to correct its error at trial, matter could not be raised for first time on appeal. St. Clair v. State, 301 Ark. 223, 783 S.W.2d 835 (1990).

In a prosecution for rape of a five year old girl, it was error to allow the victim's mother to testify as to statements made by the victim on the day after the incident at issue in response to questioning by the mother since such statements did not constitute excited utterances. Lewis v. State, 74 Ark. App. 61, 48 S.W.3d 535 (2001).

Under subdivision (2) of this rule, the declarant's condition at the time had to be such that the statement was spontaneous, excited or impulsive rather than the product of reflection and deliberation. Flores v. State, 75 Ark. App. 397, 58 S.W.3d 417 (2001), aff'd in part, modified, 348 Ark. 28, 69 S.W.3d 864 (2002).

Defendant's convictions for rape and sexual assault were appropriate because Ark. R. Evid. 804(b)(7)(A) was inapplicable since the trial court never declared the victim to have been unavailable as a witness. Rather, the trial court found that the victim's statements to his father and a doctor were hearsay exceptions under subdivisions (2) and (4) of this rule, where the availability of the witness was immaterial; defendant did not challenge those determinations that the statements fell under those particular hearsay exceptions on appeal. Stidam v. State, 2010 Ark. App. 278, 374 S.W.3d 246 (2010).

In defendant's prosecution under § 5-14-103(a)(3)(A), it was not an abuse of discretion to admit an anatomical chart completed at the child victim's direction with defendant's name on the chart because (1) the name was not hearsay, under Ark. R. Evid. 801(c), as the name was not offered to prove defendant abused the victim, (2) if hearsay, the name was admissible, as subdivision (4) of this rule permitted statements in a medical exam identifying a perpetrator in a child's household, and (3) Ark. R. Evid. 403 did not exclude the exhibit as the victim identified defendant as the victim's abuser at trial, and any error was harmless, as the exhibit was cumulative. Elliott v. State, 2010 Ark. App. 810, 379 S.W.3d 101 (2010).

Juvenile was properly adjudicated delinquent based on the offense of rape because the juvenile failed to preserve an argument for appeal, and the circuit court did not err in admitting a videotape of an interview with the child victim under subdivision (25)(A) of this rule to show that the child's testimony was inconsistent with the child's prior statements during the interview. B.R. v. State, 2012 Ark. App. 644 (2012).

—Determination by Court.

Subdivision (25) of this rule does not require written findings, or specific oral findings, but rather requires the trial court to base its decision on the enumerated criteria. Cogburn v. State, 292 Ark. 564, 732 S.W.2d 807 (1987).

Subdivision (25) of this rule requires that trial judge must form his own conclusions of the trustworthiness of the statements by observing the child as a witness. Hughes v. State, 292 Ark. 619, 732 S.W.2d 829 (1987).

—Excited Utterance.

Statements made by child victim right after the occurrence were properly admitted as excited utterances under subdivision (2) of this rule, and it was not necessary to show that the victim was competent to testify; the probability of truth inherent in an excited utterance supplies a reliable safeguard. Bryan v. State, 288 Ark. 125, 702 S.W.2d 785 (1986).

The victim's statements to her mother qualify as an excited utterance under subdivision (2) of this rule, because they were made at an unusually late hour, following a nightmare that clearly terrified the victim. George v. State, 306 Ark. 360, 813 S.W.2d 792, amended, 306 Ark. 374, 818 S.W.2d 951 (1991).

Where the eight-year-old victim was sexually abused by her father the morning of the 29th, this abuse constitutes a "startling event" within the meaning of this rule and the statements made by the victim to her grandmother fit clearly within the excited utterance exception. Killcrease v. State, 310 Ark. 392, 836 S.W.2d 380 (1992).

Testimony by the mother and friend of the victim with respect to the statements made by the victim in response to their questions when she returned to their residence shortly after the alleged rape fell within the "excited utterance" exception. Latham v. State, 318 Ark. 19, 883 S.W.2d 461 (1994).

Child's statement, made to her mother the morning after being molested by the babysitter, held admissible as an excited utterance. Greenlee v. State, 318 Ark. 191, 884 S.W.2d 947 (1994).

Court properly admitted into evidence the statement of a child rape victim, "don't you hurt my sister the way you hurt me" when her sister got into the vehicle in which defendant was a passenger; the victim left her seat, she was shaking and crying and had to be comforted and, on those facts, there was no doubt that the victim's response was immediate and that it was made under the stress of the event of seeing her sister get into the vehicle with the alleged rapist. Warner v. State, 93 Ark. App. 233, 218 S.W.3d 330 (2005).

Despite being made after the lapse of some time and being made in response to her mother's questions, a child-victim's statements to her mother about a rape were admissible under the excited utterance exception to the hearsay rule, subdivision (2) of this rule, especially considering the brutality of the criminal event, the young age of the child, the upset demeanor of the child, and the subject matter of the statement. Frye v. State, 2009 Ark. 110, 313 S.W.3d 10 (2009).

Five-year-old child's statement to her mother within seconds or minutes of an incident in the bathroom with her uncle, given while she appeared scared, that her uncle had put his pee-pee in her mouth, was properly admitted as an excited utterance under subdivision (2) of this rule. Davis v. State, 2011 Ark. App. 686, 386 S.W.3d 647 (2011).

—Parent's Testimony.

Where court permitted mother to testify to statements minor made to her but minor refused to testify about statements on stand, the admission of the minor's statements was not error because the statements were corroborated by other evidence. Peebles v. State, 305 Ark. 338, 808 S.W.2d 331 (1991).

The victim's inability to testify effectively at trial did not presumptively invalidate the reliability of her statements to her parents. George v. State, 306 Ark. 360, 813 S.W.2d 792, amended, 306 Ark. 374, 818 S.W.2d 951 (1991).

Where the child-victim was in effect unavailable to testify at trial due to the judge's finding of lack of competency, sufficient guarantees of trustworthiness existed, such as spontaneity, consistency, and no motive to fabricate the story, to support the trial court's finding that the parents' testimony of the victim's statements did not violate the defendant's confrontation rights. George v. State, 306 Ark. 360, 813 S.W.2d 792, amended, 306 Ark. 374, 818 S.W.2d 951 (1991).

Mother's testimony about the statements a child rape victim made to her was not encompassed within subdivision (25) of this rule because it was not "inconsistent" with the child's testimony. Turnbough v. State, 2013 Ark. App. 235 (2013).

—Patient's Testimony.

Where victim made statements to treating physician concerning sexual abuse by stepfather, trial court properly admitted statements under the medical-treatment exception to hearsay rule; the statements allowed physician to take steps to prevent further abuse, to treat the emotional and psychological injuries and allowed physician to fulfill her legislatively imposed duty of calling the child-abuse hotline and reporting the crime. Hawkins v. State, 348 Ark. 384, 72 S.W.3d 493 (2002).

—Then Existing Condition.

Testimony by a witness the effect that the seven-year-old rape victim told the witness that defendant had told the victim he would kill the victim if she told about the sexual acts held admissible under subdivision (3) of this rule. Bradley v. State, 327 Ark. 6, 937 S.W.2d 628 (1997).

—Validity.

Subdivision (25)(A) of this rule has not been preempted by rules of court and is not unconstitutional. St. Clair v. State, 301 Ark. 223, 783 S.W.2d 835 (1990).

—Videotape.

Although subdivision (25) of this rule applies generally to any statement made by a child that meets the required criteria, specific statutory provisions must be met for such statements when they are videotaped. Cogburn v. State, 292 Ark. 564, 732 S.W.2d 807 (1987).

Trial court erred in receiving videotape of child's statement into evidence. Cogburn v. State, 292 Ark. 564, 732 S.W.2d 807 (1987).

Confrontation Clause.

When the declarant testifies at trial, the only Confrontation Clause issue which remains is whether the declarant could be effectively examined about out-of-court statements; it is only when the declarant is too young or too frightened when he does appear in court to be meaningfully examined about the out-of-court statements attributed to him that the Confrontation Clause remains unsatisfied, and the analysis then turns to whether the admitted statements bear sufficient indicia of reliability to withstand Confrontation Clause scrutiny. Johnson v. Lockhart, 71 F.3d 319 (8th Cir. 1995).

In a child sexual assault case, defendant's Sixth Amendment confrontation rights were not violated by admission of the child victim's videotaped statement to a detective because the victim appeared at trial, was placed under oath, and was subject to cross-examination by defendant; although defendant complained on appeal that he was unable to cross-examine the victim about her videotaped statement to police, he pointed to no ruling that prevented him from recalling her after the tape was admitted so that she could be questioned about the interview. Brown v. State, 96 Ark. App. 66, 238 S.W.3d 614 (2006).

Trial court did not err by allowing witnesses to testify as to statements made to them by the murder victim about her fear of defendant and his prior physical abuse of her. The victim's statements were nontestimonial and were not subject to the Confrontation Clause. Dickey v. State, 2016 Ark. 66, 483 S.W.3d 287 (2016).

Construction.

The phrase "other qualified witness" in subdivision (6) of this rule should be given the broadest interpretation; he need not be an employee of the entity so long as he understands the system. Wilburn v. State, 317 Ark. 73, 876 S.W.2d 555 (1994).

The requirement of authentication in Ark. R. Evid. 901 is separate from the requirement that a hearsay document must satisfy an applicable hearsay exception for admissibility. Columbia Mut. Ins. Co. v. Patterson, 320 Ark. 584, 899 S.W.2d 61, 904 S.W.2d 218 (1995).

Defendant's statement, made to police after defendant's arrest, that defendant was trying to find a place to sleep, was inadmissible hearsay, as it was not a present-sense impression under subdivision (1) of this rule, nor was it a statement of a then existing mental condition under subdivision (3). Jones v. State, 2011 Ark. App. 324, 384 S.W.3d 22 (2011).

Discretion of Court.

A trial judge has wide discretion to determine whether a business record lacks trustworthiness. Wildwood Contractors v. Thompson-Holoway Real Estate Agency, 17 Ark. App. 169, 705 S.W.2d 897 (1986).

Trial judge did not abuse his discretion in admitting the testimony offered by the state under subdivision (25) of this rule. Harris v. State, 295 Ark. 456, 748 S.W.2d 666 (1988); Smart v. State, 297 Ark. 324, 761 S.W.2d 915 (1988).

Excited Utterance.

Statement was admissible as evidence under the excited utterance exception to the hearsay rule as having been made under the stress of excitement caused by startling event or condition. Weaver v. State, 271 Ark. 853, 612 S.W.2d 324 (Ct. App.), cert. denied, 452 U.S. 963, 101 S. Ct. 3113, 69 L. Ed. 2d 974 (1981); Fountain v. State, 273 Ark. 457, 620 S.W.2d 936 (1981); Singleton v. State, 274 Ark. 126, 623 S.W.2d 180 (1981), cert. denied, 456 U.S. 938, 102 S. Ct. 1996, 72 L. Ed. 2d 458 (1982), cert. denied, 459 U.S. 882, 103 S. Ct. 184, 74 L. Ed. 2d 149 (1982); Jackson v. State, 290 Ark. 375, 720 S.W.2d 282 (1986); Barker v. State, 21 Ark. App. 56, 728 S.W.2d 204 (1987).

The basis underlying the exception in subdivision (2) of this rule is that a person who experiences a startling event, and is still under the stress of the excitement of it when statements are made, will not make fabricated statements and their utterances are therefore trustworthy; in these situations the court must find that there was a startling event and that at the time the utterance is made the declarant is still under the stress of excitement resulting from that event when the utterances are made. Tackett v. State, 12 Ark. App. 57, 670 S.W.2d 824 (1984).

Under subdivision (2) of this rule, although the excited utterance must be made close in time to the startling event, the length of elapsed time is only one factor to be considered in determining whether the stress of the excitement has continued. Tackett v. State, 12 Ark. App. 57, 670 S.W.2d 824 (1984).

Under subdivision (2) of this rule, it is for the trial court to determine if the statement was made under the stress of excitement, an excited utterance, or after the person had calmed down. Marx v. State, 291 Ark. 325, 724 S.W.2d 456 (1987).

Evidence properly excluded as not being excited utterance where a substantial amount of time passed between the crime and making of utterances. Barker v. State, 21 Ark. App. 56, 728 S.W.2d 204 (1987).

The admissibility of an excited utterance is not to be measured by any precise number of minutes, hours, or days, but requires that the declarant is still under the stress and excitement caused by the traumatic occurrence. Pennington v. State, 24 Ark. App. 70, 749 S.W.2d 680 (1988); Huls v. State, 27 Ark. App. 242, 770 S.W.2d 160 (1989).

Evidence sufficient to find that statement was admissible as an excited utterance under this rule. Smith v. State, 303 Ark. 524, 798 S.W.2d 94 (1990).

The probability of truth in an excited utterance supplies a reliable safeguard. Russell v. State, 306 Ark. 436, 815 S.W.2d 929 (1991).

Court properly admitted statements as excited utterances from an eight-year-old girl who witnessed her uncle commit a violent attack upon her grandmother and two-year-old cousin, made in less than one hour to the ambulance driver. Russell v. State, 306 Ark. 436, 815 S.W.2d 929 (1991).

Statements did not fall within excited utterance exception to the hearsay rule, where declarant's utterances, four days after the incident could not be said to be considered a product of the stress of the excitement, rather than of intervening reflection and deliberation. Cole v. State, 307 Ark. 41, 818 S.W.2d 573 (1991).

Even if there were no direct proof to the contrary, it would be inconceivable to believe that a four and six-year-old could remain some 24 to 30 hours alone with the body of their mother, dead on the living room floor from 144 knife wounds and regard their immediate account as unexcited, whatever the manifestations. Suggs v. State, 317 Ark. 541, 879 S.W.2d 428 (1994).

Where the testimony indicated that victim, the adult declarant, was assaulted and battered in his home on the day he was murdered by two men who threatened to return, which is without doubt a startling event as contemplated in subdivision (2) of this rule, and the testimony also indicated the victim answered the door of his home later that day armed with a pistol and a machete, which was evidence the victim was still under the stress and excitement of the startling event, then the declarant's statements to the witness satisfied the requirements of the excited utterance exception. Moore v. State, 317 Ark. 630, 882 S.W.2d 667 (1994).

For the statement made by a party involved in a car accident to the attending police officer to be an excited utterance, it is necessary to establish that the utterance was made soon enough after the accident for it to reasonably be considered a product of the stress of accident, rather than of intervening reflection or deliberation. Luedemann v. Wade, 323 Ark. 161, 913 S.W.2d 773 (1996).

Defendant's identification in a photo lineup by the victim's six-year-old daughter was inadmissible hearsay and not an excited utterance. Johnson v. State, 326 Ark. 430, 934 S.W.2d 179 (1996), cert. denied, 520 U.S. 1242, 117 S. Ct. 1848, 137 L. Ed. 2d 1051 (1997).

In a prosecution for the robbery of a store, the court properly permitted a witness to testify that the victim said, "He just robbed me. Don't leave me," as the witness arrived at the store since it was evident that the witness arrived at the store contemporaneously with the conclusion of the robbery and, therefore, the victim was still under the stress of the excitement of the robbery when she made the statement. Skiver v. State, 336 Ark. 86, 983 S.W.2d 931 (1999).

The description of the defendant by a witness, within 30 minutes of the murder of her co-worker, was a description by a person under stress or excitement. Hill v. State, 344 Ark. 216, 40 S.W.3d 751 (2001), overruled in part, McCoy v. State, 347 Ark. 913, 69 S.W.3d 430 (2002), overruled as stated in Holian v. State, 2013 Ark. 7 (2013).

Under subdivision (2) of this rule, the trial court properly admitted a witness's testimony about the statements made by a murder victim to the witness as an excited utterance; the victim made the statements after a night filled with terror such that the violence which the victim had experienced was clearly an excited or startling event. Peterson v. State, 349 Ark. 195, 76 S.W.3d 845 (2002).

In a capital murder trial, the victim's daughter was permitted to testify as to hearsay statement of the victim that defendant had hit her on prior occasions; the statement was admissible as an excited utterance under subdivision (2) of this rule because the victim was bruised and crying at the time she made the statement. Barrett v. State, 354 Ark. 187, 119 S.W.3d 485 (2003).

In a sexual assault case, victim's statement to a fellow church member regarding an assault about 30 minutes after the incident took place was sufficient to establish the time-frame element for an excited utterance. Davis v. State, 362 Ark. 34, 207 S.W.3d 474 (2005).

Victim called her mother on Sunday morning around 3:15 am stating that she and defendant had been fighting and that he raped and tried to strangle her; on Tuesday, the victim was killed. Regarding the mother's testimony about the phone call on Sunday morning, her testimony fell within the excited-utterance exception and was admissible because (1) the victim's statements to her mother occurred at the time of the startling event — the altercation with defendant; (2) the victim was extremely excited when she made the phone call to her mother, as defendant was still present in her home; and (3) all of her statements were in reaction to the altercation with defendant. Wright v. State, 368 Ark. 629, 249 S.W.3d 133 (2007).

Victim told three co-workers about an altercation with defendant in which he raped her and tried to strangle her; on Tuesday, the victim was killed. Testimony of the co-workers did not fall within the excited-utterance exception because (1) the victim told one of the co-workers that she was going to go home and then go to the police the next morning; (2) while the victim was understandably still upset from the events that occurred between her and defendant, it did not appear that she was in a state of hysterics; (3) the victim's conversations with her co-workers appeared to be the product of some reflection and deliberation on those events; and (4) the victim's conversations with her co-workers took place about 36 hours after the altercation. Wright v. State, 368 Ark. 629, 249 S.W.3d 133 (2007).

In defendant's rape case, a young child's hearsay statement regarding the incident was properly admitted as an excited utterance because the child made the statement shortly after police officers arrived on the scene, and thus, the evidence suggested a short interval of time between the offense and the statement. Moreover, it was clear that the child made the statement while he was under the stress of excitement caused by watching his sister perform oral sex on defendant. Bell v. State, 371 Ark. 375, 266 S.W.3d 696 (2007).

Trial court abused its discretion under subdivision (2) of this rule in admitting an out-of-court statement of a murder victim's seven-year-old daughter under the excited-utterance exception to the hearsay rule where there was a passage of almost two days between the incident and the statement; the daughter also exhibited a calm demeanor in response to the detective's questions. Rodriguez v. State, 372 Ark. 335, 276 S.W.3d 208 (2008).

Trial court abused its discretion in allowing hearsay statements of a tractor-trailer driver under the excited-utterance exception, subdivision (2) of this rule, because there was no indication that the statements were spontaneous or that the driver was excited or under emotion's influence after a vehicle collision. Jones v. Currens, 289 S.W.3d 506 (Ark. Ct. App. 2008).

On appeal from his conviction for second-degree murder, there was no abuse of discretion in finding that a witness's statements were admissible under subdivision (2) of this rule because they were made while he was still under the stress of the incident. Defendant's uncle testified that the witness was frantic, tired, and huffing; when asked about his behavior, the witness responded that defendant and the victim had just gotten into an argument and that defendant shot the victim. Diggins v. State, 2010 Ark. App. 301, 373 S.W.3d 919 (2010).

Victim's statement to another person was admissible as an excited utterance under subdivision (2) of this rule, where it was made mere minutes after the victim escaped from her assailant and was not sure whether the assailant and his confederates were still in the area, the individual described the victim as "frantic," and the victim made an emergency call to police. Keister v. State, 2011 Ark. App. 71 (2011).

Because defendant's wife reported a physical assault and her 911 call came within a short time of the assault, a trial court did not err in finding that her statements made during the call were admissible as an "excited utterance" under subdivision (2) of this rule. Mathis v. State, 2012 Ark. App. 285, 423 S.W.3d 91 (2012).

In a case involving rape, aggravated robbery, and kidnapping, an officer's testimony relating to appellant's acts against his victim was properly admitted as an excited utterance under subdivision (2) of this rule because the victim's statement in the hospital was made shortly after the crimes occurred and while the victim was still under the stress of excitement that they caused. The victim was upset when the officer first spoke to her, and she remained upset after she was transported to a hospital. Dillard v. State, 2013 Ark. App. 87 (2013).

Court properly allowed testimony by witnesses that the injured person said defendant's truck ran him off the road because the injured person made the statements fifteen minutes after the accident while he was lying in a ditch and before the paramedics arrived. The trial court did not abuse its discretion in finding that the injured person was still influenced by the stress of the event when he made the statements. Swift Transp. Co. of Ariz., LLC v. Angulo, 716 F.3d 1127 (8th Cir. 2013).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in overruling defendant's hearsay objection because a witness' testimony regarding what the victim told her fell within the excited-utterance exception to the hearsay rule where very little time passed between the event at issue and the victim's declarations and the victim was visibly injured, very upset, and in great pain. Stone v. State, 2014 Ark. App. 110 (2014).

Circuit court did not err in finding that the victim's statement about the shooting was admissible as an excited utterance, given that the victim made the statement within minutes of being shot at point-blank range while the paramedic was rendering medical attention, and the victim's condition was grave and he was aware that his injuries were serious. Hicks v. State, 2017 Ark. 262, 526 S.W.3d 831 (2017).

Victim's daughter's testimony that, on awakening from a coma, the victim identified defendant as the person who had caused her injuries was properly admitted as an excited utterance where the victim made the statement immediately upon regaining consciousness after the attack, made it while crying and in pain from the injuries, and initially volunteered the information without prompting. Bates v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 123, 516 S.W.3d 275 (2017).

Responding officer's testimony about a mother's statements identifying defendant as the suspect was properly admitted as an excited utterance where a complete reading of the officer's testimony showed that the mother was still comforting the child who had been beaten when she identified to the responding officer the person who had caused the child's injuries, a witness testified that he had called 911 while the beating continued, and the officer testified that he arrived at the apartment four minutes after receiving the 911 call. Jefferson v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 492, 532 S.W.3d 75 (2017).

Although the trial court abused its discretion by applying the excited-utterance exception and in allowing the hearsay testimony of a police officer regarding statements made by the victim to the officer in an interview at a hospital about the events that occurred that morning in the attack on the victim, the error was harmless because defendant failed to show resulting prejudice as the testimony was cumulative to the testimony of the victim and was also consistent with the testimony of another officer who responded to the victim's residence. Hensley v. State, 2018 Ark. App. 513, 560 S.W.3d 834 (2018).

In a prosecution of defendant for aggravated residential burglary and manslaughter, the victim's statement identifying defendant as his attacker was precisely the kind of excited utterance contemplated by Ark. R. Evid. 803(2). The circuit court, therefore, did not abuse its discretion in admitting the statement under the excited-utterance exception to the hearsay rule. Huskey v. State, 2019 Ark. App. 113, 571 S.W.3d 533 (2019).

Expert Opinion.

Trial court did not err in permitting testimony concerning scientific tests by a person who neither performed them nor was actually present when they were performed since expert can base his opinion on facts learned from others even though the facts are themselves hearsay. Morris v. State, 21 Ark. App. 228, 731 S.W.2d 230 (1987).

Familiarity with Record.

In a prosecution for obtaining food stamps by false pretense, the trial court erred in failing to sustain defendant's hearsay objection to testimony by investigators that employment records, water department files, and social security records revealed that persons to whom defendant had issued food stamps were nonexistent, since the investigators were not sufficiently familiar with the records about which they testified to state a fact as to what the records showed. Poole v. State, 262 Ark. 4, 552 S.W.2d 647 (1977).

Firearm Transaction Record.

While a firearm transaction record taken from a store would have been admissible if it had been made available to the defendant according to this rule, where such document was not made available to the defendant before trial and was not authenticated it was not admissible. Scott v. State, 263 Ark. 669, 566 S.W.2d 737 (1978).

Harmless Error.

Even if testimony was hearsay and did not qualify as a hearsay exception, the appellate court did not have to decide whether the statements were hearsay, as any error in the admission of the statements was harmless; the declarant testified on behalf of the defense and was cross-examined by the State of Arkansas regarding the very statements which the declarant made to which a witness testified. B.J. v. State, 2015 Ark. App. 310, 462 S.W.3d 709 (2015).

Improper Exclusion.

Testimony that a patient told his doctor that his arm smelled like “catfish bait” should not have been excluded as hearsay because the statement qualified as a hearsay exception under subdivision (3) of this rule, a then-existing physical condition; subdivision (1), present sense impressions; and subdivision (4), a statement made for the purpose of medical diagnosis or treatment. Blankenship v. Kelly, M.D., 2010 Ark. App. 337 (2010).

Investigative Report by Police.

Where beneficiaries sought to recover under a life insurance policy and an accidental death policy, both of which contained suicide exclusion clauses, and both defendant insurance companies asserted suicide as a defense, the admission of the deputy sheriff’s report, which included statements by others concerning the mental state of the deceased, was error since the challenged statements were clearly hearsay under subdivision (8) of this rule and were not admissible as a business record under subdivision (6) of this rule. Wallin v. Insurance Co. of N. Am., 268 Ark. 847, 596 S.W.2d 716 (Ct. App. 1980).

The police incident/offense reports were inadmissible hearsay. Bennett v. State, 307 Ark. 400, 821 S.W.2d 13 (1991).

Even assuming that the circuit court erred in allowing defense counsel to pursue a line of questioning about the police report from a prior accident in which plaintiff sustained injuries, the impact was minimal at best because it referred to a prior accident and, although plaintiff and defendant disagreed over the inebriation of the other truck driver in the prior 1999 accident, the materiality of the police report to the issue of damages in relation to the 2001 accident appeared virtually nonexistent. House v. Volunteer Transp., Inc., 365 Ark. 11, 223 S.W.3d 798 (2006).

Lack of Personal Knowledge.

Where in a prosecution for the possession of marijuana with intent to deliver, the state offered the testimony of a drug laboratory supervisor, a superior of the chemist who actually received and tested the contraband in issue, the supervisor’s testimony was inadmissible hearsay and should have been excluded pursuant to subdivisions (8)(iii) and (iv) of this rule because the supervisor did not have any personal knowledge of the receipt or the testing of the substance. Llewellyn v. State, 4 Ark. App. 326, 630 S.W.2d 555 (1982).

Learned Treatises.

In prosecution for rape and sexual abuse in first degree where defendant’s psychiatrist witness on cross examination, when asked if he was familiar with a certain book by a Mr. Coleman, replied that he was, and was then asked if he recognized the person as an expert in his field stated that he recognized him as an expert editor who compiled information from varied sources and is considered reliable, and further agreed with a statement from the book and when the prosecution appeared to ask another question as if he were commencing another statement from the book, defendant’s attorney objected on the ground that the state had not established that Coleman was a qualified psychiatrist, the court ruled that the particular witness considered Coleman reliable, there was no reversible error on an abuse of the trial court’s discretion. Shepherd v. State, 270 Ark. 457, 605 S.W.2d 414 (1980).

It was error to allow the prosecutor to cross-examine a defense expert witness with a book about epilepsy obtained from a drugstore, where the expert was not familiar with either the author or the book; before a treatise may be used to cross-examine, proof that the treatise is a reliable authority must be established. Davies v. State, 286 Ark. 9, 688 S.W.2d 738 (1985).

In a medical malpractice action based on a physician’s failure to administer a pregnancy test to the plaintiff prior to performing a hysterectomy on her, the trial court erred in permitting an expert witness for the defense to bolster his testimony by producing an authoritative treatise on gynecology and testifying that nowhere in the book did it state that physicians should routinely order a pregnancy test prior to a hysterectomy; subdivision (18) of this rule permits statements from learned treatises to be read into evidence if relied upon by an expert witness, but here there was no statement one way or the other in the book. Haney v. DeSandre, 286 Ark. 258, 692 S.W.2d 214 (1985).

Subdivision (18) of this rule applies to a particular statement from a particular treatise, not to a general opinion of another expert based upon a generalized familiarity with the expert; where no foundation was laid about a particular treatise to which the witness could refer, and no foundation was laid about the reliability of the expert on the subject, the treatise could not be used. Echols v. State, 326 Ark. 917, 936

S.W.2d 509 (1996), cert. denied, 520 U.S. 1244, 117 S. Ct. 1853, 137 L. Ed. 2d 1055 (1997).

The use of blowups of excerpted portions of medical treatises and periodicals did not convert them into exhibits, even though they were neither admitted into evidence nor allowed to go to the jury room with the jury. Breslau v. McAlister, 72 Ark. App. 124, 35 S.W.3d 321 (2000).

Medical Diagnosis.

Medical records offered by defendant were relevant. Lee v. State, 266 Ark. 870, 587 S.W.2d 78 (Ct. App. 1979).

Social service history of the deceased incident to his admission to a psychiatric hospital was admissible under subdivisions (4) and (6) of this rule, since it was adequately identified by the associate medical director of the hospital as being part of the hospital record made for the purpose of medical diagnosis and treatment. Wallin v. Insurance Co. of N. Am., 268 Ark. 847, 596 S.W.2d 716 (Ct. App. 1980).

Where the custodian of the hospital X-rays attached an affidavit to the X-rays and hospital records stating that the records were authentic, the trial court in a murder prosecution did not err in allowing the state medical examiner to use the X-rays in order to prove the identity of the murder victim. Surridge v. State, 279 Ark. 183, 650 S.W.2d 561 (1983).

Where blood alcohol test is not ordered by a defendant or an officer of the law, and it is not ordered to be used as evidence in a criminal case, but rather it is ordered by an emergency room physician for his own use in connection with his treatment of a patient, the question is not whether the test complied with the strict procedures of § 5-65-201 et seq. but whether the test results are admissible under subdivision (4) of this rule. Weaver v. State, 290 Ark. 556, 720 S.W.2d 905 (1986).

Where no evidence regarding blood test procedure was presented, result of test was not admissible under subdivision (4) of this rule. Mosley v. State, 22 Ark. App. 29, 732 S.W.2d 861 (1987).

With respect to statements made for the purposes of medical diagnosis or treatment, the crucial question is whether the out-of-court statement of the declarant was "reasonably pertinent" to diagnosis or treatment. Huls v. State, 27 Ark. App. 242, 770 S.W.2d 160 (1989).

Statement as to identity of defendant as the source of the declarant's injury was not reasonably pertinent to medical diagnosis or treatment, and thus not admissible under subdivision (4) of this rule. Huls v. State, 27 Ark. App. 242, 770 S.W.2d 160 (1989).

The basis for hearsay exception under subdivision (4) of this rule is the patient's strong motivation to be truthful in giving statements for diagnosis and treatment. Carton v. Missouri Pac. R.R., 303 Ark. 568, 798 S.W.2d 674 (1990).

Pursuant to subdivision (4) of this rule, plaintiff's statement that her foot slipped and she fell was admissible, but her statement that she had "apparently accumulated some diesel fuel on her sole" was not admissible because it was not pertinent to diagnosis or treatment given by the physician, and, more importantly, the patient had no motivation to be truthful because it would not matter in her treatment whether she had snow or diesel fuel on her boot. Carton v. Missouri Pac. R.R., 303 Ark. 568, 798 S.W.2d 674 (1990).

Circuit court did not err in overruling plaintiff's objection on hearsay grounds to testimony elicited by defendant from plaintiff that plaintiff's doctor had advised plaintiff that he would be able to walk on his injured leg, when the testimony was offered on cross-examination to prove why plaintiff sought a second opinion from another doctor prior to trial to prove that plaintiff could walk in the future. Piercy v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc., 311 Ark. 424, 844 S.W.2d 337 (1993).

Testimony of the treating physician regarding the sexual abuse of a child was admissible under subdivision (4) of this rule, which provides for the admission of statements made for the purpose of medical diagnosis or treatment and describing medical history, past or present symptoms, pain, or sensation, or the inception or general character of the cause or external source thereof insofar as reasonably pertinent to diagnosis or treatment. Duvall v. State, 41 Ark. App. 148, 852 S.W.2d 144 (1993).

Where the declarant of information in a hospital record is unknown, the reliability of the statement is highly suspect, and the record should not be admitted under the subdivision (4) or (6) exceptions under this rule. Benson v. Shuler Drilling Co., 316 Ark. 101, 871 S.W.2d 552 (1994).

Statement made for purposes of medical diagnosis or treatment is a firmly rooted hearsay exception. Clausen v. State, 50 Ark. App. 149, 901 S.W.2d 35 (1995).

Because child's statements appeared to be spontaneous and consistent and since she did not use terminology unexpected of a child of her age, nor have any motive to fabricate, admission of her doctor's testimony as to child's statements did not violate defendant's rights under the Confrontation Clause of the Sixth Amendment. Clausen v. State, 50 Ark. App. 149, 901 S.W.2d 35 (1995).

Even if testimony by witness who interviewed child rape victim at hospital was inadmissible hearsay offered to bolster the victim's testimony as prior consistent statements, and not admissible under subdivision (4) of this rule, such admission was rendered harmless where the rape victim's own trial testimony independently evidenced her rape and the rape victim was available at trial for cross-examination by the defendant. Clark v. State, 323 Ark. 211, 913 S.W.2d 297 (1996).

Although defendant argued that physician's opinion as to the cause or aggravation of plaintiff's knee injury was based entirely on plaintiff's statement, and that such a statement was hearsay and not included as an exception to the hearsay rule found in subdivision (4) of this rule because it was made to the doctor after litigation had begun and was, therefore, self-serving, there is no provision in subdivision (4) of this rule that prohibits statements given after litigation has begun; also, the statement was admissible under Evid. Rule 703. Collins v. Hinton, 327 Ark. 159, 937 S.W.2d 164 (1997).

Under subdivision (4) of this rule, the declarant's motive in making the statement had to be consistent with the purposes of promoting treatment, and the content of the statement had to be such as reasonably relied on by a physician in treatment or diagnosis. Flores v. State, 75 Ark. App. 397, 58 S.W.3d 417 (2001), aff'd in part, modified, 348 Ark. 28, 69 S.W.3d 864 (2002).

Where mother, when speaking to a doctor, admitted to abuse of child murder victim and then shifted blame for fatal blow to defendant, statement was not admissible as statement made for purposes of medical diagnosis or treatment hearsay exception. Flores v. State, 348 Ark. 28, 68 S.W.3d 864 (2002).

On appeal, defendant argued that the trial court erred in allowing the state's exhibit of the victim's medical records into evidence as business records under subdivision (6) of this rule because they were prepared in anticipation of criminal litigation; however, the court found that defendant's argument that the records were untrustworthy was merely conclusory and went to the weight of the evidence and not to its admissibility as defendant failed to specify the pages to which he objected or request that they be excised. McClellan v. State, 81 Ark. App. 361, 101 S.W.3d 864 (2003).

In a trial for termination of the mother's parental rights, where the psychologist did not testify, but the psychologist's report contained information based on interviews with the mother, the children, and others, it was impossible to determine which conclusions relied upon by the trial court were based on hearsay, or even double-hearsay, and because the trial judge relied upon the report to reach conclusions concerning the mother before the report was even admitted into evidence, the trial court's judgment was reversed. Rodriguez v. Ark. Dep't of Human Servs., 84 Ark. App. 177, 137 S.W.3d 432 (2003), rev'd, 360 Ark. 180, 200 S.W.3d 431 (2004).

Social worker did not qualify as a medical expert and her testimony was not admissible pursuant to subdivision (4) of this rule; however, the testimony was generally admissible under Ark. R. Evid. 703 where the social worker was an expert witness and the children's statements to the social worker about remarks their father made about their mother and stepfather helped form the basis of her opinion that the animosity between the parents caused the children to be stressed and that visitation exchanges should occur on neutral territory. Meins v. Meins, 93 Ark. App. 292, 218 S.W.3d 366 (2005).

Termination of the father's parental rights to his child was appropriate even though the admission of testimony from the child's foster mother was erroneously admitted and was not admissible under subdivision (4) of this rule; the foster mother testified that hospital personnel said that the child was a high-risk and failure-to-thrive baby and that they were concerned about whether the child would make it. The erroneous admission of that testimony was harmless and took nothing away from the remaining evidence that supported the termination; the hearsay evidence was actually somewhat cumulative to the foster mother's own observations about the child's low weight and his appearing to have been a premature baby. Tadlock v. Ark. Dep't of Human Servs., 2009 Ark. App. 821, 373 S.W.3d 361 (2009).

Defendant's convictions for rape and sexual assault were appropriate because Ark. R. Evid. 804(b)(7)(A) was inapplicable since the trial court never declared the victim to have been unavailable as a witness. Rather, the trial court found that the victim's statements to his father and a doctor were hearsay exceptions under subdivisions (2) and (4) of this rule, where the availability of the witness was immaterial; defendant did not challenge those determinations that the statements fell under those particular hearsay exceptions on appeal. Stidam v. State, 2010 Ark. App. 278, 374 S.W.3d 246 (2010).

During defendant's trial for raping his seven-year-old daughter, the court did not err in permitting a nurse to testify as to what the victim told the nurse because it fell within the exception to the rule against hearsay in subdivision (4) of this rule; the victim's hearsay statements about how the injury occurred were reasonably pertinent to the nurse's treatment and were substantiated by the nurse's finding of hypertrophic scarring in the victim's anal area. Harlmo v. State, 2011 Ark. App. 314, 383 S.W.3d 447 (2011).

Error in admitting a social worker's testimony under the hearsay exception for statements for purposes of medical diagnosis or treatment under subdivision (4) of this rule was harmless because the testimony was cumulative of other, properly admitted, testimony, which was not challenged on appeal. Ward v. State, 2014 Ark. App. 408, 439 S.W.3d 56 (2014).

Sexual-assault nurse's hearsay testimony regarding the victims' identification of the defendant as the perpetrator fell within the medical-treatment exception of subsection (4) of this rule; the declarants were child victims who were responding to questions from the nurse seeking to ascertain circumstances reasonably relevant to their physical and psychological diagnosis and treatment. Smith v. State, 2016 Ark. 417, 504 S.W.3d 595 (2016).

Circuit court abused its discretion in permitting a doctor to testify that the victim identified her boyfriend as her assailant under Flores and subdivision (4) of this rule, because she was not a minor and there was no testimony defendant lived in her house. However, the error was harmless because the testimony was cumulative to other evidence. Dean v. State, 2021 Ark. App. 182 (2021).

Objections to Evidence.

When appellants failed to renew their hearsay objection or make any other objection to the witness' testimony, the failure to renew an objection constituted a waiver of the matter. Marvel v. Parker, 317 Ark. 232, 878 S.W.2d 364 (1994).

Where defense counsel argued that there were a number of people who had not testified, as well as several unsigned documents in state's exhibit of medical records, and specifically called into question the trustworthiness of this portion of the records, counsel's objection was sufficient to preserve the issue for appeal. McClellan v. State, 81 Ark. App. 361, 101 S.W.3d 864 (2003).

Orders of Prior Commitments.

Where the proof of prior convictions submitted to support a "habitual offender" count in a burglary and theft trial consisted of copies of orders of commitment from a court of competent jurisdiction, duly certified under seal, which were clearly admissible under subdivision (1) of Rule 902 and competent to prove the prior convictions, and the foundation for that admission was the docket entries of the court in those two cases, properly identified by the clerk of the court whose duty it was to keep and record such records, such records not being hearsay by virtue of subdivision (8) of this rule, there was substantial evidence by which the jury could find the prior convictions proved as required by § 5-4-504. Thomas v. State, 2 Ark. App. 238, 620 S.W.2d 300 (1981).

Present Sense Impression.

Lineup which occurred three days after the robbery could not have been a present sense impression of the robbery occurrence within the meaning of subdivision (1) of this rule. Tucker v. State, 264 Ark. 890, 575 S.W.2d 684 (1979).

Where the witness was being tied up by the defendant during a store robbery when she observed an unidentified woman who came into the store, reached over the counter and took the money out of the cash register, the witness was properly allowed to testify as to what she observed as a present sense impression. Jackson v. State, 267 Ark. 891, 591 S.W.2d 685 (Ct. App. 1979).

Under subdivision (1) of this rule, a present sense impression must describe or explain the event the declarant is perceiving, the statement must be made while the event or condition is being perceived by the declarant, and the statement is required to be contemporaneous or near contemporaneous with the event. Marx v. State, 291 Ark. 325, 724 S.W.2d 456 (1987).

Subdivision (1) of this rule was not applicable where description was given some time after event and not while witness was perceiving event, or immediately thereafter. Halfacre v. State, 292 Ark. 331, 731 S.W.2d 179 (1987).

Witness' statement to her husband that she believed the victim and defendant were having a war, qualified as a present sense impression. Davis v. State, 317 Ark. 592, 879 S.W.2d 439 (1994).

Witness' oral description of the license plate on robber's vehicle as it left the scene was admissible under subdivision (1) of this rule as a present sense impression. Brown v. State, 320 Ark. 201, 895 S.W.2d 909 (1995).

Evidence regarding a telephone conversation between a murder victim and his ex-wife in which the victim stated that the defendant, who was his current wife, had a gun pointed at him and was going to shoot him could be admitted into evidence either as a present sense impression or as a statement of then existing mental, emotional, or physical condition. Thomas v. State, 62 Ark. App. 168, 973 S.W.2d 1 (1998).

During defendant's trial for murder and battery, a witness's statement that defendant told him in the car as they fled from the scene that he had shot the victim because he was scared and because the victim kept coming toward him was not admissible under Ark. R. Evid. 803(1) as a present-sense impression; the statement was not shown to have been made while defendant was perceiving the event or immediately thereafter. Mitchell v. State, 2018 Ark. App. 253, 549 S.W.3d 375 (2018).

Trial court properly admitted 911 calls pursuant to Ark. R. Evid. 803(1) as present sense impressions where the caller had just witnessed an incident in which defendant had taken a baby by force using a gun and had driven away in a vehicle that the caller was following. The calls also would be admissible as excited utterances under Ark. R. Evid. 803(2) (no-merit brief). Kelley v. State, 2019 Ark. App. 71, 568 S.W.3d 801 (2019).

Previous Convictions.

Proof of defendant's two previous convictions was not inadmissible as hearsay where circuit clerks testimony about them was based upon docket entries and there was no suggestion that the docket entries did not correctly reflect the court's judgments. Reeves v. State, 263 Ark. 227, 564 S.W.2d 503, cert. denied, 439 U.S. 964, 99 S. Ct. 450, 58 L. Ed. 2d 422 (1978).

Overruling defendant's objection to certified copies of the docket sheets showing three prior misdemeanor DWI convictions under Ark. R. Evid. 803(22) was an abuse of discretion as the convictions were not punishable by more than one year in prison. However, the admission of the evidence under Ark. R. Evid. 803(8), the public records exception, was not an abuse of discretion. Clay v. State, 2019 Ark. App. 356, 584 S.W.3d 270 (2019).

Private Investigator's Report.

A special report prepared by a private investigator hired by the father in a custody contest regarding the morals of the child's mother was not admissible as hearsay exception as a recorded recollection or work product inasmuch as it was not offered by an adverse party; nor was it admissible as a record maintained in the course of a regularly conducted business activity inasmuch as a proper foundation was not laid. Walker v. Walker, 262 Ark. 648, 559 S.W.2d 716 (1978).

Proper Exclusion.

In an action for breach of fiduciary relationship, an unaudited financial statement prepared by an accountant was properly excluded, where it was not properly authenticated and no basis was laid for it being admitted as a business record. Smith v. Citation Mfg. Co., 266 Ark. 591, 587 S.W.2d 39 (1979).

Where trial court allowed sheriff and his secretary to narrate statements made by sister of defendant during his investigation of murder case, and such statements had not been signed by her, although she had acknowledged the principal statement, it was error for the court to admit such evidence as recorded recollections under this rule since her statements were not within the rule as reviving present recollection through a contemporaneously made memorandum; however, since the statements could be used to impeach inconsistent out-of-court statements made by defendant's sister under Rule 613, where the state impeaches its own witness under Rule 607, the ruling of the trial judge was correct for the wrong reasons and thus was not reversed. Chisum v. State, 273 Ark. 1, 616 S.W.2d 728 (1981).

While there was no basis for admitting the statements in transcript of plea hearing in another county under this rule, the evidence would come in substantively under Ark. R. Evid. 801(d)(1) as an admission. McDaniel v. State, 291 Ark. 596, 726 S.W.2d 679 (1987).

It was improper for chancellor to exclude evidence in affidavits of opponents to summary judgment motion which he suspected was inadmissible hearsay, without ruling on its admissibility under the present-intent exception to the hearsay rule. Jones v. Abraham, 58 Ark. App. 17, 946 S.W.2d 711 (1997).

Public Records and Reports.

Where the witness testified that she was an employee in the clerk's office at the time the money was stolen, her tabulation of the amount missing came from the record of receipts regularly kept by the clerk's office in its daily course of business, and she stated that she made most of the entries she referred to and that she had equal access to the records as did the clerk or custodian, her testimony was clearly admissible pursuant to subdivision (8) of this rule and the trial court did not err in admitting this evidence. LeFlore v. State, 17 Ark. App. 117, 704 S.W.2d 641 (1986).

If a chemist's crime lab report fails to meet the prerequisites of § 12-12-313, it is considered inadmissible hearsay under subdivision (8)(iii) of this rule; however, even when the state's report meets the statutory requirements and the state intends to introduce the report as an exception to the hearsay rule, a defendant may, under § 12-12-313(d)(2), still require the chemist's presence for the purpose of cross-examination, if the defendant requests the chemist's presence at least ten days prior to trial. Lockhart v. State, 314 Ark. 394, 862 S.W.2d 265 (1993).

A probate inventory filed in court is not admissible under this rule, as the inventory was not a record of or statement about anything that a public official or agency had done. Easterling v. Weedman, 54 Ark. App. 22, 922 S.W.2d 735 (1996).

Expert testimony concerning DNA blood testing by a lab supervisor using her supervisee's report held admissible under this rule and Evid. Rule 703. Goff v. State, 329 Ark. 513, 953 S.W.2d 38 (1997).

The certified copy of the trial court's docket notation was a record of a public office setting forth its regularly conducted and regularly recorded activities, and was not hearsay. Mulkey v. State, 330 Ark. 113, 952 S.W.2d 149 (1997).

Finding of civil contempt was proper where the development corporation and its managing officer failed to turn over to the sheriff assembled planes and related equipment as specified in the order of delivery; further, inspection reports admitted into evidence were proper because they clearly fell within the exception in subdivision (8) of this rule and did not fall within any of the five exclusions to the rule. Omni Holding & Dev. Corp. v. 3D. S.A., Inc., 356 Ark. 440, 156 S.W.3d 228 (2004).

In a case where the father alleged that the grandmother sexually abused his son and he was held in civil contempt for not abiding by the trial court's order granting the grandmother visitation rights, the investigator's supervisor was properly allowed to testify regarding a police report that was made following the father's call to the sexual abuse hotline because of her supervisory control over the reports and because her testimony did not run afoul of the hearsay rule. Hunt v. Perry, 357 Ark. 224, 162 S.W.3d 891 (2004).

In a fraud case, a document from the Federal Drug Administration (FDA) regarding the contamination of soybean feed for hogs was admissible because it was a warning sent out under the FDA's duty to protect the public from consuming adulterated food. Archer-Daniels-Midland Co. v. Beadles Enters., 367 Ark. 1, 238 S.W.3d 79 (2006).

Circuit court abused its discretion by admitting a warning letter sent to the antipsychotic medication developer by the Food and Drug Administration because it was not admissible under this rule, as it was part of a special investigation of into the developer's 2003 "dear doctor letter" and was not part of routine record keeping. The letter was also more prejudicial than probative under Ark. R. Evid. 403 and it was referred to repeatedly throughout the trial. Ortho-McNeil-Janssen Pharms., Inc. v. State, 2014 Ark. 124, 432 S.W.3d 563 (2014).

Circuit court properly revoked defendant's probation because a violation report was admissible as a report made by a public official, defendant admitted committing many of the violations listed in the report, did not preserve her confrontation-clause argument, and violated the terms and conditions of her probation by failing to report, by using marijuana, and by willfully and inexcusably failing to pay the balance of her fine and costs as promised under oath. Robinson v. State, 2014 Ark. App. 579, 446 S.W.3d 190 (2014).

Circuit court's admission of certified docket sheets showing three prior misdemeanor-DWI convictions was not an abuse of discretion under Ark. R. Evid. 803(8) as the evidence fell squarely within the public-records exception, and was admissible to prove an element of a subsequently charged crime, i.e., that defendant had been convicted of seven DWIs, not to prove that he actually committed the underlying misdemeanors charged. Thus, any conflict between Ark. R. Evid. 803(22) and 803(8) was resolved. Clay v. State, 2019 Ark. App. 356, 584 S.W.3d 270 (2019).

Recorded Recollection.

Police officer may refresh his memory during trial testimony from notes as to what he observed at accident scene. Townsend v. State, 292 Ark. 157, 728 S.W.2d 516 (1987).

Trial court properly admitted that portion of a written statement in which a witness told police that defendant admitted being involved in a robbery because the statement qualified as a recorded recollection under subdivision (5) of this rule where the witness told police that the statement was true at the time it was made and an officer testified that the statement was accurately recorded; it was, however, error to admit that portion of the written statement in which a third party implicated both himself and defendant in the robbery because the statement was not made in furtherance of the conspiracy as required by Ark. R. Evid. 801(d)(2)(v) and was not a statement against the declarant's interest within the meaning of Ark. R. Evid. 804(b)(3). Lawrence v. State, 81 Ark. App. 390, 104 S.W.3d 393 (2003).

In defendant's trial for possession of ephedrine, pseudoephedrine, or phenylpropanolamine with intent to manufacture methamphetamine, in violation of § 5-64-1102(a), the trial court erred in allowing a witness to read a statement into the record because there was neither evidence that the recordation was adopted by the declarant nor evidence that the recordation was accurately recorded, as required under subdivision (5) of this rule. Hancock v. State, 2011 Ark. App. 174, 381 S.W.3d 908 (2011).

Records of Vital Statistics.

In probate proceeding occurring after subsection (d) of § 28-9-209 was declared unconstitutional, but prior to its amendment, it was proper to allow testimony as to general reputation in the community on the issue of paternity under subdivision (19) of this rule and to admit woman's birth certificate under subdivision (9) of this rule in order to determine if the woman was the illegitimate daughter of decedent. Lewis v. Petty, 272 Ark. 250, 613 S.W.2d 585 (1981).

Reputation as to Character.

Since it cannot be said that a defendant's truthfulness has been attacked simply because he takes the witness stand, a defendant who takes the witness stand cannot support his testimony by offering evidence that shows his character for truthfulness among his associates or in the community. Rios v. State, 262 Ark. 407, 557 S.W.2d 198 (1977).

Reputation Concerning Personal History.

Admission of testimony as to general reputation in the community on the issue of paternity held proper. Lewis v. Petty, 272 Ark. 250, 613 S.W.2d 585 (1981).

Res Gestae.

Where the prosecutrix called her brother within 15 to 20 minutes after the occurrence, and said that she had been raped by the defendant, the statement was admissible as being part of what was formerly referred to as the res gestae. Burris v. State, 265 Ark. 604, 580 S.W.2d 204 (1979).

Residual Exception.

Circuit court in a divorce proceeding did not abuse its discretion by excluding on hearsay grounds correspondence to the wife from the U.S. Office of Personnel Management (OPM)—which correspondence the wife claimed showed that the wife's postal retirement payments were reduced—because the correspondence was not admissible under the residual hearsay exception in that the wife made no effort to comply with the requirements for the admission of the correspondence. Chism v. Chism, 2021 Ark. App. 373 (2021).

Subdivision (24) of this rule and Evid. Rule 804(b)(5) do not spell out specific exceptions to the general prohibition against hearsay; instead, they list several matters to be considered as conditions to the admissibility of hearsay not falling within a recognized exception. Such provisions were not intended to throw open a wide door for the entry of judicially-created exceptions to the hearsay rule but are to be narrowly construed. Hill v. Brown, 283 Ark. 185, 672 S.W.2d 330 (1984).

The trial court has substantial latitude under subdivision (24) of this rule to admit evidence which it feels meets the spirit of the rule. Hess v. Treece, 286 Ark. 434, 693 S.W.2d 792 (1985), cert. denied, 475 U.S. 1036, 106 S. Ct. 1245, 89 L. Ed. 2d 354 (1986).

The residual hearsay exception was intended to be used very rarely, and only in exceptional circumstances. Barnes v. Barnes, 311 Ark. 287, 843 S.W.2d 835 (1992).

A statement may not be introduced under subdivision (24) of this rule unless the proponent of it makes known to the adverse party sufficiently in advance to provide the adverse party with a fair opportunity to prepare to meet it. Barnes v. Barnes, 311 Ark. 287, 843 S.W.2d 835 (1992).

Defendant's request to introduce second, more exculpatory statement he made to deputy sheriff denied where defendant had every reason to make a self-serving statement to minimize his participation in crimes after he knew co-defendant had implicated him. Williams v. State, 329 Ark. 8, 946 S.W.2d 678 (1997).

—Trustworthiness.

Any new exceptions to the hearsay rule under subdivision (24) of this rule must have circumstantial guarantees of trustworthiness equivalent to the guarantees supporting the common-law exceptions, necessity or some compelling reason for attaching more than average credibility to the hearsay. Hill v. Brown, 283 Ark. 185, 672 S.W.2d 330 (1984); Blaylock v. Strecker, 291 Ark. 340, 724 S.W.2d 470 (1987); Barnes v. Barnes, 311 Ark. 287, 843 S.W.2d 835 (1992).

In an action for partition of land on death of tenant in common, since testimony of decedent's wife and attorney for decedent's estate that decedent had told them that he had bought other tenant in common's interest would have been self-serving, he could not have been cross-examined about it, and it could have been readily fabricated, it was not a statement attended by inherent guarantees of trustworthiness as required by subdivision (24) of this rule and Evid. Rule 804(b)(5) and was thus properly excluded. Hill v. Brown, 283 Ark. 185, 672 S.W.2d 330 (1984).

Statement did not meet the standards for trustworthiness or reliability required by subdivision (24) of this rule. Ward v. State, 298 Ark. 448, 770 S.W.2d 109 (1989); Leshe v. State, 304 Ark. 442, 803 S.W.2d 522 (1991).

In determining trustworthiness under the residual-hearsay exception the Chancellor must determine that (1) the statement is offered as evidence of a material fact, (2) the statement is more probative on the point for which it is offered than any other evidence the proponent can procure through reasonable efforts, and (3) the general purposes of the rules and the interests of justice will best be served by admission of the statements into evidence. Barnes v. Barnes, 311 Ark. 287, 843 S.W.2d 835 (1992).

Videotape of eyewitness's statement made by police carried the requisite circumstantial guarantees of trustworthiness as statement was more probative of how the victim was murdered than any other available evidence, contained more details than any other evidence offered by the state, and the purpose of the rules of evidence and the interests of justice were served by introduction of the videotaped statement. Martin v. State, 346 Ark. 198, 57 S.W.3d 136 (2001).

Special Investigation.

Where plaintiff, in a countersuit to collect unpaid overtime, sought to introduce the report by a compliance officer from the United States Department of Labor which was made about plaintiff's employer upon an anonymous request, but which deleted confidential financial information, the court properly rejected the report as hearsay, since it resulted from a special investigation of a particular complaint and was thus not excepted from the hearsay rule under subdivision (8)(iv) of this rule, and since there was no factual basis in the report to justify its conclusion on coverage of employees. Swart v. Town & Country Home Ctr., Inc., 2 Ark. App. 211, 619 S.W.2d 680 (1981).

Taped Conversations.

In a prosecution for criminal conspiracy to possess a controlled substance, the trial court did not err in allowing taped and transcribed telephone conversations between an undercover officer and the defendant into evidence, even though positive identification of the defendant as the party calling could not be made, especially since the evidence clearly established that the defendant showed up at the time and place in furtherance of the proposed purchase pursuant to the prearranged telephone instructions. Jackson v. State, 12 Ark. App. 378, 677 S.W.2d 866 (1984).

Test results.

Medical test results could not be admitted under the business-record exception without laying a foundation; testimony concerning the chain of custody and the protocol followed in collecting the samples was required. White v. State, 330 Ark. 813, 958 S.W.2d 519 (1997).

Then Existing Intent or Motive.

Testimony tending to show that one alleged to have been a government agent who had entrapped defendant was addicted to drugs and was trying to “set up” his acquaintances on distribution charges was relevant and not inadmissible as hearsay since they showed the informant’s intent, plan, motive or design; therefore, this testimony should have been admitted. Spears v. State, 264 Ark. 83, 568 S.W.2d 492 (1978).

Testimony about statements testator made regarding his intent was admissible under subdivision (3) of this rule. Greenwood v. Wilson, 267 Ark. 68, 588 S.W.2d 701 (1979).

Testimony concerning statement by victim was admissible as showing victim’s intent on day of murder. Scherrer v. State, 294 Ark. 227, 742 S.W.2d 877 (1988).

Admissibility of statements of intent, plan, or motive are not limited to matters concerning the declarant’s will; rather, only statements of memory or belief are limited by subdivision (3) of this rule concerning then existing mental, emotional, or physical condition. Nicholson v. State, 319 Ark. 566, 892 S.W.2d 507 (1995).

Oral statements from a decedent were an exception to the hearsay rule because the statements indicated the decedent’s intent to change the beneficiary designation on her life insurance policy. Conseco Life Ins. Co. v. Williams, 620 F.3d 902 (8th Cir. 2010).

Statements concerning the decedent’s intent when he executed his will, the family limited-partnership agreement, and the revocable trust were proper under this rule, because it showed the decedent’s intent that his partnership interest be conveyed to the trust. Ashley v. Ashley, 2012 Ark. App. 236, 405 S.W.3d 419 (2012), aff’d, 2016 Ark. 161, 489 S.W.3d 660 (2016).

Where appellants petitioned to reform a family revocable trust to remove appellee as residual beneficiary, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in excluding hearsay testimony regarding certain aspects of the settlor’s emotions and relationship that were not affirmative statements of her intent to amend the trust, and thus, were not admissible under subdivision (3) of this rule as evidence of her intent to do something in the future. Eft v. Rogers, 2012 Ark. App. 632, 425 S.W.3d 1 (2012).

Letter testimony was proper under the exception in subdivision (3) of this rule because it showed the husband’s intent that his interest in the property be conveyed to his wife. O’Neal v. Love, 2015 Ark. App. 689, 476 S.W.3d 846 (2015).

Hearsay testimony as to the victim’s statements that she had intended to spend the weekend she was murdered with defendant were properly admitted under subdivision (3) of this rule as the testimony concerned her intent to do something in the future. King v. State, 2019 Ark. 114, 571 S.W.3d 476 (2019).

Then Existing State of Mind.

Trial court did not err by admitting a text message exchanged between the codefendant and his girlfriend because it showed the codefendant’s state of mind, as it concerned the codefendant’s intent to not park the victim’s truck in certain place. Smith v. State, 2022 Ark. 95 (2022).

The victim’s quoted declarations are inadmissible as being statements of her memory about the past, not statements of an existing state of mind: the statements that her relationship with the defendant was sexual, that she thought him to be the father of her child, and that she had canceled appointments for an abortion. State v. Abernathy, 265 Ark. 218, 577 S.W.2d 591 (1979).

The trial court should have sustained the admissibility of the victim’s statement that she was going to meet the defendant the night of the murder; that statement falls within subdivision (3) of this rule. State v. Abernathy, 265 Ark. 218, 577 S.W.2d 591 (1979).

Where court admitted into evidence a letter by murder victim, written on the day of her murder and concerning the weather and other small talk, through which the state intended to show the victim’s state of mind on that day in order to refute the defendant’s statements that the victim and her husband had been arguing, drinking and fighting just prior to their double murders, the letter may not have met the criteria for state-of-mind evidence under this rule, but the admission was only harmless error and the judgment against would not be reversed for harmless error. Shaw v. State, 271 Ark. 926, 611 S.W.2d 522 (1981).

In capital murder case, the trial court did not err in permitting a witness to offer hearsay testimony that the deceased told a friend, “Well, if grandma is a man, I’ll leave” where the statement involved a proposed meeting between the deceased and the defendant’s wife in the matter of negotiating for the sale and purchase of coins and where the state was allowed to introduce the statement for the purpose of showing the victim’s state of mind; although the state misused the statement in closing argument it was nevertheless proper for the purpose for which the court allowed its introduction. Mackey v. State, 279 Ark. 307, 651 S.W.2d 82 (1983).

Where the evidence, which consisted of the testimony of defendant's cousin and son that they had told defendant of several conversations they had overheard, showed its effect on the listener, the defendant, and was not offered to prove the truth of the matter stated, such evidence was not hearsay and is admissible. Hall v. State, 286 Ark. 52, 689 S.W.2d 524 (1985).

Evidence of the state of mind of the victim, prior to a murder, is admissible; the witness' statement that the deceased appeared to be afraid after she received a phone call fell within an exception to the hearsay rule for then existing mental, emotional, or physical condition where the statement was not accusatory but merely a statement that the victim was afraid. Vasquez v. State, 287 Ark. 468, 702 S.W.2d 411 (1986).

While statements of murder victim's child to the police were hearsay and it was error to admit them, as they did not fall within subdivision (3) of this rule exception governing statements of then existing states of mind, where the same evidence was introduced by other witnesses and was properly before the jury for its consideration, it was harmless error to allow the officers to testify as to the child's statements to them. Orr v. State, 288 Ark. 118, 703 S.W.2d 438 (1986).

Testimony is inadmissible under subdivision (3) of this rule where it concerns a mental or emotional condition that is purely subjective and irrelevant to the defense of duress. Marx v. State, 291 Ark. 325, 724 S.W.2d 456 (1987).

Testimony held proper under subdivision (3) of this rule. Honey v. Hickey, 26 Ark. App. 99, 760 S.W.2d 81 (1988); Brenk v. State, 311 Ark. 579, 847 S.W.2d 1 (1993).

The expressions of fear made on behalf of the victim should have been admissible under the state of mind exception in subdivision (3) of this rule. Smith v. State, 33 Ark. App. 37, 801 S.W.2d 655 (1990).

Statements were not admissible as a state of mind exception under subdivision (3) of this rule, where three women's testimony of what the victim said, four days after the incident, about what defendant did to her, were statements of the victim's memory about the past, not statements of her then-existing state of mind. Cole v. State, 307 Ark. 41, 818 S.W.2d 573 (1991).

The poems and epitaph written by decedent's mother after the motorcycle accident presented by decedent's estate were admissible and relevant under subdivision (3) of this rule on the mental anguish issue because such exception has been recognized as being available to a plaintiff in a civil damage action as a means of establishing his or her mental anguish as an element of damages. Warhurst v. White, 310 Ark. 546, 838 S.W.2d 350 (1992).

Where defendant's incriminating statement allegedly was uttered after a shooting murder occurred, it was not in furtherance of a crime, and was admissible because it tended to show the effect on the listener, i.e., instigating defendant's immediate response showing his approval of the shooting and tending to prove defendant's status as an accomplice. Cole v. State, 323 Ark. 8, 913 S.W.2d 255 (1996).

Statements by the defendant's parents to a witness that they were afraid of the defendant were properly admitted in the defendant's murder prosecution as statement of the declarants' present states of mind where one statement was made 3 weeks before the defendant murdered his parents and the other statement was made 2 months before the murder. Hodge v. State, 332 Ark. 377, 965 S.W.2d 766 (1998).

Subdivision (3) of this rule is limited to statements of the declarant's then existing state of mind and does not include statements by the declarant describing the state of mind of someone else; thus, in an action involving an alleged oral contract to make a will by two sisters, it was error to allow the introduction into evidence of statements made by the sister who died first about statements made by the other sister concerning the latter's intention regarding bequests of her property. Jones v. Abraham, 67 Ark. App. 304, 999 S.W.2d 698 (1999), aff'd, 341 Ark. 66, 15 S.W.3d 310 (2000), overruled in part, Lamontagne v. Ark. Dep't of Human Servs., 2010 Ark. 190, 366 S.W.3d 351 (2010).

Statements were admissible that were evidence both of the furtherance of a conspiracy and probative of defendant's existing state of mind which the state contended was an intent to commit robbery. Haire v. State, 340 Ark. 11, 8 S.W.3d 468 (2000).

In a murder case, the court did not err by allowing the victim's father to testify about statements the victim made regarding her plans to withdraw money from an investment account; the hearsay statements related to the victim's intent to save money in her investment account to buy her daughter a car, and saving money to buy a car certainly reflected an intent to do something in the future. Wyles v. State, 357 Ark. 530, 182 S.W.3d 142 (2004).

In a negligence action involving a propane explosion, the exclusion of evidence that the homeowner had left messages on the propane company's answering machine before the explosion was not error; although the messages were not hearsay under because they were offered only to show that the propane company had notice of a possible problem, the homeowner's counsel failed to object to their exclusion on that ground and made a state of mind objection under subdivision (3) of this rule, which lacked merit. Miller v. Hometown Propane Gas, Inc., 86 Ark. App. 189, 167 S.W.3d 172 (2004).

Testimony as to deceased husband's intention and belief that he had changed the beneficiary on his life insurance policy to his new wife was relevant and the trial court did not err in allowing testimony about his statements under subdivision (3) of this rule; nor did the trial court err in allowing the wife to testify about husband's conversation to a representative of the insurer in which she heard him tell the representative that he was divorced and remarried and that he needed to change the beneficiary on his policy, as well as the spouse rider and child rider. Primerica Life Ins. Co. v. Watson, 362 Ark. 54, 207 S.W.3d 443 (2005).

Testimony given by individuals regarding statements that deceased husband made to them indicating his new wife would have the proceeds of his life insurance to pay off the debts of his business was admissible under subdivision (3) of this rule. Primerica Life Ins. Co. v. Watson, 362 Ark. 54, 207 S.W.3d 443 (2005).

In defendant's murder trial, the court did not err by admitting hearsay testimony under the state of mind exception; the testimony showed victim's fear of defendant, impeached defendant's original statement to police that he and the victim had a good relationship, and the fact that the victim made the statements to many people was a possible explanation for defendant having his wife commit the murder instead of doing it himself. MacKool v. State, 365 Ark. 416, 231 S.W.3d 676 (2006).

In a case where a child was determined to be dependent-neglected based on allegations of sexual abuse, it was unnecessary to decide if testimony from the father's mother about what the child said was admissible under subdivision (3) of this rule to show the child's then-existing mental, emotional, or physical condition because the testimony was excludable as cumulative under Ark. R. Evid. 403. The father was trying to show that the child had made statements denying the abuse had occurred, but other statements to this effect had been introduced. Sparrow v. Ark. HHS, 101 Ark. App. 193, 272 S.W.3d 846 (2008).

Trial court erred in excluding, as hearsay, testimony concerning a patient's complaints of cast tightness and pain because the complaints clearly fell within the hearsay exception set forth in subdivision (3) of this rule for a then-existing mental or physical condition. Blankenship v. Kelly, M.D., 2010 Ark. App. 337 (2010).

During defendant's trial for capital murder, the court did not err in overruling his objection to testimony of the victim's father that she came to him for help because her relationship with defendant was beyond her ability to handle and because there were "threats against her life;" the victim's expression of fear fell within the hearsay exception in subdivision (3) of this rule. Wedgeworth v. State, 2012 Ark. 63 (2012).

Even if a circuit court erred in admitting the hearsay testimony of a witness under subdivision (3) of this rule, the error was harmless as to the offense of manslaughter; the evidence showed that defendant, while intoxicated, pressed a loaded shotgun firmly against the back of the victim's neck when the shotgun discharged and that the shotgun discharges when the hammer has been pulled back and the trigger is pulled, and the jury acquitted defendant of causing the victim's death either with the purpose to do so or knowingly under circumstances manifesting extreme indifference to the value of human life. Davis v. State, 2018 Ark. App. 383, 555 S.W.3d 892 (2018).

Daughter's statements indicating the victim's intent to buy defendant out of their business were properly admitted pursuant to Ark. R. Evid. 803(3) as they reflected her plan or intent to do something in the future, and thus, they went to the victim's state of mind at the time of her death. Dorsey v. State, 2020 Ark. 316, 607 S.W.3d 485 (2020).

Rule 804. Hearsay exceptions -- Declarant unavailable.

(a) Definition of Unavailability. "Unavailability as a witness" includes situations in which the declarant:

- (1) Is exempted by ruling of the court on the ground of privilege from testifying concerning the subject matter of his statement;
- (2) Persists in refusing to testify concerning the subject matter of his statement despite an order of the court to do so;
- (3) Testifies to a lack of memory of the subject matter of his statement;

(4) Is unable to be present or to testify at the hearing because of death or then existing physical or mental illness or infirmity; or

(5) Is absent from the hearing and the proponent of his statement has been unable to procure his attendance (or in the case of a hearsay exception under subdivision (b) (2), (3), or (4), his attendance or testimony) by process or other reasonable means.

A declarant is not unavailable as a witness if his exemption, refusal, claim of lack of memory, inability, or absence is due to the procurement or wrongdoing of the proponent of his statement for the purpose of preventing the witness from attending or testifying.

(b) Hearsay Exceptions. The following are not excluded by the hearsay rule if the declarant is unavailable as a witness:

(1) Former testimony. Testimony given as a witness at another hearing of the same or a different proceeding, or in a deposition taken in compliance with law in the course of the same or another proceeding, if the party against whom the testimony is now offered, or, in a civil action or proceeding a predecessor in interest, had an opportunity and similar motive to develop the testimony by direct, cross, or redirect examination.

(2) Statement under belief of impending death. A statement made by a declarant while believing that his death was imminent, concerning the cause or circumstances of what he believed to be his impending death.

(3) Statement against interest. A statement which was at the time of its making so far contrary to the declarant's pecuniary or proprietary interest, or so far tended to subject him to civil or criminal liability or to render invalid a claim by him against another or to make him an object of hatred, ridicule, or disgrace, that a reasonable man in his position would not have made the statement unless he believed it to be true. A statement tending to expose the declarant to criminal liability and offering to exculpate the accused is not admissible unless corroborating circumstances clearly indicate the trustworthiness of the statement. A statement or confession offered against the accused in a criminal case, made by a codefendant or other person implicating both himself and the accused, is not within this exception.

(4) Statement of personal or family history.

(i) A statement concerning the declarant's own birth, adoption, marriage, divorce, legitimacy, relationship by blood, adoption, marriage, ancestry, or other similar fact of personal or family history, even though declarant had no means of acquiring personal knowledge of the matter stated; or (ii) a statement concerning the foregoing matters and death also, of another person, if the declarant was related to the other by blood, adoption, or marriage or was so intimately associated with the other's family as to be likely to have accurate information concerning the matter declared.

(5) Other exceptions. A statement not specifically covered by any of the foregoing exceptions but having equivalent circumstantial guarantees of trustworthiness, if the court determines that (i) the statement is offered as evidence of a material fact; (ii) the statement is more probative on the point for which it is offered than any other evidence which the proponent can procure through reasonable efforts; and (iii) the general purposes of these rules and the interests of justice will best be served by admission of the statements into evidence. However, a statement may not be admitted under this exception unless the proponent of it makes known to the adverse party sufficiently in advance to provide the adverse party with a fair opportunity to prepare to meet it, his intention to offer the statement and the particulars of it, including the name and address of the declarant.

(6) Child hearsay in civil cases in which the Confrontation Clause of the Sixth Amendment of the Constitution of the United States is not applicable. A statement made by a child under the age of ten (10) years concerning any type of sexual offense, or attempted sexual offense, with, on, or against the child, provided:

(A) The trial court conducts a hearing outside the presence of the jury and finds that the statement offered possesses a reasonable guarantee of trustworthiness. The trial court may employ any factor it deems appropriate including, but not limited to those listed below, in deciding whether the statement is sufficiently trustworthy.

1. The spontaneity of the statement.
2. The lack of time to fabricate.
3. The consistency and repetition of the statement and whether the child has recanted the statement.
4. The mental state of the child.
5. The competency of the child to testify.
6. The child's use of terminology unexpected of a child of similar age.
7. The lack of a motive by the child to fabricate the statement.
8. The lack of bias by the child.
9. Whether it is an embarrassing event the child would not normally relate.
10. The credibility of the person testifying to the statement.
11. Suggestiveness created by leading questions.
12. Whether an adult with custody or control of the child may bear a grudge against the accused offender, and may attempt to coach the child into making false charges.
13. Corroboration of the statement by other evidence.
14. Corroboration of the alleged offense by other evidence.

(B) The proponent of the statement gives the adverse party reasonable notice of his intention to offer the statement and the particulars of the statement.

(C) This section shall not be construed to limit the admission of an offered statement under any other hearsay exception or applicable rule of evidence.

(7) Child hearsay in criminal cases. A statement made by a child under the age of ten (10) years concerning any type of sexual offense against that child, where the Confrontation Clause of the Sixth Amendment of the United States is applicable, provided:

(A) The trial court conducts a hearing outside the presence of the jury, and, with the evidentiary presumption that the statement is unreliable and inadmissible, finds that the statement offered possesses sufficient guarantees of trustworthiness that the truthfulness of the child's statement is so clear from the surrounding circumstances that the test of cross-examination would be of marginal utility. The trial court may employ any factor it deems appropriate including, but not limited to those listed below, in deciding whether the statement is sufficiently trustworthy.

1. The spontaneity of the statement.
2. The lack of time to fabricate.
3. The consistency and repetition of the statement and whether the child has recanted the statement.

4. The mental state of the child.
5. The competency of the child to testify.
6. The child's use of terminology unexpected of a child of similar age.
7. The lack of a motive by the child to fabricate the statement.
8. The lack of bias by the child.
9. Whether it is an embarrassing event the child would not normally relate.
10. The credibility of the person testifying to the statement.
11. Suggestiveness created by leading questions.
12. Whether an adult with custody or control of the child may bear a grudge against the accused offender, and may attempt to coach the child into making false charges.

(B) The proponent of the statement gives the adverse party reasonable notice of his intention to offer the statement and the particulars of the statement.

(C) This section shall not be construed to limit the admission of an offered statement under any other hearsay exception or applicable rule of evidence.

CASE NOTES

In General.

All the common-law exceptions to the hearsay rule are based either upon necessity or upon some compelling reason for attaching more than average credibility to the hearsay, and any new exception must have circumstantial guarantees of trustworthiness equivalent to those supporting the common-law exceptions. Blaylock v. Strecker, 291 Ark. 340, 724 S.W.2d 470 (1987).

Under this rule, two requirements must be met for admissibility: (1) subsection (a) requires that the declarant be unavailable; and (2) subsection (b) requires that one of the hearsay exceptions be met. Register v. State, 313 Ark. 426, 855 S.W.2d 320 (1993).

Applicability.

Where witness was paralyzed from the neck down and incapable of moving his legs or controlling the movement of his arms, and at the time of the hearing, he had a blood clot in his left leg and was being treated at Arkansas Children's Hospital in Little Rock, this rule was inapplicable. Beck v. State, 317 Ark. 154, 876 S.W.2d 561 (1994).

Burden of Proof.

The burden of proving unavailability is on the party who offers the prior testimony. Register v. State, 313 Ark. 426, 855 S.W.2d 320 (1993).

Child Hearsay.

Subdivision (b)(7)(A) of this rule does not require a child victim to testify at the pretrial hearing. Gadberry v. State, 46 Ark. App. 121, 877 S.W.2d 941 (1994).

It was not error under subdivision (b)(7)(A) of this rule to allow the criminal investigator to testify at trial as to statements made by the victim, even though the child-victim was available and in fact testified at the trial, where the child-victim was unable to remember everything which occurred in the same detail as when she spoke to the investigator. Gadberry v. State, 46 Ark. App. 121, 877 S.W.2d 941 (1994).

In defendant's rape case, the court did not err when it denied his motion to determine the ability of the child victim to testify and when it denied his motion in limine to exclude the transcript of the interview with the victim because the child was only three at the time of the incident, her statement to the investigator was spontaneous, she did not have the ability to use time to fabricate her statement, the statement included terminology that would not typically be used by a child, the events described were not normally described by a child, and she repeated her statement several times without recanting the events described. Pratt v. State, 359 Ark. 16, 194 S.W.3d 183 (2004).

Testimony by a child victim's aunt was admissible in defendant's rape trial as within the child-hearsay exception of subdivision (b)(7) of this rule where the child's statements were spontaneous, the statements had not been recanted or recited, the child used striking terminology, and there was a lack of evidence of a motive to fabricate or of ill will. Rye v. State, 2009 Ark. App. 839, 373 S.W.3d 354 (2009).

Defendant's convictions for rape and sexual assault were appropriate because subdivision (b)(7)(A) of this rule was inapplicable since the trial court never declared the victim to have been unavailable as a witness. Rather, the trial court found that the victim's statements to his father and a doctor were hearsay exceptions under Ark. R. Evid. 803(2) and (4), where the availability of the witness was immaterial; defendant did not challenge those determinations that the statements fell under those particular hearsay exceptions on appeal. Stidam v. State, 2010 Ark. App. 278, 374 S.W.3d 246 (2010).

Evidence was not admissible under subdivision (b)(7) of this rule regarding child hearsay in criminal cases, given that the victim was 11 years old at the time of her death, and the proffered witness testified that the victim made the statement to him approximately four months before her death, and thus she could not have been under the age of 10 at the time of her alleged statement. By its own terms, subdivision (b)(7) is limited to out-of-court statements made by a child under the age of 10 years. Sharp v. State, 2015 Ark. App. 718, 479 S.W.3d 568 (2015).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in finding a child's statements to interviewers of alleged sexual abuse of the child by a parent sufficiently trustworthy because the court considered the relevant factors, including the credibility of the child's preschool teacher in testifying to the child's statements, the consistency of the statements, and the corroboration of the statements by other evidence. Hambrick v. Ark. Dep't of Human Servs., 2016 Ark. App. 458, 503 S.W.3d 134 (2016).

Construction With Other Laws.

There is no direct conflict between subdivision (b)(1) of this rule and § 5-4-616(a)(4) because the statute is limited specifically to resentencing in criminal trials, and the rule of evidence applies to all proceedings whether civil or criminal; thus, in a resentencing hearing in a murder prosecution, the trial court properly allowed the use of testimony from a prior sentencing hearing without evidence of unavailability. Greene v. State, 343 Ark. 526, 37 S.W.3d 579, cert. denied, 534 U.S. 858, 122 S.Ct. 135, 151 L. Ed. 2d 88 (2001).

Determination by Court.

In the prosecution of the defendant for rape of a 5-year-old girl, the court did not abuse its discretion in allowing the introduction of statements made by the girl between 10 days and 2 weeks after the incident, in which she first stated that the defendant placed his penis in her mouth and ejaculated, where the court carefully considered, weighed, and detailed the factors enumerated in the rule. Jameson v. State, 333 Ark. 128, 970 S.W.2d 785 (1998).

Discretion of Court.

A trial judge does have some discretion in deciding if a good faith effort was made and whether a witness cannot be procured by process or other "reasonable means." In making its determination, a trial court has some discretion to accept or reject statements and representations of counsel, and a lesser standard of proof of unavailability is required in civil cases than in criminal cases. Spears v. State Farm Fire & Cas. Ins., 291 Ark. 465, 725 S.W.2d 835 (1987).

Dying Declaration.

Where a stabbing victim was overheard during the stabbing, screaming that the defendant was killing her, where victim told the responding police officer that she was not going to make it because she had lost too much blood, and where she told the attending physician several times that she was dying and named the defendant as her attacker, testimony concerning all of these statements was admissible under the dying declaration exception contained in subdivision (b)(2) of this rule, since each of the statements was made concerning the cause or circumstances of what she believed to be her impending death. Singleton v. State, 274 Ark. 126, 623 S.W.2d 180 (1981), cert. denied, 456 U.S. 938, 102 S. Ct. 1996, 72 L. Ed. 2d 458 (1982), cert. denied, 459 U.S. 882, 103 S. Ct. 184, 74 L. Ed. 2d 149 (1982).

In order to qualify as a dying declaration, the statement must be made by a witness, who believed at the time of the statement that his death was imminent and whose declaration referred to the cause of his death. Boone v. State, 282 Ark. 274, 668 S.W.2d 17 (1984).

For a statement to be admissible as a dying declaration, it must be shown that the declarant was possessed of a sense of imminent, inevitable death; this fact need not be shown by the declarant's express words alone, but can be supplied by inferences fairly drawn from his condition. Boone v. State, 282 Ark. 274, 668 S.W.2d 17 (1984); Barker v. State, 21 Ark. App. 56, 728 S.W.2d 204 (1987).

Where child abuse victim had vomited blood and asked his mother if he were going to die and made his statement declaring that mother's boyfriend had beaten him before his mother told him he was not going to die, there was substantial evidence to support a conclusion that the child believed he was about to die and the statement proffered as a dying declaration was erroneously suppressed. Boone v. State, 282 Ark. 274, 668 S.W.2d 17 (1984).

Where defendant was accused of murder, the trial court properly excluded victim's statement that he did not want anything to harm the defendant, as the statement did not fall within the hearsay exception because it in no way concerned or described the cause or circumstances of the declarant's impending death. Thompson v. State, 306 Ark. 193, 813 S.W.2d 249 (1991).

It is the declarant's belief in the nearness of death when he makes the statement, not the swiftness with which the death actually ensues, which is most important. Bargery v. State, 37 Ark. App. 118, 825 S.W.2d 831 (1992).

The fact that the declarant was possessed of a sense of imminent and inevitable death need not be shown by the deceased's express words, but may be supplied by inferences drawn from his condition, imminent danger, and other circumstances that indicated a sense of impending death. Bargery v. State, 37 Ark. App. 118, 825 S.W.2d 831 (1992).

The appellate court will reverse the determination of the trial court that evidence is admissible under subdivision (b)(2) of this rule only if there is an abuse of discretion. Bargery v. State, 37 Ark. App. 118, 825 S.W.2d 831 (1992).

Where the evidence showed that the deceased collapsed almost immediately after suffering a stab wound that severely damaged his heart, and his statement that the defendant had stabbed him clearly referred to the cause and circumstances of his death, given the obvious severity of the wound the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the testimony. Simpkins v. State, 48 Ark. App. 14, 889 S.W.2d 37 (1994).

Evidence regarding a telephone conversation between a murder victim and his ex-wife in which the victim stated that the defendant, who was his current wife, had a gun pointed at him and was going to shoot him could not be admitted into evidence as a dying declaration as there was no evidence that the victim was possessed of a sense of imminent and inevitable death. Thomas v. State, 62 Ark. App. 168, 973 S.W.2d 1 (1998).

A dying declaration by a murder victim that the defendant shot him was properly admitted into evidence, notwithstanding that drugs were present in the victim's urine, where drugs were not present in his blood and three persons who heard the dying declaration testified that he spoke clearly, made sense, and did not appear to be drunk. Hammon v. State, 338 Ark. 733, 2 S.W.3d 50 (1999).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in determining that the victim's statement was a dying declaration under subdivision (b)(2) of this rule where the evidence showed that the victim's condition was grave and that she was no doubt aware of the severity of her injuries; there was enough proof to show a fear of imminent death. Grant v. State, 357 Ark. 91, 161 S.W.3d 785 (2004), cert. denied, 555 U.S. 843, 129 S. Ct. 84, 172 L. Ed. 2d 73 (2008).

In a murder case, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting as a dying declaration the victim's response, "Q," when he was asked who shot him. The statement clearly referred to and concerned the circumstances and cause of the victim's impending death, and qualified as a dying declaration. Plessy v. State, 2012 Ark. App. 74, 388 S.W.3d 509 (2012).

Admitting body-camera footage and the victim's 911 call statements was proper as the ownership of the gun found in the barbershop and whether the victim and defendant were fighting concerned the cause or circumstances of what the victim believed to be his impending death. Gentry v. State, 2021 Ark. 26 (2021).

Effect of New Rule.

The repeal of the former Dead Man's Statute by the adoption of the Uniform Rules of Evidence was a rule of evidence or a "procedural" change and thus the new rule was applicable where the trial, as opposed to the operative facts, occurred after the change in the law. Ashmore v. Ford, 267 Ark. 854, 591 S.W.2d 666 (Ct. App. 1979), limited, Druckenmiller v. Cluff, 316 Ark. 517, 873 S.W.2d 526 (1994).

Former Testimony.

Where the defendant's defense was that he did not rob the restaurant nor rape the female employees of the restaurant, and the doctor who had testified at the first trial only testified that the women had had sexual intercourse within the six hours prior to his examinations, nothing more could have been asked of the doctor and, therefore, the defendant was unsuccessful when he contended that it was improper under subdivision (b)(1) of this rule to admit the doctor's former testimony at the second trial because when it was given the defendant's counsel was representing two other codefendants and could not properly cross-examine the doctor. Holloway v. State, 268 Ark. 24, 594 S.W.2d 2 (1980).

Where the state knew that a new trial would be necessary because the United States Supreme Court had reversed the defendant's convictions of rape and robbery, but the state waited for a year to obtain a subpoena for a doctor who had testified at the first trial, and then the state waited on a medical center to find the doctor until it was too late to obtain him under § 16-43-403, the state's efforts were not reasonable under subdivision (a)(5) of this rule; however, the state's misconduct in reading into the record the doctor's testimony given at the first trial was harmless error, since the doctor's testimony was not critical because a rape victim's testimony need not be corroborated. Holloway v. State, 268 Ark. 24, 594 S.W.2d 2 (1980).

Where the defendant, in a civil action for assault and battery, requested that testimony, given by three witnesses at his previous criminal trials on the same assault and battery incident, be admitted into evidence in the civil action, the trial judge properly ruled that the former testimony was inadmissible in the civil action because the plaintiff in the civil action was not a party to the criminal trial, nor was the state a predecessor in interest to the civil plaintiff. Bolden v. Carter, 269 Ark. 391, 602 S.W.2d 640 (1980).

When the declarant is unavailable as a witness, his former testimony at another hearing of the same or different proceeding is not excluded by the hearsay rule if the party against whom the testimony is offered had an opportunity and similar motive to develop the testimony by direct, cross, or redirect examination.

The burden of proving the unavailability of the witness is on the party who offers the prior testimony. Spears v. State Farm Fire & Cas. Ins., 291 Ark. 465, 725 S.W.2d 835 (1987).

The testimony of a confidential informant held reliable and admissible under subdivision (b)(1) of this rule. Scroggins v. State, 312 Ark. 106, 848 S.W.2d 400 (1993).

Unavailable witness' testimony at second trial barred for lack of opportunity to develop her testimony under subdivision (b)(1) of this rule or as a violation of the appellant's right to confront witnesses under the Sixth Amendment, even though first conviction overturned due to ineffective assistance of counsel. Vick v. State, 314 Ark. 618, 863 S.W.2d 820 (1993).

The trial court did not err in admitting into evidence at a criminal trial certain testimony which had been given at an earlier hearing in juvenile court, where the witness later invoked her Fifth Amendment right not to testify. Hamblen v. State, 44 Ark. App. 54, 866 S.W.2d 119 (1993).

Defendant's right under the Confrontation Clause was not violated when the testimony given by an officer at the first trial was allowed to be introduced and read at the second trial, where the officer died after the mistrial and before the second trial, because defendant had had sufficient opportunity and similar motive to develop his testimony as permitted under subdivision (b)(1) of this rule. Espinosa v. State, 317 Ark. 198, 876 S.W.2d 569 (1994).

A witness was unavailable so as to fall within the hearsay exception found in subdivision (b)(1) of this rule for former testimony where the state established that the witness was located outside the United States and not subject to subpoena or other process. Hale v. State, 343 Ark. 62, 31 S.W.3d 850 (2000), cert. denied, 532 U.S. 1039, 121 S. Ct. 2001, 149 L. Ed. 2d 1003 (2001).

Court properly allowed the state to read an absent witness's prior sworn testimony from a suppression hearing into the record because defendant had a similar motive to develop the witness's cross-examination at both the suppression hearing and at trial. Bertrand v. State, 363 Ark. 422, 214 S.W.3d 822 (2005).

Pursuant to subdivision (b)(1) of this rule, the circuit court erred in admitting a witness's testimony from the bond-reduction hearing at trial because defendant did not have a similar motive to develop the witness's testimony at that hearing; the purpose of Ark. R. Crim. P. 8.5 was not solely to attack the state's proof; rather, the judicial officer's inquiry also included an assessment of defendant's connection to the community, familial relationships, and history of appearing in court after a pretrial release, and defendant's motive at the bond-reduction hearing was to obtain a pretrial release from jail. Beasley v. State, 370 Ark. 238, 258 S.W.3d 728 (2007).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the trial transcripts of the two witnesses from defendant's resentencing hearing under this rule because there was nothing to show that counsel's cross-examination of the witnesses was deficient. Sanders v. State, 2014 Ark. 40 (2014).

Informant's pretrial testimony was properly admitted where the informant was no longer alive and was unable to testify at trial, defendant had an opportunity to cross-examine him at the suppression hearing, and the purpose of that prior cross-examination was to cast doubt on the identification of defendant and show the existence of a possible bias. Dennis v. State, 2016 Ark. 395, 503 S.W.3d 761 (2016).

Admitting an unavailable witness's testimony from defendant's first trial that ended in a mistrial was not an abuse of discretion where defense counsel had the opportunity and similar motive in cross-examining the witness in the first trial, and the fact that the witness was not cross-examined about his criminal history in the first trial did not change that. Terrell v. State, 2019 Ark. App. 433, 587 S.W.3d 594 (2019).

Trial court did not err in ruling that the battery victim was unavailable as a witness and in admitting his prior sworn testimony into evidence as he was properly subpoenaed well before trial; the State was not aware until the afternoon before trial that the victim had left the jurisdiction or that he did not intend to comply with the subpoena; and the State actively tried to locate the victim to secure his attendance at trial. Johnson v. State, 2020 Ark. App. 157, 596 S.W.3d 83 (2020).

Full-Fledged Hearing.

Where a preliminary hearing is held either under § 16-85-201 [repealed], a discretionary procedure, or Ark. R. Crim. P. 8, an informal, nonadversary hearing, neither is the full-fledged hearing involving extensive cross-examination from which a transcript can be admitted at trial under this rule. Scott v. State, 272 Ark. 88, 612 S.W.2d 110 (1981).

Identification of Defendant.

Where in a prosecution for attempted robbery, the defendant stated that she was with her brother at the scene of the incident, and where both the victim and another witness testified that only one female other than the victim was present at the scene of the incident, the victim was properly allowed to testify as to what she heard the "female" say while the victim was under attack, despite the fact that the victim could not positively identify the defendant as the "female" who had allegedly stated "give us some money" since the other evidence sufficiently identified the defendant as the declarant. Holmes v. State, 268 Ark. 601, 594 S.W.2d 267 (Ct. App. 1980).

No reversible error ensued from the trial court's admission of the victim's statement that the defendant shot him, even though the statement failed to meet the requirements of a dying declaration since the defendant admitted to shooting the victim. Thompson v. State, 306 Ark. 193, 813 S.W.2d 249 (1991).

Lack of Corroboration.

Where a written statement was not made until four years after the crime, on the eve of the trial, and where the declarant apparently made it to help the defendant, but he protected himself by not signing it and by asserting that he committed the rape at gunpoint, but where no other testimony suggested that anything of the kind took place, corroborating circumstances did not clearly indicate its trustworthiness. Welch v. State, 269 Ark. 208, 599 S.W.2d 717, cert. denied, 449 U.S. 996, 101 S. Ct. 535, 66 L. Ed. 2d 294 (1980).

Where defendants in a burglary prosecution declined to testify, but sought to introduce statements each had given the police after their arrest which claimed they had brought the stolen articles from two men they met that morning and such statements were offered as an admission against penal interest on the theory that the statements exposed the defendants to a charge of receiving stolen property, the circumstances surrounding such statements failed decidedly to meet the test that corroborating circumstances must indicate their trustworthiness and the trial court was right to exclude them. Tillman v. State, 275 Ark. 275, 630 S.W.2d 5 (1982), cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1201, 103 S. Ct. 1185, 75 L. Ed. 2d 432 (1983).

Lack of Memory.

Where witness claimed not to recollect defendant's participation in crime, he became unavailable, and thus his prior inconsistent statement was admissible as substantive evidence for the state; nevertheless, the witness was entitled to an opportunity to explain or deny his former statement and it was an abuse of the trial court's discretion to refuse the defendant the right to make a proffer of testimony during the in-chambers hearing. David v. State, 269 Ark. 498, 601 S.W.2d 864 (1980).

If a witness has only a partial recollection, the witness may be partially unavailable. Gadberry v. State, 46 Ark. App. 121, 877 S.W.2d 941 (1994).

Residual Exception.

Evid. Rule 803(24) and subdivision (b)(5) of this rule do not spell out a specific exception to the general prohibition against hearsay; instead, they list several matters to be considered as conditions to the admissibility of hearsay not falling within a recognized exception. Such provisions were not intended to throw open a wide door for the entry of judicially created exceptions to the hearsay rule but are to be narrowly construed. Hill v. Brown, 283 Ark. 185, 672 S.W.2d 330 (1984).

Where it was argued that the declarants were unavailable, though it was not shown what efforts were made to gain their presence, or why the state was not informed of their availability when the affidavits were taken, it was held that ordinary affidavits taken under oath do not carry the same trustworthiness as the exceptions to hearsay listed in subdivision (b)(5) of this rule and the trial court was correct in excluding the affidavits. Poe v. State, 291 Ark. 79, 722 S.W.2d 576 (1987).

Unsworn statement which did not contain the "equivalent circumstantial guarantees of trustworthiness" inherent in the other hearsay exceptions under subdivision (b) of this rule was not admissible under the residual hearsay exception. Foreman v. State, 321 Ark. 167, 901 S.W.2d 802 (1995).

Trial court did not err in refusing to admit the alleged testimony of the victim under subdivision (b)(5) of this rule; the statement that another man put his finger in a hole in her jeans, which bothered her, was found not to carry substantial guarantees of trustworthiness, and there appeared to be little if any probative value to the evidence, as whether the man made the advance was not material to the question of whether the victim was raped and if defendant was the perpetrator, and DNA evidence completely excluded the man as a source of the semen found on the victim's body. Sharp v. State, 2015 Ark. App. 718, 479 S.W.3d 568 (2015).

—Trustworthiness.

Any new exceptions to the hearsay rule under subdivision (b)(5) of this rule must have circumstantial guarantees of trustworthiness equivalent to the guarantees supporting the common-law exceptions, necessity or some compelling reason for attaching more than average credibility to the hearsay. Hill v. Brown, 283 Ark. 185, 672 S.W.2d 330 (1984); Tippitt v. State, 294 Ark. 342, 742 S.W.2d 931 (1988).

In action for partition of land on death of tenant in common, since testimony of decedent's wife and attorney for decedent's estate that decedent had told them that he had bought other tenant in common's interest would have been self-serving, he could not have been cross-examined about it and it could have been readily fabricated, it was not a statement attended by inherent guarantees of trustworthiness as required by Evid. Rule 803(24) and subdivision (b)(5) of this rule and was thus properly excluded. Hill v. Brown, 283 Ark. 185, 672 S.W.2d 330 (1984).

Subdivision (b)(5) of this rule not applicable where statement did not have equivalent guarantees of trustworthiness, and defendant did not prove that witness was unavailable. Halfacre v. State, 292 Ark. 331, 731 S.W.2d 179 (1987).

Right of Confrontation.

The right of confrontation by a witness may be dispensed with when that witness is unavailable and has given testimony in a previous proceeding against the same defendant, provided the witness was subject to cross-examination in the first proceeding by that defendant. Lewis v. State, 288 Ark. 595, 709 S.W.2d 56 (1986), writ denied, Lewis v. Hobbs, 2014 Ark. 407, 443 S.W.3d 530 (2014).

Where a four-year-old rape victim was incompetent to testify and unavailable for trial under Arkansas' Child Hearsay Rule, subdivision (b)(7) of this rule, the child's mother and social worker were permitted to testify as to the child's hearsay statements of abuse. Because the child's statements were nontestimonial under the Crawford analysis, defendant's Sixth Amendment confrontation rights were not violated. Seely v. State, 373 Ark. 141, 282 S.W.3d 778, cert. denied, 555 U.S. 898, 129 S. Ct. 218, 172 L. Ed. 2d 169 (2008).

There was a Confrontation Clause violation when a trial court determined that child hearsay testimony was admissible under this rule where the primary purpose of an interview was for prosecution; allowing the interview did not amount to harmless error because, without the victim's statement, there was not enough evidence to support the finding of rape. N.W. v. State, 2015 Ark. App. 57, 454 S.W.3d 271 (2015).

Signed Statement Inadmissible.

Signed statement of out-of-state witness to murder was not admissible under subdivision (b)(5) of this rule because it did not contain the "equivalent circumstantial guarantees of trustworthiness" and because the record did not reflect that the witness' attendance was sought under § 16-43-401 et seq., so that she was not "unavailable" as required by subsection (a), and subdivision (b)(5) exception did not apply. Doles v. State, 275 Ark. 448, 631 S.W.2d 281 (1982); Doles v. State, 280 Ark. 299, 657 S.W.2d 538 (1983).

Statement Against Interest.

Police detective testimony in adjudication hearing of a dependency-neglect proceeding about what the detective heard a child say in the child's forensic interview was not a statement against interest. However, the error in the admission of the statement was harmless because the father conceded that the child was abused by the mother, the evidence of the child's abuse was admitted through a nurse's testimony, and photographs of the child's bruises were admitted in evidence. Ussery v.

Ark. Dep't of Hum. Servs., 2022 Ark. App. 250, 646 S.W.3d 266 (2022).

In case involving conversion of escrow funds by a bank president, where defendant president also acted as real estate broker in purchase of farm financed by his bank, the testimony of the purchasers, without objection, that they had never agreed to the real estate commission and that defendant had disclaimed any interest in a commission prior to closing the sale of the farm, was not hearsay, since defendant was a party-opponent in the action and the statement attributed to him was clearly admissible as an admission under Rule 801, and further, even if he had not been a party-opponent, defendant's statement would be permitted as a statement which at the time it was made was contrary to defendant's pecuniary or proprietary interest and thus an exception to the hearsay rule under subdivision (b)(3) of this rule. First Nat'l Bank v. Nash, 2 Ark. App. 135, 617 S.W.2d 24 (1981).

The trial court was correct in determining that the corroborating circumstances did not clearly indicate the trustworthiness of the declarant's statement and did not abuse its discretion in excluding the testimony of a witness under subdivision (b)(3) of this rule. Williford v. State, 300 Ark. 151, 777 S.W.2d 839 (1989); Sanders v. State, 305 Ark. 112, 805 S.W.2d 953 (1991).

Statement by defendant's girlfriend that implicated herself and defendant in criminal activity was sufficient to support the jury's verdict against defendant on the marijuana possession count; however, defendant's conviction reversed on the issue of the admissibility of the girlfriend's statement, since the statement was not within the hearsay exception, and its admission was prohibited under subdivision (b)(3) of this rule. Burkett v. State, 40 Ark. App. 150, 842 S.W.2d 857 (1992).

Statement was not admissible as a statement against social interest. Foreman v. State, 321 Ark. 167, 901 S.W.2d 802 (1995).

Statement was not admissible under subdivision (b)(3) of this rule as a statement against penal interest because § 5-54-122 does not punish the declarant who makes a true statement, only a false one. Admission of statement under subdivision (b)(3) was prejudicial error. Foreman v. State, 321 Ark. 167, 901 S.W.2d 802 (1995).

The trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting a decedent's statements concerning his intent to make a gift of a car to his son since the decedent was unavailable because he was deceased and the statements were declarations against the pecuniary interest of his estate. O'Fallon v. O'Fallon, 341 Ark. 138, 14 S.W.3d 506 (2000).

Trial court properly admitted that portion of a written statement in which a witness told police that defendant admitted being involved in a robbery because the statement qualified as a recorded recollection under Ark. R. Evid. 803(5) because the witness told police that the statement was true at the time it was made and an officer testified that the statement was accurately recorded; it was, however, error to admit that portion of the written statement in which a third party implicated both himself and defendant in the robbery because the statement was not made in furtherance of the conspiracy as required by Ark. R. Evid. 801(d)(2)(v) and was not a statement against the declarant's interest within the meaning of subdivision (b)(3) of this rule. Lawrence v. State, 81 Ark. App. 390, 104 S.W.3d 393 (2003).

During defendant's trial on charges of being an accomplice for two counts of rape and one count of second-degree sexual assault for acts committed against her daughter by two different men who had resided with defendant, the trial court did not err in admitting statements that one of the men, a co-defendant, made to the investigating detective; defendant's reliance on the last sentence of subdivision (b)(3) of this rule was unavailing. Hutcheson v. State, 92 Ark. App. 307, 213 S.W.3d 25 (2005).

In a case where a step-daughter conveyed a decedent's property to herself under a power of attorney, a trial court erred by finding that an agreement between the step-daughter and the decedent was the product of undue influence without hearing a neighbor's testimony; the decedent's statement of intent was admissible under subdivision (b)(3) of this rule. The statement from the decedent that he intended to give property to the step-daughter was against the pecuniary interest of the estate. Duke v. Shinpaugh, 101 Ark. App. 331, 276 S.W.3d 713 (2008), superseded, 375 Ark. 358, 290 S.W.3d 591 (2009).

Statement-against-interest hearsay exception in subdivision (b)(3) of this rule did not apply to permit the introduction of the testimony of an inmate of defendant's accomplice, who would have testified as to admissions that the accomplice made to the inmate, as the accomplice's statement did nothing to exculpate defendant. Lacy v. State, 2010 Ark. 388, 377 S.W.3d 227 (2010), cert. denied, 563 U.S. 964, 131 S. Ct. 2158, 179 L. Ed. 2d 942 (2011).

As a settlor's hearsay statements regarding who should or would benefit from the trust had no bearing on whether the estate itself would benefit from the trust corpus, they were not against the interest of the declarant's estate and thus were not admissible under subdivision (b)(3) of this rule as statements against interest. Eft v. Rogers, 2012 Ark. App. 632, 425 S.W.3d 1 (2012).

In defendant's murder case, there was no abuse of discretion in the circuit court's decision to exclude the testimony regarding an accomplice's statement against penal interest because the proffered statement did not exculpate defendant; rather, it implicated defendant as an accomplice in the robberies and murders. Both the accomplice and defendant agreed that defendant did not commit the murders, but both admitted that defendant helped load the bodies into the truck after the women had been murdered. Winters v. State, 2013 Ark. 193, 427 S.W.3d 597 (2013).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in excluding testimony that a third person had confessed to the crimes due to lack of trustworthiness, after considering the declarant's drug use, inconsistencies between the statements by the witness, defendant's aunt, and the timing of her disclosure, after the declarant was dead and while defendant was in jail, as well as her relationship to defendant. Friar v. State, 2016 Ark. 245 (2016).

Statement by Accomplice.

In a prosecution for capital felony murder and aggravated robbery, the court did not err in excluding the testimony of an Arizona police officer who had interviewed the accused's accomplice, where the accomplice invoked the Fifth Amendment and was thus unavailable as a witness, but where the testimony of the officer relating to statements by the accomplice was offered on behalf of the accused. Brewer v. State, 271 Ark. 254, 608 S.W.2d 363 (1980).

Accomplice's statement that he committed the murder was not admissible unless it was proved trustworthy by corroboration and did not exclude defendant's accomplice liability, so it did not fall within the statement against interest exception in subdivision (b)(3) of this rule. Cox v. State, 345 Ark. 391, 47 S.W.3d 244 (2001), cert. denied, 534 U.S. 1022, 122 S. Ct. 549, 151 L. Ed. 2d 426 (2001), writ denied, 2011 Ark. 96 (2011).

Signed, notarized, hand-written statement authored by defendant's girlfriend did not come within the "statement against interest" exception to the hearsay rule because it implicated both her and defendant. Ross v. State, 2015 Ark. App. 613, 474 S.W.3d 539 (2015).

Witness Not Unavailable.

Where all that defendant's attorney did was to "make some phone calls" and "spoke to who I think is his family," such does not meet the requirement of a good faith effort to procure the attendance of the missing witness by process or other reasonable means. Register v. State, 313 Ark. 426, 855 S.W.2d 320 (1993).

When there is no attempt to serve process or other effort to obtain the attendance of the missing witness, there is no good faith effort to procure the attendance of the witness, and he is not unavailable as defined by subdivision (a)(5) of this rule. Register v. State, 313 Ark. 426, 855 S.W.2d 320 (1993).

Subdivision (a)(2)'s exception under this rule did not apply because the trial court never ordered defense witness to testify, and defense witness never refused to do so. Rather, defense witness was available, and the trial court ruled the testimony would be hearsay. Johnson v. State, 321 Ark. 117, 900 S.W.2d 940 (1995).

Witness was not unavailable where defendant stated only that he had spoken to some people about a witness and admitted that the witness could possibly have been located; the defendant failed in good faith to use "reasonable efforts" to locate the witness. Jones v. State, 326 Ark. 61, 931 S.W.2d 83 (1996).

Witness Unavailable.

Where complaining witness testified briefly at preliminary hearing on possession of firearms, then moved to California and was unavailable to testify on the date of trial, the transcript of her testimony could not be admitted into evidence at the trial, since, although the witness was unavailable, the fact that the testimony was given at a hearing where defendants were unable to develop the testimony by direct, cross or redirect examination rendered it inadmissible under this rule and violated defendant's right to confrontation of the witness under the Sixth Amendment of the United States Constitution. Scott v. State, 272 Ark. 88, 612 S.W.2d 110 (1981).

A licensed physician who has known and treated a patient for ten years can testify as to whether that person is mentally competent to be a witness or whether the person has a mental infirmity so as to be unavailable as a witness; the physician need not necessarily be a psychologist or psychiatrist. Gruzen v. State, 276 Ark. 149, 634 S.W.2d 92, cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1020, 103 S. Ct. 386, 74 L. Ed. 2d 517 (1982).

Where the defendant's conviction for manslaughter was reversed and the case was remanded for a new trial, the trial court correctly ruled that a witness who had testified in the first trial was "unavailable" at the second trial, where she was pregnant and both her doctor and the court determined that her appearance in court would represent a considerable hazard to her health and her pregnancy; therefore, her prior recorded testimony was admissible under this rule. Worring v. State, 6 Ark. App. 64, 638 S.W.2d 678 (1982).

The burden of proving the unavailability of the witness is on the party who offers the prior testimony. Worring v. State, 6 Ark. App. 64, 638 S.W.2d 678 (1982).

The burden of proving the unavailability of a witness is on the party who offers the prior testimony, and on appeal the Supreme Court determines whether the trial court abused its discretion in ruling that the witness was unavailable. Lewis v. State, 288 Ark. 595, 709 S.W.2d 56 (1986), writ denied, Lewis v. Hobbs, 2014 Ark. 407, 443 S.W.3d 530 (2014).

Where the subpoena was served and the witness appeared on the date stated in the subpoena, there was nothing to alert the state to any likelihood that the witness would not return for the second day of the trial, and when he failed to appear, the prosecutor dispatched a deputy sheriff to search for him, the state made a good faith effort to obtain the presence of the witness, and his testimony from the first trial was properly admitted into evidence. Lewis v. State, 288 Ark. 595, 709 S.W.2d 56 (1986), writ denied, Lewis v. Hobbs, 2014 Ark. 407, 443 S.W.3d 530 (2014).

Trial court erred in finding witness, victim in rape prosecution, unavailable, where state made no effort whatever to serve a subpoena on its key witness at her Mississippi address, which was readily available. Leshe v. State, 304 Ark. 442, 803 S.W.2d 522 (1991).

Subdivision (a)(5) of this rule makes no distinction between the government and the defendant in defining the word “unavailable”; in order to satisfy the requirements of the Confrontation Clause, a witness in a criminal case is only unavailable if a good faith effort has been made to procure that witness. Register v. State, 313 Ark. 426, 855 S.W.2d 320 (1993).

State’s considerable effort and thorough search for witness held good faith effort to procure witness under subdivision (a)(5) of this rule. Vick v. State, 314 Ark. 618, 863 S.W.2d 820 (1993).

Because what was at stake in a bond-revocation hearing was substantially different from what was at stake in a full-fledged hearing at trial, the state did not demonstrate that defendant had a similar motive in the trial in order to make use of subdivision (b)(1) of this rule; thus, the unavailable officer’s testimony from the bond-revocation hearing was erroneously admitted into evidence. Proctor v. State, 349 Ark. 648, 79 S.W.3d 370 (2002).

Rule 805. Hearsay within hearsay.

Hearsay included within hearsay is not excluded under the hearsay rule if each part of the combined statements conforms with an exception to the hearsay rule provided in these rules.

CASE NOTES

Limiting Instruction.

Defendant did not request a limiting instruction that the license plate number could not be considered for the truth of the matter asserted but only for the purpose of explaining the officer’s actions, and thus there was no reversible error. Chatfield v. State, 2013 Ark. App. 565 (2013).

No Prejudice Shown.

As the same information came in and defendant did not object, the error was harmless and no prejudice was shown. Chatfield v. State, 2013 Ark. App. 565 (2013).

Trial court did not err by allowing testimony of the victim’s mother as none of the statements were hearsay; the mother did not testify as to what the victim said during a telephone conversation, but rather testified as to her perceptions of whether defendant and the victim would remarry, and the mother’s testimony concerning her knowledge of a job offer that was extended to the victim was admissible because the mother testified as to her son’s preparations to move to Texas and Alaska. Vidos v. State, 367 Ark. 296, 239 S.W.3d 467 (2006).

Although victim was unavailable because he was deceased, defendant’s civil attorney chose not to cross examine victim during the deposition even though criminal charges had been filed against defendant; thus, the deposition testimony was properly admitted into evidence. Simmons v. State, 95 Ark. App. 114, 234 S.W.3d 321 (2006).

State’s investigator’s testimony showed that the state made a good-faith effort to procure the attendance of the witness at trial, and there was no abuse of discretion in finding that the witness was unavailable pursuant to subdivision (a)(5) of this rule. Beasley v. State, 370 Ark. 238, 258 S.W.3d 728 (2007).

dant did not object, the error was harmless and no prejudice was shown. Chatfield v. State, 2013 Ark. App. 565 (2013).

Statement to Attorney.

Testimony that plaintiff’s attorney had told plaintiff that defendant insurance company’s agent had told him that the driver of a car with whom plaintiff had an accident had less coverage than he actually had, was double hearsay, and since plaintiff’s attorney was not an agent for the defendant insurance company, the testimony was inadmissible. Marrow v. State Farm Ins. Co., 264 Ark. 227, 570 S.W.2d 607 (1978).

Rule 806. Attacking and supporting credibility of declarant.

If a hearsay statement, or a statement defined in Rule 801(d)(2)(iii), (iv), or (v), has been admitted in evidence, the credibility of the declarant may be attacked, and if attacked may be supported, by any evidence which would be admissible for those purposes if declarant had testified as a witness. Evidence of a statement or conduct by the declarant at any time, inconsistent with his hearsay statement, is not subject to any requirement that he may have been afforded an opportunity to deny or explain. If the party against whom a hearsay statement has been admitted calls the declarant as a witness, the party is entitled to examine him on the statement as if under cross-examination.

On The Horns of an Evidentiary Dilemma:

CASE NOTES

In General.

Neither Evid. Rules 608, 609, 613, nor this rule permit impeachment by extrinsic evidence on a collateral matter. Teas v. State, 23 Ark. App. 154, 744 S.W.2d 739 (1988).

Applicability.

Where question put to a rape victim's mother was not intended to prove the truth of the child's prior assertion, but only that the prior statement had in fact been made, it was not a hearsay statement, and this rule could have no application. Teas v. State, 23 Ark. App. 154, 744 S.W.2d 739 (1988).

Construction.

The utterer of words which have been adopted as an admission by the defendant, pursuant to Rule 801, is subject to impeachment under this rule. Lewis v. Gubanski, 50 Ark. App. 255, 905 S.W.2d 847 (1995).

Inmate who was convicted of murder argued that he received ineffective assistance of counsel in that counsel failed to impeach testimony by his stepmother on account of bias; although the court agreed with defendant that this rule did not have to be read in conjunction with Ark. R. Evid. 801(d)(2), the argument failed because defendant did not present evidence that the stepmother was, in fact, angry or biased. Johnson v. State, 356 Ark. 534, 157 S.W.3d 151, cert. denied, 543 U.S. 932, 125 S. Ct. 326, 160 L. Ed. 2d 235 (2004).

Testimony Excluded.

Trial court did not err in excluding testimony as further impeachment of the victim's credibility where, for the purpose of eliciting testimony that the events mentioned in the rape victim's prior statement had never occurred, the defendant attempted to call to the stand a witness alleged to have been mentioned and identified in the prior statement. Teas v. State, 23 Ark. App. 154, 744 S.W.2d 739 (1988).

Defendant was not allowed to introduce second, more exculpatory statement he made to deputy sheriff to shore up his credibility, where inconsistencies between his two statements were not sufficient to show the state specifically attacked the credibility of his first statement. Williams v. State, 329 Ark. 8, 946 S.W.2d 678 (1997).

Truth of the Matter Asserted.

While a license plate number could be admissible to show why the officer went to a certain address, the State was seeking to bolster the victim's identification by proving that the license plate matched the vehicle that belonged to defendant's mother, and as it was offered for the truth of the matter asserted, the trial court abused its discretion in admitting this hearsay. Chatfield v. State, 2013 Ark. App. 565 (2013).

(7) Public records or reports. Evidence that a writing authorized by law to be recorded or filed and in fact recorded or filed in a public office, or a purported public record, report, statement, or data compilation, in any form, is from the public office where items of this nature are kept.

CASE NOTESAuthentication by Party Proponent.

The fact that the party proponent supplied the authentication of the document sought to be introduced does not go to the admissibility of the document, although it may go to the weight of the evidence. McDermott v. Strauss, 283 Ark. 444, 678 S.W.2d 334 (1984).

Court did not err in admitting text messages from a cellular telephone number assigned to defendant because testimony from a cellular telephone company employee that the text messages came from a telephone number assigned to defendant, testimony from additional witnesses, and the contents of the messages were sufficient to authenticate the messages under subdivisions (b)(1) and (4) of this rule. Gulley v. State, 2012 Ark. 368, 423 S.W.3d 569 (2012).

Chain of Custody.

The purpose of the rule requiring a chain of custody is to guard against the introduction of evidence which is not authenticated; in establishing a chain of custody prior to the introduction of evidence at the trial, it is not necessary to eliminate every possibility that the evidence has been tampered with. Meador v. State, 10 Ark. App. 325, 664 S.W.2d 878 (1984).

The fact that the weapon allegedly used in an attempted robbery was not in the sheriff's possession at all times and also that there was no serial number on the receipt made at the sheriff's office, goes to the weight to be given the evidence, rather than its admissibility. Meador v. State, 10 Ark. App. 325, 664 S.W.2d 878 (1984).

The effect of minor discrepancies in the chain of custody are for the trial court to weigh. White v. State, 290 Ark. 130, 717 S.W.2d 784 (1986).

The purpose of establishing the chain of custody is to prevent the introduction of evidence which is not authentic. White v. State, 290 Ark. 130, 717 S.W.2d 784 (1986).

When an object is subject to positive identification, proof of the chain of custody need not be as conclusive as it should be with respect to interchangeable items, such as blood samples or drugs. White v. State, 290 Ark. 130, 717 S.W.2d 784 (1986).

Where the items in question were all identified by the police officer and forensic serologist, and there was no actual allegation of tampering, the chain of custody was sufficient. White v. State, 290 Ark. 130, 717 S.W.2d 784 (1986).

Where the substance at issue was described differently by an undercover officer and the forensic chemist, the state was required to do more than trace the route of the envelope containing the substance. Crisco v. State, 328 Ark. 388, 943 S.W.2d 582, modified, 328 Ark. 393, 945 S.W.2d 383 (1997).

Where the officer testified that, upon approaching defendant to score a rock, defendant gave him two rocks, while the chemist testified that "it was one plastic bag containing one white-off-white, rock-like substance," the appellate court viewed any difference in the descriptions as, at most, conflicts in evidence properly weighed by the finder of fact, rather than as a failure to prove the authenticity of the cocaine. Hawkins v. State, 81 Ark. App. 479, 105 S.W.3d 397 (2003).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion by admitting drug evidence over defendant's chain-of-custody objection, where the arresting officer testified that approximately fifteen grams of crack cocaine was found and tagged, but the forensic chemist testified that the weight was just over six grams, because the officer testified that the bags were weighed together with the drugs and the trial court merely had to be satisfied within a reasonable probability that no one had tampered with the evidence. Jackson v. State, 2010 Ark. App. 359, 374 S.W.3d 857 (2010).

Court did not abuse its discretion in admitting crime-scene evidence over defendant's chain-of-custody objections because, for each piece of evidence objected to, there was other testimony or evidence presented during trial that supported a finding that the items in question were what the state claimed they were. Much of that supporting evidence was from the statements made by defendant and his accomplice. Laswell v. State, 2012 Ark. 201, 404 S.W.3d 818 (2012).

Counsel was not ineffective for failure to require a chain of custody by established because items introduced were not interchangeable like drugs or blood samples, and the witness who displayed the item had knowledge of the item and had authenticated it, pursuant to subdivision (b)(1) of this rule. Davis v. State, 2013 Ark. 118 (2013).

Controlled Substances.

In a prosecution for delivery of methamphetamine, the state failed to prove that the drug tested was properly authenticated. Crisco v. State, 328 Ark. 388, 943 S.W.2d 582, modified, 328 Ark. 393, 945 S.W.2d 383 (1997).

Dental Records.

In a prosecution for murder by drowning, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting copies of two of the victim's dental charts, where the two dentists who compiled the original dental charts testified that the admitted charts were copies of the original dental charts, where the original charts were unavailable because they were being held by the clerk of the Arkansas Supreme Court as evidence in an earlier criminal case, and where the defendant never challenged the identification of the victim during the trial. Wallace v. Lockhart, 701 F.2d 719 (8th Cir.), cert. denied, 464 U.S. 934, 104 S. Ct. 340, 78 L. Ed. 2d 308 (1983).

Electronic Messages.

In a murder case, the circuit court did not abuse its discretion by admitting electronic messages because they were sufficiently authenticated under Ark. R. Evid. 901(b)(4) on the basis of their content when considered in conjunction with the circumstantial evidence presented to corroborate defendant's identity as the sender. Defendant's emails were not hearsay, because a statement made by a defendant and offered against him at trial constitutes an admission of a party opponent under Ark. R. Evid. 801(d)(2)(i). Crockett v. State, 2021 Ark. App. 422, 634 S.W.3d 821 (2021).

Defendant was entitled to a new trial because (1) it was error to admit Instagram messages defendant allegedly sent without sufficient circumstantial evidence to corroborate that defendant sent the messages, or sufficient indicia of authorship, and (2) the error was not harmless, as it could not be said the evidence of defendant's guilt was overwhelming or the error slight, since, without defendant's confession in the messages, the main evidence supporting conviction was the victim's testimony and statements to third parties, raising credibility questions. Brown v. State, 2019 Ark. App. 154, 573 S.W.3d 536 (2019).

General Provision.

The requirement of authentication in this rule is separate from the requirement that a hearsay document must satisfy an applicable hearsay exception for admissibility. Columbia Mut. Ins. Co. v. Patterson, 320 Ark. 584, 899 S.W.2d 61, 904 S.W.2d 218 (1995).

In this dependency-neglect case, mother's counsel claimed that the Department of Human Services should have proven the termination of her rights to another child by written documentation, but that rule concerns authentication and identification of evidence and has nothing to do with the best-evidence rule, which applies only when a party tries to prove the content of a writing; while a document would have demonstrated termination, nothing prohibited the mother from testifying to any fact within her personal knowledge and the question of whether her rights had been terminated resided within her personal experience, and she admitted the same. Goodwin v. Ark. Dep't of Human Servs., 2014 Ark. App. 599, 445 S.W.3d 547 (2014).

Harmless Error.

Even if the victim's CT scan was not properly authenticated under this rule before it was admitted into evidence, the error was harmless given the whole of the doctor's testimony and the multiple sources of medical information she relied on when giving her opinion, including an x-ray of the victim's leg the doctor used to show that he had a fracture consistent with having experienced severe physical abuse. Washington v. State, 2016 Ark. App. 565, 506 S.W.3d 893 (2016).

Illustrative Cases.

In this personal injury action, even if the court's ruling was incorrect, appellants had shown no prejudice by the admission of the receipts under this provision because by appellants' own admission, the evidence did not provide proof, one way or another, on the ultimate question of where appellee resided on 2 January 2019. Harden v. Beck, 2021 Ark. App. 481, 639 S.W.3d 401 (2021).

Trial court acted within its discretion in admitting a writing from defendant's jail cell wall — FRED ... KILLER ... KAUFFELD

... WAS HERE 10-1-2015 ... THE MAN ... THE MYTH ... THE LEGEND ... I SHOT THE SHERIFF ... I KILLED HIS DEPUTY — when defendant admitted to writing all but the last two lines, which defendant claimed were already written on the wall, considering the testimony of jail personnel to verify defendant's sole occupancy of the cell, defendant's subsequent own admissions, and defendant's unique spelling of defendant's last name. Kauffeld v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 440, 528 S.W.3d 302 (2017).

In a FELA action, the circuit court was within its discretion to exclude a mechanical alert that was created after the incident because, inter alia, a proper foundation had not been laid for its admission; the plaintiff employee did not seek to introduce the alert through its author, and the employer's safety implementation leader testified merely that he knew what a mechanical alert was and he was unable to authenticate the particular alert. Sanders v. Union Pac. R.R., 2019 Ark. App. 386, 585 S.W.3d 713 (2019).

Improper Authentication.

Spreadsheet clearly lacked proper authentication, as there was no proffer of the purported email and no foundation as to who prepared the documents, the attorney testified that he was not an intended recipient of the purported email, and there was no evidence that the spreadsheet was genuine and had not been tampered with, and thus the trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying admission into evidence. Southern v. Highline Tech. Innovations, Inc., 2014 Ark. App. 613, 448 S.W.3d 712 (2014).

Circuit court erred by admitting and relying on a court-appointed expert's report where the report was admitted during the biological mother's testimony and she did not have sufficient knowledge of the report to testify to its authenticity, and thus the report was improperly admitted as unauthenticated hearsay. The biological father had demonstrated prejudice where the circuit court relied heavily on the report and the father's failure to comply with the recommendations in the report to conclude that the father's consent to adoption was not required. In re Adoption of H.G.W., 2020 Ark. App. 168, 598 S.W.3d 533 (2020).

Proof.

To prove authenticity, the state must demonstrate a reasonable probability that the evidence has not been altered in any significant manner. White v. State, 290 Ark. 130, 717 S.W.2d 784 (1986).

Any error in the authentication of photographs of the injuries sustained by the victim was harmless because the witness who testified just after the officer who testified regarding the photographs was the victim, who testified that the photographs depicted her injuries as they existed in the ambulance and at the hospital on the day of the robbery. Goodwin v. State, 373 Ark. 53, 281 S.W.3d 258 (2008).

Defendant's conviction for murder in the second degree was proper because admission of photographs taken at the crime scene of various items located in the front passenger seat of the victim's vehicle was proper since the evidence suggested that the crime scene was in a remote location that was secured by officers shortly after the victim's 911 call was made; the testimony presented was sufficient to support a finding that the matter in question was what its proponent claimed. The officer who took the photographs testified that he saw the items in the front passenger seat and that he did not touch them before photographing them, satisfying subsection (a) of this rule; moreover, even if the photographs were improperly admitted, no prejudice occurred because they were merely cumulative evidence. Johnson v. State, 2010 Ark. App. 153, 375 S.W.3d 12 (2010).

Proper Authentication.

In prosecution for theft of property where state's proof showed that burglary of the hardware was committed by four persons, three of whom were inside the store and a fourth outside in a car as lookout and they kept in touch with one another, during the process of the robbery, by CB walkie-talkie inside the store and CB radio in the car, testimony of police officer that he had listened on his radio to the burglars' conversation and that they had made certain statements which he quoted and which indicated that defendant was one of the men inside the store was admissible where it was shown that defendant was observed leaving a residence in a car in the company of three or four men shortly before the burglary, that the car was followed by the police to a point within a few blocks of the hardware, that defendant left the scene with another man in a truck loaded with stolen merchandise and returned to the residence where he was apprehended by police, that a CB walkie-talkie was found in a nearby yard set on Channel 12, which was the channel the suspected burglars used in their conversation, and that the truck was loaded with stolen merchandise. Nabors v. State, 263 Ark. 409, 565 S.W.2d 598 (1978), cert. denied, 439 U.S. 1067, 99 S. Ct. 834, 59 L. Ed. 2d 32 (1979).

A document prepared by plaintiff's salesman may be admitted into evidence under this rule, since subdivision (b)(1) of this rule allows the document to be authenticated by the testimony of a witness with knowledge that a matter is what it is claimed to be, and this is true even where the defendants are the party proponents and supply the authentication, since this does not go to its admissibility, although it may go to the weight to be given the evidence. United Bilt Homes, Inc. v. Elder, 272 Ark. 496, 615 S.W.2d 367 (1981).

Where the murder victim's mother testified that the shirt the state introduced at trial was, in fact, the shirt her son had worn on the night he was killed and that she had washed the shirt because it had a small grass stain on it and that it had no rips or tears in it, the shirt was properly authenticated under subdivision (b)(1) of this rule; the possibility that certain stains on the shirt had been washed away simply goes to the weight the jury was to accord the evidence. Horne v. State, 12 Ark. App. 301, 677 S.W.2d 856 (1984).

In determining the authenticity of taped statements, the trial court has some discretion, and in the absence of evidence indicating tampering with the evidence, the trial court's ruling will not be reversed absent an abuse of discretion; thus, where an undercover police officer, who was present when the tapes were recorded, testified as to their accuracy and authenticity, such testimony was sufficient to authenticate the tapes. Walker v. State, 13 Ark. App. 124, 680 S.W.2d 915 (1984).

Transcripts of recordings of drug transactions held properly authenticated. Bunn v. State, 320 Ark. 516, 898 S.W.2d 450 (1995).

Finding in favor of the beneficiaries and against the intestate heirs in a will-contest action was proper where the beneficiaries satisfied the requirements of Ark. R. Evid. 803(6) and proved that the bank's records were admissible as an exception to the hearsay rule and, even though the officer was not the custodian of the records, that did not bar the admission; further, the records were adequately authenticated under this rule because the officer repeatedly testified that the copies were true and accurate copies of the records that they depicted. Metzgar v. Rodgers, 83 Ark. App. 354, 128 S.W.3d 5 (2003).

Where an eyewitness to the crime testified that the photographs were an accurate depiction of the events that took place on the evening of November 15, 2003, and further testified about his knowledge of the surveillance cameras and the types of images he frequently had observed on the monitors at the store, the state met its burden of proof required for authenticating the photographs and laid a proper foundation for admission of the photographs. Owens v. State, 363 Ark. 413, 214 S.W.3d 849 (2005).

E-mails used during defendant's trial for sexual assault were properly authenticated by the victim, who testified that he had either sent or received the e-mails from defendant, by defendant, who admitted having sent the e-mails, and by experts, who examined either the computers or the server through which the emails traveled. Bobo v. State, 102 Ark. App. 329, 285 S.W.3d 270 (2008).

In order to have chat room transcripts admitted during defendant's trial for internet stalking of a child, the state only needed to demonstrate a reasonable probability that the evidence had not been altered in any significant manner; an undercover detective's testimony and defendant's signature on the transcripts satisfied that burden under subdivision (b)(1) of this rule. Jackson v. State, 2009 Ark. App. 466, 320 S.W.3d 13 (2009).

Trial court did not err in precluding defendant from admitting a movie ticket receipt into evidence as corroborating his alibi defense because the receipt was not self-authenticating and the testimony of defendant—a person who was not the receipt's creator—was not sufficient to authenticate the document. Golden v. State, 2009 Ark. App. 632 (2009).

In a rape case, a trial court properly admitted drawings depicting areas of abuse where a victim actively participated in the drawing; even though the victim might have misnamed the individual who interviewed and marked on the drawings, all of the other factors relevant to authentication were properly established. Henderson v. State, 2012 Ark. App. 485 (2012).

At defendant's trial for internet stalking of a child based on a series of online chats he had with a police lieutenant representing himself as a fifteen-year-old female, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the chat logs into evidence. The lieutenant's verification that the chat logs were accurate and complete renderings of the conversations was sufficient testimony by a witness with knowledge that the chat logs were authentic under subdivision (b)(1) of this rule. Todd v. State, 2012 Ark. App. 626, 425 S.W.3d 25 (2012).

Circuit court did not abuse its discretion in admitting screenshots of the mother's Facebook posts into evidence where the mother identified the name on her account, stated that all comments were made under that name, identified the photos on the account as photos of her, and testified that she posted comments, and thus, the screenshots were sufficiently authenticated under this rule. Donley v. Donley, 2016 Ark. 243, 493 S.W.3d 762 (2016).

Officer had knowledge that the phones belonged to defendant and that the extraction reports were produced from his phones, and thus the officer's testimony was sufficient to authenticate the electronic evidence under subdivision (b)(1) of this rule. Hoey v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 253, 519 S.W.3d 745 (2017).

Circuit court did not abuse its discretion when it overruled defendant's authentication challenge and admitted text messages as evidence because the State presented sufficient corroborating evidence that the text messages were what the State claimed them to be: communicative exchanges between defendant and the victim on a legally relevant issue; there was testimony that the telephone number the victim sent the messages to, and from which messages were sent to her, was defendant's number. Duvall v. State, 2018 Ark. App. 155, 544 S.W.3d 106 (2018).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting surveillance video because it found that the witnesses adequately established the authenticity of the recording and that admitting recorded clips of the video was not unfair to defendant; defendant's issues, such as the surveillance video's having an incorrect date and time stamp and no audio, went to the weight of the evidence rather than its admissibility. Jackson v. State, 2018 Ark. App. 330, 552 S.W.3d 55 (2018).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting into evidence phone recordings made from the detention center because the phone calls were properly authenticated based on the speakers' references to each other by name and the discussion of the victim's facial injury. Allen v. State, 2018 Ark. App. 603, 567 S.W.3d 93 (2018).

Trial court did not abuse discretion in admitting a CD and a call log involving recorded phone calls from the jail where defendant was housed because the recordings were introduced through the testimony of an investigator for the prosecuting attorney's office who testified about how the investigator downloaded the conversations on the CD and verified their accuracy. Goins v. State, 2019 Ark. App. 11, 568 S.W.3d 300 (2019).

Retail store receipts were admissible into evidence at defendant's trial for theft of property from a retail store because a loss-prevention employee for the store testified to sufficient firsthand knowledge to authenticate the receipts. The employee described watching defendant conceal items and attempt to leave the store with them, the employee described the standard procedure for having a manager ring up the items to determine their value, and the employee testified that the employee reviewed the receipt to confirm that it matched the items. Harvey v. State, 2021 Ark. App. 143, 619 S.W.3d 902 (2021).

Proper Foundation.

It cannot be argued that a proper foundation for the introduction of the tapes of two conversations was not laid, even though the state did not call as witnesses the two officers who manned the recording device, for it was not shown what helpful testimony the officers could have supplied, because there was no indication that they could have known at the time whether or not the recording device was working. Williamson v. State, 267 Ark. 46, 590 S.W.2d 847 (1979).

Where the participants in conversations with the defendant testified as to the accuracy of the tapes and transcripts of the conversations, and a police officer who heard the conversations take place testified that the tape recording was an accurate transcription of the conversations, a proper foundation was laid under subsection (a) of this rule, for the admission of the tapes and transcripts. Smithey v. State, 269 Ark. 538, 602 S.W.2d 676 (1980).

Where a detective viewed obscene films, then went before a circuit judge to obtain a search warrant, testifying at length about the films he had seen, and after obtaining the warrant returned to the theater and seized the films, and on the following day reviewed the films and placed them in storage, the three films viewed by the detective, who later died, were admissible, even though he could not testify at trial, since the facts, taken as a whole, satisfied the conditions precedent to admissibility prescribed in this rule. Century Theaters, Inc. v. State, 274 Ark. 484, 625 S.W.2d 511 (1981).

In a negligence suit arising from a car accident, the testimony of the injured driver's expert, a chiropractor, was sufficient to lay the foundation for admitting a videotape used to help explain the body's reaction to a rear-end collision, not to reenact the original happenings of the accident. Peterrie Transp. v. Thurmond, 79 Ark. App. 375, 90 S.W.3d 1 (2002).

Text Messages.

Trial court properly excluded text messages that were not authenticated where the only evidence that the texts were authored by the victim was a special agent's testimony that the victim's name was programmed on the phone as the sender. There was no testimony or other evidence presented to corroborate the sender's identity, and there was also no testimony as to the owner of the phone, where it was found, or who possessed it before the agent received it. Armstrong v. State, 2020 Ark. 309, 607 S.W.3d 491 (2020).

Voice Identification.

Where, in second-degree murder prosecution, witness testified that he received telephone calls from a man identifying himself as the employer of defendant, inquiring about the insurance coverage on defendant's husband, who was the murder victim, the court erred in allowing the testimony, even though caller had same first name as codefendant who was defendant's employer, since under this rule the identity of the caller must be established before the evidence is admissible, and in this case, there was no basis for the witness to identify the codefendant as the caller, nor was there any reliable circumstantial evidence as to his identity. Thus, no foundation was laid for admission of this evidence, even though it was possible that the witness would be able to identify the caller based on hearing his voice at trial. Roleson v. State, 272 Ark. 346, 614 S.W.2d 656 (1981).

It was within the trial court's discretion to allow into evidence taped telephone conversations between the defendant and a police informant, where the trial judge was satisfied that the informant could identify the other speaker as the defendant. Marshall v. State, 289 Ark. 462, 712 S.W.2d 894 (1986).

In a prosecution for murder, a deputy was properly permitted to testify to statements made by the defendant while he was in custody which the deputy heard over a monitor used for security purposes where the deputy testified that she became familiar with and was also able to recognize the defendant's voice because he talked a lot while incarcerated. Hinkston v. State, 340 Ark. 530, 10 S.W.3d 906 (2000).

Circuit court did not abuse its discretion in admitting recorded phone calls between defendant and his girlfriend because they were properly authenticated; a detective testified that he had spoken with both defendant and the girlfriend, that he was familiar with their voices, and that he would recognize their voices on a phone call or other recording. Chatmon v. State, 2015 Ark. 28, 467 S.W.3d 731 (2015).

Circuit court did not abuse its discretion in admitting an audio recording of a phone call from the detention center because the recording was properly identified and authenticated through the police officer's testimony. The officer testified that he recognized defendant's voice, and circumstantial evidence linked the recording to defendant as defendant's name was mentioned in the recording and his counsel was referred to by his first name; further, the fact that the officer had previously interviewed defendant was established through the introduction of the video recording of the officer's interview of defendant. Avery v. State, 2019 Ark. App. 405, 585 S.W.3d 742 (2019).

Waiver of Error.

Defendant waived any error in admitting without a proper foundation photos of defendant using a victim's bank card because he failed to get a specific ruling that the photos were considered authenticated under this rule or under the hearsay exception in Ark. R. Evid. 803(6) for business records described by a custodian. Settles v. State, 2011 Ark. App. 241 (2011).

Witness Having Knowledge.

Identification was not by testimony of a witness "having knowledge." City of Fort Smith v. Driggers, 294 Ark. 311, 742 S.W.2d 921 (1988).

A 25-page writing held not properly authenticated where witness' testimony was replete with reference to his lack of knowledge regarding the 25-page writing. Columbia Mut. Ins. Co. v. Patterson, 320 Ark. 584, 899 S.W.2d 61, 904 S.W.2d 218 (1995).

Trial court did not err in admitting photographs of the mother's child who had died through the testimony of the doctor, even though he was not present when they were taken; the doctor testified that, other than having gauze on his head, the child looked the same in the photographs as when he last saw the child, and one method of authentication was the presentation of a witness with knowledge that a matter was what it was claimed to be. Vasquez v. Ark. Dep't of Human Servs., 2009 Ark. App. 575, 337 S.W.3d 552 (2009).

In a case in which defendant appealed his conviction for violating § 5-27-306(a)(2)(C), he unsuccessfully argued the trial court abused its discretion in admitting into evidence a cut-and-paste word document from the police computer system because it was not properly authenticated or the best evidence. The trial court did not abuse its discretion by deeming the printout sufficiently authenticated by the officer who conducted the chat and who converted it to a printable Wordpad document, and the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the printout into evidence because it was properly authenticated and was admissible as a duplicate or an original. Buffalo v. State, 2010 Ark. App. 127, 374 S.W.3d 82 (2010).

In a case in which defendant was convicted of aggravated assault and possession of a firearm by certain persons, a video of the alleged incident was properly admitted because the fact that the authenticating witness testified to having personal knowledge of certain portions of the video but admitted that she did not have such knowledge as to other portions, including the part showing defendant with the gun, was not fatal; although the witness was not present when the gun was drawn, she testified that the video accurately represented what she heard at the time in question from her location in the truck stop. Colston v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 282, 523 S.W.3d 363 (2017).

Rule 902. Self-authentication.

Extrinsic evidence of authenticity as a condition precedent to admissibility is not required with respect to the following:

(1) Domestic Public Documents Under Seal. A document bearing a seal purporting to be that of the United States, or of any state, district, commonwealth, territory, or insular possession thereof, or the Panama Canal Zone, or the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, or of a political subdivision, department, officer, or agency thereof, and a signature purporting to be an attestation or execution.

(2) Domestic Public Documents Not Under Seal. A document purporting to bear the signature in his official capacity of an officer or employee of any entity included in paragraph (1), having no seal, if a public officer having a seal and having official duties in the district or political subdivision of the officer or employee certifies under seal or that the signer has the official capacity and that the signature is genuine.

(3) Foreign Public Documents. A document purporting to be executed or attested in his official capacity by a person authorized by the laws of a foreign country to make the execution or attestation, and accompanied by a final certification as to the genuineness of the signature and official position (i) of the executing or attesting person, or (ii) of any foreign official whose certificate of genuineness of signature and official position relates to the execution or attestation or is in a chain of certificate of genuineness of signature and official position relating to the execution or attestation. A final certification may be made by a secretary of embassy or legation, consul general, consul, vice consul, or consular agent of the United States or a diplomatic or consular official of the foreign country assigned or accredited to the United States. If reasonable opportunity has been given to all parties to investigate the authenticity and accuracy of official documents, the court may for good cause shown order that they be treated as presumptively authentic without final certification or permit them to be evidenced by an attested summary with or without final certification.

(4) Certified Copies of Public Records. A copy of an official record or report or entry therein, or of a document authorized by law to be recorded or filed and actually recorded or filed in a public office, including data compilations in any form, certified as correct by the custodian or other person authorized to make the certification, by certificate complying with paragraph (1), (2), or (3), or complying with any law of the United States or of this State.

(5) Official Publications. Books, pamphlets, or other publications issued by public authority.

(6) Newspapers and Periodicals. Printed material purporting to be newspapers or periodicals.

(7) Trade Inscriptions and the Like. Inscriptions, signs, tags, or labels purporting to have been affixed in the course of business and indicating ownership, control, or origin.

(8) Acknowledged Documents. Documents accompanied by a certificate of acknowledgement executed in the manner provided by law by a notary public or other officer authorized by law to take acknowledgements.

(9) Commercial Paper and Related Documents. Commercial paper, signatures thereon, and documents relating thereto to the extent provided by general commercial law.

(10) Presumptions Created by Law. Any signature, document, or other matter declared by any law of the United States or of this State, to be presumptively or prima facie genuine or authentic.

CASE NOTES

In General.

This rule does not render admissible documents which are otherwise hearsay unless the documents also fall within a hearsay exception. Easterling v. Weedman, 54 Ark. App. 22, 922 S.W.2d 735 (1996).

Document Not Self-Authenticating.

Document concerning city personnel rules was not self-authenticating. City of Fort Smith v. Driggers, 294 Ark. 311, 742 S.W.2d 921 (1988).

A photocopy of a certified copy of an insurance policy was not a self-authenticating document. Columbia Mut. Ins. Co. v. Patterson, 320 Ark. 584, 899 S.W.2d 61, 904 S.W.2d 218 (1995).

Refusing to admit an administrative order by the ALJ was not error where the document did not bear the state seal, and thus was not self-authenticating under subdivision (1) of this rule; although the letterhead of the letter attached to the order contained a copy of the state seal, appellant did not make that argument in the circuit court. Phillips v. Ark. Dep't of Human Servs., 2018 Ark. App. 463, 560 S.W.3d 499 (2018).

Documents Under Seal.

Where the proof of prior convictions submitted to support a "habitual offender" count in a burglary and theft trial consisted of copies of orders of commitment from a court of competent jurisdiction, duly certified under seal, which were clearly admissible under subdivision (1) of this rule and competent to prove the prior convictions, and the foundation for that admission was the docket entries of the court in those two cases, properly identified by the clerk of the court whose duty it was to keep and record such records, such records not being hearsay by virtue of subdivision (8) of Rule 803, there was substantial evidence by which the jury could find the prior convictions proved as required by § 5-4-504. Thomas v. State, 2 Ark. App. 238, 620 S.W.2d 300 (1981).

Document held to be self-authenticating as domestic document under seal. Monark Boat Co. v. Fischer, 292 Ark. 544, 732 S.W.2d 123 (1987).

Public Records.

Where the first two documents of an exhibit were certified by the Deputy Clerk of the Municipal Court and filed with the Department of Finance and Administration as required by § 5-65-110(b), and the documents were duly certified as true and correct copies of the records of the Office of Driver Control by the Manager of the Driver Control Section, the exhibit was admissible as a self-authenticating document pursuant to subdivision (4) of this rule. Price v. State, 48 Ark. App. 37, 889 S.W.2d 40 (1994).

Signatures.

There is nothing in this rule which mandates that the certification contain a handwritten signature; printing, typing, or stamping a name in the place where a signature should appear is sufficient if it is intended as a signature. Dupree v. State, 50 Ark. App. 271, 906 S.W.2d 315 (1995).

Rule 903. Subscribing witness' testimony unnecessary.

The testimony of a subscribing witness is not necessary to authenticate a writing unless required by the laws of the jurisdiction whose laws govern the validity of the writing.

CASE NOTES

Burden of Proof.

This rule provides a subscribing witness's testimony to authenticate a writing will be unnecessary unless required by the laws of the originating jurisdiction and the burden of showing that the laws of the originating state require testimony from a subscribing witness for proper authentication lies with the party challenging the document. Barnes v. Barnes, 311 Ark. 287, 843 S.W.2d 835 (1992).

Rule 1001. Definitions.

For purposes of this Article the following definitions are applicable:

(1) Writings and Recordings. “Writings” and “recordings” consist of letters, words, sounds, or numbers, or their equivalent, set down by handwriting, typewriting, printing, photostating, photographing, magnetic impulse, mechanical or electronic recording, or other form of data compilation.

(2) Photographs. “Photographs” include still photographs, x-ray films, video tapes, and motion pictures.

(3) Original. An “original” of a writing or recording is the writing or recording itself or any counterpart intended to have the same effect by a person executing or issuing it. An “original” of a photograph includes the negative or any print therefrom. If data are stored in a computer or similar device, any printout or other output readable by sight, shown to reflect the data accurately, is an “original.”

(4) Duplicate. A “duplicate” is a counterpart produced by the same impression as the original, or from the same matrix, or by means of photography, including enlargements and miniatures, or by mechanical or electronic re-recording, or by chemical reproduction, or by other equivalent techniques which accurately reproduce the original.

CASE NOTES

Computer Printout.

In a case in which defendant appealed his conviction for violating § 5-27-306(a)(2)(C), he unsuccessfully argued the trial court abused its discretion in admitting into evidence a cut-and-paste word document from the police computer system because it was not properly authenticated or the best evidence. The trial court did not abuse its discretion by deeming the printout sufficiently authenticated by the officer who conducted the chat and who converted it to a printable Wordpad document, and the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the printout into evidence because it was properly authenticated and was admissible as a duplicate or an original. Buffalo v. State, 2010 Ark. App. 127, 374 S.W.3d 82 (2010).

internet conversations with an alleged 14 year old, who was really an undercover officer, into evidence during defendant's trial for internet stalking of a child because the printouts fell within the definition of an “original” under subdivision (3) of this rule and were the best evidence. Dirickson v. State, 104 Ark. App. 273, 291 S.W.3d 198 (2009).

In a case where a protective order was issued, a trial court did not abuse its discretion by allowing screenshots of text messages taken from a phone to be admitted as evidence. An “original” included any printout or other output readable by sight that accurately reflected the data. Steele v. Lyon, 2015 Ark. App. 251, 460 S.W.3d 827 (2015).

Application of Best Evidence Rule to Electronic Evidence, Including Text Messages and E-mail. 12 ALR 7th Art. 1 (2016).

CASE NOTES

Applicability.

The best evidence rule applies only to writings, photographs and recordings. Redman v. State, 265 Ark. 774, 580 S.W.2d 945 (1979).

When a transaction occurs where a written record is made, it is not necessary to produce the record where there is testimony to prove the transaction; it is only where the writing itself must be proved that the writing must be produced. Canady v. Canady, 285 Ark. 378, 687 S.W.2d 833 (1985).

In a theft case, where the state was not attempting to introduce a transcript of defendant's recorded confession, a police officer was permitted to testify regarding the contents of the statement because the best evidence rule was not applicable; the officer was merely testifying to what defendant told him during the confession. Gamble v. State, 351 Ark. 541, 95 S.W.3d 755 (2003).

In an aggravated robbery case, as currency seized from defendants' vehicle was a physical exhibit, it was not within the purview of the best evidence rule. Wingfield v. State, 363 Ark. 380, 214 S.W.3d 843 (2005).

Under this rule and Ark. R. Evid. 1003, the heirs only complained that the son's exhibits were not certified copies and never raised questions as to their authenticity or continuing effectiveness of certified copies. Heirs at Law of Butler v. Butler, 2009 Ark. App. 660, 345 S.W.3d 225 (2009).

In this dependency-neglect case, mother's counsel claimed that the Department of Human Services should have proven the termination of her rights to another child by written documentation, but that rule concerns authentication and identification of evidence and has nothing to do with the best-evidence rule, which applies only when a party tries to prove the content of a writing; while a document would have demonstrated termination, nothing prohibited the mother from testifying to any fact within her personal knowledge and the question of whether her rights had been terminated resided within her personal experience, and she admitted the same. Goodwin v. Ark. Dep't of Human Servs., 2014 Ark. App. 599, 445 S.W.3d 547 (2014).

Computer Printout.

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting computer printouts of defendant's internet conversations with an alleged 14 year old, who was really an undercover officer, into evidence during defendant's trial for internet stalking of a child because the printouts fell within the definition of an "original" under Ark. R. Evid. 1001(3) and were the best evidence. Dirickson v. State, 104 Ark. App. 273, 291 S.W.3d 198 (2009).

In a case in which defendant appealed his conviction for violating § 5-27-306(a)(2)(C), he unsuccessfully argued the trial court abused its discretion in admitting into evidence a cut-and-paste word document from the police computer system because it was not properly authenticated or the best evidence. State*, 2010 Ark. App. 127, 374 S.W.3d 82 (2010).

Mail Return Receipt.

In an action to quiet title to property sold at a tax sale, the return receipt for the notice sent by the state land commissioner to the former owner's prior address was properly admitted into evidence under this rule and Ark. R. Evid. 1003 because it proved delivery of the notice, regardless of who signed for it, which was all that was required. Mays v. St. Pat Props., LLC, 357 Ark. 482, 182 S.W.3d 84, cert. denied, 543 U.S. 943, 125 S. Ct. 353, 160 L. Ed. 2d 255 (2004).

Notes.

Typewritten notes by a jail matron of statements she heard between the defendants when they visited one another were properly admitted into evidence, notwithstanding the absence of the original handwritten notes made by the jail matron, where there was no assertion that the jail matron exercised bad faith in losing or destroying the handwritten notes and the jail matron testified that she simply could not find the handwritten notes. Efurd v. State, 334 Ark. 596, 976 S.W.2d 928 (1998).

Restricted Driving Permit.

In a case involving driving while intoxicated and driving with a suspended license, a circuit court did not abuse its discretion by overruling an objection to the admission of a duplicate copy of a restricted-driving permit under the best evidence rule because there was no genuine question raised as to its authenticity. Fiveash v. State, 2015 Ark. App. 187, 458 S.W.3d 774 (2015).

Tangible Objects.

In a criminal case, a witness may testify concerning tangible objects which are involved without producing the articles, and this is not a violation of the best evidence rule, which applies only to writings, photographs and recordings, nor does it violate the hearsay rule. Johnson v. State, 289 Ark. 589, 715 S.W.2d 441 (1986).

Tape Recording.

The trial court did not err in admitting a tape recording of the confession although only a transcript was available at the Denno hearing, inasmuch as the tape was the best evidence of the confession. Sumlin v. State, 266 Ark. 709, 587 S.W.2d 571 (1979).

In prosecution for delivery of a controlled substance, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to allow the jury to hear the recording of the defendant's meeting with an undercover narcotics investigator, but allowing the jury to hear a transcript of the recording with references to prior marijuana sales deleted. Briggs v. State, 18 Ark. App. 292, 715 S.W.2d 223 (1986).

A recording is admissible unless the inadmissible portions are so substantial as to render the recording as a whole untrustworthy; further, the introduction of recordings is a matter within the trial court's discretion. Hamm v. State, 301 Ark. 154, 782 S.W.2d 577 (1990); Loy v. State, 310 Ark. 33, 832 S.W.2d 499 (1992).

Fact that a tape is inaudible in many places does not render the intelligible portions of the tape inherently prejudicial and unreliable, as the tape may still be probative on certain points. Loy v. State, 310 Ark. 33, 832 S.W.2d 499 (1992).

In defendant's rape case, the court did not violate the best evidence rule by admitting a transcript of defendant's statement to the police to be used as a guide while the tape of the statement played because an officer testified that he had compared the transcript with the tape and concluded that the transcript was accurate. Furthermore, if the audio tape had been played without the transcript, it would have been necessary to replay the recording several times in order to ensure the jurors' understanding of the statement. Bell v. State, 371 Ark. 375, 266 S.W.3d 696 (2007).

Rule 1003. Admissibility of duplicates.

A duplicate is admissible to the same extent as an original unless (1) a genuine question is raised as to the authenticity or continuing effectiveness of the original or (2) in the circumstances it would be unfair to admit the duplicate in lieu of the original.

CASE NOTES

Applicability.

Under Ark. R. Evid. 1002 and this rule, the heirs only complained that the son's exhibits were not certified copies and never raised questions as to their authenticity or continuing effectiveness of certified copies. Heirs at Law of Butler v. Butler, 2009 Ark. App. 660, 345 S.W.3d 225 (2009).

Checks.

Defendant did not show any basis on which the trial court erred in holding that duplicate checks were admissible at defendant's trial for forgery or any basis on which appellate counsel could have raised a meritorious argument on appeal concerning the admissibility of the duplicate checks. Testimony at trial established that, pursuant to bank policy, the original checks were destroyed after a period of time and that certified copies of the forged checks were returned to the convenience stores and given to law-enforcement investigators. Williams v. State, 2015 Ark. 466, 476 S.W.3d 800 (2015).

Computer Printout.

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting computer printouts of defendant's internet conversations with an alleged 14 year old, who was really an undercover officer, into evidence during defendant's trial for internet stalking of a child because the evidence reflected that the hard drive was destroyed by a computer virus; the testimony of the undercover officer and a computer expert sufficiently authenticated the printouts such that they were admissible as duplicates. Dirickson v. State, 104 Ark. App. 273, 291 S.W.3d 198 (2009).

In a case in which defendant appealed his conviction for violating § 5-27-306(a)(2)(C), he unsuccessfully argued the trial court abused its discretion in admitting into evidence a cut-and-paste word document from the police computer system because it was not properly authenticated or the best evidence. State*, 2010 Ark. App. 127, 374 S.W.3d 82 (2010).

Dental Records.

In a prosecution for murder by drowning, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting copies of two of the victim's dental charts, where the two dentists who compiled the original dental charts testified that the admitted charts were copies of the original dental charts, where the original charts were unavailable because they were being held by the clerk of the Arkansas Supreme Court as evidence in an earlier criminal case, and where the defendant never challenged the identification of the victim during the trial. Wallace v. Lockhart, 701 F.2d 719 (8th Cir.), cert. denied, 464 U.S. 934, 104 S. Ct. 340, 78 L. Ed. 2d 308 (1983).

Duplicates.

As for appellee's claim that a document was not properly authenticated, she did not appear to question the actual authenticity of the document or argue that its admission would be unfair under the circumstances, and this rule allows duplicates in place of the original unless a genuine question is raised as to its authenticity or if its admission would be unfair under the circumstances. O'Neal v. Love, 2015 Ark. App. 689, 476 S.W.3d 846 (2015).

Lab Reports.

A facsimile copy of the crime lab report that contained the analyst's attestation, rather than the original itself, held admissible. Ingram v. State, 48 Ark. App. 105, 891 S.W.2d 805 (1995).

Letters.

Defendant alleged the letter he wrote to his wife while they were both in jail was altered, whereas the wife testified that the photocopy introduced was accurate; defendant did not bear his burden of proof in showing that there was a genuine question of authenticity, and there was no abuse of discretion in the admission of the copy. Whitham v. State, 2009 Ark. 477 (2009).

Mail Return Receipt.

In an action to quiet title to property sold at a tax sale, the return receipt for the notice sent by the state land commissioner to the former owner's prior address was properly admitted into evidence, under Ark. R. Evid. 1002 and this rule, because it proved delivery of the notice, regardless of who signed for it, which was all that was required. *Mays v. Restricted Driving Permit.

In a case involving driving while intoxicated and driving with a suspended license, a circuit court did not abuse its discretion by overruling an objection to the admission of a duplicate copy of a restricted-driving permit under the best evidence rule because there was no genuine question raised as to its authenticity. Fiveash v. State, 2015 Ark. App. 187, 458 S.W.3d 774 (2015).

Surveillance Video.

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting surveillance video because it found that the witnesses adequately established the authenticity of the recording and that admitting recorded clips of the video was not unfair to defendant; defendant's issues, such as the surveillance video's having an incorrect date and time stamp and no audio, went to the weight of the evidence rather than its admissibility. Jackson v. State, 2018 Ark. App. 330, 552 S.W.3d 55 (2018).

Rule 1004. Admissibility of other evidence of contents.

The original is not required, and other evidence of the contents of a writing, recording, or photograph is admissible if:

- (1) Originals Lost or Destroyed. All originals are lost or have been destroyed, unless the proponent lost or destroyed them in bad faith;
- (2) Original Not Obtainable. No original can be obtained by any available judicial process or procedure;
- (3) Original in Possession of Opponent. At a time when an original was under the control of the party against whom offered, he was put on notice, by the pleadings or otherwise, that the contents would be a subject of proof at the hearing; and he does not produce the original at the hearing; or
- (4) Collateral Matters. The writing, recording or photograph is not closely related to a controlling issue.

CASE NOTES

Authenticity.

As for appellee's claim that a document was not properly authenticated, she did not appear to question the actual authenticity of the document or argue that its admission would be unfair under the circumstances, and Arkansas Rule of Evidence 1003 allows duplicates in place of the original unless a genuine question is raised as to its authenticity or if its admission would be unfair under the circumstances. O'Neal v. Love, 2015 Ark. App. 689, 476 S.W.3d 846 (2015).

Bad Faith.

In a case where defendant was convicted of one count of sexual indecency with a child, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in permitting the State to ask the victim, defendant's younger stepdaughter, about the contents of emails or messages she received in relation to the explicit stories sent to her by defendant because there was no evidence, nor had it been alleged, that the police or the State lost or destroyed the electronic communications or that any loss or destruction was in bad faith, and as such, other evidence of the contents was admissible. Campbell v. State, 2017 Ark. App. 59, 512 S.W.3d 663 (2017).

Burden of Proof.

This rule did not require that the State had to show that the originals were lost and that no original could be obtained through any judicial process; the State showed that the originals were shown to be lost and defendant never alleged that the text message were lost or destroyed in bad faith, and thus the circuit court did not abuse its discretion in allowing the testimony regarding the text messages. Dillard v. State, 2020 Ark. App. 419 (2020).

Originals Destroyed.

An exhibit consisting of a handwritten copy of entries made on a police radio log early in the morning on which a police officer was murdered was properly introduced under this rule as the best evidence since the original log was later destroyed and since the exhibit simply duplicates identical evidence from numerous other sources or undisputed points. Renton v. State, 274 Ark. 87, 622 S.W.2d 171 (1981).

A statement made by the defendant to the police was reliably proven, even though the original signed copy of the confession had been destroyed and was therefore not available at the trial, where a copy of the statement was used to refresh the memory of the three officials who were present during the interrogation and all three witnesses testified that they remembered the statement being made by the defendant and recalled in general terms what was said. Smith v. State, 286 Ark. 247, 691 S.W.2d 154 (1985).

Printouts of e-mails from computers to which they were forwarded were properly used at trial as the printouts were the best evidence of the original emails exchanged by defendant and her victim; the originals could not be printed from defendant's computer as a result of it having crashed and they could not be printed from the victim's computer as a result of his having deleted them. Bobo v. State, 102 Ark. App. 329, 285 S.W.3d 270 (2008).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting computer printouts of defendant's internet conversations with an alleged 14 year old, who was really an undercover officer, into evidence during defendant's trial for internet stalking of a child because the evidence reflected that the hard drive was destroyed by a computer virus; as such, the hard drive was not required. Dirickson v. State, 104 Ark. App. 273, 291 S.W.3d 198 (2009).

Other Evidence Held Inadmissible.

A party's recollection of the contents of a letter written in 1975 was not admissible under this rule since (1) the party's testimony did not establish that the original was lost or otherwise unobtainable, just that he gave it to his father's lawyer and never saw it again, and (2) the purported contents of the letter related to a controlling issue. Hopper v. Daniel, 72 Ark. App. 344, 38 S.W.3d 370 (2001).

Jacobs v. Yates, 342 Ark. 243, 27 S.W.3d 734 (2000).

Rule 1005. Public records.

The contents of an official record, or of a document authorized to be recorded or filed and actually recorded or filed, including data compilations in any form, if otherwise admissible, may be proved by copy, certified as correct in accordance with Rule 902 or testified to be correct by a witness who has compared it with the original. If a copy complying with the foregoing cannot be obtained by the exercise of reasonable diligence, other evidence of the contents may be admitted.

Rule 1006. Summaries.

The contents of voluminous writings, recordings, or photographs which cannot conveniently be examined in court may be presented in the form of a chart, summary, or calculation. The originals, or duplicates, shall be made available for examination or copying, or both, by other parties at a reasonable time and place. The court may order that they be produced in court.

Admissibility.

Summary evidence properly admitted. Ward v. Gerald E. Prince Constr., Inc., 293 Ark. 59, 732 S.W.2d 163 (1987).

In a challenge to assessment against employers of unpaid withholding taxes, the trial court did not err in allowing the Arkansas Department of Finance and Administration to introduce audit summaries that were based on the employers' tax records; this rule did not require prior notice of use of summaries, and the employers possessed the source documents. Morris v. Ark. Dep't of Fin. & Admin., 82 Ark. App. 124, 112 S.W.3d 378 (2003).

Notice.

This rule does not require that a party notify an opposing party that he intends to introduce a summary; it merely mandates the originals, or duplicates, which are underlying documents of a summary, be made available for examination or copying or both, by other parties at a reasonable time and place and allows the trial court discretion to order those documents to be produced in court. Ward v. Gerald E. Prince Constr., Inc., 293 Ark. 59, 732 S.W.2d 163 (1987).

Whenever the admissibility of other evidence of contents of writings, recordings, or photographs under these rules depends upon the fulfillment of a condition of fact, the question whether the condition has been fulfilled is ordinarily for the court to determine in accordance with the provisions of Rule 104. However, when an issue is raised whether (1) the asserted writing ever existed, or (2) another writing, recording, or photograph produced at the trial is the original, or (3) other evidence of contents correctly reflects the contents, the issue is for the trier of fact to determine as in the case of other issues of fact.

Rule 1009. Translation of foreign-language documents and recordings.

(a) Translations. A translation of foreign-language documents and recordings, including transcriptions, that is otherwise admissible under the Arkansas Rules of Evidence shall be admissible upon the affidavit of a "qualified translator," as defined in paragraph (h) of this rule, setting forth the qualifications of the translator, and certifying that the translation is fair, accurate, and complete. This affidavit, along with the translation and the underlying foreign-language documents or recordings, shall be served upon all parties at least forty-five (45) days before the date of trial.

(b) Objections. Any party may object to the accuracy of another party's translation by pointing out the specific inaccuracies of the translation and by stating with specificity what the objecting party contends is a fair and accurate translation. This objection shall be served upon all parties at least fifteen (15) days before the date of trial.

(c) Effect of Failure to Object or Offer Conflicting Translation. If no conflicting translation or objection is timely served, the court shall admit a translation submitted under paragraph (a) without need of proof, provided however that the underlying foreign-language documents or recordings are otherwise admissible under the Arkansas Rules of Evidence. Failure to serve a conflicting translation under paragraph (a), or failure to timely and properly object to the accuracy of a translation under paragraph (b), shall preclude a party from attacking or offering evidence contradicting the accuracy of the translation at trial.

(d) Effect of Objections or Conflicting Translations. In the event of conflicting translations under paragraph (a), or if objections to another party's translation are served under paragraph (b), the court shall determine whether there is a genuine issue as to the accuracy of a material part of the translation to be resolved by the trier of fact.

(e) Expert Testimony of Translator. Except as provided in paragraph (c), this rule does not preclude the admission of a translation of foreign-language documents and recordings at trial either by live testimony or by deposition testimony of a qualified translator.

(f) Varying of Time Limits. The court, upon motion of any party and for good cause shown, may enlarge or shorten the time limits set forth in this rule.

(g) Court Appointment. The court, if necessary, may appoint a qualified translator, the reasonable value of whose services shall be taxed as court costs.

(h) Qualified Translator. A "qualified translator" is an interpreter satisfying the requirements established by the Arkansas Supreme Court in In Re: Certification for Foreign Language Interpreters in Arkansas Courts, 338 Ark. App'x. 827 (1999) and Administrative Order Number 11. A Registry of Interpreters is maintained by the Administrative Office of the Courts.

HISTORY: Added October 9, 2008, effective January 1, 2009.

CASE NOTES

Admissibility.

Because the state's translator not only was uncertified, but had taken and failed the certification exam, pursuant to subsection (h) of this rule, the state's translation of defendant's statement to the police should not have been admitted or introduced as an admission of guilt. Mendez v. State, 2011 Ark. 536 (2011).

Translation of defendant's handwritten letter was properly admitted under subsection (f) of this rule where the requirement for a motion to shorten the 45-day notice period was substantially met, as the circuit court held a hearing on defendant's motion in limine and the State presented its case for admitting the letter on short notice. Garcia-Chicol v. State, 2020 Ark. 148, 597 S.W.3d 631, cert. denied, 141 S. Ct. 880, 208 L. Ed. 2d 442 (2020).

conviction for sexual assault in the second degree, in violation of § 5-14-125(a)(4)(A)(iii), he complained that a transcript of his interview at the police department was obtained with the assistance of a translator who was not certified by the Administrative Office of the Courts and was admitted into evidence in violation of this rule. While it was true that the translation was not made by a qualified translator as set forth in this rule, and defendant objected on that basis, he did not object to the admission of the transcript at trial; in fact, his attorney stipulated at trial that the transcript reflected the interview; furthermore, the victim's testimony alone is sufficient to support defendant's conviction. Chavez v. State, 2010 Ark. App. 161 (2010).

Failure to Object.

In a case in which defendant appealed his Rule 1102. Title.

Rule 1101. Rules applicable.

(a) Except as otherwise provided in subdivision (b), these rules apply to all actions and proceedings in the [courts of this State].

(b) Rules Inapplicable. The rules other than those with respect to privileges do not apply in the following situations:

(1) Preliminary questions of fact. The determination of questions of fact preliminary to admissibility of evidence when the issue is to be determined by the court under Rule 104(a).

(2) Grand jury. Proceedings before grand juries.

(3) Miscellaneous proceedings. Proceedings for extradition or rendition; [preliminary examination] detention hearing in criminal cases; sentencing, or granting or revoking probation; issuance of warrants for arrest, criminal summonses, and search warrants; and proceedings with respect to release on bail or otherwise.

(4) Contempt proceedings in which the court may act summarily.

Publisher's Notes.

The bracketed material so appeared in the rule as enacted.

CASE NOTES

Extradition or Rendition Proceedings.

The Uniform Rules of Evidence do not apply to proceedings for extradition or rendition, because the purpose of the extradition hearing is simply to determine whether the evidence of the fugitive's criminal conduct is sufficient to justify his or her extradition. Rivera v. State, 19 Ark. App. 100, 717 S.W.2d 493 (1986).

Privileges.

Evidentiary rules with respect to privileges apply to prosecutor's subpoenas as the functional equivalent of grand jury proceedings. Holt v. McCastlain, 357 Ark. 455, 182 S.W.3d 112 (2004).

Where an accident reconstructionist was hired by an attorney representing a driver who was involved in a car accident, the accident reconstruction report and testimony of the accident reconstructionist's employee were confidential, privileged communications that could not be subpoenaed. Holt v. McCastlain, 357 Ark. 455, 182 S.W.3d 112 (2004).

Probation Revocation Proceedings.

The Uniform Rules of Evidence, except for those with respect to privileges, do not apply in sentencing or probation revocation proceedings; still, a defendant in such proceedings is not entitled to have rules of evidence stricter than those set out in the Uniform Rules applied in such proceedings. Redman v. State, 265 Ark. 774, 580 S.W.2d 945 (1979).

The Rules of Evidence are not applicable in probation revocation proceedings. Wilson v. State, 25 Ark. App. 45, 752 S.W.2d 46 (1988); Tipton v. State, 47 Ark. App. 187, 887 S.W.2d 540 (1994).

Although the rules of evidence, including the hearsay rule, are not strictly applicable in revocation proceedings, the right to confront the witnesses is. Jones v. State, 31 Ark. App. 23, 786 S.W.2d 851 (1990).

Even if a defendant had preserved a claim regarding a court's failure to place defendant under oath in defendant's probation revocation proceeding, the claim would have failed because the rules of evidence did not apply in a proceeding to revoke probation. Ingram v. State, 2009 Ark. App. 729, 363 S.W.3d 6 (2009).

Where a defendant appealed a circuit court's revocation of his probation, contrary to his assertion, the probation officer could properly testify as to the contents of his file. The fact that the officer did not administer a drug test in 2012 was of no consequence because, even if the defendant had tested negative for illegal drugs at that time, he had tested positive for illegal-drug use while on probation in 2008. Locke v. State, 2013 Ark. App. 684 (2013).

To the extent that defendant argued in connection with his probation revocation that the chain of custody was not properly established when a local officer testified concerning drugs found in a search although no lab reports from the U.S. Department of Justice had been admitted, the Arkansas Rules of Evidence are not strictly applicable in revocation proceedings and there was no error in the circuit court's decision to admit the evidence. Savage v. State, 2019 Ark. App. 532, 590 S.W.3d 164 (2019).

HISTORY: Acts 1975 (Extended Sess., 1976), No. 1143, § 1, p. 2799; adopted October 13, 1986.

Publisher's Notes.

Adoption of Uniform Rules of Evidence. The Per Curiam of October 13, 1986, that adopted the Uniform Rules of Evidence read: "As explained in today's opinion in Ricarte v. State, 290 Ark. 100, 717 S.W.2d 488 (Oct. 13, 1986), the court under its statutory and rule-making authority adopts the Uniform Rules of Evidence as they are set forth in Act 1143 of 1975 (Extended Session, 1976). The Rules will be applicable as stated in Rule 1101"

Repeal of Dead Man's Statute.

Since the dead man's statute (Ark. Const., Schedule, § 2) (1874) was expressly repealed by the Uniform Rules of Evidence, a party who filed a claim against an estate for the value of services rendered to the testator shortly before his death could testify about the services rendered. Davis v. Hare, 262 Ark. 818, 561 S.W.2d 321 (1978).

Rule 1. Scope of rules.

These rules shall govern the procedure in the circuit courts in all suits or actions of a civil nature with the exceptions stated in Rule 81. They shall be construed and administered to secure the just, speedy and inexpensive determination of every action.

HISTORY: Amended November 18, 1996, effective March 1, 1997; amended May 24, 2001, effective July 1, 2001.

Publisher's Notes.

The Per Curiam order of the Supreme Court entered on December 18, 1978, adopting the Rules of Civil Procedure, and the supplemental Per Curiam order of December 18, 1978, read: "PER CURIAM. The Court, pursuant to Act 38 of 1973 and to its constitutional and inherent power to regulate procedure in the courts, hereby adopts the Rules of Civil Procedure submitted by the Civil Procedure Revision Committee, with modifications made by the Court. These Rules will be effective July 1, 1979. The Court expresses its great appreciation for the untiring work done by the members of the Committee and for the various suggestions made by attorneys in response to the Court's invitation.

"Without limiting the effect of the supersession rule adopted by this court as part of the Arkansas Rules of Civil Procedure, Rules of Appellate Procedure and Rules for Inferior Courts, pursuant to Act 38 of the General Assembly of 1973, we deem the following statutes (designated by section numbers in Ark. Stat., 1947, Annotated) to be specifically superseded by those rules:

"§ 26-401; § 26-402 through § 26-406; § 26-501; § 26-601; through § 26-603; § 26-605; § 26-901; § 26-902; § 26-1301 through § 26-1307; § 26-1309; § 26-1310; § 26-1315 through § 26-1318; § 26-1322;

"The following rules are deemed to be superseded:

“Rule 13, Rules Governing Procedures in Circuit and Chancery Courts.

“Rule 26A, Rules of Supreme Court.

“The question of supersession of all other rules and statutes will be determined by the supersession rule and Act 38 of 1973.”

The Per Curiam of November 24, 1986, provided: “Added to the list of statutes deemed superseded by the Arkansas Rules of Civil Procedure are the following sections as codified in Arkansas Statutes Annotated: §§ 22-406.3; 27-1003; 27-1004; 27-1005; 27-1006; 27-1007; 27-1144; 27-1160; 27-1407; 27-1801; 27-2102; 27-2505; 28-318; 28-332; 28-346; 28-348; 28-349; 28-350; 28-353; 28-354; 28-512; 28-513; 28-514; 28-515; 28-517; 28-519; 28-525; to the extent it conflicts with Ark. “Added to the list of statutes deemed superseded by the Arkansas Rules of Appellate Procedure and the Rules for Inferior Courts are the following sections as codified in Arkansas Statutes Annotated: §§ 26-507; 27-2101; 27-2102; 27-2103; 27-2106.1; 27-2106.2; 27-2106.3 through 27-2106.6; 27-2127.1; 27-2127.8; and 31-165.”

The Per Curiam order of the Supreme Court delivered on November 21, 1988, provided:

“Added to the list of statutes deemed superseded by the Arkansas Rules of Civil Procedure are the following sections as codified in the Arkansas Code Annotated (1987); §§ 16-44-101 through 16-44-106; 16-44-107(b); 16-44-109 through 16-44-113; 16-44-115; and 16-44-121.

“As a result of this order and the order of November 24, 1986, In the Matter of Statutes Deemed Superseded by the Arkansas Rules of Civil Procedure, 290 Ark. 616, 719 S.W.2d 436 (1986), SubChapter 1 of Chapter 44 of the Arkansas Code of 1987 has been deemed superseded in its entirety.”

Reporter's Notes to Rule 1:

1. This rule is substantially the same as Federal Rules of Civil Procedure (FRCP) Rule

1. Merger of Arkansas law and equity proceedings is not contemplated by these Rules, thus reference is made to Circuit, Chancery, and Probate Courts.

2. Rule 81 makes exceptions to the applicability of these rules for special statutory proceedings. An example is Probate Court proceedings as described in Ark. Stat. Ann., § 62-2105, et seq., (Repl. 1971).

3. In instances where the specific statutory action insufficiently described the procedure to be used, these rules will be applied.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 1997 Amendment:

This revision, which adds the words “and administered” to the second sentence, is based on the 1993 amendment to the corresponding federal rule. Its purpose is to recognize the affirmative duty of the court to exercise the authority conferred by these rules to ensure that civil litigation is resolved not only fairly, but also without undue cost or delay. Attorneys, as officers of the court, share this responsibility.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 2001 Amendment:

The reference to chancery and probate courts in the first sentence has been deleted in light of Constitutional Amendment 80, the new judicial article approved by the voters in November 2000. That amendment established the circuit courts as the state's “trial courts of original jurisdiction” and abolished the separate chancery and probate courts.

CASE NOTES

Default.

In a case involving the Arkansas Civil Rights Act, § 16-123-101 et seq., a default judgment was not set aside under Ark. R. Civ. P. 55 because a motion for an extension was not timely where the request was not made to a trial court before the expiration of the period originally prescribed, the failure to respond in a timely manner due to one attorney being distracted by the birth of a child was not excusable neglect, an amendment to Ark. R. Civ. P. 12 was inapplicable, and an argument that the complaint failed to state a claim was rejected. The denial of illegal intent was insufficient in a first affidavit, a second affidavit was filed after the default was granted, and an individual supervisor could have been held personally liable for alleged acts of retaliation under § 16-123-108(a). Eusanio v. Tipping, 2013 Ark. App. 38, 425 S.W.3d 838 (2013).

Compliance.

Despite the mandate that the Arkansas Rules of Civil Procedure were to be construed and administered to secure the just, speedy, and inexpensive determination of every action, there was no basis for overriding other provisions of the Rules of Civil Procedure that were designed to ensure that Arkansas courts had personal jurisdiction over defendants. Thus, dismissal of a case for failure to establish person jurisdiction over a defendant due to defective service of process under the Rules of Civil Procedure was appropriate. Carter v. Livingston, 2021 Ark. App. 363, 635 S.W.3d 351 (2021).

Purpose.

The objective of the rules of procedure is the orderly and sufficient resolution of disputes. Bradford v. Bradford, 52 Ark. App. 81, 915 S.W.2d 723 (1996).

Trial court abused its discretion in awarding sanctions because its reliance upon the rationale offered in a dissenting opinion was misplaced because it represented an erroneous interpretation of the law as set forth by the Arkansas Supreme Court. City of Little Rock v. Nerhan, 2013 Ark. App. 672, 430 S.W.3d 203 (2013).

Rule 2. One form of action.

There shall be one form of action to be known as “civil action.”

HISTORY: Amended May 24, 2001, effective July 1, 2001.

Reporter’s Notes to Rule 2:

1. The first sentence is the same as FRCP 2. As in the Federal Rules and code pleading, the intent here is to obviate the “forms of action.”

2. The second sentence makes clear the intent to preserve the distinction between law and equity cases. See Rule 1, Reporter’s Note 1.

Addition to Reporter’s Notes, 2001 Amendment:

The second sentence, which provided that actions in equity were to be brought in chancery court and actions at law in circuit court, has been deleted in conformity with Constitutional Amendment 80, under which the circuit courts are the state’s “trial courts of original jurisdiction.” The effect of this change in the rule is to merge law and equity, as contemplated by Amendment 80. As the U.S. Supreme Court observed with respect to the corresponding federal rule, “law and equity are procedurally combined; nothing turns now upon the form of the action or the procedural devices by which the parties happen to come before the court.” Ross v. Bernhard, 396 U.S. 531, 540 (1970).

Section 6(B) of Amendment 80 authorizes the Supreme Court to promulgate rules governing the organization of circuit courts into subject matter divisions. Administrative Order No. 14, adopted by the Supreme Court pursuant to this authorization, requires that the circuit judges of each judicial circuit “establish the following subject-matter divisions in each county of the circuit: criminal, civil, juvenile, probate, and domestic relations.” However, the order expressly provides that this designation of divisions “is for the purpose of judicial administration and caseload management and is not for the purpose of subject-matter jurisdiction.” At all times, a circuit judge has “the authority to hear all matters within the jurisdiction of the circuit court and has the affirmative duty to do so regardless of the designation of divisions.”

The merged system is to be contrasted with and distinguished from the prior practice in Arkansas during the period in which chancery courts had not been created in all counties. In counties without chancery courts, the circuit court “was a court of dual jurisdiction, the judge presiding in one division or ‘on the law side’ as a superior court of common law, and also sitting in chancery as judge of a court of equity” Morgan Utilities, Inc. v. Perry County, 183 Ark. 542, 547, 37 S.W.2d 74, 77 (1931). With the merger of law and equity, there are not separate law and equity “sides” of the circuit court.

Although law and equity have been merged, equitable principles may be applied where appropriate. This has been so in the federal courts. E.g., Stainback v. Mo Hock Ke Lok Po, 336 U.S. 368, 382 n.26 (1949) (“Notwithstanding the fusion of law and equity by the Rules of Civil Procedure, the substantive principles of Courts of Chancery remain unaffected”); In re United States Brass Corp., 110 F.3d 1261, 1267 (7th Cir. 1997) (“Ever since law and equity were merged in the federal courts . . . more than a half century ago, the courts have had a free hand in importing equitable defenses into suits at law”). Moreover, the merger does not alter substantive rights. Grupo Mexicano de Desarrollo, S.A., 527 U.S. 308, 322 (1999).

CASE NOTES

Actions.

An "action" is an ordinary proceeding in a court of justice by one party against another for the enforcement or protection of a private right or the redress or prevention of a private wrong; all proceedings which are not ordinary proceedings are "special proceedings" created exclusively by statute. In re Martindale, 327 Ark. 685, 940 S.W.2d 491 (1997).

Delinquency Case.

State was not entitled to appeal dismissal for violation of speedy trial in the delinquency proceeding, because under Ark. R. App. P. Crim. 3, the correct and uniform administration of justice was not at issue, when after acknowledging its error in sua sponte nolle prosequing the delinquency petition, the circuit court determined which periods of time were excludable for the purposes of speedy trial. State v. S.L., 2012 Ark. 73 (2012).

Election Contest.

Local option election contest was a special proceeding; it was not necessary that all of the rules of civil procedure be applied. Garrett v. Andrews, 294 Ark. 160, 741 S.W.2d 257 (1987), cert. denied, 487 U.S. 1219, 108 S. Ct. 2873, 101 L. Ed. 2d 908 (1988).

Motions.

Although the subject of responses to motions is contemplated by the Ark. R. Civ. P., the subject is not clearly addressed therein. Smith v. Walt Bennett Ford, Inc., 314 Ark. 591, 864 S.W.2d 817 (1993).

Policy.

An order granting partial summary judgment on the issue of punitive damages is not a final order from which an appeal can be taken and is contrary to the policy of prohibiting piecemeal appeals. Austin v. First Nat'l Bank, 305 Ark. 456, 808 S.W.2d 773 (1991).

Probate Proceeding.

Dismissal of a suit contesting a will cannot be done without prejudice, since a probate proceeding is a special proceeding rather than an "action" because it is not a civil action under this rule or Ark. R. Civ. P. 3, and since a will contestant cannot take a nonsuit under Ark. R. Civ. P. 41, because such a contest is not an independent proceeding in itself; thus, dismissal with prejudice is necessary, since it would seriously disrupt the administration and distribution of estates if a will contest would be dismissed voluntarily or without prejudice and refiled at some indefinite later date. Screeton v. Crumpler, 273 Ark. 167, 617 S.W.2d 847 (1981).

Where the guardian of the wife's estate failed to timely obtain letters of administration within forty days of the wife's death, the guardian lost its authority to prosecute an action to contest her husband's will on her behalf. Ark. R. Civ. P. 25 was inapplicable, because this was a special proceeding and no substitution of parties was at issue. First Sec. Bank v. Estate of Leonard, 369 Ark. 213, 253 S.W.3d 434 (2007).

ARTICLE II. COMMENCEMENT OF ACTION; SERVICE OF PROCESS, PLEADINGS, MOTIONS, AND ORDERS

Rule

Rule 3. Commencement of action -- "Clerk" defined.

Rule 4. Summons and Service of Process.

Rule 5. Service and filing of pleadings and other papers.

Rule 6. Time.

Rule 3. Commencement of action -- "Clerk" defined.

(a) A civil action is commenced by filing a complaint with the clerk of the court who shall note thereon the date and precise time of filing.

(b) The term "clerk of the court" as used in these Rules means the circuit clerk and, with respect to probate matters, any county clerk who serves as ex officio clerk of the probate division of the circuit court pursuant to Ark. Code Ann. § 14-14-502(b)(2)(B). In counties where the county clerk serves as the ex officio clerk of any division of the circuit court, the filing requirement shall be satisfied when the complaint is filed with either the circuit clerk or the county clerk.

(c) The clerk shall assign a new case number and charge a new filing fee for the filing of any case that is refiled after having been dismissed.

(d) No other claim or counterclaim for relief, including without limitation, divorce, annulment, separate maintenance, or paternity, shall be asserted in an action filed under the Domestic Abuse Act, Ark. Code Ann. § 9-15-101 et seq., but a separate action seeking other relief shall be filed, and the clerk shall assign a new case number and charge a filing fee unless the filing fee is waived pursuant to Rule 72 of these rules.

(e) A petition for adoption cannot be asserted in a guardianship proceeding, but a separate action shall be filed, and the clerk shall assign a new case number and charge a filing fee unless the filing fee is waived pursuant to Rule 72 of these rules.

HISTORY: Amended May 16, 1983; amended May 24, 2001, effective July 1, 2001; amended March 13, 2003; amended February 10, 2005; amended June 2, 2011, effective July 1, 2011; amended February 23, 2012.

Publisher's Notes.

The Per Curiam of May 24, 2001, provided that this Rule contain a transitional provision: "Transitional Provision. For the period July 1, 2001 through December 31, 2001, probate matters shall continue to be filed with the same clerk where such matters were filed immediately prior to July 1, 2001."

Reporter's Notes to Rule 3:

1. This Rule changes Arkansas law. The statute, Ark. Stat. Ann. § 27-301 (Repl. 1962), which is superseded by this rule provided, in part, that an action was commenced by filing a complaint and placing it and a summons in the hands of the sheriff of the proper County. Under this Rule, an action will commence without regard to receipt by the process server, subject only to the requirement that service be completed within 60 days from the filing of the complaint, unless the time for service has been extended by the Court.

2. This rule will do away with uncertainty in "race to venue" and statute of limitation cases as to where or when the action was first commenced. It will also do away with the need to decide whether the Complaint and Summons have been placed in the hands of the sheriff with reasonable expectations of service or whether the Complainant has acted in good faith in trying to effect service. See Williams v. Edmondson and Ward, 257 Ark. 837, 250 S.W.2d 260 (1975). Instead, where service is in issue under the 60 days or extension proviso, actual service will be the standard. If actual service is not made within 60 days, the Court may extend the time for service, thus protecting the plaintiff against the running of the statute where there is good cause to do so.

3. FRCP 3 contains no proviso regarding the obtaining of service of process within a specified period after the complaint is filed. Federal courts are thus plagued with the question whether filing a complaint tolls the statute of limitations where there is an allegation of lack of diligence in obtaining service. See Wright and Miller, Federal Practice and Procedure, § 1056 (1969). This rule will effectively cause the decision whether delay in service is justified to be made within 60 days of filing rather than at some indefinite later time.

4. The term "proper court" means one which has jurisdiction of the subject matter and parties described in the complaint and in which venue is properly laid.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 1983 Amendment:

The words of the first sentence of the rule were changed from "precise date and time of filing" to "date and precise time of filing."

A second sentence of the rule had provided that an action would not be deemed commenced unless service were obtained within 60 days of filing, with provisions for extension of the time limit. That sentence was deleted, and the matter of the time within which service must be obtained is addressed in Rule 4(i).

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 2001 Amendment:

The word "proper," which modified "court" in the original version of the rule, has been deleted. Also, the one sentence that comprised the rule has been designated as subdivision (a) and a new subdivision (b) added to define the term "clerk of the court."

As the original Reporter's Notes accompanying this rule make plain, the "proper court" was one with jurisdiction over the subject matter. When the rule was adopted in 1978, that jurisdiction was divided among three courts — circuit, chancery, and probate. Under Constitutional Amendment 80, however, the circuit court is the single trial court of general jurisdiction.

The original Reporter's Notes to this rule also state that the term "proper court" referred to the court "in which venue is properly laid." This issue has since been addressed in Rule 12(h)(3), which provides that in cases where venue is improper, the court may either "dismiss the action or direct that it be transferred to a county where venue would be proper." In the event of a transfer pursuant to this provision, the action remains "commenced" as of the date of the original filing. If the action is dismissed, it was nonetheless commenced for statute of limitations purposes and may be refiled within one year under the savings statute, Ark. Code Ann. § 16-56-126. See Forrest City Machine Works v. Lyons, 315 Ark. 173, 866 S.W.2d 372 (1993) (savings statute is applicable when action is dismissed for insufficient service of process).

Subdivision (b) has been added in light of Administrative Order No. 14 of the Supreme Court and Act 997 of 2001. The order, adopted pursuant to Section 6(B) of Amendment 80, requires the judges of each judicial circuit to establish the following divisions: criminal, civil, juvenile, probate, and domestic relations divisions. Act 997, which amended Ark. Code Ann. § 14-14-502(a)(2)(B), provides that in those counties in which county clerks have been elected, the county clerk "may be ex officio clerk of the probate division of circuit court, if such division exists, of the county until otherwise provided by the General Assembly." Consequently, in some counties probate proceedings will be initiated by a filing in the county clerk's office, and in such cases the county clerk will be the "clerk of the court" for other purposes under these Rules.

Most probate matters are "special proceedings" within the meaning of Rule 81(a) and thus governed by statutory procedures, if any, rather than by these Rules. See, e.g., In re Adoption of Martindale, 327 Ark. 685, 940 S.W.2d 491 (1997) (adoption); Screeton v. Crumpler, 273 Ark. 167, 617 S.W.2d 847 (1981) (probate of will). However, some probate matters are civil actions. See, e.g., Coleman v. Coleman, 257 Ark. 404, 520 S.W.2d 239 (1974) (proceeding by which a claim against the estate of a deceased person is reduced to judgment is a civil action). The status of a particular probate matter as a special proceeding or a civil action has no bearing on where the papers are to be filed.

Filing in the wrong clerk's office is not fatal, and the action is commenced as of the filing date. Cf. Linder v. Howard, 296 Ark. 414, 757 S.W.2d 562 (1995) (the timely filing of the complaint in chancery court tolled the statute of limitations even though the case should have been brought in circuit court and was transferred there after statute had run).

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 2003 Amendment:

The statutory reference in subdivision (b) has been corrected.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 2005 Amendment:

Rule 3(b) has been amended. As the Rule states, in some counties the county clerk serves as the ex officio clerk of the probate division of the circuit court. Uncertainties have arisen in these circumstances about the effect of filing a pleading or paper with the wrong clerk. A sentence has been added to subsection (b) to make plain that, in these counties, a party complies with Rule 3(a) when the complaint is file marked by either the circuit clerk or the county clerk. This new provision accords with pre-Amendment 80 cases. Cf., Linder v. Howard, 296 Ark. 414, 415-18, 757 S.W.2d 549, 550-51 (1995) (the timely filing of a complaint in chancery court tolled the statute of limitations even though the case should have been brought in circuit court and was transferred there after the statute had run.). Similar clarifying language has been added to Rule of Civil Procedure 5(c)(1) (filing papers in general), Administrative Order Number 2 (clerk's docket and filing), and Rule of Appellate Procedure — Civil 3(b) (filing a notice of appeal).

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 2011 Amendment:

The amendment adds a new subdivision (c) to clarify that a new case number is to be assigned and a new filing fee charged for a case re-filed after having been dismissed. The new case number and filing fee requirements apply to cases voluntarily or involuntarily dismissed under Rule 41. The new case number and filing fee requirements do not apply to cases that have not been dismissed but have been closed subject to reopening depending on further developments in the case. Consequently, the requirements do not apply to requests for modification of visitation, custody, or child support provisions in domestic relation cases; the filing of motions for contempt citations; and other requests for court orders in cases that have been closed, but not dismissed. However, other fees or charges authorized by law, such as case reopening fees, may be imposed.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 2015 Amendment (Contingent):

New subdivision (d) resolves the separation-of-powers issue at the core of Weidrick v. Arnold, 310 Ark. 138, 835 S.W.2d 843 (1992). There, the supreme court invalidated a statute which, contrary to Rule 3, conditioned commencement of an action for medical injury upon providing written notice of the claim to the defendant. Subdivision (d) adds this requirement to the rule, effective upon the General Assembly's enactment of a companion limitations-tolling provision.

The contents of the notice in paragraph (1) of subdivision (d) are based on Ark. Code Ann. § 16-114-212, added by Section 22 of Act 649 of 2003. Under section 16-114-212, notice is optional and is presumably given only when the plaintiff needed to take advantage of the tolling provision. The statute is deemed superseded pursuant to Ark. Code Ann. § 16-11-301 when subdivision (d) becomes effective.

Subdivision (d)(1)(C) is intended to require some notice of not only the injury but also what the defendant is alleged to have done wrong. In subdivision (d)(1)(D), the language “who provided any care or treatment” is intended to make clear that the list of providers is not limited to those who contributed to the injury and includes those who subsequently treated or cared for the patient.

CASE NOTES

Commencement Date.

Under this rule, an action is commenced by the filing of a complaint with the clerk of the proper court, and the establishment of venue and the tolling of a statute of limitations is based on the date the complaint is filed; however, the commencement date is subject to the plaintiff completing service within 120 days from the date of filing of the complaint, unless the time for service has been extended by the court under Ark. R. Civ. P. 4(i). Forrest City Mach. Works, Inc. v. Lyons, 315 Ark. 173, 866 S.W.2d 372 (1993).

The effectiveness of the commencement date is dependent upon meeting the requirements of Ark. R. Civ. P. 4(i), which provides in part that service of process on a defendant must be accomplished within 120 days after the filing of the complaint. Sublett v. Hipps, 330 Ark. 58, 952 S.W.2d 140 (1997).

Although the amended complaint in parents' medical malpractice action was filed before the expiration of the two-year statute of limitations in § 16-114-203, the limitations period was not tolled because a summons was never issued, and parents admitted they failed to complete service of process of the amended complaint, as required by this rule; while this rule provides that an action is commenced by filing a complaint with the clerk of the proper court, the effectiveness of the commencement date is dependent upon a party satisfying the requirements of Ark. R. Civ. P. 4(i), which provides that service of process on a defendant must be accomplished within 120 days after the filing of the complaint. Posey v. St. Bernard's Healthcare, Inc., 365 Ark. 154, 226 S.W.3d 757 (2006).

Circuit court properly dismissed a patient's negligent treatment case against a chiropractor without prejudice to being refiled where the patient had commenced his case under this rule by completing timely, but defective, service, and thus, he was entitled to the shelter of § 16-56-126(a)(1). Clouse v. Ngau Van Tu, 101 Ark. App. 260, 274 S.W.3d 344 (2008).

Circuit court properly dismissed an injured passenger's declaratory-judgment action against an insurer because the insurer established venue in a different county on the issue of liability coverage when it filed suit there before the passenger commenced his action, and the fact that the passenger served the insurer first was immaterial. Johnson v. Equity Ins. Co., 2017 Ark. App. 436, 526 S.W.3d 921 (2017).

Extension of Time.

The court's discretion as to whether to extend the time for service of process must be exercised within the time period allowed under this rule. Simpson v. Bailey, 279 Ark. 27, 648 S.W.2d 464 (1983).

Jurisdiction.

Circuit court lacked jurisdiction to adjudicate defendant's claims raised in plaintiff's action for a domestic-abuse order of protection because both the Domestic Abuse Act and Arkansas Rules of Civil Procedure prohibited the same, and defendant's case was never filed because he never paid a filing fee. Redwine v. Coursey, 2021 Ark. App. 417, 635 S.W.3d 520 (2021).

Circuit court erred in entering an order dismissing with prejudice the prisoner's 42 U.S.C. § 1983 civil rights case as the prisoner's case was never filed under § 16-58-101 because he never paid a filing fee to the circuit clerk; therefore, the circuit court never acquired jurisdiction. Ward v. Hutchinson, 2018 Ark. 270, 555 S.W.3d 866 (2018).

Limitation of Actions.

When the court lacking subject matter jurisdiction has, by statute, authority to transfer the action to a court of competent jurisdiction, timely filing of the suit in the first court tolls the statute of limitations. Linder v. Howard, 296 Ark. 414, 757 S.W.2d 549 (1988).

Malpractice Proceedings.

Where appellant failed to comply with the 60-day statutory notice requirement prior to filing a medical malpractice complaint, this rule regarding commencement of actions superseded that statutory provision. Weidrick v. Arnold, 310 Ark. 138, 835 S.W.2d 843 (1992), limited, Thomas v. Cornell, 316 Ark. 366, 872 S.W.2d 370 (1994).

This rule directly conflicts with and supersedes § 16-114-204 [repealed], with respect to the commencement of civil actions. Weidrick v. Arnold, 310 Ark. 138, 835 S.W.2d 843 (1992), limited, Thomas v. Cornell, 316 Ark. 366, 872 S.W.2d 370 (1994).

The constitutional infirmity in § 16-114-209(b) is the provision for dismissal if an affidavit does not accompany a complaint within thirty days; therefore, a decision to dismiss a medical malpractice action for failing to file such an affidavit was reversed on appeal since this conflicted with this rule and Ark. Const., Amend. 80, § 3. Summerville v. Thrower, 369 Ark. 231, 253 S.W.3d 415 (2007).

Savings statute was applicable entitling the patient to refile his medical malpractice suit because his initial attempted service on the surgeon was proper; the return receipt was signed by the surgeon's secretary and the patient not only served the surgeon by certified mail, return receipt requested, restricted delivery, he further sent interrogatories certified mail, return receipt requested, restricted delivery and the secretary signed for those documents as the surgeon's agent. McCoy v. Montgomery, 370 Ark. 333, 259 S.W.3d 430 (2007).

New Case Number Required.

Easement owner's pro se petition to enjoin the landowner from interfering with her purported easement was properly dismissed where a new case number was not assigned to the petition after the initial case was nonsuited, as required by subsection (c) of this rule. Burnham v. Price, 2018 Ark. App. 410, 558 S.W.3d 402 (2018).

This rule, as amended in 2011, effectively overrules Tucker v. Sullivan, 2010 Ark. 170. Burnham v. Price, 2018 Ark. App. 410, 558 S.W.3d 402 (2018).

Probate Proceeding.

Dismissal of a suit contesting a will cannot be done without prejudice, since a probate proceeding is a special proceeding rather than an "action" because it is not a civil action under Ark. R. Civ. P. 2, or this rule, and since a will contestant cannot take a nonsuit under Ark. R. Civ. P. 41, because such a contest is not an independent proceeding in itself; thus, dismissal with prejudice is necessary, since it would seriously disrupt the administration and distribution of estates if a will contest would be dismissed voluntarily or without prejudice and refiled at some indefinite later date. Screeton v. Crumpler, 273 Ark. 167, 617 S.W.2d 847 (1981).

Relief from Bond.

If a defendant seeks relief from a bond established by an inferior court [now district court], he must first commence his or her action by filing a pleading with the clerk of the superintending court. State v. Pulaski County Circuit Court, 327 Ark. 287, 938 S.W.2d 815 (1997).

Summons.

Court erred in dismissing appellant's complaint against appellees on the basis of a defect in the summonses served on appellees, because the summonses were not defective and the court did not lack jurisdiction, when Ark. R. Civ. P. 4(b) did not provide that the essential terms of a summons were to be determined when the complaint was filed, and the court erred in construing the rule as if it implicitly contained such a requirement. Maestri v. Signature Bank of Ark., 2013 Ark. App. 174 (2013).

Supersession of Statute.

The two subsections of § 16-114-204 [repealed] are dependent upon one another, and, since subsection (a) of this rule is superseded in its application by this rule, the entire section is superseded. Parmley v. Moose, 317 Ark. 52, 876 S.W.2d 243 (1994).

The grace period pursuant to § 16-114-204 [repealed] has been invalidated by this rule. Thompson v. Dunn, 319 Ark. 6, 889 S.W.2d 31 (1994).

Untimely Service of Process.

Where a building materials supplier brought an action to foreclose its materialmen's lien against the contractor and the landowners, but service of process on the contractor was not had until more than 47 months after the filing of the complaint and no order was ever obtained extending the time for service, the action was void because it was not commenced within the 15-months limitation period of § 18-44-119, the applicable materialmen's lien statute. Calton Properties, Inc. v. Ken's Dist. Bldg. Materials, Inc., 282 Ark. 521, 669 S.W.2d 469 (1984).

The "dismissal without prejudice" language in Ark. R. Civ. P. (4)(i) does not apply if the plaintiff's action is barred by a statute of limitations running as a result of the failure to obtain service within 120 days. Bodiford v. Bess, 330 Ark. 713, 956 S.W.2d 861 (1997).

Rule 4. Summons and Service of Process.

(a) Issuance of Summons. Immediately on the filing of the complaint, the clerk shall issue a summons to the plaintiff or the plaintiff's attorney, who shall deliver it for service to a person authorized by subdivision (c) of this rule to serve process.

(b) Form of Summons. The summons shall be styled in the name of the court and issued under its seal, dated and signed by the clerk or a deputy clerk, and directed from the State of Arkansas to the defendant to be served. It shall contain:

(1) in its caption, the names of the plaintiff and defendant or, if there are multiple parties, the names of the plaintiff and defendant listed first in the complaint;

(2) the address of the defendant to be served, if known;

(3) the name and address of the plaintiff's attorney, if any, otherwise the address of the plaintiff;

(4) the time within which these rules require that the defendant to be served must appear, file a responsive pleading or motion, and defend; and

(5) notice that the defendant's failure to appear, respond, and defend within the time allowed may result in entry of judgment by default against the defendant for the relief demanded in the complaint.

(c) Process: Defined; By Whom Served.

(1) For purposes of this rule, the term "process" means the summons and a copy of the complaint, which shall be served together. The plaintiff or the plaintiff's attorney shall furnish the person making service with as many copies as are necessary.

(2) The following persons are authorized to serve process:

(A) the sheriff of the county where the service is to be made, or his or her deputy, unless the sheriff is a party to the action;

(B) any person appointed pursuant to Administrative Order No. 20 for the purpose of serving summons by either the court in which the action is filed or a court in the county in which service is to be made;

(C) any person authorized to serve process under the law of the place outside this state where service is made; and

(D) in the event of service by mail or commercial delivery company pursuant to subdivision (g)(1) and (2) of this rule, the plaintiff or an attorney of record for the plaintiff.

(d) Proof of Service. The person effecting service shall make proof of service to the clerk within the time during which the person served must respond to the summons. Failure to make proof of service, however, shall not affect the validity of service.

(1) Proof of service may be made by executing a certificate of service contained in the same document as the summons. If service is made by a person other than a sheriff or his or her deputy, the certificate shall be sworn. If service has been by mail or commercial delivery company, the person making service shall attach a return receipt, envelope, affidavit, acknowledgment, or other writing required by subdivision (g)(1) and (2) of this rule.

(2) If service is made by warning order, proof of service shall be made as provided in subdivision (g)(3) of this rule.

(3) Proof of service in a foreign country, if effected pursuant to the provisions of a treaty or convention as provided in subdivision (h)(4) of this rule, shall be made in accordance with the applicable treaty or convention.

(e) Amendment. At any time in its discretion and on terms as it deems just, the court may allow any summons or proof of service to be amended unless it clearly appears that material prejudice would result to the substantial rights of the party against whom the summons is issued.

(f) Personal Service Inside the State. Service of process shall be made inside the state as follows:

(1) Natural Persons. If the defendant is a natural person at least 18 years of age or emancipated by court order, by:

(A) delivering a copy of the process to the defendant personally, or if he or she refuses to receive it after the process server makes his or her purpose clear, by leaving the papers in close proximity to the defendant;

(B) leaving the process with any member of the defendant's family at least 18 years of age at a place where the defendant resides; or

(C) delivering the process to an agent authorized by appointment or by law to receive service of summons on the defendant's behalf.

(2) Minors. If a defendant is less than 18 years of age and has not been emancipated by court order, by delivering the process to the defendant's father, mother, or guardian or, if there be none in the state, to any person at least 18 years of age in whose care or control the minor may be or with whom the minor resides.

(3) Incapacitated Persons. If a plenary, limited, or temporary guardian has been appointed for an incapacitated person, or if a conservator has been appointed for a person who by reason of advanced age or physical disability is unable to manage his or her property, service shall be on the person and the guardian or conservator.

(4) Incarcerated Persons. Service on a person incarcerated in any jail, penitentiary, or other correctional facility in this state shall be on the administrator of the institution, who shall promptly deliver the process to the incarcerated person. A copy of the process shall also be sent to the incarcerated person by first-class mail and marked as "legal mail" and, unless the court otherwise directs, to his or her spouse, if any.

(5) Corporations. Service on any corporation, including nonprofit corporations, professional corporations, and cooperatives, shall be on its registered agent for service of process, or the agent's secretary or assistant; any officer of the corporation, or the officer's secretary or assistant; a managing or general agent of the corporation, or the agent's secretary or assistant; any agent authorized by appointment or by law to receive service of process; or as provided by an applicable statute.

(6) Limited Liability Companies. Service on a limited liability company shall be on its registered agent for service of process, or the agent's secretary or assistant; a manager of a limited liability company in which management is vested in managers rather than members, or the manager's secretary or assistant; a member of a limited liability company in which management is vested in the members or in which management is vested in managers and there are no managers, or that member's secretary or assistant; a managing or general agent of the limited liability company, or the agent's secretary or assistant; any agent authorized by appointment or by law to receive service of process; or as provided by an applicable statute.

(7) Partnerships. Service on any type of partnership, including a general partnership, a limited liability partnership, a limited partnership, and a limited liability limited partnership, shall be on any general partner or his or her secretary or assistant; the partnership's registered agent for service of process, or the agent's secretary or assistant; a managing or general agent of the partnership, or the agent's secretary or assistant; any agent authorized by appointment or by law to receive service of process; or as provided by an applicable statute.

(8) Unincorporated Associations. Service on an unincorporated association subject to suit under its own name, except a partnership, shall be on its registered agent for service of process, or the agent's secretary or assistant; any manager of the association, or the manager's secretary or assistant; any agent authorized by appointment or by law to receive service of process; or as provided by an applicable statute.

(9) Defendant Class Actions. Service on a defendant class shall be on each of the parties named as class representatives in the same manner as if each representative were sued in a separate action.

(10) Trusts. Service on a trust shall be on a trustee of the trust, on the trustee's secretary or assistant, or as provided by statute.

(11) The United States. Service on the United States or any of its agencies, officers, or employees shall be as authorized by the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure or by other federal law.

(12) States and State Agencies. Service on a state or any of its agencies, departments, boards, or commissions subject to suit shall be on the chief executive officer, director, or chairman, any other person designated by appointment or by an applicable statute to receive service of process, or on the Attorney General of the state if service is accompanied by an affidavit of a party or the party's attorney that the officer or designated person is unknown or cannot be located.

(13) Municipal Corporations. Service on a municipal corporation shall be on the mayor, city manager, city administrator, or city clerk.

(14) Counties. Service on a county shall be on the county judge, county administrator, county clerk, or circuit clerk if no county clerk has been elected.

(15) School Districts. Service on a school district shall be on the president of the board of directors, or the superintendent of schools.

(16) Other Political Subdivisions. Service on any political subdivision, special district, or quasi-municipal agency not listed in this subdivision shall be on any officer, director, chairman, or manager.

(17) Public Officers or Employees. Service on an officer or employee of a government entity listed in paragraphs (12)-(16) of this subdivision, acting in an official capacity, shall be on the officer or employee and by mailing a copy of the process as specified in subdivision (g)(1)(A)(i) of this rule to an official on whom service can be made pursuant to paragraphs (12)-(16), as applicable, and a copy to the Attorney General if a state officer or employee is sued.

(g) Alternative Methods of Service. In addition to the methods of service described in subdivision (f) of this rule, process may be served on any defendant except the United States and any of its agencies, officers, or employees by the methods enumerated in this subdivision.

(1) Service by Mail. The plaintiff or an attorney of record for the plaintiff shall serve process by mail only as provided in this paragraph.

(A)(i) Certified mail shall be addressed to the person to be served with a return receipt requested and delivery restricted to the addressee or the agent of the addressee. The addressee must be a natural person specified by name, and the agent of the addressee must be authorized in accordance with U.S. Postal Service regulations. Notwithstanding the foregoing, service on the registered agent of a corporation or other organization may be made by certified mail with a return receipt requested.

(ii) Service pursuant to this paragraph (A) shall not be the basis for the entry of a judgment by default unless the record contains a return receipt signed by the addressee or the agent of the addressee or a returned envelope, postal document; a United States Postal Service Form 3811 (Domestic Return Receipt—green card) executed as provided in the United States Postal Service procedures in place at the time of service; or an affidavit by a postal employee reciting or showing refusal of the mailed process by the addressee. Failure to claim mail does not constitute refusal for purposes of this paragraph.

(iii) If delivery of mailed process is refused, the plaintiff or attorney making service, promptly on receipt of notice of the refusal, shall mail to the defendant by first-class mail a copy of the process and a notice that despite the refusal the case will proceed and that judgment by default may be entered for the relief demanded in the complaint unless the defendant appears to defend the suit.

(iv) A judgment by default may be set aside pursuant to Rule 55(c) if the addressee demonstrates to the court that the return receipt was signed or delivery was refused by someone other than the addressee or the agent of the addressee.

(B)(i) First-class mail, postage prepaid, shall be addressed to the person to be served, together with two copies of a notice and acknowledgment conforming substantially to a form adopted by the Supreme Court and a return envelope, postage prepaid, addressed to the sender.

(ii) If no acknowledgment of service is received by the sender within 20 days after the date of mailing, service of process shall be made in a manner other than by mail or by commercial delivery company.

(iii) Unless good cause is shown for not doing so, the court shall order the payment of the costs of service by the person served if that person does not complete and return, within 20 days after mailing, the notice and acknowledgment of receipt of summons. The notice and acknowledgment of receipt of process shall be executed under oath or affirmation.

(2) Service by Commercial Delivery Company. The plaintiff or an attorney of record for the plaintiff shall serve process by commercial delivery company only as provided in this paragraph.

(A) The documents must be addressed to the person to be served and delivered by a commercial delivery company that (1) obtains signatures of recipients, (2) maintains permanent records of actual delivery, and (3) has been approved by the circuit court in which the action is filed or in the county where service is to be made.

(B) The process must be delivered to the defendant or an agent authorized to receive service of process on behalf of the defendant. The signature of the defendant or agent must be obtained.

(C)(i) Service pursuant to this paragraph (2) shall not be the basis for a judgment by default unless the record reflects actual delivery on, and the signature of, the defendant or agent, or an affidavit by an employee of an approved commercial delivery company reciting or showing refusal of the process by the defendant or agent.

(ii) If delivery of process is refused, the plaintiff or attorney making the service, promptly on receipt of notice of the refusal, shall mail to the defendant by first class mail a copy of the process and a notice that despite the refusal the case will proceed and that judgment by default may be entered for the relief demanded in the complaint unless the defendant appears to defend the suit.

(iii) Any judgment by default may be set aside pursuant to Rule 55(c) if the court finds that someone other than the defendant or agent signed the receipt or refused the delivery or that the commercial delivery company had not been approved as required by this paragraph.

(3) Service by Warning Order. If the plaintiff seeks a judgment that affects or may affect the rights of persons who need not be subject personally to the jurisdiction of the court, service may be by warning order issued by the clerk. On the filing by the plaintiff or his or her attorney of an affidavit showing that, after diligent inquiry, the identity or whereabouts of the defendant remains unknown, the clerk shall issue a warning order to be published in a newspaper of general circulation as described in paragraph (B) or posted at the courthouse as provided in paragraph (C).

(A) The warning order shall state the caption of the pleadings; briefly describe the nature of the action and the relief sought; include, if applicable, a description of the property or other res to be affected by the judgment; and warn the defendant or interested person to appear within 30 days from the date of first publication of the warning order or face entry of judgment by default or be otherwise barred from asserting his or her interest.

(B)(i) The party seeking judgment shall cause the warning order to be published weekly for two consecutive weeks in a newspaper having general circulation in the county where the action is filed and to be sent, with a copy of the complaint, to the defendant or interested person at his or her last known address by certified mail as provided in paragraph (1)(A)(i) of this subdivision.

(ii) As used in this subdivision, the term “newspaper” means a printed publication in the English language of no less than four pages that has been disseminated without interruption at least once a week for the preceding 12 months in the county where the action has been filed, holds a second-class mailing permit, has at least 50-percent paid circulation, and devotes an average of 40 percent of its space to news and information of interest to the general public.

(iii) Proof of publication shall be by affidavit of the editor, proprietor, or business manager of the newspaper, with a copy of the published notice attached, stating the dates on which the notice appeared.

(C) If the party seeking judgment has been granted leave to proceed as an indigent without prepayment of costs, the clerk shall conspicuously post the warning order for a continuous period of 30 days at the courthouse or courthouses of the county where the action is filed. The party seeking judgment shall cause the warning order and a copy of the complaint to be sent to the defendant or interested person at his or her last known address by certified mail as provided in paragraph (1)(A)(i) of this subdivision. Newspaper publication of the warning order is not required. Proof of posting shall be by a letter or other statement signed by the clerk stating the location and dates on which the warning order was posted.

(D) No judgment by default shall be taken pursuant to this subdivision unless the party seeking the judgment or his or her attorney has filed with the court an affidavit stating that 30 days have elapsed since the warning order was first published or posted. The affidavit shall be accompanied by the required proof of publication or posting of the warning order. If a defendant or other interested person is known to the party seeking judgment or to his or her attorney, the affidavit shall also state that 30 days have elapsed since a letter enclosing a copy of the warning order and the complaint was mailed to the defendant or other interested person.

(4) Service as Directed by Court Order. On motion without notice and after a showing by affidavit or other proof as the court may require that, despite diligent effort, service cannot be made by the methods authorized by this rule, the court may order service by any method or combination of methods reasonably calculated to apprise the defendant of the action, including service by warning order meeting the minimum requirements of paragraph (3)(A)-(D) of this subdivision.

(h) Service Outside the State. Whenever the law of this state authorizes service outside this state, service, when reasonably calculated to apprise the defendant of the action, may be made:

(1) By personal delivery in the same manner prescribed for service within this state;

(2) In any manner prescribed by the law of the place in which service is made in an action in any of its courts of general jurisdiction;

(3) By mail or commercial delivery company as provided in subdivision (g)(1) and (2) of this rule;

(4) As directed by a foreign authority in response to a letter rogatory or pursuant to the provisions of any treaty or convention pertaining to the service of a document in a foreign country;

(5) By any method or combination of methods as directed by order of the court on motion, without notice and after a showing by affidavit or other proof as the court may require that, despite diligent effort, service cannot be made by the methods authorized by this rule.

(i) Time Limit for Service.

(1) If service of process is not made on a defendant within 120 days after the filing of the complaint or within the time period established by an extension granted pursuant to paragraph (2), the action shall be dismissed as to that defendant without prejudice on motion or on the court's initiative. If service is by mail or by commercial delivery company pursuant to subdivision (g)(1) and (2) of this rule, service shall be deemed to have been made for purposes of this subdivision on the date that the process was accepted or refused.

(2) The court, on written motion and a showing of good cause, may extend the time for service if the motion is made within 120 days of the filing of the suit or within the time period established by a previous extension. To be effective, an order granting an extension must be entered within 30 days after the motion to extend is filed, by the end of the 120-day period, or by the end of the period established by the previous extension, whichever date is later.

(3) This subdivision shall not apply to service in a foreign country pursuant to subdivision (h) of this rule or to complaints filed against unknown tortfeasors.

(j) Service of Other Writs and Papers. Whenever any rule or an applicable statute requires service on any person, firm, corporation or other entity of notices, writs, or papers other than a summons and complaint, including without limitation writs of garnishment, the notices, writs or papers may be served in the manner prescribed in this rule for service of process. Provided, however, any writ, notice or paper requiring direct seizure of property, such as a writ of assistance, writ of execution, or order of delivery shall be made as otherwise provided by law.

(k) Disregard of Error; Actual Notice. Any error as to the sufficiency of process or the sufficiency of service of process shall be disregarded if the court determines that the serving party substantially complied with the provisions of this rule and that the defendant received actual notice of the complaint and filed a timely answer.

(l) Waiver. A party seeking to affirmatively waive sufficiency of service and sufficiency of process shall do so in writing. A waiver pursuant to this subdivision: (1) is not effective unless filed with the clerk and served on all parties as provided in Rule 5; and (2) does not of itself waive any other defense.

FORM OF SUMMONS

The Supreme Court of Arkansas has adopted the following form of summons for use in all cases in which personal service is pursuant to Rule 4(c), (f), and (h) of the Arkansas Rules of Civil Procedure. The form incorporates a proof of service to be made by a sheriff, deputy sheriff, or other person, as appropriate, in accordance with Rule 4(g).

The form may be modified as needed in special circumstances, and additional notices, if required, should be inserted as appropriate. Code Ann. §§ 18-60-307(a) and 18-60-808(a), and the notice of the consent jurisdiction of a state district court that must be included pursuant to Ark. Sup. Ct. Admin. Order No. 18(6)(d)(1).

Publisher’s Notes.
The 2002 amendments to Ark. R. Civ. P. 4(d)(8)(C) and Ark. R. Civ. P. 5 are deemed to supersede Ark. Code Ann. § 1-2-122(b) with respect to the service of process and other papers.

Reporter’s Notes to Rule 4:
1. Recognizing necessary distinctions between state and federal practice, this Rule is designed to be generally consistent with FRCP 4.

2. Whereas FRCP 4 places the onus of delivering process to the server upon the Clerk, this Rule permits the Clerk to "cause it to be delivered," thus contemplating placing the summons with the plaintiff's attorney who then will see to it that it is served by an appropriate official. The second sentence of Rule 4(a) will permit issuance of summons against a defendant named after the original complaint is filed or alias process. See Wright and Miller, Federal Practice and Procedure, § 1085 (1969).

3. Rule 4(b) is generally the same as FRCP 4(b). It adds to the requirements contained in FRCP 4(b) the requirement that the summons be dated. The latter is a carryover from superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. § 27-306 (Repl. 1962).

4. Rule 4(c) is essentially the same as FRCP 4(c). It recognizes and incorporates the practice of permitting plaintiff's attorney to effect service pursuant to Ark. Stat. Ann. § 27-2503 (B) (Supp. 1975) which is superseded hereby. It is further provided that plaintiff's attorney is permitted to effect service by mail under Rule 4(f) as opposed to having it served by an attorney ad litem. The provision in FRCP 4(c) for liberal special appointments of persons to serve process is eliminated here as the special travel distance considerations are not as compelling in state practice.

5. Section 4(d)(1) is essentially the same as FRCP 4(d)(1) and superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. § 27-330 (Repl. 1962). While the Federal Rule permits service upon "some person of suitable age and discretion" in defendant's usual place of abode, this Rule requires service upon a person who has attained the age of 14 years, thus achieving greater certainty as to validity of service. This Rule permits effective service in the event it is refused by the defendant, thus continuing the Arkansas practice in that regard and making explicit the effect of FRCP 4(d)(1) in that regard. See Smith v. Kincaid, 249 F. 2d 243 (6th Cir. 1957) and Errion v. Connell, 236 F. 2d 447 (9th Cir. 1956).

6. FRCP 4(d)(2) defers to state law for service upon an infant or incompetent. Sections 4(d)(2) and 4(d)(3) thus have no precedent in the Federal Rules. They represent a simplification of superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. §§ 27-336 and 27-337 (Repl. 1962) with careful regard to protecting the rights of minors and incompetents. Section (d)(2) permits service upon an infant who is at least fourteen (14) years of age, but unlike superseded Arkansas law, it provides for service on either parent or guardian who has care and control of such an infant. Where such an infant resides with someone other than a parent or guardian, service shall be upon that person, provided that he has the care and control of the infant.

7. Section 4(d)(3) supersedes Ark. Stat. Ann. 27-337 (Repl. 1962) and its requirement that service be had upon the incompetent personally. This section provides that service shall be upon the guardian, if one has been appointed. Since a guardian is a fiduciary and usually bonded, it should be assumed that he will protect the interest of the ward and seek legal counsel on behalf of the ward. Where no guardian has been appointed, service is permitted upon the spouse or other person having the care of the incompetent and with whom the incompetent lives. When the incompetent is confined to an institution, service shall be upon the superintendent or administrator of the institution and upon the guardian, if any. As suggested in the compiler's note to Ark. Stat. Ann. 27-337.1 (Supp. 1975), that section may have been sufficiently broad to affect proceedings other than in probate. This rule is intended to supersede that statute.

8. Section (d)(4) has no specific counterpart in the Federal Rules. This section is essentially the same as superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. 27-338 (Repl. 1962) except that it was there provided that the summons and complaint could be left at the inmate's last address with someone sixteen (16) years of age or older. Limitation of the requirement to service upon the superintendent or keeper of the institution and upon the spouse, if any, of the inmate, is sufficiently protective of the inmate's rights, particularly in view of Ark. Stat. Ann. 27-833 (Repl. 1962) which remains unaffected by these Rules.

9. Section (d)(5) is almost identical to FRCP 4(d)(3). It does not purport to change the law to make an unincorporated association any more subject to service than it has been heretofore, rather, the intent is merely to specify a procedure for service in those cases in which an unincorporated association may be served.

10. Section (d)(7) is identical to FRCP 4(d)(7) except for a minor phraseology change to adapt it to state practice.

11. Sections (e)(1) through (5) cover the matters found in FRCP 4(e) and 4(i), and deal with service upon a person outside the State of Arkansas or the United States. The provisions in these Sections are identical to those of the Uniform Interstate and International Procedure Act, Ark. Stat. Ann. § 27-2503 (1) (Supp. 1975).

12. Section (f) is intended to cover those situations where the court has jurisdiction of the subject matter and person or persons named as defendant(s), but where the whereabouts of a defendant is unknown. This provision significantly alters Arkansas law, particularly as it applies to in rem or quasi in rem actions. It abolishes the necessity of having a warning order published and an attorney ad litem appointed in in rem actions where the identity and whereabouts of a defendant are known. In such situations, actual service under Section (e) will suffice. This Rule does not define the distinction between personal and in rem actions. Presumably the distinction will remain, and the courts will use it to ascertain the propriety of proceeding in some cases where "personal service" has not been effected. The mechanics of service herein prescribed will not be affected by characterization of the action as being personal or in rem, however. Regarding procedural due process, the Supreme Court of the United States has held that the adequacy of constructive service is dependent upon whether it is reasonably calculated to give the defendant actual notice of the proceedings and an opportunity to be heard. Millikin v. Meyer, 311 U. S. 456, 61 S. Ct. 339 (1940). Obviously, actual notice is better than constructive service which may confer no notice at all. This Rule requires service resulting in actual notice in all cases where the identity or whereabouts of the defendant is known. Similar procedure has been adopted in New York and California. See New York Civil Practice Law & Rules, §§ 314 and 315 (1972) and California Code of Civil Procedure, § 415.50 (1973). The burden is on the party attempting service by publication to attempt to locate the missing or unknown defendant. Such party or his attorney is required to demonstrate to the court, by affidavit or otherwise, that after diligent inquiry, the defendant's identity or whereabouts remains unknown.

13. Section (g) requires that the return be made at least within the time during which the defendant must respond to the summons. Where the summons is served by someone other than a sheriff or his deputy, an affidavit concerning service is required. The return must show facts, to the satisfaction of the court, demonstrating that the form of service complied with this Rule. Failure to make proof of service does not render invalid an otherwise valid service of summons.

14. Section (h) continues the Arkansas practice permitting the trial judge to allow amendment of a summons or return where prejudice would not result to the party against whom the summons is issued.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 1982 Amendment:

Rule 4(b) was amended to state a default judgment "may," rather than "will," be taken upon failure to answer.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 1983 Amendment:

Rule 4(c) has been changed to be consistent with the new provisions for service by mail appearing in Rule 4(d)(8).

Rule 4(d)(2) has been amended by the substitution of the word "when" for the word "where" at the beginning of each sentence.

Rule 4(d)(5) has been amended by inserting the words "Partner other than a limited partner" thus providing a means of serving a partnership heretofore missing from the rule. Deleted from the rule is the requirement of adding to the personal delivery provision service by certified mail.

Added to Rule 4(d)(7) is the language permitting service upon a municipality by serving the Attorney General when plaintiffs' counsel makes affidavit to the effect that the appropriate municipal officer is unknown or cannot be found. This will permit service on a municipality even though the office of the appropriate officer to receive service is vacant.

Rule 4(d)(8) is added to permit service upon all defendants named in paragraphs 1 or 5 of Rule 4(d), whether or not they are residents of Arkansas, to be served by mail.

In Rule 4(e)(3), the words "requiring a signed receipt" have been replaced by "requiring a receipt signed by the addressee or the agent of the addressee." Postal regulations permit mail addressed with delivery restricted to addressee to be received only by the addressee or an agent appointed according to postal regulations.

Rule 4(f) is amended by reducing the number of publications of notice to defendants whose whereabouts or identity is unknown from four to two and by adding the words "if any" to the requirement of mailing notice to a last known address.

The first sentence of Rule 4(g) is amended to remove the words "and in any event." The second sentence is amended to suggest putting the "return" on "the same page" as contains the summons which the Supreme Court suggested parenthetically at the end of the summons form adopted by per curiam order of February 1, 1982. In the third sentence, all words after the word "thereof" have been added to take account of the new mailing provisions of Rule 4(d)(8). A sentence in the Rule before amendment stating that "failure to make proof of service shall not affect the validity of the service" is omitted.

The entire subdivision, Rule 4(i) has been excised. It required that default judgment not be taken in cases of service by mail unless an attorney ad litem had been appointed at least 30 days before judgment to inform the defendant of the suit. In its place, the amended Rule 4(i) deals, in a substantially different way with the requirement, heretofore in Rule 3, that service be obtained within a specified time after the filing of a claim for relief. Ark.R.Civ.P. 4(i) is substantially similar to F.R.C.P. 4(j).

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 1984 Amendment:

Rule 4(d)(1) is amended to remove the words "or an incompetent person," and Rule 4(d)(3) is amended to provide for service upon any person for whom a guardian has been appointed. The terminology is from the Limited Guardianship Act, Ark. Stat. Ann. §§ 57-801 through 57-820 (Supp. 1983). To the extent this Act has not supplanted other forms of guardianships, i.e., those provided in Chapters 5 and 6 of the Arkansas Probate Code, there may be appointments of “guardians of the person” and “guardians of the estate.” The term “plenary guardian” is intended to apply to those cases, and service should be upon the guardian and the individual or the superintendent of an institution in which the individual may be confined.

Rule 4(d)(8) is amended to permit service by mail upon all classes of defendants except the United States and its agencies. If service is by mail, it should be directed to the person or officer to whom the service would otherwise be “delivered” pursuant to this Rule. Subsection (8) is also amended by insertion of the words “or the agent of the addressee” in the second sentence.

Rule 4(e) is amended to permit service in foreign countries by means provided in any applicable treaty, convention or executive agreement.

That which had been Rule 4(f) has become 4(f)(1) with the addition of the last sentence which makes it clear there is no need to publish or mail notice to “John Doe” in an action brought against an unknown tortfeasor. Subsection 4 (f)(2) has been added to assist trial courts in their efforts to comply with the requirements of Boddie v. Connecticut, 401 U.S. 371 (1971).

Rule 4(i) is amended by removal of the requirement of notice to a plaintiff of dismissal of a complaint not served within 120 days and by addition of an exception making it inapplicable to actions against unknown tortfeasors.

Rule 4(j) has been added to bring into the Rule a notice procedure to be followed when the court is exercising its power in rem, e.g., an action for divorce seeking no personal judgment. The mailing procedure replaces any requirement that an attorney ad litem be appointed for the defendant in these cases.

Addition to Reporter’s Note, 1986 Amendment:

Rule 4(e)(3) is amended to make explicit that service by mail outside the state must be sent with restricted delivery, thus harmonizing the provision with Rule 4(d)(8), which governs service by mail within the state. New subsection (k) is primarily aimed at making clear that the service-by-mail provisions of Rule 4(d)(8) may be utilized to serve writs of garnishment.

Addition to Reporter’s Notes, 1988 Amendment:

Rule 4 is amended in an effort to expand the options for service of process. Under amended Rule 4(c)(3), a new class of persons — anyone not less than eighteen years of age who is not a party — may serve the summons and complaint. The federal rules contain a similar provision. See Rule 4(c)(2)(A), Fed. R. Civ. P. As under prior Arkansas practice, the rule also permits the sheriff, a deputy sheriff, or any other person specially appointed by the court to serve the summons and complaint, though the amendment makes clear that a person so appointed must not be less than eighteen years of age. The prior provision permitting service by “any other person authorized by law to serve summons” has been deleted as unnecessary, particularly in light of new subdivision (c)(3). New subdivision (c)(4), which applies in the event of service by mail, tracks the language of subdivision (d)(8) and was added here for the sake of clarity.

Amended Rule 4(d)(8) establishes an alternative method for service of process by mail. New paragraph (B) of this subdivision is virtually identical to the corresponding federal rule. See Rule 4(c)(2)(C)(ii), (D) & (E), Fed. R. Civ. P. Because new paragraph (B) supplements rather than supplants the prior service-by-mail provision now found in paragraph (A) of subdivision (d)(8), practitioners may choose the method they consider the most workable. The federal courts also allow this choice, since Rule 4(c)(2)(C)(i), Fed. R. Civ. P., allows service in accordance with the law of the state in which the federal court sits.

The following form is adopted to accompany the service-by-mail provision of Rule 4(d)(8)(B):

Addition to Reporter’s Notes, 1989 Amendment:

Rule 4(c) is amended by deleting a provision that permitted service of process by any person not less than eighteen years of age who is not a party. The change was made to assure adequate judicial control over persons who serve process.

Addition to Reporter’s Notes, 1993 Amendment:

Subdivision (d)(5) is amended by inserting the term “limited liability company.” As a result of the amendment, these entities are to be served in the same manner as other business organizations, such as corporations and partnerships. Act 1003 of 1993, the Small Business Entity Tax Pass Through Act [§ 4-32-101 et seq.], provides for service on the registered agent of a limited liability company and, in some cases, on the Secretary of State. However, the Act expressly provides that it does not limit or restrict “the rights to serve process in any other manner now or hereafter provided by law.” Act 1003, § 107(c) [§ 4-32-107]. This provision plainly contemplates that alternative methods of service, such as those set out in Rule 4, may be employed. See CMS Jonesboro Rehabilitation, Inc. v. Lamb, 306 Ark. 216, 812 S.W.2d 472 (1991) (discussing analogous statute).

Subdivision (d)(8)(A) is amended to provide that when service is made by mail pursuant to this provision, the addressee must be “a natural person specified by name.” The amendment is necessary to comply with Postal Service rules. Under Section 933.1 of the Domestic Mail Manual, “[r]estricted delivery service permits a mailer to direct delivery only to the addressee or the addressee’s authorized agent,” and “[t]he addressee must be an individual (or natural person) specified by name.”

Addition to Reporter’s Notes, 1997 Amendment:

Subdivision (a) has been reworded for purposes of clarity; no substantive change is intended. Subdivision (c)(2) has been amended to make plain that “the court” for purposes of appointing a person to serve the summons and complaint is either the court in which the action is filed or the court in the county where service is to be made. This question arose, but was not resolved, in Hubbard v. The Shores Group, Inc., 313 Ark. 498, 855 S.W.2d 924 (1993). The amendment also changes the caption of subdivision (g) from “return” to “proof of service,” makes minor grammatical revisions, and adds a sentence dealing with proof of service in a foreign country, a matter not previously addressed by the rule. The new provision is based on language in Rule 4(l) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, as amended in 1993.

Addition to Reporter’s Notes, 1999 Amendment:

Subdivision (c)(2) has been amended by deleting the word “a” before the word “summons.” This amendment is intended to make plain that private process servers may be appointed by standing order as well as on a case-by-case basis. In addition, subdivision (e)(3) has been amended to provide that service by mail outside the state in accordance with the requirements of subdivision (d)(8), which governs service by mail inside the state. This change makes the two provisions consistent.

Addition to Reporter’s Notes, 2001 Amendment:

Subdivision (a) has been revised to provide that service may be made only by a person “authorized by this rule to serve process.” Previously, the rule allowed anyone “authorized by law” to serve process and thus incorporated statutes permitting or requiring certain persons to make service. See, e.g., Nelson v. Wakefield, 282 Ark. 285, 668 S.W.2d 29 (1984) (service on sheriff by deputy held improper in light of Ark. Code Ann. § 16-58-112, which provides that “in an action wherein the sheriff is a party or is interested, [process] shall be directed to the coroner or, if he is interested to some constable”). Applying Nelson to other statutes could defeat the purpose of subdivision (c) of the rule, which limits service to a particular person, including a sheriff, a deputy, or a person at least 18 years of age appointed by the court. For example, Ark. Code Ann. § 16-58-107(2) authorizes service “[b]y any person appointed by the officer to whom the summons is directed.” This provision would allow a sheriff, deputy sheriff, or a person appointed by the court to designate someone else to serve process, a result contrary to the purpose of the subdivision (c), i.e., to give the court control over private process servers. Also, paragraph (3) of the statute allows service “[b]y any person not a party to the action, in all actions arising on contract for the recovery of money only.” In such cases, no court appointment would be necessary, and even someone under 18 could make service so long as he or she were not a party. Other statutes are not as troublesome as Section 16-58-107 but are not necessary in light of Rule 4. See Ark. Code Ann. §§ 16-58-108, 16-58-109, 16-58-113, 16-58-118, 16-58-119. These statutes are deemed superseded, as are Sections 16-58-107 and 16-58-112. New language in subdivision (c)(1) treats the problem that Section 16-58-112 was meant to address, i.e., service by a sheriff or deputy when the sheriff is a party. In that situation, neither the sheriff nor a deputy may serve process. Thus, service must be accomplished pursuant to one of the other provisions of subdivision (c), e.g., by someone appointed by the court or by mail.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 2002 Amendment:

Subdivision (c)(4) has been amended to refer to service by a commercial company, an option authorized by new paragraph (C) of subdivision (d)(8) and discussed below. Over the years, lawyers have questioned the efficacy of service by mail under paragraph (A) of subdivision (d)(8), in part because the postal service does not always follow its own rules regarding restricted delivery mail.

Subdivision (d) has been revised to provide that service shall be made as provided in that subdivision or "upon any person designated by statute to receive service." This provision incorporates statutes which, for example, provide for service on the registered agent of a corporation. E.g., Ark. Code Ann. §§ 4-26-503, 4-27-1510. It was deemed advisable in light of case law suggesting that Rule 4 is exclusive as to the recipients of process, despite language in subdivisions (d)(1) & (5) permitting service on an "agent authorized . . . by law to receive service of summons." See, e.g., May v. Bob Hankins Distributing Co., 301 Ark. 494, 785 S.W.2d 23 (1990).

Subdivision (d)(4) has been amended to require the plaintiff not only to serve the superintendent of the correctional facility housing the defendant (as well as the defendant's spouse, if any, unless the court orders otherwise), but also to send a copy of the summons and complaint, marked as "legal mail," to the defendant by first class mail. This additional safeguard is similar to that found in substituted service statutes. E.g., Ark. Code Ann. § 16-58-120(b)(2)(B) (in addition to serving Secretary of State, plaintiff must mail copy of summons and complaint to defendant at last known address).

New paragraph (C) of subdivision (d)(8) permits service by "a commercial delivery company that (i) maintains permanent records of actual delivery and (ii) has been approved by the circuit court in which the action is filed or in the county where service is to be made." Service of papers by commercial delivery companies under Rule 5 has been allowed for more than a decade with no apparent problem. See Rule 5(b)(2) & Addition to Reporter's Notes, 1989 Amendment. Rule 5(b)(2) has been amended to require court approval of the commercial delivery company, a requirement imposed by new paragraph (C) of this rule.

Paragraph (C) is more restrictive than Ark. Code Ann. § 1-2-122(b), which allows service by "an alternative mail carrier." The statute has thus been superseded with respect to service of process. Paragraph (C) contains additional safeguards similar to those found in paragraph (A) for service by mail and requires, as does subdivision (c)(2) with respect to service by a private person, that the commercial delivery company be approved by the circuit court of the county where the action is filed or where service is to be made. This approval may be in the form of a standing order or may be made on a case-by-case basis, as under subdivision (c)(2). See Addition to Reporter's Notes to Rule 4, 1999 Amendment.

The rule has also been amended to provide uniform requirements for warning orders. Those requirements are contained in revised subdivision (f), which deals with both situations in which service by warning order is permissible, i.e., "when the identity or whereabouts of a defendant remains unknown, or if a party seeks a judgment that affects or may affect the rights of persons who are not and who need not be subject personally to the jurisdiction of the court." Former subdivision (j) has been deleted and former subdivision (k) redesignated as subdivision (j).

Official Form of Summons (Effective July 1, 2001.) The Supreme Court of Arkansas has adopted the following form of summons for use in all cases in which personal service is to be had pursuant to Rule 4(c), (d) and (e) of the Arkansas Rules of Civil Procedure. The form, adopted May 24, 2001, and effective July 1, 2001, may be modified as needed in special circumstances. Additional notices, if required, should be inserted in the appropriate space. This form is not for use in cases of constructive service pursuant to Rule 4(f). The adoption of this form is in compliance with Rule 4(b) and does not modify or amend any part of that rule.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 2003 Amendment:

Subdivision (d)(4) has been revised by replacing the phrase "confined in a state or federal penitentiary or correctional facility" with "incarcerated in any jail, penitentiary, or other correctional facility in this state." This change makes the terminology consistent with that used in Rule 12(a), as amended in 2003.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 2004 Amendment:

Subdivision (d)(8)(A) of the rule has been divided into two paragraphs. In a change that reflects settled case law, paragraph (A)(i) has been rewritten to state expressly that the agent of the addressee "must be authorized in accordance with U.S. Postal Service regulations." See Green v. Yarbrough, 299 Ark. 175, 771 S.W.2d 760 (1989). For the applicable postal service regulations, see Domestic Mail Manual S916.

More importantly, paragraph (A)(i) has been amended to establish less onerous requirements when service is made on the registered agent of a corporation or other organization. In that situation, the new last sentence provides that service may be made by certified mail, return receipt requested. Because delivery need not be restricted, there is no requirement that the addressee be a natural person or that the agent of the addressee be authorized in accordance with postal service regulations. See generally Domestic Mail Manual S912 (certified mail), S915 (return receipt).

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 2006 Amendment:

Rule 4(d)(4) has been amended to delete the untoward reference to the "keeper" of a jail, penitentiary, or other correctional facility. The term "administrator" has been substituted for "superintendent."

Rule 4(i), which governs the time limit for service, has been amended to set a reasonable deadline for getting an order entered on a motion to extend time for service. In Edwards v. Sazabo Foods, 317 Ark. 369, 877 S.W.2d 932 (1994), the supreme court rejected an effort to require that both the motion for extension of time to serve and the order granting that motion must be filed within the 120-day period. This amendment leaves Edwards intact. To encourage prompt service, and discourage filing a motion to extend but not securing an order promptly, the amendment sets a deadline for the entry of that order: thirty days after the motion is filed, or the end of the 120-day period, whichever date is later. The alternative deadlines eliminate the possibility that an early motion for extension will inadvertently reduce the time allowed for extending the time for service.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 2008 Amendment:

New Administrative Order Number 20 prescribes minimum qualifications for private process servers appointed by the circuit courts, as well as the procedure for their appointment. The change in Rule 4(c) eliminates the one former qualification (being at least eighteen years old) and incorporates by reference the expanded qualifications contained in the new Administrative Order.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 2010 Amendment:

Rule 4(g) has been amended by restoring a sentence from the original rule reciting the familiar legal principle that a failure to make proof of service does not affect the validity of the service. The sentence was removed more than twenty-five years ago without explanation. Addition to Reporter's Notes, 1983 Amendment. Since then, the supreme court and court of appeals have repeatedly reaffirmed and applied this principle. E.g., Lyons v. Forrest City Machine Works, Inc., 301 Ark. 559, 562, 785 S.W.2d 220, 222 (1990); Renfro v. Air Flo Co., 91 Ark. App. 99, 101, 208 S.W.3d 807, 809 (2005).

This amendment makes the rule reflect settled law.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 2012 Amendment:

The summons form has been revised to include an "all purpose proof of service" form for service made by a sheriff, deputy sheriff, or other person (generally an appointed private process server) or, if service is by mail or commercial delivery company, the plaintiff, or an attorney for the plaintiff. See Rule 4(c). In accordance with Rule 4(g) governing proof of service, the proof of service section of the summons includes an "affidavit of service" for service made by a person other than a sheriff or deputy sheriff and a "certificate of service or return" for service made by a sheriff or deputy sheriff. The language of the summons form is also updated consistent with changes in December 2009 to the comparable federal summons form. The changes to the federal form were part of a nearly three-year-long process to clarify and simplify the language of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 2014 Amendment:

For clarity, Rule 4(i) has been restructured and divided into paragraphs. Also, the sentence dealing with refusal to accept service that now appears in paragraph (1) has been limited to service by mail under subdivision (d)(8)(A) or by commercial delivery company under subdivision (d)(8)(C). The result of this change is to exclude service by first class mail pursuant to subdivision (d)(8)(B), under which refusal plays no role.

More significantly, the subdivision has been revised to make clear that a motion to extend the time for service is proper if filed within 120 days of the filing of the complaint or within the time period provided by a previous extension of time. Although the subdivision did not address subsequent extensions, they have long been considered proper in light of Dougherty v. Sullivan, 318 Ark. 608, 887 S.W.2d 305 (1994). See also Henyan v. Peek, 359 Ark. 486, 199 S.W.3d 51 (2004); Wilkins v. Food Plus, Inc., 99 Ark. App. 64, 257 S.W.3d 107 (2007). The Court of Appeals, however, held in Powell v. Fernandez, 2013 Ark. App. 595, that a subsequent extension is allowed only if sought within 120 days of the filing of the complaint. The amendment overrules Powell on this point.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 2019 Amendment:

Rule 4 has undergone several modifications since it became effective in 1979. The 2019 amendment substantially revises and reorganizes the rule.

Subdivision (a).

The amendment reflects more clearly the actual practice envisioned by the Reporter's

Notes to the original version of the rule. As there stated: "Whereas FRCP 4 places the onus of delivering process to the server upon the Clerk, this Rule permits the Clerk to 'cause it to be delivered,' thus contemplating placing the summons with the plaintiff's attorney who then will see to it that it is served by an appropriate official."

Subdivision (b).

This subdivision has been revised to accommodate electronic filing and to reflect current law. The introductory section to the official summons form has also been modified.

New language in subdivision (b) provides that, in multiple-party cases, only the first-listed party on each side of the case must be listed in the caption. This revision is necessary because of electronic filing software and is consistent with Nucor Corp. v. Kilman, 358 Ark. 107, 186 S.W.3d 720 (2004), in which the Supreme Court refused to read the original version of the rule to require "a listing of every plaintiff and every defendant on every summons, no matter how many plaintiffs and defendants are parties to the case." Id. at 123, 186 S.W.3d at 729.

Similarly, the phrase "directed from the State of Arkansas to the defendant to be served" has been added to reflect the holding of Gatson v. Billings, 2011 Ark. 125. There the Supreme Court held that Rule 4(b) must be read in conjunction with Ark. Const. art. 7, § 49, which provides that "[a]ll writs and other judicial process, shall run in the name of the State of Arkansas." The new provision also makes plain that the defendant "to be served" is identified here; in a case with multiple defendants, this defendant's name will not necessarily appear in the caption.

Another change requires the summons to contain "the address of the defendant to be served, if known." This provision makes the rule's text consistent with the official summons form, which contains a space for the address of the defendant being served. The amended rule recognizes, however, that the defendant's address may not be known at the time the complaint is filed and the summons issued.

The introductory section of the official summons form has been divided into three paragraphs. The second paragraph lists examples of additional notices that may be included: those required by statute in unlawful-detainer actions and in replevin actions, plus the notice of consent jurisdiction of state district courts required by Administrative Order No. 18.

Subdivision (c).

This subdivision has been amended by adding a new paragraph (1) and designating the previous text as paragraph (2). The latter is unchanged except for a revised cross-reference. The new first paragraph defines "process" for purposes of the rule to include the summons and complaint and requires, as did a sentence in subdivision (d) in the previous version of the rule, that they be served together.

Subdivision (d).

This subdivision addresses proof of service; for the most part it is the same as former subdivision (g) but has been divided into three paragraphs. The introductory material consists of the first and second sentences of former subdivision (g) with one stylistic change. Paragraph (1) is based on the third and fourth sentences of the previous version, rewritten to conform to the official summons form. Paragraph (2), which cross-references the proof-of-service provision for warning orders, is new. Paragraph (3) is identical to the last sentence of former subdivision (g) with the exception of the cross-reference.

Subdivision (e).

This subdivision, which governs amendment of the summons and proof of service, tracks former subdivision (h).

Subdivision (f).

A substantially revised version of former subdivision (d), this provision addresses personal service inside the state. It clarifies the prior rule as to service on individuals, entities, and organizations and in some instances expands the opportunities for service. Alternative methods for serving these defendants (except the United States and its agencies, officers, and employees) are set out in subdivision (g).

Paragraph (1)(A) spells out so-called “refusal service” in more detail, drawing on such cases as Valley v. Bogard, 342 Ark. 336, 28 S.W.3d 269 (2000), and Riggin v. Dierdorff, 302 Ark. 517, 790 S.W.2d 897 (1990). The process server must, after “mak[ing] his or her purpose clear,” leave the summons and complaint “in close proximity” to a defendant who refuses to accept the documents.

In paragraph (1)(B), the phrase “a place where the defendant resides” replaces its counterpart in former paragraph (d)(1), “dwelling house or usual place of abode.” The effect of this change is to overturn State Office of Child Support Enforcement v. Mitchell, 330 Ark. 338, 954 S.W.2d 907 (1997), which defined the latter phrase in terms of domicile: a person’s “fixed permanent home, the place to which he has—whenever absent—the intention of returning.” Id. at 344, 954 S.W.2d at 910. Residence and domicile are not synonymous; a person can have multiple residences but only one domicile. See Leathers v. Warmack, 341 Ark. 609, 19 S.W.3d 27 (2000); Lawrence v. Sullivan, 90 Ark. App. 206, 205 S.W.3d 168 (2005). This change makes Arkansas practice consistent with that in other jurisdictions whose courts have rejected the narrow approach taken in Mitchell.

See, e.g., Nat’l Dev. Co. v. Triad Holding Corp., 930 F.2d 253 (2d Cir. 1991); United States v. Tobin, 483 F. Supp.2d 68 (D. Mass. 2007); Blittersdorf v. Eikenberry, 964 P.2d 413 (Wyo. 1998); Sheldon v. Fettig, 919 P.2d 1209 (Wash. 1996); Van Buren v. Glasco, 217 S.E.2d 579 (N.C. 1975), overruled on other grounds by Love v. Moore, 291 S.E.2d 141 (N.C. 1982).

Paragraph (1)(B) also provides that the person receiving the process (summons and complaint) must be a family member who is at least 18 years old. Under former paragraph (d)(1), the recipient could be anyone 14 years of age or older residing in the defendant’s place of abode. See Home-Stake Prod. Co. v. Talon Petroleum, C.A., 907 F.2d 1012 (10th Cir. 1997) (cook); Nowell v. Nowell, 384 F.2d 951 (5th Cir. 1967), cert. denied, 390 U.S. 956 (1968) (resident manager of apartment complex who lived in separate building); Nat’l Dev. Co., supra (housekeeper); Barclays Bank v. Goldman, 517 F. Supp. 403 (S.D.N.Y. 1981) (maid). The changes are intended to make actual notice to the defendant more likely.

Paragraph (2) clarifies service on minors and recognizes that, under Arkansas law, the age of majority is 18. Until that age is attained, all persons “shall be considered minors.” Ark. Code Ann. § 9-25-101(a). The former rule permitted service on an individual at least 14 years of age and required service on parents or guardians of younger defendants. Paragraph (2) also takes into account minors emancipated by court order. See Ark. Code Ann. §§ 9-26-104, 9-27-362.

In paragraph (3), the term “incapacitated person” refers to a person who is “impaired by reason of a disability such as mental illness, mental deficiency, physical illness, chronic use of drugs, or chronic intoxication, to the extent of lacking sufficient understanding or capacity to make or communicate decisions to meet the essential requirements for his or her health or safety or to manage his or her estate.” Ark. Code Ann. § 28-65-101(5)(A). The appointment of a conservator requires the consent of the person who, because of advanced age or physical infirmity, can no longer manage his or her own financial affairs. Id. §§ 28-67-103, 28-67-105. A conservator has the same powers and duties as a guardian, except as to the custody of the person. Id. § 28-67-108.

Paragraph (4), which provides for service on incarcerated persons, largely tracks former subdivision (d)(4).

With respect to corporate entities, paragraph (5) expressly applies to “any corporation,” including nonprofit corporations, professional corporations, and cooperatives. See Ark. Code Ann. §§ 4-28-201 et seq. (nonprofit corporations); §§ 4-29-201 et seq. (professional corporations); §§ 4-29-301 et seq. (medical corporations); §§ 4-29-401 et seq. (dental corporations); §§ 4-30-101 et seq. (cooperatives). In light of the word “any,” this list is obviously not exclusive; for example, the provision reaches foreign corporations as well as those formed under Arkansas law.

Paragraph (5) retains the provisions of former subdivision (d)(5) authorizing service on a corporation's officer, managing or general agent, or any agent authorized by appointment or by law to receive service. It also permits, as did the opening clause of former subdivision (d), service as provided by statute. But paragraph (5) adds other options, including the corporation's registered agent and an officer's secretary or assistant. Although the holdover term "managing or general agent" is not defined, the Supreme Court has offered the following guidance: [T]he person . . . must have some measure of discretion in operating some phase of the defendant's business or in the management of a given office [and] such status that common sense would trust him to see that the summons gets promptly into the hands of the right corporate people. Lyons v. Forrest City Mach. Works, Inc., 301 Ark. 559, 561, 785 S.W.2d 220, 221 (1990) (plant manager, who had worked for corporate defendant for 32 years, was a managing or general agent). See also May v. Bob Hankins Distrib. Co., 301 Ark. 494, 785 S.W.2d 23 (1990) (bookkeeper who was "more or less in charge" of office at time of service held to be a managing or general agent).

Paragraph (6) addresses service on limited liability companies. It is based on paragraph (5) but contains language specific to the structure of limited liability companies. In particular, it provides for service on (1) a manager of the LLC if management is vested in managers rather than the members, or on the manager's secretary or assistant; or (2) a member of the LLC if management is vested in the members or in which management is vested in managers and there are no managers, or that member's secretary or assistant. This language is based on that in Colo. R. Civ. P. 4(e)(4)(C) & (D). See also N.Y. Civ. P. L. § 311-a.

Service on any type of partnership, including a general partnership, a limited liability partnership, a limited partnership, and a limited liability limited partnership, is governed by paragraph (7). It provides for service on any general partner or his or her secretary or assistant; the partnership's registered agent for service of process, or the agent's secretary or assistant; a managing or general agent of the partnership, or the agent's secretary or assistant; any agent authorized by appointment or by law to receive service of process; or as provided by statute.

Under the Revised Uniform Partnership Act, Ark. Code Ann. §§ 4-46-101 et seq., a general partnership can be sued in its own name, but a judgment against the partnership cannot be satisfied from a partner's individual assets unless there is also a judgment against that partner. Id. § 4-46-307(a) & (c). Generally, partners are jointly and severally liable for all obligations of the partnership. Id. § 4-46-306. They are also agents of the partnership for purposes of its business. Id. § 4-46-301(1).

A limited liability partnership must designate a registered agent if it has no office in this state, as must a foreign limited liability partnership. Id. §§ 4-46-1001(c), 4-46-1102(a). Service of process is made on the registered agent or the agent's secretary or assistant. A partnership becomes a limited liability partnership by a vote of the partners and by filing a "statement of qualification" with the Secretary of State. Id. § 4-46-1001. A foreign LLP must file a "statement of foreign qualification" before transacting business in the state. Id. § 4-46-1102. An obligation of a limited liability partnership is solely the obligation of the partnership. Id. § 4-46-306(c).

Domestic limited partnerships and foreign limited partnerships doing business in Arkansas must have a registered agent in the state. Id. § 4-47-114. Each general partner is an agent of the limited partnership for the purposes of its activities. Id. § 4-47-402. The certificate filed with the Secretary of State must state "whether the limited partnership is a limited liability limited partnership." Id. § 4-47-201(a)(4). Although a limited partnership is an entity distinct from its partners, id. § 4-47-104, each general partner is for the most part jointly and severally liable for all obligations of the limited partnership. Id. § 4-47-404. If the partnership elects LLLP status, however, each general partner enjoys a complete shield from liability. Id. § 4-47-404(c). A judgment against a limited partnership alone is not a judgment against a general partner and cannot be satisfied from a general partner's assets. To reach those assets, the plaintiff must join a general partner as a party in the action against the limited partnership or proceed against that partner in a separate action. Id. § 4-47-405.

Paragraph (8) covers service on unincorporated associations, other than partnerships, subject to suit in their own names. This category at present appears limited to unincorporated nonprofit associations governed by the Revised Uniform Unincorporated Nonprofit Association Act, Ark. Code Ann. §§ 4-28-601 et seq. Under the Act, an unincorporated association of this type "may sue or be sued in its own name." Id. § 4-28-609(a). The term "registered agent" in paragraph (8) is intended to include an agent that an unincorporated nonprofit association authorizes to receive service of process by filing a statement with the Secretary of State. See id. § 4-28-611. Paragraph (8) also provides for service on "any manager of the association," as does § 4-28-612.

Apart from the Revised Uniform Unincorporated Nonprofit Association Act, Arkansas follows the common-law rule that an unincorporated association cannot be sued in its own name. See, e.g., Massey v. Rogers, 232 Ark. 110, 334 S.W.2d 664 (1960). However, members of the association can be sued as a class by naming representative parties as defendants. This practice is reflected in Rule 23.2. See Ark. Cnty. Farm Bureau v. McKinney, 334 Ark. 582, 976 S.W.2d 945 (1998). Service of process is on the named representatives of the class.

Paragraph (9) addresses service in defendant class actions, whether against unincorporated associations under Rule 23.2 or in other cases under Rule 23. Service on a defendant class shall be on each of the parties named as class representatives in the same manner as if each representative were sued in a separate action. The intent is to incorporate the various methods of service depending on the type of class representative—natural person, corporation, etc.—as provided for in subdivision (f) of this rule. The plaintiff selects the representative defendants and has the burden to convince the court that they will adequately protect the interests of the defendant class. 7A Charles A. Wright & Arthur R. Miller, Federal Practice and Procedure § 1770 (3d ed.).

Paragraph (10), providing for service on trusts, had no counterpart in the previous version of the rule. It is based on Colo. R. Civ. P. 7(e)(4)(E).

Paragraph (11), which addresses service on the United States, is essentially the same as former subdivision (d)(6). Similarly, paragraph (12), which applies to service on states and state agencies, is based on former subdivision (d)(7) but is limited to the state government. Paragraphs (13) through (15) are specific provisions for government entities that are not individually addressed in the present rule: cities, counties, and school districts. All other political subdivisions are to be served in accordance with paragraph (16). Finally, paragraph (17) provides for service on public officers and employees, a matter not covered by the current rule. These paragraphs are based in part on Colo. R. Civ. P. 7(e)(6)-(8) & (10)-(11).

Subdivision (g).

This subdivision lists four alternative methods of services that may be used on defendants except the United States and its agencies, officers, and employees: mail, commercial delivery company, warning order, and as the court directs. Only the fourth method is new, but some clarifying changes have been made in the provisions governing the other methods.

Paragraphs (1) and (2) essentially maintain the status quo with respect to service by mail and commercial delivery company. In an important change, however, paragraph (1)(A)(i) now requires service by certified mail, rather than “any form of mail addressed to the person to be served with a return receipt requested and delivery restricted.” Certified mail meets these requirements and is most often used, while other forms of mail that qualify are not well-suited for service of process. Also, paragraph (1)(A)(ii) has been amended to provide expressly that although the refusal of mail will support a default judgment, failure to claim mail does not constitute a refusal. The Supreme Court so held in Meeks v. Stevens, 301 Ark. 464, 785 S.W.2d 18 (1990).

Paragraph (3), which deals with warning orders, departs significantly from former subdivision (f). First, paragraph (3) limits warning orders issued by the clerk to cases in which the plaintiff “seeks a judgment that affects or may affect the rights of persons who need not be subject personally to the jurisdiction of the court”—that is, when jurisdiction is in rem. However, if in personam jurisdiction over the defendant is necessary, the plaintiff cannot obtain a warning order from the clerk but must seek a court order under paragraph (4).

Second, paragraph (3) requires the plaintiff to submit to the clerk “an affidavit showing that, after diligent inquiry, the identity or whereabouts of the defendant remains unknown.” Under the previous versions of the rule, this requirement applied only when in personam jurisdiction over the defendant was necessary. See Newbern, Watkins & Marshall, Arkansas Civil Practice & Procedure § 12:14, n.14. As a matter of due process, however, service by publication of a warning order is a matter of last resort to be employed only if a defendant’s whereabouts cannot be ascertained through the exercise of reasonable diligence. Mullane v. Central Hanover Bank & Trust Co., 339 U.S. 306 (1950).

Third, paragraph (3)(B) establishes the minimum requirements for newspapers in which warning orders may be published and specifies the manner in which proof of publication of the warning order is to be made. The rule was previously silent on these matters. The requirements are drawn from two statutes, see Ark. Code Ann. §§ 16-3-104 & 16-3-105, which appear in a section of the code inapplicable to warning orders. Id. § 16-3-101(e).

Finally, paragraph (3) continues the time period in which the warning order must be published (two consecutive weeks) or posted at the courthouse (30 days). A judgment by default cannot be taken until after 30 days of the date that the warning order was first published or posted.

Under paragraph (4), which is new to Arkansas practice, the court may order any method of service “reasonably calculated to apprise the defendant of the action.” To obtain an order, the plaintiff must show by affidavit that, “despite diligent effort,” service cannot be obtained using one of the other methods of service. The “diligent effort” standard is analogous to the “diligent inquiry” requirement for warning-order cases requiring in personam jurisdiction, and it should be interpreted in the same manner. See, e.g., Horne v. Savers Federal Sav. & Loan Ass'n, 295 Ark. 182, 747 S.W.2d 580 (1988); Scott v. Wolfe, 2011 Ark. App. 438, 384 S.W.3d 609.

As noted above, paragraph (4) requires a warning order issued by the court when in personam jurisdiction over the defendant is necessary. This change from prior practice, under which all warning orders were issued by the clerk, is a safeguard prompted by due process considerations. As one court has observed: "Notice by publication, constitutionally suspect in 1950, is even more vulnerable today, given the precipitous decline in newspaper readership." In re E.R., 385 S.W.3d 552, 560-61 (Tex. 2012).

Subdivisions (h)-(j).

With minor exceptions, subdivision (h) tracks former subdivision (e). Its subheading has been revised to better reflect the content of the rule ("Service Outside the State"), and paragraph (3) has been updated to include service by commercial delivery company. In addition, paragraph (5) has been rewritten to make plain that service "as directed by the court" is permissible only upon a showing that the other methods listed in subdivision (f) have, despite diligent effort, proved unsuccessful. Stylistic changes have been made in subdivisions (i) and (j), and the cross-references in the former have been changed. Subdivision (i) provides that a motion to extend the time for service is proper if filed within 120 days of the filing of the complaint or within the time period provided by a previous extension of time. The rule was amended in 2014 to expressly address subsequent extensions and to overrule Powell v. Fernandez, 2013 Ark. App. 595. Historically, motions to extend the time for service were considered proper if filed within the time period provided by a previous extension. See Dougherty v. Sullivan, 318 Ark. 608, 887 S.W.2d 305 (1994); see also Henyan v. Peek, 359 Ark. 486, 199 S.W.3d 51 (2004); Wilkins v. Food Plus, Inc., 99 Ark. App. 64, 257 S.W.3d 107 (2007). The Court of Appeals, however, held in Powell that a subsequent extension had to be sought within 120 days of the filing of the complaint.

Subdivision (k).

This new provision reestablishes a substantial-compliance standard for process and service of process under Rule 4 when the defendant has actual notice of the complaint and has filed a timely answer. Other states have adopted similar rules. E.g., Ore. R. Civ. P. 7(G).

Subdivision (k) is in accord with older Arkansas authority holding the plaintiff to a substantial-compliance standard, both as to the summons and service of process, in nondefault cases. E.g., Ford Life Ins. Co. v. Parker, 277 Ark. 516, 644 S.W.2d 239 (1982). More recent cases, however, have held that a defendant's actual notice of a lawsuit does not validate defective process or defective service. E.g., Trusclair v. McGowan Working Partners, 2009 Ark. 203, 203 S.W.3d 428; Carruth v. Design Interiors, Inc., 324 Ark. 373, 921 S.W.2d 944 (1996).

The strict-compliance standard reflected in these decisions grows out of default situations. E.g., Wilburn v. Keenan Cos., 298 Ark. 461, 768 S.W.2d 531 (1989); Edmonson v. Farris, 263 Ark. 505, 565 S.W.2d 617 (1978). Despite the amendment of Ark. R. Civ. P. 55 to echo its federal counterpart, getting a default judgment set aside in Arkansas remains notoriously difficult. E.g., McGraw v. Jones, 367 Ark. 138, 238 S.W.3d 15 (2006). Insistence on strict compliance is a helpful shield in the default situation. But the same standard should not be a sword when the defect in process or service of process was minor and the defendant had actual notice of the complaint and filed a timely response.

It is often stated that service requirements, being in derogation of common-law rights, must be strictly construed and complied with exactly. E.g., Trusclair, 2009 Ark. 203, at 3, 203 S.W.3d at 430. This rule arose in the context of service on out-of-state defendants where "personal jurisdiction over a defendant may be founded on something less than actual notice." Halliman v. Stiles, 250 Ark. 249, 254, 464 S.W.2d 573, 577 (1971); see generally Kerr v. Greenstein, 213 Ark. 447, 212 S.W.2d 1 (1948) (construing non-resident motorist statute). When a defendant has actual notice of the complaint and does not default, however, due-process concerns are not present and the strict-compliance rule should not apply.

Application of the rule in nondefault situations is also at odds with the guiding principal of Rule 4—ensuring due process by giving the defendant adequate notice of the suit and an opportunity to respond before a judgment is entered. Subdivision (k) retains the strict-compliance rule in default situations, while reviving the substantial-compliance standard when the defendant has actual notice of a complaint and files a timely response. In the latter instance, due process is satisfied even if marginal defects in the summons or the service exist.

Subdivision (l).

This new provision addresses a problem that has arisen primarily in divorce cases. It requires that a party who wishes to affirmatively waive sufficiency of process and sufficiency of service of process do so in writing, file the document with the clerk, and serve it on all parties. Otherwise, the waiver is not effective. This waiver goes only to these matters and does not, of itself, waive any other defense, such as lack of personal jurisdiction or improper venue.

Reporter's Notes, Form of Service, 2019 Amendment:

In the introduction to the summons form, the second paragraph now provides that the form

“may be modified as needed in special circumstances.” It also states that “[a]dditional notices, if required, should be inserted as appropriate.” The revised form combines these sentences and adds a sentence listing examples of the notices that may be “inserted as appropriate,” including the notice of consent jurisdiction that is required by Administrative Order No. 18(6)(d)(1).

Reporter’s Note (2021 Amendment).

The need for an amendment to subsection 4(g)(1)(A)(ii) arose due to changes in United States Postal Service signature services during the COVID-19 pandemic. Prior to the amendment, Rule 4(g)(1)(A)(ii) required a “return receipt signed by the addressee or the agent of the addressee” for effective service by mail. However, postal service procedures during the pandemic did not permit addressees to sign the returned receipt. The rule as amended retained the signed green card return receipt as a basis for effective service by mail and added a provision that also validates service by mail if the green card “is executed as provided in the United States Postal Service procedures in place at the time of service.”

CASE NOTES

Acceptance of Process.

Applicability of Rule Amendment.
Defective in Summons.

The authority of an attorney to bind his client by acceptance of process pursuant to this rule may be implied in law from the ostensible circumstances, although an attorney does not, by mere virtue of employment, have authority to accept service of process. May v. Barg, 276 Ark. 199, 633 S.W.2d 376 (1982).

Applicability of Rule Amendment.

Dismissal of the case against a hospital that was brought by the co-guardians of a minor child was required because the summons was fatally defective under the version of the rule that was in effect at the time when the suit was filed. The co-guardians could not avoid the effect of the defective summons by retroactively applying the new substantial-compliance standard to the dismissal order entered more than a year before the new rule took effect because to do so would have disturbed the hospital’s vested right in the hospital’s defense. Carter v. Livingston, 2021 Ark. App. 363, 635 S.W.3d 351 (2021).

Defective in Summons.

Dismissal of the case against a hospital that was brought by the co-guardians of a minor child was required because the summons in the case was fatally defective under the version of the rule that was in effect at the time when the suit was filed in that the summons omitted both the name and the address of the co-guardians' attorney. Furthermore, supplementation of the deficient summons by incorporating the missing information from the co-guardians' complaint was not permitted. Carter v. Livingston, 2021 Ark. App. 363, 635 S.W.3d 351 (2021).

Agent.

Debtor who had initiated an adversary proceeding to determine dischargeability of a student loan obligation was entitled to default and a default judgment because the debtor had complied with the service of process requirements of Fed. R. Bankr. P. 7004 and this rule when the debtor served an amended summons and complaint on the creditor's designated agent. The debtor was not also required to serve process on the creditor itself as well as the agent. Weston v. Ed Fin. Servs., LLC, 398 B.R. 325 (Bankr. E.D. Ark. 2008).

Former school secretary failed to obtain proper service on the school district, as required by this rule, where she failed to identify the person served, and thus failed to prove that a proper agent of the district was served. The return had a check on the space designating service on an agent but did not otherwise identify the person served or the location where service was made. The return also gave a general physical description of the person served. By affidavit, the district superintendent denied that he was served. Helena-West Helena Public Sch. Dist. v. Shields, 2016 Ark. App. 312, 497 S.W.3d 202 (2016).

Trial court erred in dismissing homeowner's negligence and related claims against a floor company for deficient service of process where she served the company's registered agent, a return receipt demonstrating valid service overcame any inaccuracies in the proof of service, and the company did not argue that the signature that appeared on the certified mail receipt was unauthorized. Ladd v. PS Little Rock, Inc., 2016 Ark. App. 506 (2016).

Rational for 2004 amendment to this rule, permitting service on a registered agent of a corporation to be made by certified mail with return receipt requested, was to establish less onerous requirements when service is made on the registered agent of a corporation or other organization. The rule, as amended, makes it very clear that restricted delivery is not required, and as such, there is no requirement that the addressee be a natural person or that the agent of the addressee be authorized in accordance with postal-service regulations. Ladd v. PS Little Rock, Inc., 2016 Ark. App. 506 (2016).

Applicability.

The notice provisions of this rule do not apply in an action by the board of commissioners to sell a landowner's property to satisfy a lien created by his failure to pay a water improvement district assessment; this is a special statutory action which contains its own provisions for notice. Fulmer v. Board of Comm'rs, 286 Ark. 419, 692 S.W.2d 246 (1985).

Subsection (i) of this rule does not apply to a writ of scire facias. Bohnsack v. Beck, 294 Ark. 19, 740 S.W.2d 611 (1987).

Notice of a complaint to prevent annexation pursuant to § 14-40-604 means service of process pursuant to this rule. Britton v. City of Conway, 36 Ark. App. 232, 821 S.W.2d 65 (1991).

This rule governs personal service of the summons and complaint; it does not govern the service of a counterclaim. Arnold & Arnold v. Williams, 315 Ark. 632, 870 S.W.2d 365, cert. denied, 513 U.S. 990, 115 S. Ct. 489, 130 L. Ed. 2d 400 (1994).

Purpose of Ark. R. Civ. P. 5(b)(3) is not to require a party to serve a summons with a motion to modify a final decree when the court has reserved continuing jurisdiction, rather, it simply directs that such motions are required to be served in the same manner or method required for a summons and complaint, that is, served by mail with a return receipt requested and delivery restricted to the addressee or his or her agent; thus, because the trial court retained jurisdiction over the divorce decree, a new complaint and summons were not required to be served on the ex-husband. Dickson v. Fletcher, 361 Ark. 244, 206 S.W.3d 229 (2005), limited, Martin v. Pierce, 370 Ark. 53, 257 S.W.3d 82 (2007).

Property owners' appeal of the denial of non-conforming use status was improperly dismissed because their appeal was perfected under Ark. Dist. Ct. R. 9 and § 14-56-425 by the timely filing of the record in circuit court; further, this rule did not apply because there was no requirement of service of summons and complaint for the appeal and, to the extent that Weiss v. Johnson, 331 Ark. 409, 961 S.W. 2d 28 (1998), was inconsistent, it was overruled. Wright v. City of Little Rock, 366 Ark. 96, 233 S.W.3d 644 (2006).

Version of Ark. R. Civ. P. 4 effective January 1, 2019, applied as it was in effect when the driver was served. White v. Owen, 2020 Ark. App. 356, 609 S.W.3d 1 (2020), vacated, 2021 Ark. 31, 617 S.W.3d 241 (2021).

Commencement of Action.

Under Ark. R. Civ. P. 3, an action is commenced by the filing of a complaint with the clerk of the proper court, and the establishment of venue and the tolling of a statute of limitations is based on the date the complaint is filed; however, the commencement date is subject to the plaintiff completing service within 120 days from the date of filing of the complaint, unless the time for service has been extended by the court under subsection (i) of this rule. Forrest City Mach. Works, Inc. v. Lyons, 315 Ark. 173, 866 S.W.2d 372 (1993).

The effectiveness of the commencement date under Ark. R. Civ. P. 3 is dependent upon meeting the requirements of subsection (i) of this rule, which provides in part that service of process on a defendant must be accomplished within 120 days after the filing of the complaint. Sublett v. Hipps, 330 Ark. 58, 952 S.W.2d 140 (1997).

Construction.

Although subsection (i) of this rule provides that an action shall be dismissed without prejudice, the dismissal without prejudice language does not apply if the plaintiff's action is otherwise barred by the running of a statute of limitations. Edwards v. Szabo Food Serv., Inc., 317 Ark. 369, 877 S.W.2d 932 (1994), superseded by statute as stated in Powell v. Fernandez, 2013 Ark. App. 595 (2013).

Subsection (i) of this rule is not so rigid and inflexible that no relief can be granted even when plaintiff has failed to comply because of deception practiced upon plaintiff and upon state court by defendant. Eddinger v. Wright, 904 F. Supp. 932 (E.D. Ark. 1995).

This rule expressly governs the service of the complaint and summons, while Ark. R. Civ. P. 5 governs the service of every pleading and every other paper filed after the complaint. Office of Child Support Enforcement v. Ragland, 330 Ark. 280, 954 S.W.2d 218 (1997), superseded by statute as stated in Connally v. Connally, 95 Ark. App. 42, 233 S.W.3d 168 (2006).

Court erred in dismissing appellant's complaint against appellees on the basis of a defect in the summonses served on appellees, because the summonses were not defective and the court did not lack jurisdiction, when subdivision (b) of this rule did not provide that the essential terms of a summons were to be determined when the complaint was filed, and the court erred in construing the rule as if it implicitly contained such a requirement. Maeistri v. Signature Bank of Ark., 2013 Ark. App. 174 (2013).

Corporations.

Corporate employee held to be a proper person to serve under this rule. Lyons v. Forrest City Machine Works, Inc., 301 Ark. 559, 785 S.W.2d 220 (1990).

Limited liability company (LLC) was not entitled to the issuance of a writ of certiorari because the circuit court, in correctly interpreting this rule and denying the LLC's motion to dismiss a complaint on the ground of insufficiency of service of process, did not act in excess of its jurisdiction; restricted delivery is not required when serving the registered agent of a corporation or other organization because this rule permits service to be made on the registered agent of a corporation or other organization by certified mail with return receipt requested. Advance Fiberglass, LLC v. Rovnaghi, 2011 Ark. 516 (2011).

Fact that the owners elected to restrict delivery to the registered agent of a limited liability company (LLC) did not render the service on the LLC insufficient because the owners chose a more restrictive form of service than they had to, and based on an error on the part of the U.S. Postal Service, that more restrictive form of service was not properly completed. Advance Fiberglass, LLC v. Rovnaghi, 2011 Ark. 516 (2011).

Default Judgments.

Plaintiff's attempt at service of process and notice of impending default must be measured against the extremely heavy burden imposed upon him. Meeks v. Stevens, 301 Ark. 464, 785 S.W.2d 18 (1990).

Where mail sat on registered agent's desk for two months and no reason for the lapse was offered, and the failure to answer the complaint contained in the mail appeared due more to carelessness or as a result of not attending to business, the circuit court did not abuse its discretion in entering a default judgment against defendant. Maple Leaf Canvas, Inc. v. Rogers, 311 Ark. 171, 842 S.W.2d 22 (1992).

After a default judgment had been entered in a discrimination case, employer's motion to dismiss an amended complaint should have been granted because the amended complaint was improperly mailed to the employer's attorney; service of the amended complaint on a corporation was required to comply with this rule. Tobacco Superstore, Inc. v. Darrough, 362 Ark. 103, 207 S.W.3d 511 (2005).

Where homeowner testified that he was a business man who was familiar with court processes, but failed to respond to the summons and did nothing until after being informed by letter that a trial on damages was pending, the trial court's conclusion that this did not rise to excusable neglect was not clearly erroneous; thus, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in entering a default judgment against homeowner. Israel v. Oskey, 92 Ark. App. 192, 212 S.W.3d 45 (2005).

Arkansas courts recognize that judgments by default that are rendered without valid service are judgments rendered without jurisdiction and are therefore void. Grand Slam Stores, LLC v. L&P Builders, Inc., 92 Ark. App. 210, 212 S.W.3d 6 (2005).

Although a debtor alleged an incorrect zip code for a circuit court's address rendered the summons served on her fatally defective, the circuit court properly determined the debtor was not entitled to set aside a default judgment, pursuant to Ark. R. Civ. P. 55(c)(2), as void because nothing in subsection (b) of this rule required the court address to appear in the summons. Talley v. Asset Acceptance, LLC, 2011 Ark. App. 757 (2011).

Default judgment was to be set aside because the judgment was void for insufficient service of process in that the alternative method of service by e-mail crafted by the circuit court was not reasonably calculated to give actual notice. Steward v. Kuettel, 2014 Ark. 499, 450 S.W.3d 672 (2014).

Circuit court properly denied a borrower's motion to set a default judgment in a foreclosure case against her where the warning order included the correct legal description of the property to be affected by the judgment ("Hurricane Lake Estates"), as required by this rule, even though that description did not match the incorrect legal description provided in the deed of trust and assignment of deed of trust ("Hurricane Lake Estates"). Bloodman v. Bank of America, N.A., 2016 Ark. App. 67, 482 S.W.3d 340 (2016).

Bank's affidavit showed that it had made a diligent inquiry about the borrower's location or address by describing the attempts to serve her, the absence of the word "whereabouts" in the affidavit did not invalidate the warning order, and the borrower offered no evidence of any other address, location, or post office box that the bank should have used. Bloodman v. Bank of America, N.A., 2016 Ark. App. 67, 482 S.W.3d 340 (2016).

Dismissal.

Dismissals based on failure to serve defendant should have been with prejudice where plaintiffs had previously taken voluntary nonsuits. Bakker v. Ralston, 326 Ark. 575, 932 S.W.2d 325 (1996).

Subsection (i) of this rule applies when there is a failure to obtain service and nothing more; Ark. R. Civ. P. 41(b), however, is expressly addressed to a situation where there has been more than one dismissal, whether voluntary or involuntary. Bakker v. Ralston, 326 Ark. 575, 932 S.W.2d 325 (1996).

The "dismissal without prejudice" language in subsection (i) of this rule does not apply if the plaintiff's action is barred by a statute of limitations running as a result of the failure to obtain service within 120 days. Bodiford v. Bess, 330 Ark. 713, 956 S.W.2d 861 (1997).

Trial court properly dismissed appellants' false imprisonment action against appellees on the ground that appellants failed to show good cause in their motions for extension of time to serve pursuant to subsection (i) of this rule where appellants' assertions that they were unable because of various unrelated difficulties to obtain service of a summons that had never been issued was, at the very least, constructive fraud. Wilkins v. Food Plus, Inc., 99 Ark. App. 64, 257 S.W.3d 107 (2007).

Default judgment in a child support case should have been set aside because service was unquestionably defective where it was effectuated upon a purported father's brother; therefore, a circuit court abused its discretion when it took any action other than a dismissal of the case under subsection (i) of this rule. The father's subsequent participation in enforcement proceedings, including his act of filing for paternity testing, did not validate the void judgment. Ivy v. Office of Child Support Enforcement, 99 Ark. App. 341, 260 S.W.3d 328 (2007).

Circuit court did not err in dismissing a corporation's action against a limited liability company without prejudice under Ark. R. Civ. P. 41(b) due to the corporation's complaint for failure to obtain service because the corporation's failure to comply with subsection (b) of this rule operated as an involuntary dismissal for purposes of Rule 41(b) and did not trigger the two-dismissal rule of Rule 41(b); the prior dismissal of the suit in district court was due to a lack of subject-matter jurisdiction and was not a voluntary nonsuit or a voluntary dismissal under Rule 41(a) because the corporation had no choice and no unilateral right to allow the case to proceed in district court, and the literal application of Rule 41(b) to the case would bring about a harsh and absurd result that did not serve the purpose behind the two-dismissal rule. Jonesboro Healthcare Ctr., LLC v. Eaton-Moery Envtl. Servs., 2011 Ark. 501, 385 S.W.3d 797 (2011).

Tort claims and claims under the Arkansas Civil Rights Act were properly dismissed with prejudice because there was no service, and the statute of limitations had run at the time of the dismissal; the dismissal without prejudice language in this rule did not apply if the action was otherwise barred by the running of the statute of limitations. Mullen v. Stant USA Corp., 2015 Ark. App. 180, 458 S.W.3d 755 (2015).

Divorce Proceedings.

Trial court set aside a divorce decree obtained by default where the husband failed to strictly comply with the requirements of this rule in attempting to perfect service by warning order. Littleton v. Albert-Littleton, 89 Ark. App. 325, 202 S.W.3d 563 (2005).

Where ex-husband argued that, although the signature on the entry of appearance and waiver, the waiver of corroboration of grounds, and the separation agreement appear to be his, he did not "sign" the waiver and entry of appearance because he signed the verification portion of the document and, therefore, the trial court never acquired jurisdiction over him, the husband still signed a valid entry of appearance when he signed the portion labeled "verification"; there was no requirement under this rule or Ark. R. Civ. P. 11 that such entry of appearance be verified and, thus, the language of the verification portion of the document was mere surplusage. Morehouse v. Lawson, 90 Ark. App. 379, 206 S.W.3d 295 (2005).

Due Process.

Evidence insufficient to find that attempted service would satisfy defendant's due process rights. Meeks v. Stevens, 301 Ark. 464, 785 S.W.2d 18 (1990).

A certificate of service is no substitute for a summons; a summons is necessary to satisfy due process requirements. Thompson v. Potlach Corp., 326 Ark. 244, 930 S.W.2d 355 (1996).

Extensions.

Circuit court properly found that appellants failed to show good cause when they obtained the various extensions of time to serve the complaint on the out-of-state defendants under Ark. R. Civ. P. 4(i)(2) as they had merely incorporated the prior filings and failed to detail the efforts made since any previous extension. McCue v. Dominguez, 2022 Ark. App. 211, 646 S.W.3d 184, sub. op., 2022 Ark. App. 332 (2022).

Employee's FELA suit was properly dismissed for failure to serve the employer within 120 days as required by subsection (i) of this rule. An alleged oral extension granted by the trial judge was ineffective because it was not entered as required by subsection (i), and Ark. R. Civ. P. 60(b) did not operate to create an order that was never entered. Verbanski v. Union Pac. R.R. Co., 2011 Ark. App. 6, 380 S.W.3d 459 (2011).

Because appellant failed to perfect service of process on appellees within the 120-day period under subsection (i) of this rule, the trial court was required to dismiss her complaint; appellant's motion to extend the time for service was never filed, and even if the motion was considered to be timely, the order granting the extension was not actually entered until more than thirty days after appellant made the motion. Maguire v. Jines, 2011 Ark. App. 359, 384 S.W.3d 71 (2011).

Circuit court erred in granting plaintiff's motion for extension of time to effect service. Plaintiff's assertion that defendant might raise arguments regarding service — defenses defendant was entitled to raise — did not amount to good cause for an extension of time to effect service. Baylark v. Helena Reg'l Med. Ctr., 2012 Ark. 405 (2012).

Court of Appeals of Arkansas, Division One, holds that the 2014 amendment to Ark. R. Civ. P. 4(i) was meant to be applied retroactively where it did not create a new right, but simply clarified that parties had a right to multiple extensions to perfect service beyond the 120-day period from filing the suit, so long as the motion for the extension was filed before expiration of the time granted on a previous extension. Coots v. Bandera, 2016 Ark. App. 388, 499 S.W.3d 671 (2016).

Circuit court's denial of a driver's motion to extend the time for service on the basis of untimeliness was an abuse of discretion because the motion was timely; the driver's motion was filed one day before the end of the 120-day filing period. McClurkin v. Willis, 2017 Ark. App. 247, 522 S.W.3d 137 (2017).

Because the circuit court's order denying a driver's motion to extend the time for service on the basis of untimeliness was reversed, its order dismissing the driver's second amended complaint based on lack of notice to a daughter was also reversed; whether notice was actually provided to the daughter after remand remained to be seen. McClurkin v. Willis, 2017 Ark. App. 247, 522 S.W.3d 137 (2017).

Circuit court properly denied defendant's motion to dismiss for failure to timely serve where its use of the phrase "additional 120 days" in the first extension order meant that the order extended the time 120 days from the expiration of the initial 120-day period permitted under Ark. R. Civ. P. 4(i), its use of the words "additional 120 days" in the second extension order meant that the order extended the time 120 days from the expiration of the time permitted by the first extension order, and defendant was served by warning order one day before the time for service expired. Gore v. Ark. Teachers Fed. Credit Union, 2019 Ark. 75, 568 S.W.3d 761 (2019).

Circuit court properly extended a creditor's time for service of process against two debtors because there had been active settlement negotiations between the parties within a month of the lawsuit's filing, and the debtors' attorney refused to accept service on their behalf at the termination of negotiations. Branson v. Hiers, 2021 Ark. App. 284, 625 S.W.3d 748 (2021).

Garnishment.

A writ of garnishment must meet the requirements applicable to summonses in civil cases. Terminal Truck Brokers v. Memphis Truck & Trailer, Inc., 279 Ark. 427, 652 S.W.2d 34 (1983).

Where a writ of garnishment fell short of the requirements of subsection (b) of this rule in that it was directed not to the garnishee but to the sheriff, it did not direct the garnishee to file a pleading and defend, it did not state that any default judgment would be for the relief demanded, and it was not under the seal of the court, the writ of garnishment was voidable. Terminal Truck Brokers v. Memphis Truck & Trailer, Inc., 279 Ark. 427, 652 S.W.2d 34 (1983).

Former garnishment statute and this rule, read together, still did not satisfy the constitutional mandate of requiring that adequate notice be given to the garnishee that his property may be subject to satisfaction of the debt. Bob Hankins Distrib. Co. v. May, 305 Ark. 56, 805 S.W.2d 625 (1991).

In a garnishment case, there was no need to resort to an official capacity suit against a city as a municipal corporation relating to a failure to pay wages because the city could have been named directly, and process could have been served upon its chief executive officer; although the underlying judgment remained in full force and effect against the parties named in the judgment, the trial court found that the city was not a party to the underlying action or subject to garnishment of its bank accounts. An argument that the city failed to file a verified petition was waived because it was not made below. Collins v. Hall, 2014 Ark. App. 731, 455 S.W.3d 331 (2014).

Insufficiency of Process.

Trial court properly dismissed the State's forfeiture complaint because the State did not personally serve a defendant who was listed in the caption of the complaint, service by publication was not sufficient to establish personal jurisdiction over the named defendant, and the State's affidavit did not state that the identity or whereabouts of the named defendant remained unknown after diligent inquiry. State v. West, 2014 Ark. 174 (2014).

Substantial compliance standard of subsection (k) of this rule, adopted effective January 1, 2019, did not apply in this case according to the rule's plain terms; although the state defendants did receive notice of the complaints, they did not file answers to the complaints but instead filed motions to dismiss. Wine v. Chandler, 2020 Ark. App. 412, 607 S.W.3d 522 (2020).

Service of process was rendered ineffective because the plaintiffs' summonses and complaint were mailed to state officials via certified mail without delivery restricted to the addressees or a return receipt requested. In addition, the summonses were defective because they did not contain the parties' addresses. Wine v. Chandler, 2020 Ark. App. 412, 607 S.W.3d 522 (2020).

Jurisdiction.

Where the trial court did not have jurisdiction over a hospital in a medical malpractice case due to a lack of proper service of process, the court had no jurisdiction to consider a motion to amend the summons to name the correct party. Shotzman v. Berumen, 363 Ark. 215, 213 S.W.3d 13 (2005).

Limitation of Actions.

While it was true that the effectiveness of the commencement of an action was dependant on the plaintiff completing service of process as provided for in subsection (i) of this rule, for purposes of tolling the statute of limitations, the Supreme Court looked to the time that the complaint was filed; therefore, the filing of the complaint commenced the action, and the fact that appellants were represented by counsel at the time service was completed did not toll the statute of limitations when appellants were not represented by counsel at the time the complaint was filed. Davenport v. Lee, 348 Ark. 148, 72 S.W.3d 85 (2002).

Negligence action for a slip and fall was improperly dismissed as being barred by the three-year limitations period of § 16-56-105 because under Ark. R. Civ. P. 15(c), an amendment correcting the name of a wrong owner as defendant related back to the original complaint in that the same allegations were made and the new owner was served within 120 days. Bell v. Jefferson Hosp. Ass'n, 96 Ark. App. 283, 241 S.W.3d 276 (2006).

Notice.

Rules of civil procedure under the Arkansas Supreme Court's exclusive procedural rule-making authority governed the notice to be given even for a special county court proceeding under § 14-18-106 to close a road, and a court order closing a road with less than 30 days' notice required by this rule was void. Myers v. Bogner, 2011 Ark. App. 98, 380 S.W.3d 529 (2011).

Presumption of Validity.

Appellant did not offer sufficient evidence to rebut the presumption of validity of a signature created by the circuit court's seal on a summons. The circuit court's seal gave the presumption of validity to the signature that was not rebutted and, therefore, strict compliance with the signature requirement of subsection (b) of this rule and Ark. Const. Art. 7, § 49, was satisfied. Unimeks, LLC v. Purolite, 2012 Ark. 20, 386 S.W.3d 419 (2012) (decided under prior version of rule).

Process Server.

Where process server was not issued a process server's card until two weeks after he served the process on defendant, the attempted service was invalid, and, as a consequence, the default judgment was void. Hubbard v. Shores Group, Inc., 313 Ark. 498, 855 S.W.2d 924 (1993).

Proof of Service.

Failure to make proof of service does not affect the validity of service, because proof of service may be made by means other than demonstration on the return of the service official. Lyons v. Forrest City Machine Works, Inc., 301 Ark. 559, 785 S.W.2d 220 (1990).

Where a process server testified that he served appellant with the original complaint to collect on a debt, the lack of an affidavit under this rule providing proof of service did not affect the validity of service; the defect in the proof of service was cured by the process server's testimony. Renfro v. Air Flo Co., 91 Ark. App. 99, 208 S.W.3d 807 (2005).

Although the process server failed to comply with this rule by failing to provide an affidavit to prove her service of summons, this omission did not affect the validity of her service; proof of service may be made by means other than demonstration on the return of the serving official. Israel v. Oskey, 92 Ark. App. 192, 212 S.W.3d 45 (2005).

Trial court did not err in denying an owner's motion to dismiss on the allegation of improper service because it simply did not believe the owner when he claimed to have been served with another man's forfeiture complaint instead of the correct one; the trial court was free to credit the proof of service provided by the State and the testimony presented by the State that the proper summons and complaint had been served. Byrd v. State, 2016 Ark. App. 489, 505 S.W.3d 699 (2016).

Refusal of Service.

With respect to subdivision (d)(8)(A) [now see (g)(1)] of this rule, the active nature of refusal is spelled out with care. The record must contain a return receipt signed by the addressee or the agent of the addressee or a returned envelope, postal document or affidavit by a postal employee reciting or showing refusal of the process by the addressee; silence or inaction, which elsewhere in the law may be presumed to be token consent, is not, in this instance, equivalent to refusal. Meeks v. Stevens, 301 Ark. 464, 785 S.W.2d 18 (1990).

The court erred in dismissing the plaintiff's motion for a default judgment since the plaintiff's exhibits properly showed that service of process was refused specifically by the defendant where (1) the plaintiff attempted service via certified mail, restricted delivery requested, and he filed the return of summons with the refused returned envelope attached, and (2) the plaintiff also mailed a cover letter with a copy of the complaint, summons, and interrogatories to the defendant by first class mail, and he filed the cover letter with the envelope marked "refused, return to sender." McAdams v. Ellington, 333 Ark. 362, 970 S.W.2d 203 (1998).

Service was proper where an authorized process server testified that he went to the defendant's house to serve him with process, saw the defendant's truck in his driveway, knocked on his door, received no answer, went to a side window, saw the defendant inside, made eye contact with him, announced that he had papers for the defendant, saw the defendant fall to his knees and crawl to the back of the house, and stuck the process papers through the front door. Valley v. Bogard, 342 Ark. 336, 28 S.W.3d 269 (2000).

Rule Mandatory.

Under subsection (i) of this rule, dismissal of a case for failure to make service of summons is mandatory. Lyons v. Forrest City Machine

Works, Inc., 301 Ark. 559, 785 S.W.2d 220 (1990).

Although the amended complaint in parents' medical malpractice action was filed before the expiration of the two-year statute of limitations in § 16-114-203, the limitations period was not tolled because a summons was never issued, and parents admitted they failed to complete service of process of the amended complaint, as required by this rule; while Ark. R. Civ. P. 3 provides that an action is commenced by filing a complaint with the clerk of the proper court, the effectiveness of the commencement date is dependent upon a party satisfying the requirements of subsection (i) of this rule, which provides that service of process on a defendant must be accomplished within 120 days after the filing of the complaint. Possey v. St. Bernard's Healthcare, Inc., 365 Ark. 154, 226 S.W.3d 757 (2006).

Savings Statute.

To toll the limitations period and to invoke the saving statute, § 16-56-126, a plaintiff need only file his or her complaint within the statute of limitations and complete timely service on a defendant under this rule; a court's later ruling finding such completed service invalid does not disinherit the plaintiff from the benefit of the saving statute. Forrest City Mach. Works, Inc. v. Lyons, 315 Ark. 173, 866 S.W.2d 372 (1993).

To toll the limitations period and to invoke the one-year savings statute, § 16-56-126, a plaintiff need only file his or her complaint within the statute of limitations and complete timely service on a defendant pursuant to Ark. R. Civ. P. 3 and this rule; even where a court later finds the plaintiff's timely completed service to be invalid, the plaintiff is not disinherited from benefiting from the one-year saving statute. Hicks v. Clark, 316 Ark. 148, 870 S.W.2d 750 (1994).

Where plaintiff filed a medical malpractice action on March 4, 1994, two days short of the two-year statute of limitations under § 16-114-203(a), and had until July 2, 1994, to complete service of process pursuant to subsection (i) of this rule, requested another 120 days on June 23, 1994, and was granted a 30-day extension on July 28, 1994, and where plaintiff, after failing to obtain service, requested a nonsuit on August 18, 1994, which was granted on September 14, 1994, the claim refiled on August 11, 1995, had not invoked the one-year savings statute, § 16-56-126, and was barred by the statute of limitations. Thomson v. Zufari, 325 Ark. 208, 924 S.W.2d 796 (1996).

In a case arising out of a car accident, the savings statute did not apply after the statute of limitations had run because the injured parties were not lulled into thinking that service was not required when a driver filed a response before he was served; there was a denial of an assertion that an adjuster in the case requested waiting on service while a settlement was negotiated. Filing a response to a complaint before service was perfected did not lead to service becoming unnecessary. Cagle v. Terwilliger, 2015 Ark. App. 191, 458 S.W.3d 770 (2015).

Circuit court erred in dismissing buyers' action with prejudice because they were entitled to the benefit of the savings statute, § 16-56-126, since they made a timely, completed attempt to serve sellers; the summonses and complaints were mailed to the sellers at their last known address, and when the envelopes containing the complaints and summonses were returned to the buyers' attorney, they were marked with a postal service stamp that contained several options for delivery and were marked "refused." Jones v. Douglas, 2016 Ark. 166, 489 S.W.3d 648 (2016).

Dismissing with prejudice a municipality's petition challenging annexation against a landowner bank, which had requested detachment under § 14-40-2002, was not error where the municipality had not completed any service at all on the bank, and as a result, the savings statute, § 16-56-126, did not apply. City of Tontitown v. First Sec. Bank, 2017 Ark. App. 326, 525 S.W.3d 18 (2017).

Patient's attempt at service by certified mail was insufficient to allow him the benefit of the savings statute, Ark. Code Ann. § 16-56-126, because proof of service was lacking and the patient had no reason to believe that service was complete; no green cards were returned for three of the defendant doctors and there was no proof that the person who signed a green card for the fourth defendant doctor was the doctor's agent. McCoy v. Robertson, 2018 Ark. App. 279, 550 S.W.3d 33 (2018).

Circuit court's decision to dismiss a complaint without prejudice, rather than with prejudice, was affirmed where an injured driver and her husband timely filed their complaint and served the driver who rear-ended the car behind them via warning order, but on appeal of the default judgment entered against that driver, the service was held imperfect under Ark. R. Civ. P. 4 due to the insufficiency of the diligent-inquiry affidavit. Under case law, the injured driver and her husband, who filed their case during the limitations period and served it promptly but imperfectly, deserved the grace period provided by § 16-56-126 to refile their case and serve it properly. Thomas v. Robinson, 2020 Ark. App. 103, 596 S.W.3d 531 (2020).

Service by Mail.

Service of a summons on a bonding company for the forfeiture of an appearance bond was valid because service by certified mail, signed by an employee of the bonding company, was sufficient. Affordable Bail Bonds, Inc. v. State, 2014 Ark. App. 657, 449 S.W.3d 321 (2014).

Service by Warning Order.

Out-of-state defendants were properly dismissed with prejudice because service of the warning orders did not strictly comply with the requirements of Ark. R. Civ. P. 4 and was completed outside the three-year statute of limitations for negligence actions and well past the last valid extension of time for service. McCue v. Dominguez, 2022 Ark. App. 211, 646 S.W.3d 184, sub. op., 2022 Ark. App. 332 (2022).

This rule permits constructive service by warning order only if the whereabouts of the defendant is unknown after diligent inquiry; thus, where the evidence clearly supported the trial court's finding that the cross-complainant did not make a diligent search for the cross-defendant in order to serve process on him, the cross-complainant was not entitled to rely on constructive service by warning order despite the affidavit signed by his attorney which recited the standard phrase that the location of the cross-defendant was unknown "after a diligent and reasonable inquiry." Smith v. Edwards, 279 Ark. 79, 648 S.W.2d 482 (1983) (decided under prior version of rule).

An affidavit of a petitioner does not conform to the procedures for constructive service required by this rule if it does not state that, after making diligent inquiry, the whereabouts of a defendant in an action to quiet title are unknown, a condition in this rule for a warning order's issuance. Gilbreath v. Union Bank, 309 Ark. 360, 830 S.W.2d 854 (1992) (decided under prior version of rule).

It is a well-settled rule that constructive service is a departure from the common law, and statutes providing for such service are mandatory and must be complied with exactly. Black v. Merritt, 37 Ark. App. 5, 822 S.W.2d 853 (1992) (decided under prior version of rule).

Issuing and publishing of warning order by appellee's attorney did not satisfy provisions of this rule that warning orders be issued by clerk, and their attempt to obtain service by publication failed. Black v. Merritt, 37 Ark. App. 5, 822 S.W.2d 853 (1992) (decided under prior version of rule).

In a divorce action, where service on the husband was attempted by sending the complaint and summons by certified mail to the husband's last known address, but the summons was returned unclaimed, the trial court erred in allowing service by warning order without the filing of an affidavit that a diligent inquiry had been made into the husband's whereabouts, as required by this rule, and the divorce decree that had been entered was void. Jackson v. Jackson, 81 Ark. App. 249, 100 S.W.3d 92 (2003) (decided under prior version of rule).

Mother did not preserve for review the argument that service of a petition to terminate parental rights by warning order pursuant to this rule was not sufficient because her attorney was provided with notice under Ark. R. Civ. P. 5, the Arkansas Department of Human Services satisfied the requirement of diligent inquiry provided in this rule, and at no time during the initial hearing on the petition for termination of the mother's parental rights was an objection made or a ruling requested on the issue of whether service was proper; because the mother was represented by counsel throughout the proceedings, service was properly made upon counsel of record pursuant to Rule 5, the circuit court had jurisdiction, and it was the mother's responsibility to stay informed and keep her attorney informed of her current address. Blackerby v. Ark. Dep't of Human Servs., 2009 Ark. App. 858, 373 S.W.3d 375 (2009) (decided under prior version of rule).

Appellant failed to obtain valid service on appellee via warning order under this rule, as it did not mail a copy of the warning order to appellee's last known address and did not file an affidavit stating that 30 days had elapsed since the order was published. Pulaski Choice, L.L.C. v. 2735 Villa Creek, L.P., 2010 Ark. App. 451, 376 S.W.3d 500 (2010) (decided under prior version of rule).

Default judgment against a goat seller was set aside under Ark. R. Civ. P. 55(c) as: (1) the buyer knew of the seller's whereabouts as the buyer had gone to the seller's house, yet the buyer did not make a diligent inquiry into the seller's whereabouts before applying for a warning order under this rule; (2) all of the buyer's service attempts in 2000 were at different incorrect addresses; (3) the seller's knowledge of the lien against her property did not validate the void default judgment; (4) the trial court lacked jurisdiction; and (5) laches and estoppel did not apply as the default judgment was void ab initio. Scott v. Wolfe, 2011 Ark. App. 438, 384 S.W.3d 609 (2011) (decided under prior version of rule).

Judgment entered in a 1990-91 quiet title case was void because, pursuant to a prior version of this rule, a default judgment could not have been taken since an affidavit was not filed with the court stating that 30 days had passed since a warning order was first published or posted and that a copy of the order and complaint had been mailed to the last known address. An affidavit from a newspaper did not address the mailing requirement, and either a plaintiff or his attorney had to make the affidavit. Wright v. Viele, 2013 Ark. App. 471, 429 S.W.3d 314 (2013) (decided under prior version of rule).

Trial court erred in failing to set aside a default judgment that quieted title in mineral interests to two living trusts where the trusts failed to search the public records of the county seat of the decedents' last known residence, the attempted internet searches did not amount to a strict compliance with this rule, and thus, the trusts had failed to conduct a diligent inquiry into the whereabouts of the heirs as required. Heirs of Duncan v. Williams Living Trust, 2013 Ark. App. 740 (2013) (decided under prior version of rule).

Appellee conducted a diligent inquiry into the whereabouts of the appellants sufficient to satisfy the constructive-service provision of this rule; the affidavits of the process servers and investigators established that a diligent inquiry was conducted, and the affidavit for warning order reflected those efforts, and thus service was properly effectuated by warning order. Morgan v. Big Creek Farms of Hickory Flat, Inc., 2016 Ark. App. 121, 488 S.W.3d 535 (2016) (decided under prior version of rule).

Evidence supported the circuit court's decision that one address was appellants' last known address, and thus the service by warning order was effectuated in compliance with this rule and the subsequently entered default judgment was not void for want of service. Morgan v. Big Creek Farms of Hickory Flat, Inc., 2016 Ark. App. 121, 488 S.W.3d 535 (2016) (decided under prior version of rule).

As appellee properly served appellants by warning order, that service of process satisfied due process. Morgan v. Big Creek Farms of Hickory Flat, Inc., 2016 Ark. App. 121, 488 S.W.3d 535 (2016) (decided under prior version of rule).

Default judgment of foreclosure was void where the mortgage holder presented no facts in its affidavits to support a statement that it made diligent inquiry into the whereabouts of the mortgagor's heir before it sought constructive service by a warning order, and thus, service was not proper under this rule. Billings v. United States Bank N.A., 2016 Ark. App. 134, 484 S.W.3d 715 (2016) (decided under prior version of rule).

Process service company provided an affidavit setting out the numerous steps taken to find and serve defendants at multiple addresses over the course of several months; the affidavit was sufficient to demonstrate that plaintiffs conducted a diligent inquiry into defendants' whereabouts, the service by warning order was effectuated in compliance with this rule, and the subsequently entered default judgment was not void for want of service. Young v. Welch, 2016 Ark. App. 614 (2016) (decided under prior version of rule).

Circuit court's order denying a lessee's motion to set aside a default judgment was reversed where an affidavit for warning order stating that the lessors' attorney made a diligent inquiry to locate the lessee was conclusory and provided no details as to what the inquiry was, and the lessors failed to use available information to locate the lessee, such as a cell phone number. Self v. Hustead, 2017 Ark. App. 339, 525 S.W.3d 33 (2017) (decided under prior version of rule).

Trial court erred in denying a mortgagor's motion to set aside the default judgment entered against him under Ark. R. Civ. P. 55 in a foreclosure action because the default judgment was void for lack of strict compliance with this rule; the affidavit and attached exhibits that the assignee of the mortgage submitted in support of the warning order failed to demonstrate a diligent inquiry into the mortgagor's whereabouts. Tenants of 1974 Lakeland Acres Road v. U.S. Bank, 2017 Ark. App. 362, 525 S.W.3d 475 (2017) (decided under prior version of rule).

In a foreclosure action where the assignee of the mortgage obtained a default judgment after service by warning order, the fact that the mortgagor was contractually obligated to keep his mortgage servicer apprised of his address for purposes of correspondences relating to the mortgage was not raised below and had no relevance to whether service of process by the assignee in the foreclosure action was sufficient to satisfy due process. Tenants of 1974 Lakeland Acres Road v. U.S. Bank, 2017 Ark. App. 362, 525 S.W.3d 475 (2017) (decided under prior version of rule).

Circuit court erred in denying defendant's motion to set aside the default judgment entered against him because plaintiffs' affidavit lacked sufficient detail regarding the efforts made to locate defendant and personally serve him legal process before attempting to constructively serve him using the warning-order method under Ark. R. Civ. P. 4. Thomas v. Robinson, 2018 Ark. App. 550, 562 S.W.3d 905 (2018).

It was error to deny contractor's motion to vacate a default judgment because the affidavit for warning order was insufficient as it only made the conclusory statement that diligent inquiry was made to locate the contractor, further inquiry should have been made because the address at which service was attempted clearly had been vacated, and plaintiff had a good email address from which the contractor had recently emailed plaintiffs' attorney as well as a good phone number, fax number, and post office box, which were listed on the contract, but did not attempt to use those methods to contact the contractor. Lewis v. Johnson, 2020 Ark. App. 34, 594 S.W.3d 104 (2020).

Service Not Proper.

Doctor's motion to dismiss with prejudice was properly granted as the patient's medical malpractice complaint was barred by the statute of limitations because he failed to obtain service on the doctor within the two-year time frame allowed for medical-malpractice actions as the only evidence of service, or the attempted service, was the process server's return-of-service form, which established that he was unable to obtain service, not that the doctor refused service; the doctor denied having received the summons and complaint; and the mailing of the summons and complaint by first-class mail the day following refusal of service did not satisfy the close-proximity requirement of subdivision (f)(1)(A) of this rule. Harvey v. Heim, 2022 Ark. App. 267 (2022).

Trial court's decision to dismiss the action was proper because guardian's wrongful death claim was derivative of her negligence action, and the negligence action was subject to dismissal with prejudice as it was undisputed that guardian's second complaint contained the same negligence allegations set out in her first suit, which she voluntarily nonsuited; however, the guardian never properly served the second complaint alleging negligence within the extended time for service and subsection (i) of this rule mandated dismissal of the negligence claim, thus, under Ark. R. Civ. P. 41(b), the dismissal operated as an adjudication of the merits, making the dismissal with prejudice. Brown v. Pine Bluff Nursing Home, 359 Ark. 471, 199 S.W.3d 45 (2004).

Trial court did not err in dismissing with prejudice a pedestrian's personal injury suit against an automobile driver when service was improperly completed by leaving a copy of the summons and the complaint with the driver's father at the father's place of business. Moreover, the pedestrian and his wife failed to seek an extension of time with which to complete proper service, and the pedestrian and his wife failed to show proof of fraud on the driver's part, which would have tolled the statute of limitations. Brennan v. Wadlow, 372 Ark. 50, 270 S.W.3d 831 (2008).

Because an accident victim filed his complaint during the limitations period and served it timely, albeit imperfectly, under this rule, he was entitled to the one-year grace period provided by the saving statute, § 16-56-126(a)(1), and therefore the case was properly dismissed without prejudice, allowing him to refile. McCoy v. Bodiford, 2010 Ark. App. 152 (2010).

Court erred in finding that service of process was effective, because the summons and complaint were not delivered to the debtor personally, and while the summons and complaint were undisputedly left with the debtor's husband, the creditor offered no evidence that the husband was an agent authorized to receive service of process on behalf of the debtor under this rule. Dobbs v. Discover Bank, 2012 Ark. App. 678, 425 S.W.3d 50 (2012) (decided under prior version of rule).

Trial court clearly erred in denying an incarcerated father's motion to dismiss a petition to terminate his parental rights because, while service on the prison warden had been correctly performed, the father was not properly served where the only document sent to him that was entered into evidence was hand delivered, not mailed first-class mail with the notation of "legal mail," and the letter indicated that only the summons was enclosed, not the petition for termination of parental rights. McMahan v. Ark. Dep't of Human Servs., 2014 Ark. App. 590, 446 S.W.3d 640 (2014).

Circuit court erred in upholding a quiet title decree because the chancery court lacked jurisdiction to enter the decree, and the decree was void and should have been set aside; service was not proper because the affidavit for warning order in the quiet title case was insufficient since it was conclusory and contained no indication of what steps were taken as part of the required "diligent inquiry" as to the whereabouts of a decedent or his heirs. XTO Energy, Inc. v. Thacker, 2015 Ark. App. 203, 467 S.W.3d 161 (2015).

Dismissing a requesting landowner bank from a municipality's action challenging an annexation was not error as a letter to the bank's attorney stating that a courtesy copy of the petition was enclosed was not sufficient service under this rule, and the bank had properly preserved its objection to service by asserting lack of jurisdiction in its answer. The bank's denial of the municipality's request for a jury trial was not a request for affirmative relief that waived the bank's objection to service. City of Tontitown v. First Sec. Bank, 2017 Ark. App. 326, 525 S.W.3d 18 (2017).

Circuit court properly dismissed, with prejudice, a doctor's 2016 refiled claims for breach of contract, wrongful termination, and tortious interference because the summonses were fatally defective; contrary to this rule, the summonses stated that a judgment by default "will" —rather than "may"—be entered if defendants fail to timely respond. The error was not "merely grammatical", nor a matter of interpretation, and, however inconsequential it might appear, the defect was fatal to the summonses under the strict-compliance standard articulated by Arkansas Supreme Court precedent (2019 amendment to this rule reestablished a substantial-compliance standard). Johnson v. Schumacher Grp. of Ark., Inc., 2019 Ark. App. 545, 589 S.W.3d 470 (2019).

Defendants did not waive their challenges to the defective summonses by requesting attorney's fees in connection with their motion for protective order. Johnson v. Schumacher Grp. of Ark., Inc., 2019 Ark. App. 545, 589 S.W.3d 470 (2019).

Injured persons had not perfected service under subdivision (f)(1)(B) of this rule where they had actual knowledge of the driver's address through the driver's interrogatory response, but had not attempted service on him at that address. Instead, they served him at his mother's residence where he had not lived for over one year and his only tie to the residence was that he had registered to vote using that address over five years ago. Substantial compliance under subsection (k) of this rule was not preserved for appellate review. White v. Owen, 2020 Ark. App. 356, 609 S.W.3d 1 (2020), vacated, 2021 Ark. 31, 617 S.W.3d 241 (2021).

Because the automobile accident victims' complaint against a motorist was commenced within the applicable statute of limitations period and the victims attempted service on the motorist within the time provided by the rule, the circuit court erred in finding that the savings statute, § 16-56-126, did not apply. White v. Owen, 2021 Ark. 31, 617 S.W.3d 241 (2021).

Automobile accident victims' failure to obtain a ruling on their substantial compliance argument under Ark. R. Civ. P. 4(k) barred consideration of that issue on appeal because Ark. R. Civ. P. 60 did not contain a deemed-denied provision, and Ark. R. App. P. Civ. 4(b)(1) did not apply as the victims' motion was filed more than 10 days after entry of the dismissal order. White v. Owen, 2021 Ark. 31, 617 S.W.3d 241 (2021).

Automobile accident victims' service of the summons and complaint on the other motorist at the home of the motorist's parent was insufficient given the lack of evidence that the motorist was then residing at that address. White v. Owen, 2021 Ark. 31, 617 S.W.3d 241 (2021).

In a contempt proceeding, the process server did not comply with this rule because he did not deliver the summons to respondent personally, he did not try to identify himself to respondent in order to make his purpose clear, and because he did not, respondent did not refuse to receive any papers from him. Ligon v. Bloodman, 2021 Ark. 124 (2021).

Service of Cross-Complaint.

Where a creditor's cross-complaint was attached to a summons requiring the debtor defendants to answer the plaintiff's complaint, but the summons made no mention of the attached cross-complaint, the chancellor properly set aside a default judgment that had been obtained on the cross-complaint since there had been no proper service of the cross-complaint. Moore v. Owens, 268 Ark. 324, 597 S.W.2d 65 (1980).

Service Proper.

When defendant refused to accept service and process server, on his return and affidavit, noted that he left the complaint, summons and lis pendens on a stump under a rock outside the gate to defendant's property, such service comported with the requirements of this rule. Rigin v. Dierdorff, 302 Ark. 517, 790 S.W.2d 897 (1990).

Trial court did not err in holding that a default judgment was not void due to insufficiency of service of process and concluding that service was proper; the process server was properly appointed to serve process in Pulaski County under this rule where the server was appointed for the purpose of serving summons in Pulaski County and service was made in Pulaski County. Nucor Corp. v. Kilman, 358 Ark. 107, 186 S.W.3d 720 (2004).

Where both homeowner's and process server's testimony indicated that homeowner received documents from the process server at his residence on April 19, but he simply neglected to read the documents, homeowner's contention that he was mistaken in his belief that he was being handed regular mail did nothing to erode the admitted fact that he received hand-delivery of his service. Israel v. Oskey, 92 Ark. App. 192, 212 S.W.3d 45 (2005).

Savings statute was applicable entitling the patient to refile his medical malpractice suit because his initial attempted service on the surgeon was proper; the return receipt was signed by the surgeon's secretary and the patient not only served the surgeon by certified mail, return receipt requested, restricted delivery, he further sent interrogatories certified mail, return receipt requested, restricted delivery and the secretary signed for those documents as the surgeon's agent. McCoy v. Montgomery, 370 Ark. 333, 259 S.W.3d 430 (2007).

County sheriff's office, although the seizing agency, was not a party to a forfeiture action brought by a prosecutor under § 5-64-505, and therefore service by the sheriff on the owners of the property to be forfeited was not deficient under this rule. State v. Hammame, 102 Ark. App. 87, 282 S.W.3d 278 (2008).

Service of a temporary ex parte order concerning termination of father's visitation with his child was properly made on the father because he was personally served by a process server with the order, and thus, the requirements of service by mail were inapplicable. Wilson v. Wilson, 2016 Ark. App. 191, 487 S.W.3d 420 (2016).

Circuit court did not err in finding that service of process complied with this rule where the county circuit clerk issued a summons on the date of the filing of the complaint in 2014, none of the extensions of time to serve the summons were challenged, and any delay necessitating the issuance of a new summons bearing a date of June 8, 2016, was due to defendant's efforts to avoid service (decided under version of rule in effect before Jan. 1, 2019). Tuccillo v. Adkins & Assocs., 2019 Ark. App. 55, 569 S.W.3d 900 (2019).

Substituted Service.

Substituted service is a departure from the common law, and rules or statutes providing for it are mandatory and to be complied with exactly. Where the purported service was attempted at an attorney's office and not at the defendant's dwelling, the rule providing for substituted service was not complied with, and the service was void. Sims v. Prescott Feed Mills, Inc., 286 Ark. 22, 688 S.W.2d 743 (1985).

Summons Not Defective.

Summons was not defective where it did not contain the signature of the county circuit clerk but was signed by the deputy clerk. Nucor Corp. v. Kilman, 358 Ark. 107, 186 S.W.3d 720 (2004).

Subsection (b) of this rule lays out with great specificity the requirements for a proper summons, but nowhere does the rule require or even suggest that the summons must describe all of the requirements for a valid answer. Therefore, in a civil forfeiture action, a summons was not invalid because it failed to state the verification requirements for an answer under § 5-64-505(g)(4). Solis v. State, 371 Ark. 590, 269 S.W.3d 352 (2007).

Arkansas Supreme Court declines to interpret subsection (b) of this rule so as to preclude the state from using a summons in the form that is best calculated to give actual notice to a party in interest who is not the named defendant in an in rem proceeding. Therefore, there was no error in a summons naming property as a defendant, but later naming the owner as a defendant to whom the summons was directed. Solis v. State, 371 Ark. 590, 269 S.W.3d 352 (2007).

Question was whether multiple names could be inserted in a portion of the summons form that on its face appeared to be intended for only the name of the individual party being served, but in this case, in no way did the form of the summons fail to apprise appellant of the pendency of the suit or deny him an opportunity to be heard; the summons was not fatally defective, as appellant was clearly identified in the summons, and there was no merit in his argument that the summons was deficient for identifying other defendants. Hall v. State Farm Bank, 2015 Ark. App. 287, 462 S.W.3d 701 (2015).

Trial court did not lack personal jurisdiction due to a defective summons because there was a correct summons that stated a father had 30 days to respond; the summons was issued by the clerk of the court the day after the mother had filed her motion for contempt, and the record contained an affidavit of service from a personal-process server averring that the father was served. Townsend v. Townsend, 2018 Ark. App. 246 (2018).

Summons in a trust administration case qualified as a special circumstance and the circuit court did not abuse its discretion in denying a qualified trust beneficiary's motion to declare the service and process void and invalid; although the beneficiary argued that the summons was defective because the caption section said "Hamilton Living Trust" and did not name the trustee or the parties, the trustee had the summons issued in the name of the trust, as § 28-73-201 gave it the right to do, and the summons was directed to the beneficiary, who received it and filed a timely answer (decided under former version of Rule 4). Hamilton v. Bank of the Ozarks, 2019 Ark. App. 76, 571 S.W.3d 53 (2019).

Supersession of Statutes.

This rule did not supersede § 16-58-125. Sun Gas Liquids Co. v. Helena Nat'l Bank, 276 Ark. 173, 633 S.W.2d 38 (1982).

Where service of writ of garnishment on bookkeeper and secretary of corporation would not be proper under § 16-58-124 but would be proper under this rule, these provisions conflict and since § 16-58-124 does not fit into the exception described in Rule 81(a), this rule supersedes § 16-58-124. May v. Bob Hankins Distrib. Co., 301 Ark. 494, 785 S.W.2d 23 (1990).

Timeliness.

In this personal injury action, the circuit court erred in finding that the savings statute did not apply because appellants' complaint was commenced within the applicable statute-of-limitations period and they attempted service on appellee within the time provided. Harden v. Beck, 2021 Ark. App. 481, 639 S.W.3d 401 (2021).

Under this rule, if service of summons is not made upon a defendant within 120 days after the filing of the complaint, the action shall be dismissed without prejudice, but the dismissal without prejudice language does not apply if the plaintiff's action is otherwise barred by the running of a statute of limitations. Green v. Wiggins, 304 Ark. 484, 803 S.W.2d 536 (1991).

Subsection (i) of this rule requires only that the plaintiff complete service upon the defendant within 120 days from filing the complaint; however, if the plaintiff fails to complete service during that period, he or she may still request that the time be extended to complete service in order to protect the plaintiff against the running of a statute of limitations if that extension is requested within the 120-day period. Hicks v. Clark, 316 Ark. 148, 870 S.W.2d 750 (1994).

In order to comply with subsection (i) of this rule, a party need only file the motion to extend time prior to the expiration of the deadline. Edwards v. Szabo Food Serv., Inc., 317 Ark. 369, 877 S.W.2d 932 (1994), superseded by statute as stated in Powell v. Fernandez, 2013 Ark. App. 595 (2013).

Under subsection (i) of this rule, a circuit court does not lose jurisdiction if the order granting a motion to extend the time to obtain service of process is not signed and filed prior to the expiration of 120 days from the filing of the complaint; where the motion to extend time is filed prior to the expiration of the 120 day period, the trial court may grant the extension after the expiration of 120 days. Edwards v. Szabo Food Serv., Inc., 317 Ark. 369, 877 S.W.2d 932 (1994), superseded by statute as stated in Powell v. Fernandez, 2013 Ark. App. 595 (2013).

Service of process must be accomplished within 120 days after the filing of the complaint absent a motion to extend. Dougherty v. Sullivan, 318 Ark. 608, 887 S.W.2d 305 (1994).

Court would not penalize plaintiff for her failure to file a motion requesting an extension where plaintiff was deceived into thinking that her original complaint had been properly served on defendant when in fact it had been served on defendant's father. Eddinger v. Wright, 904 F. Supp. 932 (E.D. Ark. 1995).

Tort claim was time-barred under § 16-56-105, even though complaint was filed in a timely manner, where plaintiff did not obtain service on defendant within 120 days pursuant to subsection (i) of this rule. Sublett v. Hipps, 330 Ark. 58, 952 S.W.2d 140 (1997).

A default judgment was void for want of proper service upon the defendant corporation under the rule since service was not attempted until more than 120 days from the date the complaint was filed and, moreover, since service was attempted by certified mailings, the relevant date for determining whether service was timely was the date service was received. Southeast Foods, Inc. v. Keener, 335 Ark. 209, 979 S.W.2d 885 (1998).

An attempt at service does not toll the 120-day-period provided by subsection (i) of this rule. Southeast Foods, Inc. v. Keener, 335 Ark. 209, 979 S.W.2d 885 (1998).

The trial court improperly dismissed a medical malpractice action since the plaintiff complied with subsection (i) of this rule and obtained service within the extended time period granted by the trial court before the judge rescinded his orders extending the time for service. King v. Carney, 341 Ark. 955, 20 S.W.3d 341 (2000).

Personal injury plaintiff's failure to request motion to extend time for service of process within the 120-day period prescribed by subsection (i) of this rule rendered order that granted an extension after 120-day period a nullity. Kangas v. Neely, 346 Ark. 334, 57 S.W.3d 694 (2001).

Debtor's motion to dismiss a bank's action to collect an unpaid account based on the bank's failure to effect service of the complaint within 120 days of filing, as required by subsection (i) of this rule, or to make a timely application for an extension of time was sufficient to allow the debtor to challenge a default judgment entered against the debtor for failing to respond to the bank's complaint within 20 days of service, as required by Ark. R. Civ. P. 12(a), because the judgment was void and the debtor could challenge the trial court's jurisdiction even though her own response was also untimely. Williams v. Citibank, N.A., 80 Ark. App. 42, 90 S.W.3d 451 (2002).

Although under Ark. R. Civ. P. 6(b) a trial court is permitted to enlarge the time period to act upon a motion made after the expiration of the specified period, for cause shown, Rule 6(b) does not apply where a trial court has no jurisdiction to act; thus, where the trial court must dismiss an action under subsection (i) of this rule for lack of service or failure to file a timely motion to extend time for service, then that trial court loses its jurisdiction to take any further action in that case. Holland v. Lefler, 80 Ark. App. 316, 95 S.W.3d 815 (2003).

Where appellants made no good cause showing for an extension of time to complete service of process, they failed to strictly comply with the service requirements of subsection (i) of this rule; it was of no consequence whether the reason later offered by appellants, that they were unable to secure a file-marked copy of the complaint from the circuit clerk, amounted to good cause. Henyan v. Peek, 359 Ark. 486, 199 S.W.3d 51 (2004).

Court erred in awarding judgment to plaintiff in his breach of contract action against defendant because plaintiff's earlier failure to comply with the service requirements of subsection (i) of this rule resulted in a failure to commence the action so as to effectuate the one-year savings provision provided § 16-56-126; hence, the action was barred by the five-year statute of limitations in § 16-56-111(a). Long v. Bonds, 89 Ark. App. 111, 200 S.W.3d 922 (2005).

Appellate court reversed the dismissal of patient's complaint as patient's assertions in his motion for extension of time satisfied the need for a contemporaneous showing of good cause in a motion for extension of time by stating that the summons and complaint had been sent to the sheriff, but had not yet been served, and that the doctor's attorney could raise insufficiency of service of process as a ground for dismissal. Nelson v. Weiss, 366 Ark. 361, 235 S.W.3d 891 (2006).

Trial court erred in granting state's motion to strike appellant's motion to dismiss a forfeiture action because, after voluntarily dismissing its first forfeiture complaint for failure to complete service of process, the state neglected to toll the limitations period to invoke the one-year savings statute because it did not file the forfeiture complaint within the 120-day period required by § 5-64-505(g)(3). Mitchell v. State, 94 Ark. App. 304, 229 S.W.3d 583 (2006).

In a case where relief was sought from a foreclosure proceeding based on defective service under this rule, two debtors waived the issue since they recognized the action was in court and made an appearance at the foreclosure proceeding by agreeing to the entry of an order appointing a receiver; therefore, there was no due process violation. Moreover, subsection (i) of this rule was satisfied because the entry of the order appointing the receiver occurred well within the 120-day period provided for service. Trelfa v. Simmons First Bank of Jonesboro, 98 Ark. App. 287, 254 S.W.3d 775 (2007).

In an action arising from a rear-end accident, plaintiff driver could not use the relation-back doctrine in Ark. R. Civ. P. 15(c) because the 120-day requirement of subsection (i) of this rule was not met. The court could not assume defendant driver's knowledge of the action, after being named in the amended complaint, from the fact that defendant was related to and lived with the original defendant, the owner of the vehicle. Bennett v. Spaight, 372 Ark. 446, 277 S.W.3d 182 (2008).

In an action by a solicitor against a contractor and others, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to dismiss the action for lack of timely service under subsection (i) of this rule because the trial court had granted the solicitor's motion to extend the time for service and the contractor was, in fact, served during the period of extension. Nobles v. Tumey, 2010 Ark. App. 731, 379 S.W.3d 639 (2010).

Trial court properly dismissed a FELA action for insufficiency of service of process under subsection (i) of this rule because service was not made until 181 days after the complaint was filed. The employer's participation in discovery prior to filing its motion to dismiss did not waive the defense of insufficiency of service of process. Wilson v. Union Pac. R.R. Co., 2011 Ark. App. 508 (2011).

Circuit court properly dismissed the lenders' second complaint against a borrower with prejudice because, while they noted the circumstances behind their failure to timely file the motion for extension of time, explaining that counsel's mother had been unexpectedly killed in a plane crash, the action had previously been dismissed for failure to comply, a matter that was within the sellers' control. Ogden v. Hughes, 2015 Ark. App. 59, 454 S.W.3d 758 (2015).

Trial court properly dismissed a plaintiff's personal-injury complaint against the defendants for failure to timely serve them because the plaintiff did not deny that he had failed to serve any of the defendants within 120 days of the filing of his complaint, he did not file a written motion requesting an extension, there was no extension entered by the trial court on the record, and the trial court did not rule on the issue of whether there was an agreement between the parties to waive timely service. Dodd v. Highway Hauling Express Corp., 2019 Ark. App. 123, 572 S.W.3d 447 (2019).

Dismissal-without-prejudice language in subsection (i) of this rule does not apply if plaintiff's action is otherwise barred by the running of the statute of limitations. Thomas v. Robinson, 2020 Ark. App. 103, 596 S.W.3d 531 (2020).

Waiver.

Hospital did not waive its defective service defense by defending the case before filing a motion asserting the defense because the hospital preserved the defense by asserting it in the hospital's original responsive pleading. Furthermore, the hospital's participation in the case in the interim without requesting affirmative relief preserved that defense. Carter v. Livingston, 2021 Ark. App. 363, 635 S.W.3d 351 (2021).

Because the mother appeared at the adjudication hearing, review hearings, and termination hearing without raising an objection that the service of process was defective, the mother was represented by counsel in each of the pertinent hearings, and there was nothing in the record showing that the mother or her attorney requested any inquiry into improper service, the defective service of process argument was waived. Bane v. Ark. Dep't of Human Servs., 2016 Ark. App. 617, 509 S.W.3d 647 (2016).

Rule 5. Service and filing of pleadings and other papers.

(a) Service: When Required. Except as otherwise provided in these rules, every pleading and every other paper, including all written communications with the court, filed subsequent to the complaint, except one which may be heard ex parte, shall be served upon each of the parties, unless the court orders otherwise because of numerous parties. No service need be made upon parties in default for failure to appear, except that pleadings asserting new or additional claims for relief against them shall be served in the manner provided for service of summons in Rule 4. Any pleading asserting new or additional claims for relief against any party who has appeared shall be served in accordance with subdivision (b) of this rule.

In an action begun by seizure of property, in which no person need be or is named as defendant, any service required to be made prior to the filing of an answer, claim or appearance shall be made upon the person having custody or possession of the property at the time of its seizure.

(b) Service: How Made.

(1) Whenever under this rule or any statute service is required or permitted to be made upon a party represented by an attorney, the service shall be upon the attorney, except that service shall be upon the party if the court so orders or the action is one in which a final judgment has been entered and the court has continuing jurisdiction.

(2) Except as provided in paragraph (3) of this subdivision, service upon the attorney or upon the party shall be made by delivering a copy to him or by sending it to him by regular mail or commercial delivery company at his last known address or, if no address is known, by leaving it with the clerk of the court. Delivery of a copy for purposes of this paragraph means handing it to the attorney or to the party; by leaving it at his office with his clerk or other person in charge thereof; or, if the office is closed or the person has no office, leaving it at his dwelling house or usual place of abode with some person residing therein who is at least 14 years of age. Service by mail is presumptively complete upon mailing, and service by commercial delivery company is presumptively complete upon depositing the papers with the company. When service is permitted upon an attorney, such service may be effected by electronic transmission, including e-mail, provided that the attorney being served has facilities within his or her office to receive and reproduce verbatim electronic transmissions. Service is complete upon transmission but is not effective if it does not reach the person to be served. Service by a commercial delivery company shall not be valid unless the company: (A) maintains permanent records of actual delivery, and (B) has been approved by the circuit court in which the action is filed or in the county where service is to be made.

(3) If a final judgment or decree has been entered and the court has continuing jurisdiction, service upon a party by mail or commercial delivery company shall comply with the requirements of Rule 4(G)(1) and (2), respectively.

(c) Filing.

(1) All papers after the complaint required to be served upon a party or his attorney shall be filed with the clerk of the court either before service or within a reasonable time thereafter. The clerk shall note the date and time of filing thereon. However, proposed findings of fact, proposed conclusions of law, trial briefs, proposed jury instructions, and responses thereto may but need not be filed unless ordered by the court. Depositions, interrogatories, requests for production or inspection, and answers and responses thereto shall not be filed unless ordered by the court. When such discovery documents are relevant to a motion, they or the relevant portions thereof shall be submitted with the motion and attached as an exhibit unless such documents have already been filed. The clerk shall not refuse to accept for filing any paper presented for that purpose solely because it is not presented in the proper form. In counties where the county clerk serves as the ex officio clerk of any division of the circuit court, the filing requirement for any pleading, paper, order, judgment, decree, or notice of appeal shall be satisfied when the document is filed with either the circuit clerk or the county clerk.

(2) Confidential information as defined and described in Sections III(A)(11) and VII(A) of Administrative Order 19 shall not be included as part of a case record unless the confidential information is necessary and relevant to the case. Section III(A)(2) of the Administrative Order defines a case record as any document, information, data, or other item created, collected, received, or maintained by a court, court agency or clerk of court in connection with a judicial proceeding. If including confidential information in a case record is necessary and relevant to the case:

(A) The confidential information shall be redacted from the case record to which public access is granted pursuant to Section IV(A) of Administrative Order 19. The point in the case record at which the redaction is made shall be indicated by striking through the redacted material with an opaque black mark or by inserting some explanatory notation in brackets, such as: [Information Redacted], [I.R.], [Confidential], or [Subject To Protective Order]. If an entire document is redacted, then the name of the document (with the number of pages redacted specified) should be noted in the publicly available court file and the entire document should be filed under seal. The requirement that the redaction be indicated in case records shall not apply to court records rendered confidential by expungement or other legal authority that expressly prohibits disclosure of the existence of a record; and

(B) An un-redacted copy of the case record with the confidential information included shall be filed with the court under seal. The un-redacted copy of the case record shall be retained by the court as part of the court record of the case. It is the responsibility of the attorney for a party represented by counsel and the responsibility of a party unrepresented by counsel to ensure that confidential information is omitted or redacted from all case records that they submit to a court. It is the responsibility of the court, court agency, or clerk of court to ensure that confidential information is omitted or redacted from all case records, including orders, judgments, and decrees, that they create.

(3) If the clerk's office has a facsimile machine, the clerk shall accept facsimile transmissions of any paper filed under this rule and may charge a fee of $1.00 per page. Any signature appearing on a facsimile copy shall be presumed authentic until proven otherwise. The clerk shall stamp or otherwise mark a facsimile copy as filed on the date and time that it is received on the clerk's facsimile machine during the regular hours of the clerk's office or, if received outside those hours, at the time the office opens on the next business day.

(d) Filing With the Judge. The judge may permit papers or pleadings to be filed with him, in which event he shall note thereon the filing date and forthwith transmit them to the office of the clerk. If the judge permits filing by facsimile transmission, the provisions of subdivision (c)(2) of this rule shall apply.

(e) Proof of Service. Every pleading, paper or other document required by this rule to be served upon a party or his attorney, shall contain a statement by the party or attorney filing same that a copy thereof has been served in accordance with this rule, stating therein the date and method of service and, if by mail, the name and address of each person served.

HISTORY: Amended July 9, 1984, effective September 1, 1984; amended June 24, 1985, effective September 1, 1985; amended July 7, 1986, effective September 15, 1986; amended November 20, 1989, effective January 1, 1990; amended December 10, 1990, effective February 1, 1991; amended November 8, 1993, effective January 1, 1994; amended November 18, 1996, effective March 1, 1997; amended January 28, 1999; amended June 24, 1999; amended January 27, 2000; amended January 24, 2002; amended February 10, 2005; amended October 23, 2008, effective January 1, 2009; amended June 3, 2010, effective July 1, 2010; amended October 6, 2022, effective November 1, 2022.

Publisher's Notes.

The 2002 amendments to Ark. R. Civ. P. 4(d)(8)(C) and Ark. R. Civ. P. 5(b) are deemed to supersede Ark. Code Ann. § 1-2-122(b) with respect to the service of process and other papers.

Reporter's Notes (as modified by the Court) to Rule 5:

1. This Rule is essentially the same as FRCP 5 and makes no significant change in Arkansas law. With the obvious exception of ex parte proceedings, and conferring some discretion on the court in cases involving multiple parties, the Rule requires service of all pleadings, papers and other documents generated in the lawsuit on each of the other parties to the action.

2. FRCP 5(b) permits service in certain instances upon "some person of suitable age and discretion" residing in the residence or usual place of abode of the person to be served. As stated in the Reporter's Notes to Rule 4, the Committee has, in order to overcome the vagueness and uncertainty of that language, provided that in such an instance service may be had upon some person who is at least fourteen years of age.

3. FRCP 5(c) is omitted from the Rule because Section (a) adequately permits the trial judge to waive service where multiple parties are involved.

4. FRCP 5(e) permits the trial judge to accept the filing of pleadings and other papers personally. That procedure has been retained, because the clerk may not always be present.

5. Although FRCP 5 makes no provision for proof of service of pleadings, most Federal District courts require it by local rule, and it has been heretofore required in Arkansas courts. Rule 5(e) thus effects no change in that regard.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 1984 Amendments:

Rule 5(b) is amended to incorporate provisions from Ark. Stat. Ann. § 27-632 (Repl. 1979), which is now deemed superseded, making insufficient service of papers on an attorney in a case in which there has been a final order but reserved, continuing jurisdiction.

Rule 5(c) is amended to do away with the requirement that the papers mentioned be filed. Although discovery papers are among those which need no longer be filed, requests for admission and responses to requests for admission must be filed.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 1985 Amendment:

The first sentence of Rule 5(a) is amended to make plain that all correspondence between counsel and the court is to be served upon all parties. As the Reporter's Note to the original version of this rule indicates, the phrase "every other paper" is to be given an expansive reading and includes "all pleadings, papers and other documents generated in the lawsuit . . ." Without intending to limit the breadth of the term, this amendment simply specifies by way of illustration a "paper" falling within the rule. Thus, the amended rule requires, for example, service of a precedent for judgment prepared at the court's request. Compare Karam v. Halk, 260 Ark. 3, 537 S.W.2d 797 (1976).

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 1986 Amendment:

The 1986 amendment adds the words "or any statute" following the word "rule" in the first sentence of subsection (b). The rule thus applies not only to those papers required to be filed by the Rules of Civil Procedure, but also to documents that must be filed under the provisions of particular statutes, e.g., Ark. Stat. Ann. § 34-2617 (Supp. 1985) (notice of intent to sue in medical malpractice proceedings).

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 1989 Amendment:

Rule 5(b) is amended to make clear that service upon an attorney under the rule is permitted by "fax" machine or by commercial delivery service, as well as by mail. This recognition of "new technology" is consistent with Act 58 of 1989 [§ 16-20-109], which permits a court clerk to accept pleadings filed via fax machine.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 1990 Amendment:

Subdivision (a) of Rule 5 requires that "pleadings asserting new or additional claims for relief against [parties in default for failure to appear] shall be served in the manner provided for service of summons in Rule 4." This provision implies that a pleading asserting a new or additional claim for relief against a party who has appeared in the action need only be served on the party's attorney, as set forth in Rule 5(b). Some federal courts have so construed the virtually identical federal rule. E.g., Dysart v. Marriot Corp., 103 F.R.D. 15 (E.D. Pa. 1984). However, Arkansas cases predating adoption of the Rules of Civil Procedure indicate that service by summons on a party already before the court is required in some circumstances. E.g., Nance v. Flaugh, 221 Ark. 352, 253 S.W.2d 207 (1953); Arbaugh v. West, 127 Ark. 98, 192 S.W. 171 (1917). See also Howard v. County Court, 278 Ark. 117, 644 S.W.2d 256 (1983) (citing Arbaugh with approval but not discussing Rule 5).

To clarify Arkansas procedure, subdivision (a) of Rule 5 has been amended to provide that any pleading stating a new or additional claim for relief against a party who has appeared in the action may be served in the manner prescribed by subdivision (b). Consequently, such a pleading — e.g., a counterclaim, cross claim, or amended complaint stating a new claim for relief — may be served by mail on the party's attorney, and the methods for service of process set out in Rule 4 need not be employed. Service on the attorney in this context is consistent with the basic theme of Rule 5 that service of papers on the attorney, rather than the party, will expedite adjudication of the case and constitute sufficient notice to the party to comply with the requirements of due process. See Adam v. Saenger, 303 U.S. 59 (1938). If a party has not appeared, however, Rule 5(a) specifically provides that service must be made under Rule 4. Similarly, if the pleading seeks to add a new party — e.g., an answer asserting a counterclaim against the plaintiff and a third person over whom the court has not previously acquired jurisdiction — the pleading must be served on the new party as provided by Rule 4. Because the plaintiff in that situation is already before the court, the pleading may be served on his attorney.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 1993 Amendment:

Rule 5(c) is amended by adding a new sentence providing that the clerk shall not refuse to accept any paper for filing solely because it is not presented in the proper form. Virtually identical language was added to Rule 5(e) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure in 1991. The amendment reflects the view that a judge, not the clerk, is the proper official to make determinations of this type. Moreover, a clerk's refusal to accept a document for filing exposes litigants to the hazards of time bars.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 1997 Amendment:

Subdivision (c) has been amended by designating the former text as paragraph (1) and by adding new paragraph (2), which addresses the filing of papers by facsimile. A statute adopted in 1989 provides that clerks may accept fax copies of pleadings but does not cover other papers that are filed. See Ark. Code Ann. § 16-20-109. Paragraph (2) tracks the language of the statute but applies to any paper filed under this rule. The new sentence added to subdivision (d) makes clear that the judge may permit papers filed with him to be transmitted by facsimile.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 1999 Amendment:

Subdivision (b) has been divided into three paragraphs, but only one change has been made. Previously, service by regular mail was sufficient in all cases. See Office of Child Support v. Ragland, 330 Ark. 280, 954 S.W.2d 218 (1997) (motion requesting judgment for unpaid child support). Paragraph (2) provides for service by regular mail as a general rule; however, paragraph (3) creates an exception by incorporating the requirements of Rule 4(d)(8)(A) for service by mail on a party when, as in Ragland, a final judgment or decree has been entered and the court has continuing jurisdiction. In this situation, paragraph (1) requires, as did the prior version of the rule, that service be made on the party, not his or her attorney. Ark. Code Ann. § 16-58-131, which addressed these issues and other matters now governed by Rules 4 and 5, has been deemed superseded.

Several changes have been made in subdivision (c)(2) concerning facsimile filings. The statute on which the rule was originally based, Ark. Code Ann. § 16-20-109, has been deemed superseded. The first sentence of subdivision (c)(2) has been amended to require any clerk with a facsimile machine to accept facsimile filings of any paper filed under this rule and to allow the clerk to charge a fee of $1.00 per page. Previously, the rule provided that a clerk with a facsimile machine “may accept” papers filed by fax. Apparently, some clerks refused to accept papers filed in this manner even though they had the necessary equipment. Also, language in the first sentence requiring that an original document be substituted for a fax filing if the latter were not made on bond-type paper has been deleted. This provision was considered unnecessary in light of improvements in the quality of fax machines. The third sentence of subdivision (c)(2) has been amended to require that the clerk stamp or otherwise mark the facsimile copy as filed on the date and time that it is received in the clerk’s office or, if received when the office is closed, on the next business day. The last sentence of the prior version of the rule, which provided that “[t]he date and time printed by the clerk’s facsimile machine on the transmitted copy shall be prima facie evidence of the date and time of filing,” has been deleted because the date and time are printed by the sender’s facsimile machine, not the clerk’s.

Addition to Reporter’s Notes, 2000 Amendment:

Subdivision (c)(1) of the rule has been amended to provide that discovery materials, except for requests for admission, shall not be filed with the clerk unless the court so orders. This is the practice in the federal district courts in Arkansas and in several states. See Rule 5.5(f), Rules of the U.S. District Courts for the Eastern and Western Districts of Arkansas; Rule 2-401(d)(2), Md. R. Civ. P.; Rule 191.4, Tex. R. Civ. P. Under the prior version of the rule, the filing of such materials was optional absent a court order.

Addition to Reporter’s Notes, 2002 Amendment:

Since 1989, subdivision (b)(2) has allowed service of papers, other than the summons and complaint, on attorneys via commercial delivery companies. This subdivision has been amended to allow service by this method on parties as well, but with the safeguard that the commercial delivery company be court-approved. Section 1-2-122(b) of the Arkansas Code, which allowed service by “an alternative mail carrier,” has been deemed superseded.

Subdivision (b)(2) has also been revised to provide that “service by commercial delivery company is presumptively complete upon depositing the papers with the company.” This provision parallels that for service by mail, which “is presumptively complete upon mailing.” Subdivision (b)(3), which applies when the circuit court has continuing jurisdiction, has been amended to reflect the addition of new paragraph (C) of Rule 4(d)(8).

Addition to Reporter’s Notes, 2005 Amendment:

Rule 5(c)(1) has been amended. In some counties, the county clerk serves as the ex officio clerk of the probate division of the circuit court. Ark. Code Ann. § 14-14-502(b)(2)(B). Uncertainties have arisen in these circumstances about the effect of filing a pleading or paper with the wrong clerk. A sentence has been added to subsection (c)(1) to make plain that, in these counties, a party complies with Rule 5 when the document is file marked by either the circuit clerk or the county clerk. Similar clarifying language has been added to Rule of Civil Procedure 3(b) (filing a complaint), Administrative Order Number 2 (clerk’s docket and filing), and Rule of Appellate Procedure — Civil 3(b) (filing a notice of appeal).

Addition to Reporter’s Notes, 2008 Amendment:

Subdivision (c) of the rule has been amended to incorporate Administrative Order 19’s requirements, which grant the public broad access to case records while safeguarding confidential information in those records. (The Administrative Order is appended to the Rules of Civil Procedure.) Amended Rule 5(c) obligates lawyers, and pro se litigants, to identify and shield confidential information that is necessary and relevant to the case by redacting that information in all publicly available documents they file with the court. The rule places primary responsibility for protecting information that the law has adjudged confidential on those individuals best situated to recognize and protect that information — lawyers and parties. They know the facts of their cases better than court staff or courts; they create almost all the documents coming into the court’s record; and they have the greatest incentive to minimize and protect confidential information in case records.

Under subdivision 2(B), courts, court agencies, and clerks are responsible for omitting or redacting confidential information from case records — including orders, judgments, and decrees — that they create. A parallel change reflecting this obligation in judgments and decrees has been made in Rule of Civil Procedure 58.

Administrative Order 19 defines categories of confidential information and the Commentary to the Order explains the legal basis for the confidentiality. Section VII of the Order lists the following categories of confidential information in case records that are excluded from public access absent a court order allowing disclosure:

- (1) information excluded from public access pursuant to federal law;
- (2) information excluded from public access pursuant to the Arkansas Code Annotated;
- (3) information excluded from public access by order (including protective order) or rule of court;
- (4) Social Security numbers;
- (5) account numbers of specific assets, liabilities, accounts, credit cards, and personal identification numbers (PINs);
- (6) information about cases expunged or sealed pursuant to Ark. Code Ann. § 16-90-901, et seq.;
- (7) notes, communications, and deliberative materials regarding decisions of judges, jurors, court staff, and judicial agencies; and
- (8) all home and business addresses of petitioners who request anonymity when seeking a domestic order of protection.

The Commentary to Section VII of Administrative Order 19 discusses confidential information protected from public disclosure under federal and Arkansas law. The Commentary includes a non-exhaustive list of Arkansas Code Annotated sections regarding confidentiality of records whose confidentiality may extend to the records even if they become court records. See also the Arkansas Personal Information Protection Act, Ark. Code Ann. § 4-110-101, et seq.

New subsection (c)(2) embodies Order 19's important threshold requirement: only confidential information that is "necessary and relevant to the case" should be in a case record. Litigants are likewise best able to make this evaluation. And because they must redact any such information in a case record, litigants will have an incentive to reduce redactions by screening out unnecessary and irrelevant confidential information when creating documents for filing.

The amended rule provides two methods of redaction: blacking out the protected information or inserting a bracketed reference to the fact of redaction. Both achieve Administrative Order 19's balance between public access and confidentiality. If a redaction covers all of any multi-page document, then the rule requires listing the name of the document and the number of pages redacted in the publicly available court file. No useful purpose would be served by having a stack of blacked-out pages in the public file.

Because a litigant will have deemed redacted information necessary and relevant, the court will need access to that information in handling and deciding the case. To allow this access, subdivision 2(B) obligates litigants to file unredacted copies of all their court papers under seal.

Some state agencies who deal routinely with confidential information — such as the Public Service Commission — have developed specialized rules for handling and protecting that information. Administrative Order 19 and its implementing rules in the Rules of Civil Procedure do not apply directly to those agencies' internal proceedings. But when a case from the PSC or other agency is appealed, the Rules of Appellate Procedure — Civil and the Rules of the Supreme Court and Court of Appeals do apply. Those Rules now implement Administrative Order 19 by incorporating and applying the redaction provisions of the Rules of Civil Procedure to all briefs, petitions, and other papers filed on appeal. Current agency procedures about confidential information that do not conflict with the new redaction rules are permissible. For example, confidential PSC documents are filed at the Commission on pink paper under seal. This and similar procedures supplement, but do not conflict with, the basic scheme required by Rule of Civil Procedure 5(c)(2). Certain appeal records will therefore contain materials shaped by these supplementary procedures, which is acceptable.

Former subsection (c)(2) has been renumbered, and is now (c)(3).

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 2010 Amendment:

Subdivision (b)(2) has been amended to clarify that service upon an attorney by "electronic transmission" includes service by email. The amendment also provides that although service by electronic transmission is complete upon transmission, it is not effective if it does not reach the person to be served. As with other means of service, a claim that service by electronic transmission was not actually received may be raised by the person upon whom service was attempted. A corresponding amendment to Rule 6(d) adds the three-day additional response time allowed for service by mail or commercial delivery company to the time permitted for response to service by electronic transmission.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 2022 Amendment:

Subdivision 5(b)(3) is amended to reflect the 2019 amendment to Rule 4. The reference to prior Ark. R. Civ. P. 4(d)(A) and (b) is amended to refer to the current sections of Rule 4 governing service by mail and commercial delivery service.

CASE NOTESApplicability.

This rule governs the service of all pleadings filed subsequent to the complaint. Arnold & Arnold v. Williams, 315 Ark. 632, 870 S.W.2d 365, cert. denied, 513 U.S. 990, 115 S. Ct. 489, 130 L. Ed. 2d 400 (1994).

Construction.

Rule 4 expressly governs the service of the complaint and summons, while this rule governs the service of every pleading and every other paper filed after the complaint. Office of Child Support Enforcement v. Ragland, 330 Ark. 280, 954 S.W.2d 218 (1997), superseded by statute as stated in Connally v. Connally, 95 Ark. App. 42, 233 S.W.3d 168 (2006).

Trial court did not err in dismissing ex-husband's post-decree motion to enforce a divorce agreement as husband failed to comply with the special requirements in subdivision (b)(3) of this rule, which applied in a post-decree, continuing-jurisdiction case and required service on the party by mail or commercial delivery. Connally v. Connally, 95 Ark. App. 42, 233 S.W.3d 168 (2006).

The Arkansas Supreme Court, by incorporating the service requirements of Ark. R. Civ. P. 4 into this rule, intended to adopt the spirit of Ark. R. Civ. P. 4 in that actual knowledge does not validate defective service of process; thus, just as actual notice does not satisfy due process under Ark. R. Civ. P. 4, it does not satisfy due process under this rule. Connally v. Connally, 95 Ark. App. 42, 233 S.W.3d 168 (2006).

Continuing Jurisdiction.

The Office of Child Support Enforcement Unit (OCSE) had standing as a party and should have received notice of the filing of a joint petition and an agreed order pursuant to which the parties agreed that the father would pay a specified amount to the mother in satisfaction of all past, present, and future child support obligations since OCSE was a party to the original action (having filed the original paternity complaint itself) and should have been considered a party to any subsequent proceedings that transpired within the course of the original action. Maxwell v. State, 343 Ark. 154, 33 S.W.3d 108 (2000).

Purpose of subdivision (b)(3) of this rule is not to require a party to serve a summons with a motion to modify a final decree when the court has reserved continuing jurisdiction, rather, it simply directs that such motions are required to be served in the same manner or method required for a summons and complaint, that is, served by mail with a return receipt requested and delivery restricted to the addressee or his or her agent, under Ark. R. Civ. P. 4(d)(8)(A)(i); thus, because the trial court retained jurisdiction over the divorce decree, a new complaint and summons were not required to be served on the ex-husband. Dickson v. Fletcher, 361 Ark. 244, 206 S.W.3d 229 (2005), limited, Martin v. Pierce, 370 Ark. 53, 257 S.W.3d 82 (2007).

Any defects in the summons were immaterial because this rule did not require that a summons be served when the circuit court had continuing jurisdiction (petition to suspend father's visitation with child). Wilson v. Wilson, 2016 Ark. App. 191, 487 S.W.3d 420 (2016).

Default.

In a case involving the Arkansas Civil Rights Act, § 16-123-101 et seq., a default judgment was not set aside under Ark. R. Civ. P. 55 because a motion for an extension was not timely where the request was not made to a trial court before the expiration of the period originally prescribed, the failure to respond in a timely manner due to one attorney being distracted by the birth of a child was not excusable neglect, an amendment to Ark. R. Civ. P. 12 was inapplicable, and an argument that the complaint failed to state a claim was rejected. The denial of illegal intent was insufficient in a first affidavit, a second affidavit was filed after the default was granted, and an individual supervisor could have been held personally liable for alleged acts of retaliation under § 16-123-108(a). Eusanio v. Tippin, 2013 Ark. App. 38, 425 S.W.3d 838 (2013).

Circuit court did not abuse its discretion by deeming a nurse's requests for admission admitted when a couple's responses were not filed as required where the same rationale that the Supreme Court of Arkansas had applied to failure to file an answer should likewise have applied to a failure to file responses to requests for admission. Hardesty v. Baptist Health, 2013 Ark. App. 731, 431 S.W.3d 327 (2013).

Extension of Time.

Because an order of extension of time to file a record on appeal made no reference to each of the findings of the circuit court required by subsection (b)(1) of this rule and because there had to be strict compliance with the rule, a remand was required for compliance with the rule. Winrock Grass Farm, Inc. v. Metro. Nat'l Bank, 373 Ark. 515, 284 S.W.3d 521 (2008).

Filing with Judge.

Subsection (d) of this rule, which provides that a judge may permit papers or pleadings to be filed with him, and that in such event he should note thereon the filing date and forthwith transmit them to the office of the clerk, does not mean an order can be deemed "entered" simply because it is signed by a judge; thus, where the trial judge signed an order granting an extension for filing the record on appeal on the 89th day, but the extension order was not entered and filed with the clerk's office until the 91st day, the extension order was not timely filed and the clerk properly denied the tender of the transcript. Sullivan v. Wickliffe, 284 Ark. 33, 678 S.W.2d 771 (1984); Voyles v. Voyles, 311 Ark. 186, 842 S.W.2d 21 (1992).

Garnishment Proceedings.

Statutory scheme for garnishment proceedings sets some procedural rules, but the general rules of civil procedure fill in the gaps. Thus, the relevant consideration is this rule, which sets out requirements for service of pleadings and papers filed after the complaint. Cardinal Health v. Beth's Bail Bonds, Inc., 2017 Ark. 54, 511 S.W.3d 327 (2017).

Circuit court erred in denying a garnishee's motion for relief from an order to pay in a garnishment proceeding; the garnishee's constitutional right to due process was not met because the garnishee did not receive notice of the hearing, and there was neither an attempt to alert the garnishee of the hearing nor an actual awareness of it on the garnishee's part. Cardinal Health v. Beth's Bail Bonds, Inc., 2017 Ark. 54, 511 S.W.3d 327 (2017).

Intervention.

Republican candidate's complaint in intervention was properly dismissed as he had not served his motion to intervene or his proposed complaint on the defending Democratic candidate, the Republican candidate was not relieved of his service obligations simply because the Democratic candidate may have been able to obtain the Republican candidate's complaint through his own efforts, and the Democratic candidate's appearance and defense to plaintiff's complaint did not establish a waiver of service with respect to the Republican candidate's complaint. The dismissal should have been without prejudice, however. Tollett v. Wilson, 2020 Ark. 326, 608 S.W.3d 602 (2020).

Jurisdiction.

An action to reduce past-due arrearages to an executable judgment is not a "new cause of action"; it flows from the original divorce decree and personal jurisdiction over the parties continues without the need for additional service of process. Office of Child Support Enforcement v. Ragland, 330 Ark. 280, 954 S.W.2d 218 (1997), superseded by statute as stated in Connally v. Connally, 95 Ark. App. 42, 233 S.W.3d 168 (2006).

Service of Amended Complaint.

Plaintiffs' service of his amended complaint on state officials via the eFlex filing system was ineffective because service of the original complaint was defective and therefore there was no personal jurisdiction. Wine v. Chandler, 2020 Ark. App. 412, 607 S.W.3d 522 (2020).

Service of Cross-Complaint.

Where a creditor's cross-complaint was attached to a summons requiring the debtor defendants to answer the plaintiff's complaint, but the summons made no mention of the attached cross-complaint, the chancellor properly set aside a default judgment that had been obtained on the cross-complaint since there had been no proper service of the cross-complaint. Moore v. Owens, 268 Ark. 324, 597 S.W.2d 65 (1980).

Service on a Party.

Because appellant heir was made a party to the probate action when the circuit court granted his motion to intervene, the circuit court erred by determining that he was not entitled to notice of a hearing on a motion to remove the estate executrix pursuant to subsection (a) of this rule. Maxwell v. Estate of Maxwell, 2012 Ark. App. 174 (2012).

Service of a temporary ex parte order concerning termination of father's visitation with his child was properly made on the father because he was personally served by a process server with the order, and thus, the requirements of service by mail were inapplicable; nothing in this rule dictates that service must be made by mail or forbids service by personal delivery. Wilson v. Wilson, 2016 Ark. App. 191, 487 S.W.3d 420 (2016).

Service on Attorney.

Where mother assigned her child support rights to the Child Support Enforcement Unit, and the state filed a petition pursuant to § 9-14-210, then under § 9-14-210(e)(2) the attorney representing the state did not represent the mother, and under subsection (b) of this rule service on the attorney was not service on the mother. Vanzant v. Purvis, 54 Ark. App. 384, 927 S.W.2d 339 (1996).

After a default judgment had been entered in a discrimination case, employer's motion to dismiss an amended complaint should have been granted because the amended complaint was improperly mailed to the employer's attorney; service of the amended complaint on a corporation was required to comply with Ark. R. Civ. P. 4. Tobacco Superstore, Inc. v. Darrough, 362 Ark. 103, 207 S.W.3d 511 (2005).

Although the mother had not been properly served under subsection (b) of this rule, she waived any objection to lack of service of process when she appeared at each of the custody hearings; it was not until after permanent custody had been entered in favor of the father that she objected, and this motion came too late. Little v. Office of Child Support Enforcement, 2009 Ark. App. 686, 373 S.W.3d 335 (2009).

Mother did not preserve for review the argument that service of a petition to terminate parental rights by warning order pursuant to Ark. R. Civ. P. 4(f) was not sufficient because her attorney was provided with notice under this rule, the Arkansas Department of Human Services satisfied the requirement of diligent inquiry provided in Rule 4, and at no time during the initial hearing on the petition for termination of the mother's parental rights was an objection made or a ruling requested on the issue of whether service was proper; because the mother was represented by counsel throughout the proceedings, service was properly made upon counsel of record pursuant to this rule, the circuit court had jurisdiction, and it was the mother's responsibility to stay informed and keep her attorney informed of her current address. Blackberry v. Ark. Dep't of Human Servs., 2009 Ark. App. 858, 373 S.W.3d 375 (2009).

Issued subpoenas in a termination of parental rights case were not properly served pursuant to subsection (b) of this rule, as counsel for the Arkansas Department of Human Services and the attorney ad litem appeared to have had no notice; the circuit court noted that the docket sheet did not reflect that any subpoenas had been issued or that there was proof of service. Blakes v. Ark. Dep't of Human Servs., 2010 Ark. App. 379, 374 S.W.3d 898 (2010).

Termination of a father's parental rights was improper because he was not properly served with the petition under § 9-27-341(b)(2)(A); service was not effectuated by mail under Ark. R. Civ. P. 4 because it was not established that a person who signed a green card was the father's authorized agent, and service was not shown under this rule where the alleged method for serving the father's lawyer was not shown. Awareness of the case did not cure a service defect, the error was not harmless, and the father did not waive his insufficient service objection since he raised it when the hearing on the petition to terminate began. Brown v. Ark. Dep't of Human Servs., 2013 Ark. App. 201 (2013).

Department of Human Services failed to carry its burden of proving that the petition to terminate parental rights was effectively served. This rule was the basis of the mother's argument that neither she nor her attorney had received the emailed petition, and the trial court relied on this rule in making its finding that the mother was served through her attorney. The mother's awareness of the case could not cure the service defect. Howell v. Ark. Dep't of Human Servs., 2018 Ark. App. 117, 545 S.W.3d 218 (2018).

Circuit court's denial of appellant's motion to set aside a permanent order of protection was affirmed where the notice of the hearing was emailed to his counsel, appellant's amended motion to set aside the order removed any doubt that appellant's counsel received the notice, and appellant's counsel failed to explain why his failure to check his email should have been deemed a failure to transmit the filing by the circuit court. Shepherd v. Tate, 2019 Ark. App. 143 (2019).

Rule 6. Time.

(a) Computation. In computing any period of time prescribed or allowed by these rules, by order of the Court or by any applicable statute, the day of the act, event or default from which the designated period of time begins to run shall not be included. The last day of the period so computed shall be included, unless it is a Saturday, Sunday, legal holiday, or other day when the clerk's office is closed, in which event the period runs until the end of the next day that the clerk's office is open. When the period of time prescribed or allowed is less than fourteen (14) days, intermediate Saturdays, Sundays, or legal holidays shall be excluded in the computation. As used in this rule and Rule 77(c), "legal holiday" means those days designated as a holiday by the President or Congress of the United States or designated by the laws of this State.

(b) Enlargement. When by these rules or by a notice given thereunder or by order of the court an act is required or allowed to be done at or within a specified time, the court for cause shown may at any time in its discretion (1) with or without motion or notice, order the period enlarged if request therefor is made before the expiration of the period originally prescribed or as extended by a previous order, or (2) upon motion made after the expiration of the specified period permit the act to be done where the failure to act was the result of mistake, inadvertence, surprise, excusable neglect, or other just cause, but it may not extend the time for taking an action under Rules 4(i), 50(b), 52(b), 59(b), (d) and (e), and 60(b), except to the extent and under the conditions stated in them.

(c) For Motions, Responses, and Replies. A written motion, other than one which may be heard ex parte, and notice of the hearing thereof shall be served not later than 20 days before the time specified for the hearing. Any party opposing a motion shall serve a response within 10 days after service of the motion. The movant shall then have 5 days after service of the response within which to serve a reply. The time periods set forth in this subdivision may be modified by order of the court and do not apply when a different period is fixed by these rules, including Rules 56(c) and 59(d).

(d) Additional Time After Service by Mail or Commercial Delivery Company. Whenever a party has the right or is required to do some act or take some proceedings within a prescribed period after the service of a notice or other paper upon him and the notice or paper is served upon him by mail, commercial delivery company, or electronic transmission, including e-mail pursuant to Rule 5(b)(2), three (3) days shall be added to the prescribed period. Provided, however, that this subdivision shall not extend the time in which the defendant must file an answer or pre-answer motion when service of the summons and complaint is by mail or commercial delivery company in accordance with Rule 4.

HISTORY: Amended July 7, 1986, effective September 15, 1986; amended November 21, 1988, effective January 1, 1989; amended December 10, 1990, effective February 1, 1991; amended November 11, 1991, effective January 1, 1992; amended January 27, 2000; amended January 24, 2002; amended March 13, 2003; amended January 22, 2004; amended June 3, 2010, effective July 1, 2010.

Reporter's Notes to Rule 6:

1. This Rule is practically identical to FRCP 6. Section (a) has been changed somewhat by omitting a recitation of specific legal holidays within the definition of legal holiday. It is redundant to list specifically the holidays and then add to the list "any other day appointed as a holiday by the President of [or] the Congress" or by the State.

2. This Rule does not substantially change previous Arkansas practice. As before, trial judges are given broad discretion in most instances to extend the various periods of time within which certain actions must be taken. The exceptions are noted in Section (b).

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 1986 Amendment:

Rule 6(a) is amended, consistently with the federal rule, to extend the exclusion of intermediate Saturdays, Sundays, and legal holidays to the computation of time periods less than 11 days. Under the former version of the rule, parties bringing motions under rules with 10-day periods could have as few as five working days to prepare their motions.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 1988 Amendment:

Rule 6(d) is amended to make plain that a defendant does not have an extra three days to file an answer or preanswer motion under Rule 12 when the summons and complaint are served by mail pursuant to Rule 4. Allowing a defendant an additional three days to answer in the event of service by mail would be a "bonus" not available to a defendant served by another method. Under Rule 12(a), a defendant must answer or file a preanswer motion within a given number of days "after the service of summons and complaint upon him." The specified time period thus begins to run when the defendant receives the summons and complaint, irrespective of the manner in which it is served. Rule 6(d) continues to apply with respect to pleadings and papers other than the complaint, however, for service of these materials by mail is presumptively complete upon mailing, Rule 5(b), Ark. R. Civ. P. Thus, the three-day extension provided by Rule 6(d) is necessary to compensate for the "lag time" between the mailing of these papers and their delivery.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 1990 Amendment:

Rule 6(b) is amended to correspond to the changes made in Rule 55 regarding default judgments. Under revised subdivision (b)(2), the court may, upon motion, extend the time for filing an answer (or for other action) after the relevant period has expired if the failure was the result of "mistake, inadvertence, surprise, excusable neglect, or other just cause." This standard, which mirrors that employed in Rule 55(c)(1) with respect to the setting aside of a default judgment, is intended to liberalize Arkansas practice. Under former Rule 6(b), an extension of time was permissible only where the failure to act was the result of "excusable neglect, unavoidable casualty or other just cause."

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 2000 Amendment:

The time period in the third sentence of subdivision (a) has been changed from eleven days to fourteen days, the intent being to eliminate confusion in the computation of response time when a motion has been served by mail under subdivision (d).

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 2002 Amendment:

Rule 6(c) has been amended to clarify the timing of motions, responses, and replies. A related change with respect to motion practice has been made in Rule 7(b), which governs the form and content of motions, responses, and replies. Cross-references to Rules 6(c) and 7(b) have been added to Rule 12(i) and Rule 78(b).

Under the prior version of subdivision (c), a written motion and notice of hearing had to be served no later than ten days prior to the date set for hearing. At the same time, Rule 78(b) provided a ten-day period for a response and a five-day period for reply. As a result, there might be no time for a reply. To address this problem, the ten-day period in subdivision (c) has been expanded to twenty days. Also, the provisions governing the timing of responses and replies have been shifted from Rule 78(b) to subdivision (c). As was previously the case, the court may modify the time periods by order. These periods are inapplicable when a different time frame is established by another rule, e.g., Rule 56(c) (motions for summary judgment).

The provision in the former version of subdivision (c) as to supporting affidavits now appears in Rule 7(b)(2).

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 2003 Amendment:

Subdivision (a) has been amended to address the situation in which the clerk's office is closed for reasons other than weekends and legal holidays. The amendment incorporates the Supreme Court's holding in Honeycutt v. Fanning, 349 Ark. 324, 78 S.W.3d 96 (2002), and makes Rule 6(a) consistent with, though not identical to, its federal counterpart.

Subdivision (d) of the rule has been rewritten to include commercial delivery companies. The amended subdivision applies when service of papers, other than the summons and complaint, is by mail or by commercial delivery company.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 2004 Amendment:

Subdivision (b) of the rule has been amended by adding Ark. R. Civ. P. 4(i) to the list of exceptions, thereby codifying the holding in Smith v. Sidney Moncrief Pontiac, No. 02 449 (June 19, 2003).

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 2010 Amendment:

Subdivision (d) has been amended to add the three-day additional response time allowed for service by mail or commercial delivery company to the time permitted for response to service by electronic transmission, including by e-mail, under Rule 5(b)(2).

CASE NOTES

Admissions.

In a medical malpractice case, a trial court did not abuse its discretion by deeming requests for admissions admitted because service was made at the address that the patient had provided; without the responses, the health care provider was prejudiced by being unable to prepare a defense. The patient was not given special treatment due to his status as a pro se litigant, but was held to the same standard as an attorney. Breckenridge v. Lowery, 2015 Ark. App. 157 (2015).

Applicability.

This rule applies to requests for admissions. Belcher v. Bowling, 22 Ark. App. 248, 738 S.W.2d 804 (1987).

Rule of Civil Procedure 81(a) does not exclude the use of subsection (a) of this rule in computing the time within which a suit in a civil proceeding has to be filed in order to perfect and enforce a lien, because § 18-44-117 does not provide that a certain method or procedure be used in computing the 120 days. Transportation Properties, Inc. v. Central Glass & Mirror of N.W. Ark., Inc., 38 Ark. App. 60, 827 S.W.2d 667 (1992).

Subsection (b) of this rule is not applicable to actions under Ark. R. Civ. P. 60(b). Edwards v. Szabo Food Serv., Inc., 317 Ark. 369, 877 S.W.2d 932 (1994), superseded by statute as stated in Powell v. Fernandez, 2013 Ark. App. 595 (2013).

Although under subsection (b) of this rule a trial court is permitted to enlarge the time period to act upon a motion made after the expiration of the specified period for cause shown, subsection (b) does not apply where a trial court has no jurisdiction to act; thus, where the trial court must dismiss an action for lack of service or failure to file a timely motion to extend time for service, then that trial court loses its jurisdiction to take any further action in that case. Holland v. Lefler, 80 Ark. App. 316, 95 S.W.3d 815 (2003).

Circuit court erred in granting the Department of Correction's motion to dismiss an inmate's complaint under § 12-28-604 for failure to state a claim under Ark. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) because the circuit court granted the motion without holding a hearing or considering the inmate's written response, which was timely filed under this rule and Ark. R. Civ. P. 78(b). Loveless v. Agee, 2010 Ark. 53 (2010).

Because a protective order hearing was a special proceeding under Ark. R. Civ. P. 81, the notice procedures in § 9-15-204(b)(1)(A), and not subsection (c) of this rule, applied; therefore, because a respondent was timely served six days before the protective order hearing, the respondent's motion to set aside an order of protection was properly dismissed. Wills v. Lacefield, 2011 Ark. 262 (2011).

Computation of Time.

Where the opinion of the worker's compensation commission was filed on February 23, 1981, and mailed to claimant's attorney, a resident of Warren, Arkansas, it could not have been received before February 24, and under subsection (a) of this rule the court begins counting with the next day, February 25, and the thirtieth day is March 26, 1981, which is the day the notice of appeal was filed; thus, it was timely. Ashcraft v. Quimby, 2 Ark. App. 174, 617 S.W.2d 390 (1981).

Where the 20th day prior to scheduled trial date was a Saturday and the following Monday was Labor Day, a legal holiday, a request for a jury trial filed on Tuesday was timely. Delight Oak Flooring Co. v. Arkansas La. Gas Co., 14 Ark. App. 24, 684 S.W.2d 271 (1985).

The general rule in calculating a limitations period is to exclude the first day from the computation. Hodge v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc., 297 Ark. 1, 759 S.W.2d 203 (1988).

The day on which a nonsuit is taken should be excluded from computation. Hodge v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc., 297 Ark. 1, 759 S.W.2d 203 (1988).

Where the day by which the complaint had to be filed to perfect a lien fell on Saturday, the complaint filed on the next Monday was within the period when computed under the provisions of subsection (a) of this rule. Transportation Properties, Inc. v. Central Glass & Mirror of N.W. Ark., Inc., 38 Ark. App. 60, 827 S.W.2d 667 (1992).

The Supreme Court has followed the method of calculation in § 16-55-119 and in subsection (a) of this rule in fixing a limitation period for the time for filing pleadings as well as for certain notices. Grubbs v. Credit Gen. Ins. Co., 327 Ark. 479, 939 S.W.2d 290 (1997).

Defendant's notice of appeal from a conviction for second-degree battery was timely filed on July 31, 1995, where judgment was entered June 29, 1995; the day of entry of judgment was not counted, making the 30th day fall on a Saturday, thereby allowing the defendant to file the notice the following Monday, July 31. Kersh v. State, 56 Ark. App. 39, 938 S.W.2d 569 (1997).

The plaintiff's amended complaint was filed within the 10 days allowed by the circuit court where the order of dismissal was filed on August 6, and the amended complaint was filed on August 20, which was exactly 10 days later, excluding weekend days. Country Corner Food & Drug, Inc. v. First State Bank & Trust Co., 332 Ark. 645, 966 S.W.2d 894 (1998).

Victim's motion to enlarge time for service of her personal injury complaint was timely filed where courthouse was closed by direction of the county judge on the day the motion was due and the motion was duly filed the next business day the courthouse opened. Honeycutt v. Fanning, 349 Ark. 324, 78 S.W.3d 96 (2002).

Prisoner's petition for writ of mandamus seeking to compel a circuit judge to issue a ruling on his motion for reconsideration of the alleged denial of his request for habeas relief was moot; assuming the prisoner's asserted date of December 19, 2007, or a later date, for the judgment on his habeas petition, Ark. R. App. P. Civ. 4(b)(1) was the applicable rule concerning the motion for reconsideration because the motion was filed within the 10-day period stated in the rule. Under the computation rules in subsection (a) of this rule, the 10-day period would have expired on January 7, 2008, and the prisoner's motion for reconsideration would have been deemed denied on the thirtieth day after it was filed; in that case, the prisoner received the relief he requested, i.e., a ruling on his motion for reconsideration, albeit through operation of law rather than a written order. Henson v. Wyatt, 373 Ark. 315, 283 S.W.3d 593 (2008).

Because a holiday and 2 weekend days were excluded from computation under subsection (a) of this rule, a mother's postjudgment motion was timely; because a circuit court did not rule on the motion within 30 days, it was deemed denied under Ark. R. App. P. Civ. 4(b)(1); and because the mother's notice of appeal was filed 30 days from the deemed-denied date, her appeal was timely under Rule 4(a) and properly before the court. Whitmer v. Sullivan, 373 Ark. 327, 284 S.W.3d 6 (2008).

Petition to revive a foreign judgment was not barred by the running of the statute of limitations under § 16-56-114 because the application was filed well within the 10 year period of a judgment that was registered in 2003; even if a judgment filed in 2001 was the appropriate judgment to begin the running of the limitations period, the application was still timely because it was filed exactly 10 years from the date the judgment. The day that the judgment was entered was not counted in computing the limitations period. Bird v. Shaffer, 2012 Ark. App. 464 (2012).

Cost Adjustment Not Warranted.

Injured individuals' motion to adjust costs to include preparing a transcript of their expert's testimony was denied where the designated record, which included testimony from only a single witness, was inadequate for the court to assess whether the trial judge's comments revealing that he knew an expert witness were prejudicial, and thus, it was not fair to shift the costs of preparing the additional transcription to the physician. McClard v. Smith, 2014 Ark. App. 272 (2014).

Diligence.

In a construction case, a trial court did not err by not dismissing a complaint for failure to attach a contract as an exhibit under Ark. R. Civ. P. 10(d) because a construction company failed to act diligently, failed to timely file a motion, and waived its right by its own conduct to demand dismissal. No prejudice resulted from the failure to attach the contract as it was authored by the construction company. D & D Parks Constr., Co. v. Martin, 414 S.W.3d 402 (Ark. Ct. App. 2012).

Discretion of Court.

Where defendants' attorney failed to answer complaint within 20 days as required by Ark. R. Civ. P. 12, but alleged that he had mailed copies to the court clerk and both attorneys for plaintiffs, although the three denied receiving them, the court could properly excuse the failure under this rule, even though Ark. R. Civ. P. 55 mandates a default judgment and gives the court no discretion. Hensley v. Brown, 2 Ark. App. 175, 617 S.W.2d 867 (1981).

Subsection (b) of this rule clearly recognizes that the trial court may act after the expiration of a specified period of time under the Rules of Civil Procedure and further provides that the court may even order a period enlarged if the request therefor is made before the expiration of a period "as extended by a previous order"; thus, this rule grants the trial court discretion, for cause shown, to extend a period which has previously been extended beyond the period originally prescribed. Edwards v. Szabo Food Serv., Inc., 317 Ark. 369, 877 S.W.2d 932 (1994), superseded by statute as stated in Powell v. Fernandez, 2013 Ark. App. 595 (2013).

The trial court did not abuse its discretion when it refused to enlarge the defendant's time to file his answer where, although the complaint was served on January 14, the defendant mistakenly informed his attorney that it was served on January 16, and, therefore, the answer was mailed to defendant's counsel and filed one day late. Layman v. Bone, 333 Ark. 121, 967 S.W.2d 561 (1998).

In a case charging a mother with contempt for interfering with a father's visitation with their child, the mother's due process rights were not violated because she was not given ten days to respond to the father's complaint, pursuant to this rule, because the contempt statute, § 16-10-108, provided only that a charged party be given a reasonable time to make a defense. Brock v. Eubanks, 102 Ark. App. 165, 288 S.W.3d 272 (2008).

While a tenant had notice of a hearing on the landlord's unlawful detention action between three weeks and two months before the hearing, but did not request a continuance until the hearing began, and because the tenant failed to show prejudice, pursuant to subsection (c) of this rule, the tenant's motion for a continuance was properly denied as untimely. Davis v. Pines Mall Partners, 2011 Ark. App. 783 (2011).

Extension of Time.

Subdivision (b)(2) of this rule provides broadly for extension of time to respond in instances of excusable neglect; it applies to requests for admissions. Borg-Warner Acceptance Corp. v. Kesterson, 288 Ark. 611, 708 S.W.2d 606 (1986).

Where service of process was to be completed by July 2, 1994, a timely request for an extension was made on June 23, 1994, and where the court granted a 30-day extension on July 28, 1994, the 30-day extension did not run from July 28, 1994, but added 30 days to the original period, thereby extending it to August 1, 1994. Thomson v. Zufari, 325 Ark. 208, 924 S.W.2d 796 (1996).

This rule provides that a party may not obtain an extension of time from the trial court to file a posttrial motion under Ark. R. Civ. P. 59(b); consequently, the time in which a notice of appeal must be filed is also not extended. Moon v. Citty, 344 Ark. 500, 42 S.W.3d 459 (2001).

Buyer could not use subsection (b) of this rule to enlarge the time to obtain service when the buyer did not comply with the requirements of Ark. R. Civ. P. 4(i); the motion to extend time for service had not been filed prior to the expiration of the period originally prescribed or as extended by a previous order. Smith v. Sidney Moncrief Pontiac, Buick, GMC Co., 353 Ark. 701, 120 S.W.3d 525 (2003), superseded by statute as stated in Powell v. Fernandez, 2013 Ark. App. 595 (2013).

Where a non-movant's reponse was filed less than 10 working days after it was due, no previous extension had been granted, and the response was filed almost 60 days before the hearing was held, the trial court did not err in granting the non-movant an extension of time to respond to the motion for summary judgment. Ark. River Rights v. Echubby Lake Hunting Club, 83 Ark. App. 276, 126 S.W.3d 738 (2003).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to extend homeowner's time to answer as there was no finding of excusable neglect; although subdivision (b)(2) of this rule allows trial courts to enlarge the time to answer even after the initial period had passed, the rule does not require trial courts to permit such answers in any circumstance. Israel v. Oskey, 92 Ark. App. 192, 212 S.W.3d 45 (2005).

Trial court erred in applying the standard under subdivision (b)(2) of this rule to the medical professionals' motion for extension of time to respond to the complaint where the request was made before the expiration of the time to answer, and thus, the proper standard, under subdivision (b)(1), was for cause shown. Logan Ctrs., Inc. v. Walker, 2014 Ark. App. 203 (2014).

In a medical malpractice and wrongful death case, a trial court erred by finding that subdivision (b)(1) of this rule requires a party that has filed a timely motion for extension to then additionally request the trial court to rule on that motion prior to the expiration of the time to answer. Neither does the rule require an evidentiary hearing. Logan Ctrs., Inc. v. Walker, 2015 Ark. App. 687 (2015).

Subdivision (b)(1) of this rule is a less stringent standard than that contained in subdivision (b)(2). The cause-shown standard of subdivision (b)(1) is normally granted in the absence of bad faith on the part of the party seeking relief or prejudice to the adverse party, and the subdivision (b)(1) standard applied to this case. Logan Ctrs., Inc. v. Walker, 2015 Ark. App. 687 (2015).

Husband's notice of appeal was timely because it was filed within 10 business days of the divorce decree, and the husband's time to file his appeal did not begin to run until the circuit court denied his motion for reconsideration. The husband's motion qualified as a motion to extend time to file a notice of appeal because it requested that the circuit court make additional findings of fact, argued that the decision was contrary to the preponderance of the evidence, and requested modification. Davis v. Davis, 2016 Ark. 64, 487 S.W.3d 803 (2016).

Circuit court did not abuse its discretion in denying plaintiffs' motion for extension of time to file an answer to the counterclaim; the answer to the counterclaim was due February 5 but the motion to extend time was not filed until February 6, and, although computer problems may have explained why the answer itself was not filed until February 6, the only reason plaintiffs' attorney gave for not filing a timely motion requesting an extension of time to answer was simply that he did not think about it, which was not mistake, inadvertence, surprise, excusable neglect, or other good cause under subdivision (b)(2) of this rule. Briney v. Bauer, 2019 Ark. App. 227, 575 S.W.3d 631 (2019).

Failure to Respond.

A party's failure to respond to a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim under Ark. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) does not entitle the moving party to dismissal. A dismissal must instead rest on the merits of the motion. Wine v. Chandler, 2020 Ark. App. 412, 607 S.W.3d 522 (2020).

Review.

Father's argument that the trial court violated subsection (c) of this rule when it granted the motion filed by the Department of Human Services to exclude him from the courtroom was not preserved for review because the father did not specifically object to the timeliness of the motion; additionally, the father was unable to show prejudice, as he responded to the motion at the time of the hearings and did not seek a continuance. Adams v. Ark. Dep't of Human Servs., 2019 Ark. App. 101, 572 S.W.3d 16 (2019).

Service by Mail.

The three extra days added to time limits following service by mail do not apply to a judgment since it is not a pleading. If an attorney receives a copy of the judgment three days after its entry, he is not prejudiced by having only 27 days more to file a simple notice of appeal. Sagely v. State, 285 Ark. 158, 685 S.W.2d 169 (1985).

Untimely Responses.

Where excusable neglect was neither pleaded nor proven, and the response to the requests for admission was not timely filed, the untimely response resulted in an admission of the matters contained in the requests for admissions. Borg-Warner Acceptance Corp. v. Kesterson, 288 Ark. 611, 708 S.W.2d 606 (1986).

Attorney responsible for late filing failed to show excusable neglect, unavoidable casualty, or other just cause. Allen v. Kizer, 294 Ark. 1, 740 S.W.2d 137 (1987).

Circuit court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to deem certain requests admitted based on a late response because counsel's neglect was excusable where counsel did not simply ignore the requests, but was ill and required surgery. Chiodini v. Lock, 2010 Ark. App. 340, 374 S.W.3d 835 (2010).

In a case involving the Arkansas Civil Rights Act, § 16-123-101 et seq., a default judgment was not set aside under Ark. R. Civ. P. 55 because a motion for an extension was not timely where the request was not made to a trial court before the expiration of the period originally prescribed, the failure to respond in a timely manner due to one attorney being distracted by the birth of a child was not excusable neglect, an amendment to Ark. R. Civ. P. 12 was inapplicable, and an argument that the complaint failed to state a claim was rejected. The denial of illegal intent was insufficient in a first affidavit, a second affidavit was filed after the default was granted, and an individual supervisor could have been held personally liable for alleged acts of retaliation under § 16-123-108(a). Eusanio v. Tippin, 2013 Ark. App. 38, 425 S.W.3d 838 (2013).

HISTORY: Amended January 24, 2002; amended September 27, 2007; amended June 21, 2018, effective September 1, 2018.

Reporter's Notes to Rule 7:

1. This Rule serves the purpose of FRCP 7 by providing a simple and elastic pleading and motion procedure, placing minimum emphasis on form and reducing the number of pleadings allowed. Roughley v. Penn. R. R. Co., 230 F.2d 387 (3rd Cir. 1956).

2. With minor exceptions Section (b) is the same as FRCP 7(b). Although the superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. § 27-1103 (Repl. 1962) did not provide for pleadings other than complaint, demurrer or answer and demurrer or reply to the answer, other now superseded statutes recognized the validity of counterclaims and replies thereto as well as cross complaints. All pleadings recognized herein have been a part of Arkansas practice.

3. As in FRCP 7, Section (b) requires a reply to a counterclaim only when it is "denominated as such." No reply is required to a set-off or to a counterclaim which is not so denominated. Thus, by failure to reply, a plaintiff does not lose the right to defend against new matters set out in the answer unless the answer, or a part of it, is denominated "counterclaim." Gulf Refining Co. v. Fetschan, 130 F.2d 129 (6th Cir. 1942), cert. den., 318 U.S. 764, 63 S. Ct. 666. Indeed, a reply to an answer not containing a counterclaim denominated as such should not be considered by the court. See Carpenter v. Rohm & Hass, 170 F.2d 146 (3d Cir. 1948) and Kramer v. Jarvis, 81 F. Supp. 360 (D. C. Neb. 1948).

4. FRCP 7(a) provides that the court may order a reply to an answer or a third party answer. That provision is omitted from the Rule because its theoretical necessity is questionable and its practical value is very little. A reason given for this FRCP provision is that it may enable the defendant to determine whether the plaintiff will admit to new matters raised in the answer but not denominated as a counterclaim. The same goal can be accomplished through discovery. Other reasons for the FRCP provision are stated in Wright and Miller, Federal Practice and Procedure, § 1185 (1969), but none of them seems sufficient to justify its inclusion here. In the leading case on whether the court should, pursuant to FRCP 7(a), order a reply to an answer, the court held that such a reply should not be ordered unless there is a “clear and convincing factual showing of necessity or other extraordinary circumstances of a compelling nature,” and that a reply should not be used as a substitute for discovery or inspection or for a pre-trial hearing. Moire Color, Ltd. v. Eastman Kodak Co., 24 F.R.D. 325 (D.C. N.Y. 1959). Prior Arkansas law permitted no reply except in response to allegations containing a counterclaim or set-off. As noted above, no reply is required or permitted to a set-off under this Rule.

5. The purpose of Section 6(1), which is the same as FRCP 7(b)(1), is to give written notice to other parties of motions not made in the course of a hearing or trial. Oral motions made during a hearing or trial are still permitted as they are usually reduced to writing in the record of the proceedings, and they remain necessary, due to the unpredictable nature of litigation.

6. Section (b)(2) requires that matters as to form of pleadings are applicable to motions and other documents. The evident reason is to avoid the unnecessary complication resulting from different formulary rules.

7. Perhaps the most notable effect of Rule 7 is its abolition of the demurrer from Arkansas procedure. It was abolished in the FRCP and the old Federal Equity Rules and elsewhere for avoiding its sheer technicality and to permit more liberal tools for attacking the sufficiency of pleadings which accomplish the legitimate purposes of the demurrer, e.g., Rule 12(b)(6).

8. Section (d) continues the practice prescribed in superseded Rule 1(c) of the Uniform Rules for Circuit and Chancery Courts which required an additional copy of all pleadings and motions for use of the court.

Addition to Reporter’s Notes, 2002 Amendment:

New paragraph (2) of subdivision (b) addresses matters that previously appeared in Rule 6(c) (supporting affidavits) and Rule 78(b) (content of motions). With these changes, Rule 6(c) governs the timing of motions, responses, and replies, while Rule 7(b) governs their content. Rule 78(b) simply cross-references these provisions. Former paragraph (2) of subdivision (b) has been redesignated as paragraph (3), and minor changes have been made in the titles of subdivision (b) and the rule.

Addition to Reporter’s Notes, 2007 Amendment:

New paragraph (4) of subdivision (b) cross references the 2007 changes in Administrative Order 3, which clarify when a matter is submitted for decision for purposes of that Order.

Addition to Reporter’s Notes, 2018 Amendment:

Rule 7(b)(3) has been amended to make clear that the requirements of Rules 10(a) and 11(a) in regard to captions, signings, and other matters of the form of pleadings also apply to motions and other papers allowed under the rules.

CASE NOTES

Default Judgment.

Where no written motion was filed by an opposing party pursuant to Ark. R. Civ. P. 55 to set aside two default judgments, the trial court lacked the authority to set aside the default judgment and enter an order forfeiting the property to the county general fund. State v. $258,035.00 United States Currency, 352 Ark. 117, 98 S.W.3d 818 (2003).

Creditor did not defend against a debtor’s counterclaim and avoid default by filing an amended complaint because an amended complaint was not a reply; nothing in the rules designated an amended complaint as the functional equivalent of an answer or reply. Unifund CCR Partners v. Thornton, 2014 Ark. App. 307 (2014).

Trial court erred by sua sponte granting a default judgment against an owner and in favor of the State in a civil-forfeiture case because the State had not applied for a default judgment; the trial court sua sponte moved the forfeiture case toward a default judgment and did so in the absence of a request by the prosecutor, and there was no service of a written notice at least three days prior to any hearing that would consider a default judgment. Byrd v. State, 2016 Ark. App. 489, 505 S.W.3d 699 (2016).

Formal Denial.

There was no merit to a plaintiff's contention that the defendants, after filing what amounted to a counterclaim in the trial court, admitted the allegations in the plaintiff's reply by failing to file a response to that pleading, since such a formal denial is not required under subsection (a) of this rule. Cleveland v. Gravel Ridge San. Sewer Imp. Dist. No. 213, 274 Ark. 330, 625 S.W.2d 446 (1981).

Motion to Dismiss.

Under the Rules of Civil Procedure, the purpose formerly accomplished by a pleading called a demurrer is now accomplished by a pleading called a motion to dismiss. Farm Bureau Mut. Ins. Co. v. Southall, 281 Ark. 141, 661 S.W.2d 383 (1983).

Where insurer did not stand on its motion to dismiss and permit the entry of judgment for the insured, it was not entitled to a decision in Supreme Court, on petition for writ of review, about whether the plaintiff's complaint stated a cause of action. Farm Bureau Mut. Ins. Co. v. Southall, 281 Ark. 141, 661 S.W.2d 383 (1983).

Pleadings.

Trial court abused its discretion in strictly construing pleadings filed in response to a defamation action and striking the pleadings because they were improperly designated as cross-claims rather than counter-claims; the court should have liberally construed the pleadings as being counter-claims as required by Ark. R. Civ. P. 8 and allowed the pleadings to stand despite the misdesignation. Dodge v. Lee, 352 Ark. 235, 100 S.W.3d 707 (2003).

Appellant's contention that the circuit court erred in permitting appellees to reopen a case that had been closed by mandate after appeal without a formal motion as required by this rule was rejected as it was within the circuit court's jurisdiction to enforce its prior order requiring appellant to provide certain financial information by holding appellant in contempt and incarcerating him. Stilley v. Fort Smith Sch. Dist., 367 Ark. 193, 238 S.W.3d 902 (2006).

Section 16-55-202 was unconstitutional and conflicted with Ark. Const., Art. 4, § 2 and Ark. Const., Amend. 80, § 3 because rules regarding pleading, practice, and procedure were solely the responsibility of the supreme court; the nonparty-fault provision bypassed the rules of pleading, practice and procedure by setting up a procedure to determine the fault of a nonparty and mandating the consideration of that nonparty's fault in an effort to reduce a plain-tiff's recovery. Johnson v. Rockwell Automation, Inc., 2009 Ark. 241, 308 S.W.3d 135 (2009).

Because appellant failed to submit a brief in support of a motion for clarification, in violation of subdivisions (b)(1)-(2) of this rule, an appellate court did not address the issue. Carter v. Waymack, 2013 Ark. App. 317, 427 S.W.3d 791 (2013).

Appellate court was unable to address the merits of an employee's appeal of the circuit court's dismissal of his complaints; while the employee's addendum contained the pleadings filed in the refiled 2015 lawsuit, it did not contain the pleadings, motions, and other related documents filed in the original 2013 lawsuit as required by the court rules. Skender v. Union Pac. R.R. Co., 2017 Ark. App. 649 (2017).

Response Unnecessary.

In action to set aside tax deed, failure of plaintiff to respond to defenses of laches, estoppel and abandonment was of no consequence since no response to such averments is required by the Rules of Civil Procedure. Garvan v. Potlatch Corp., 278 Ark. 414, 645 S.W.2d 957 (1983), superseded by statute as stated in Gilbreath v. Union Bank, 309 Ark. 360, 830 S.W.2d 854 (1992).

Where plaintiff filed a "Motion for Modification" requesting that the trial court modify its previously entered orders, rather than a new complaint, defendant was not required to file an answer, given subsection (b) of this rule. James v. James, 52 Ark. App. 29, 914 S.W.2d 773 (1996).

Ex-husband's claim that his ex-wife was barred by the compulsory-counterclaim provision of Ark. R. Civ. P. 13(a) from recovering education expenses because she did not raise the issue during a 2002 contempt action ex-husband initiated was rejected as ex-husband was not filing a pleading and asserting a claim under this rule at that time but, rather, he was filing a motion asking the trial court to enforce a previous order; Ark. R. Civ. P. 13(a) did not apply and, when his ex-wife filed a counterpetition in May 2004 to enforce the decree and recover tuition and education expenses, she was not barred by the compulsory-counterclaim rule because she did not raise the education-expense issue in response to the ex-husband's first petition filed in 2002. Morsy v. Deloney, 92 Ark. App. 383, 214 S.W.3d 285 (2005).

Rule 8. General rules of pleading.

(a) Claims for Relief. A pleading which sets forth a claim for relief, whether a complaint, counterclaim, crossclaim, or third party claim, shall contain (1) a statement in ordinary and concise language of facts showing that the court has jurisdiction of the claim and is the proper venue and that the pleader is entitled to relief, and (2) a demand for the relief to which the pleader considers himself entitled. In claims for unliquidated damage, a demand containing no specified amount of money shall limit recovery to an amount less than required for federal court jurisdiction in diversity of citizenship cases, unless language of the demand indicates that the recovery sought is in excess of such amount. Relief in the alternative may be demanded.

(b) Defenses: Form of Denials. A party shall state in ordinary and concise language his defenses to each claim asserted and shall admit or deny the averments upon which the adverse party relies. If he is without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of an averment, he shall so state and this has the effect of a denial. Denials shall fairly meet the substance of the averments denied. When a pleader intends in good faith to deny only a part or a qualification of an averment, he shall specify so much of it as is true and material and shall deny only the remainder. Unless the pleader intends in good faith to controvert all the averments of the claim, he may make his denials as specific denials of designated averments or paragraphs, or he may generally deny all the averments, except such designated averments or paragraphs as he expressly admits, provided that he may admit any part thereof and deny the remainder. When the pleader intends in good faith to controvert all averments, including averments of the grounds upon which the court's jurisdiction depends, he may do so by general denial subject to the obligations set forth in Rule 11.

(c) Affirmative Defenses. In responding to a complaint, counterclaim, cross-claim or third party claim, a party shall set forth affirmatively accord and satisfaction, arbitration and award, comparative fault, discharge in bankruptcy, duress, estoppel, exclusiveness of remedy under workmen's compensation law, failure of consideration, fraud, illegality, injury by fellow servant, laches, license, payment, release, res judicata, set-off, statute of frauds, statute of limitations, waiver, and any other matter constituting an avoidance or affirmative defense. When a party has mistakenly designated a defense as a counterclaim or a counterclaim as a defense, the court on terms, if justice so requires, shall treat the pleading as if there had been a proper designation.

(d) Effect of Failure to Deny. Averments in a pleading to which a responsive pleading is required, other than those as to the amount of damage, are admitted when not denied, either generally or specifically, in the responsive pleading. Averments in a pleading to which no responsive pleading is required or permitted shall be taken as denied or avoided.

(e) Pleading to Be Concise and Direct: Consistency.

(1) Each averment of a pleading shall be direct and stated in ordinary and concise language. No technical forms of pleadings or motions are required.

(2) When permitted by Rule 18, a party may set forth two or more separate claims, provided that each claim shall be set forth in separate, numbered counts. A party shall set forth in an answer or reply as many defenses, whether legal or equitable, as he may have. All statements shall be made subject to the obligations set forth in Rule 11.

(f) Construction of Pleadings. All pleadings shall be liberally construed so as to do substantial justice.

HISTORY: Amended May 16, 1983; amended December 14, 1992.

Reporter's Notes to Rule 8:

1. Although reworded, Rule 8 is substantially the same as FRCP 8. It seeks to accomplish the same purpose as FRCP 8, i.e. to require that pleadings be drafted in such a manner as to give a party fair notice of what the claim is and the grounds upon which it is based. Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 78 S. Ct. 99 (1957).

2. Section (a) requires that all claims for relief contain three basic elements, one of which a statement upon which venue and jurisdiction are based which requirement was not found under superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. 27-1113 (Repl. 1962). Section (a)(1) and (2) substitutes the term "ordinary and concise" language from this superseded statute for the term "short and plain" found in the Federal Rule.

3. Section (a)(3) tracks superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. 27-1113 (4) (Supp. 1975) relative to claims for unliquidated damages. The obvious purpose of this section is to prevent a plaintiff from using unliquidated demands to avoid removal of diversity of citizenship cases to federal court.

4. Section (b) follows FRCP 8(b). The theory behind this section is that an answer or reply should apprise a claimant which allegations in the claim are admitted and not in issue and which are contested and thus require proof. Mitchell v. Wright, 154 F.2d 924 (C.C.A. 5th, 1946). In the first sentence of Section (b), the term "ordinary and concise" is substituted for the term "short and plain" used in the Federal Rule.

5. Section (b) permits a pleader to allege that he is without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of an averment and thereby deny such allegation. This follows superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. 27-1121 (2) (Repl. 1962). In doing so, however, the pleader must act in good faith or risk having his pleading stricken under Rule 12(f). Section (b) also requires that the pleader fairly meet the substance of the averment denied. The purpose of this provision is to proscribe a pleading which neither admits nor denies, but simply demands proof of claimant's allegations. Such an allegation or averment is not sufficient to constitute a denial. Reed v. Hickey, 2 F.R.D. 92 (D.C., 1941). Section (b) also follows the Federal Rule by allowing a pleader to admit certain allegations while denying others, and by permitting the use of general denials, although their use is discouraged under federal practice. One asserting a general denial is required to act in good faith in doing so.

6. Section (c) follows in substance FRCP 8(c). The list of affirmative defenses contained in this section is not intended to be exclusive and other defenses may be asserted, if available, even though not specifically listed. The last sentence of this section grants the court discretion to allow a counterclaim or affirmative defense even though improperly designated.

7. Section (d) is essentially the same as FRCP 8(d) and superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. 27-1151 and 27-1121 (Repl. 1962) concerning general denials.

8. Section (e)(1) is designed to avoid verbosity in pleadings. It is a slightly reworded version of FRCP 8(e)(1). Technical rules or forms of pleadings or motions are abolished. Also, this section follows superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. 27-1121 (Repl. 1962) in requiring separate defenses to be set out in separate, numbered paragraphs.

9. Section (f) follows superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. 27-1150 (Repl. 1962) by requiring that all pleadings be liberally construed so as to do substantial justice.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 1983 Amendment:

Rule 8(a) is amended to remove the requirement of pleading grounds of jurisdiction and venue.

The original Reporter's Notes were meant to apply to the committee draft of Rule 8(a) and not to the rule as revised by the Supreme Court. In Harvey v. Eastman Kodak Co., 261 Ark. 783, 610 S.W.2d 582 (1981), the Supreme Court made clear its intention that Arkansas had not become a "notice pleading" jurisdiction in the image of the federal system. See, Faculty Note, 34 Ark. L. Rev. 722 (1981).

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 1992 Amendment:

Rule 8(a) is amended to require that the complaint and other pleadings that set forth claims for relief include facts showing that the court has jurisdiction and that venue is proper. This requirement is consistent with statements in the case law regarding personal and subject matter jurisdiction. E.g., Malone & Hyde, Inc. v. Chisley, 308 Ark. 308, 825 S.W.2d 558 (1992) (personal jurisdiction is to be determined on the basis of facts alleged in the complaint); Hesser v. Johns, 288 Ark. 264, 704 S.W.2d 165 (1986) (question of whether court has jurisdiction over the subject matter is determined from allegations in the complaint). Moreover, the Supreme Court has recognized that a complaint may on its face reveal that venue is improper. E.g., Mack Trucks of Arkansas, Inc. v. Jet Asphalt & Rock Co., 246 Ark. 101, 437 S.W.2d 459 (1969). Nonetheless, some confusion arose in light of the 1983 amendment of Rule 8(a) deleting a requirement, found in the original version of the rule, that the complaint contain a statement of "the grounds upon which venue and the court's jurisdiction depend." However, elimination of the requirement that grounds be pleaded was apparently not intended to modify the role of the factual allegations in the determination of jurisdiction and venue. The 1992 amendment, which is designed to clarify the obligations of the pleader as to jurisdiction and venue, is consistent with the requirement that a complaint allege facts constituting a cause of action. See Harvey v. Eastman Kodak Co., 271 Ark. 783, 610 S.W.2d 582 (1981).

CASE NOTES

Adverse Possession.

The defendant, in a quiet title action based on adverse possession, does not have to specifically plead permissive use under subsection (c) of this rule, because permissive use is not an affirmative defense which must be so pleaded; where the defendant development company specifically denied the plaintiff's allegations that she had been in hostile possession of the property for more than seven years, the nature of the plaintiff's use and possession was thus put in issue and the plaintiff bore the burden of proving that it was hostile and adverse and not permissive. Mikel v. Development Co., 269 Ark. 365, 602 S.W.2d 630 (1980).

Affirmative Defenses.

Although the preferred method to assert an affirmative defense such as res judicata is in an answer and not in a motion to dismiss, when raised in a motion to dismiss the defense of res judicata may be treated as if it were properly raised. Amos v. Amos, 282 Ark. 532, 669 S.W.2d 200 (1984).

Because the defendant booking agent failed to specifically plead as an affirmative defense the illegality of a contract, the trial court did not err in refusing to grant defendant's motion for a directed verdict in a suit by a charity concert promoter against a booking agent where the plaintiff promoter failed to register with the secretary of state as a professional fund raiser. Jim Halsey Co. v. Bonar, 284 Ark. 461, 683 S.W.2d 898 (1985).

An exception in a policy of insurance is an affirmative defense which must be specifically pleaded. National Sec. Fire & Cas. Co. v. Shaver, 14 Ark. App. 217, 686 S.W.2d 808 (1985).

The contention by insureds that the failure to file a proof of loss was an affirmative defense under subsection (c) of this rule and should have been specifically pleaded by the insurer under Ark. R. Civ. P. 9(c) was unsupported by either convincing argument or citation to legal authority. Hill v. Farmers Union Mut. Ins. Co., 15 Ark. App. 222, 691 S.W.2d 196 (1985).

Affirmative defense of intervening cause should have been specifically pled. Mercer v. Nelson, 293 Ark. 430, 738 S.W.2d 417 (1987).

Material misrepresentation is an affirmative defense. Brooks v. Town & Country Mut. Ins. Co., 294 Ark. 173, 741 S.W.2d 264 (1987).

Payment is an affirmative defense, and the burden of proving payment lies on the party asserting it. Pulpwood Suppliers, Inc. v. First Nat'l Bank, 21 Ark. App. 147, 729 S.W.2d 425 (1987).

Res judicata is an affirmative defense, and the bar of res judicata is not "jurisdictional"; thus a writ of prohibition should not be entered because the doctrine may apply. Arkansas State Hwy. Comm'n v. Munson, 295 Ark. 447, 749 S.W.2d 317 (1988).

There is no logical reason why a setoff should not serve as an affirmative defense to a counterclaim as well as to an original complaint, a crossclaim, or a third-party claim. Turner v. Eubanks, 26 Ark. App. 22, 759 S.W.2d 37 (1988).

Payment and failure of consideration are affirmative defenses, and in situations where there are complicated business transactions between the maker and payee of a note, the burden of proving payment which was, or should have been, credited to the maker is upon the maker of the note. Peek v. Brickey, 300 Ark. 354, 779 S.W.2d 152 (1989).

The question of res judicata is an affirmative defense to be raised in the trial court and does not present a question of jurisdiction. Pryor v. Hot Spring County Chancery Court, 303 Ark. 630, 799 S.W.2d 524 (1990).

Party who had filed the initial complaint could not assert res judicata as an affirmative defense because he was not responding to a complaint, counter-claim, cross-claim, or a third party claim. Kulbeth v. Purdom, 305 Ark. 19, 805 S.W.2d 622 (1991).

Where counsel for both parties agreed to a hearing on the limitations issue which resulted in a trial of that issue and an order from the trial court dismissing counts I and II of the complaint, the limitations issue was tried as if it were an affirmative defense to the complaint under subsection (c) of this rule with the express consent of the parties, and should be treated as if it had been raised in the pleadings. Godwin v. Churchman, 305 Ark. 520, 810 S.W.2d 34 (1991).

Laches and limitations are affirmative defenses under subsection (c) of this rule, and are not listed as defenses that may be the subject of a motion to dismiss under Rule 12. Davenport v. Pack, 35 Ark. App. 40, 812 S.W.2d 487 (1991).

The criminal law does not require the pleading of affirmative defenses. Sumner v. State, 35 Ark. App. 203, 816 S.W.2d 623 (1991).

Comparative fault is an affirmative defense. Skinner v. R.J. Griffin & Co., 313 Ark. 430, 855 S.W.2d 913 (1993).

Nothing in this rule mandates that an affirmative defense be barred unless asserted in the first response to the complaint. Tribco Mfg. Co. v. People's Bank of Imboden, 67 Ark. App. 268, 998 S.W.2d 756 (1999).

Because a statute of repose, § 16-56-112, is not an affirmative defense, the failure to plead it as an affirmative defense is not a bar to raising the issue on appeal. Ray & Sons Masonry Contrs., Inc. v. United States Fid. & Guar. Co., 353 Ark. 201, 114 S.W.3d 189 (2003).

Grant of summary judgment in favor of the city was proper where the agreement to sell real estate was unenforceable because the document did not adequately furnish a description as to the property and there was no meeting of the minds; further, estoppel was an affirmative defense required to have been specifically pled under subsection (c) of this rule and estoppel was not pled in the company's answer and counterclaim. Dev. & Constr. Mgmt. v. City of N. Little Rock, 83 Ark. App. 165, 119 S.W.3d 77 (2003).

Father had to affirmatively plead certain defenses, including laches, according to subsection (c) of this rule; as the father failed to raise the defense of laches at the trial court level in his paternity action, the Arkansas Supreme Court could not determine if the trial court erred in failing to consider it. Watt v. Office of Child Support Enforcement, 364 Ark. 236, 217 S.W.3d 785 (2005).

In a paternity suit, the alleged biological father failed to plead the defenses of statute of limitations, laches, waiver, or estoppel and, thus, the circuit court erred in considering those defenses in dismissing the suit; however, the circuit court ruling was affirmed as it was the right result, even if for the wrong reason. State Office of Child Support Enforcement v. Morgan, 364 Ark. 358, 219 S.W.3d 175 (2005).

Arkansas law requires that statutory exemptions be affirmatively pled as affirmative defenses and, in light of the Connecticut Statutory Trust Act's silence as to duties, the liability-limiting language of Conn. Gen. Stat. § 34-523(b) was considered sufficiently analogous to a statutory exemption in Arkansas law; accordingly, the Act represented an "avoidance or affirmative defense" within the meaning of this rule. First Union Nat'l Bank v. Pictet Overseas Trust Corp., 477 F.3d 616 (8th Cir. 2007).

Doctrine of charitable immunity is an affirmative defense, falling into the catchall provision of subsection (c) of this rule, as it is any other matter constituting an avoidance or affirmative defense. Felton v. Rebsamen Med. Ctr., Inc., 373 Ark. 472, 284 S.W.3d 486 (2008).

Qualified immunity afforded by § 21-9-301 had to be asserted and proven as an affirmative defense; it was incumbent upon the school district to plead and prove that it was entitled to the immunity due to a lack of insurance, and the student's complaint did not have to allege the absence of insurance in order to state a cause of action. Vent v. Johnson, 2009 Ark. 92, 303 S.W.3d 46 (2009).

In a wrongful death action, a nursing center and a hospital's admission that they were non-profit organizations was insufficient to meet the pleading requirements for the defense of charitable immunity because it was their burden to specifically plead and prove the affirmative defense pursuant to subsection (c) of this section. Downing v. Nursing Ctr., 2010 Ark. 175, 369 S.W.3d 8 (2010).

Where a father moved for a change of custody, the mother's unclean-hands argument—that the father should have been barred from claiming that her cohabitation with a man amounted to a material change of circumstances because of the father's own cohabitation with a woman—was barred because she failed to raise it in the pleadings or to the trial court as an equitable defense, as required by subsection (c) of this rule. Shields v. Kimble, 2010 Ark. App. 479, 375 S.W.3d 738 (2010).

Although an answer generally requested dismissal of the complaint pursuant to Ark. R. Civ. P. 12(b), it did not specifically identify the Rule 12(b) defenses of insufficient process and insufficient service of process. Therefore, it did not meet the specificity requirement of subsection (b) of this rule or Ark. R. Civ. P. 12(h), and the Rule 12(b) defenses were not preserved. Holliman v. Johnson, 2012 Ark. App. 354, 417 S.W.3d 222 (2012).

Because charitable immunity was an affirmative defense under subsection (c) of this rule, and not jurisdictional, and a business did not show that a trial court lacked subject-matter jurisdiction in entering a default judgment against it, there was no basis to reverse the trial court's judgment. Entertainer, Inc. v. Duffy, 2012 Ark. 202, 407 S.W.3d 514 (2012).

Because appellant never raised the statute of limitations as a defense below, the issue was waived. Osborn v. Tennison, 2014 Ark. App. 175, 434 S.W.3d 1 (2014).

Mislabeling the seven-year continuous possession requirement as a statute of limitations led to the individual's argument that the circuit court could not consider the affirmative defense because it had not been pleaded or argued, but his argument lacked foundation because the requirement of continuous possession is not a statute of limitations, as referred to in the rule regarding affirmative defenses. Chiodini v. Lock, 2014 Ark. App. 219 (2014).

Doctor gave justifications for his medical decisions, and if Arkansas courts considered justifications for medical decisions as affirmative defenses, it would result in imposing a judicially created burden-shifting procedure onto medical defendants to prove why they made their decisions, which is contrary to the intent of the Arkansas Medical Malpractice Act; there was no error in the trial court's refusal to give a particular jury instruction on the burden of proof proffered by appellants, in which they claimed it was the doctor's burden to prove certain facts. Hartman v. Edwards, 2014 Ark. App. 480, 442 S.W.3d 13 (2014).

This rule does require that affirmative defenses be pleaded in responding to a complaint, but there is no requirement that the affirmative defense of release be pleaded in the original answer. Trujillo v. TK Martial Arts Acad., LLC, 2015 Ark. App. 606, 474 S.W.3d 519 (2015).

When the injured construction worker's complaint in circuit court alleged that the employer failed to provide workers' compensation and the employer failed to appear or file an answer, the employer did not waive the affirmative defense of exclusivity under the Workers' Compensation Law; a challenge to subject-matter jurisdiction cannot be waived. Stan v. Vences, 2019 Ark. App. 56, 571 S.W.3d 24 (2019).

Court rules require that any matter constituting an avoidance or affirmative defense must be outlined in a party's responsive pleading, and failure to plead an affirmative defense can result in the waiver and exclusion of the defense from the case; defendant failed to affirmatively plead standing of the petitioner and the defense was deemed to be waived. Barrett v. Thurston, 2020 Ark. 36, 593 S.W.3d 1 (2020).

Amendments to Pleadings.

In an action to recover an open account, the defendant was not entitled to amend his pleadings to allege a set-off on the day of trial where the plaintiff was not prepared to meet that issue, even though the defendant in his answers to interrogatories had referred to the set-off. Odaware v. Robertson Aerial-AG, Inc., 13 Ark. App. 285, 683 S.W.2d 624 (1985).

Answers to interrogatories, as well as any other information disclosed during discovery are not a pleading or a defense to a pleading; however, such information may give rise to amendments to pleadings. National Sec. Fire & Cas. Co. v. Shaver, 14 Ark. App. 217, 686 S.W.2d 808 (1985).

Where the insured was prepared to defend against the occupancy clause in an insurance policy, the trial court abused its discretion in refusing to allow the pleadings to be amended to conform to the evidence where the insurer sought to amend the pleadings by his repeated references to lack of surprise or prejudice and by his proffer, although counsel did not specifically announce his desire to have the pleadings conform to the proof. National Sec. Fire & Cas. Co. v. Shaver, 14 Ark. App. 217, 686 S.W.2d 808 (1985).

Although the chancellor did not specifically rule on defendant's motion to amend his pleading to include a statute of limitations defense, given the extensive discussion of this defense at the hearing, it was clear from his actions, if not his words, that the chancellor considered the pleadings to have been amended. King v. State, Office of Child Support Enforcement, 58 Ark. App. 298, 952 S.W.2d 180 (1997).

Trial court properly granted summary judgment in favor of a medical center in a medical malpractice claim on the basis of charitable immunity because the medical center did not waive the defense of charitable immunity by failing to assert the defense in its original answer and the patients failed to properly challenge the assertion of the defense by the filing of a motion alleging prejudice. Under Ark. R. Civ. P. 15(a), with the exception of defenses mentioned in Ark. R. Civ. P. 12(h)(1), a party could amend its pleadings at any time without leave of the trial court unless, upon motion of the opposing party, the trial court determined that prejudice would result; while charitable immunity was an affirmative defense that had to be specifically asserted in a responsive pleading under this rule, it was not a defense listed in Ark. R. Civ. P. 12(h)(1) and thus could be raised in an amended answer under Ark. R. Civ. P. 15. Seth v. St. Edward Mercy Med. Ctr., 375 Ark. 413, 291 S.W.3d 179 (2009).

Condominium seller did not waive the affirmative defense of release because he raised it in an amended answer prior to trial pursuant to subsection (c) of this rule, to which the buyer did not object, and evidence regarding the release defense was received without objection at the trial. Siegel v. Halley, 2010 Ark. App. 106 (2010).

There was no manifest abuse of discretion by the circuit court in denying appellants' motion to amend the pleadings to conform to the evidence because appellants failed not only to list the affirmative defense of statute of limitations in their response to appellee's complaint, they also failed to raise it throughout the pendency of the case, raising it for the first time at the end of the trial; moreover, appellee objected at the time of the motion and never impliedly consented to arguing the issue of the statute of limitations. Middleton v. Middleton, 2018 Ark. App. 237, 548 S.W.3d 199 (2018).

Claims for Relief.

Appellant's argument for reversal, based upon the false premise that the circuit-court complaint, which failed to aver circumstances constituting the alleged fraud with particularity, raised claims in tort or fraud, held without merit. Wordlaw v. Laster, 323 Ark. 30, 912 S.W.2d 924 (1996).

Even when complaint was liberally construed, it alleged only conclusions and alleged no facts whatsoever, as required by subdivision (a)(1) of this rule, and therefore failed to state a claim; although the complaint should have been dismissed under Ark. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6), the claim should not have been dismissed with prejudice. Malone v. Trans-States Lines, 325 Ark. 383, 926 S.W.2d 659 (1996).

Where complaint alleged that telephone company had been unjustly enriched by providing and charging customers for an optional service without authorization, but did not allege that the telephone company had violated any law, order, rule, or regulation, the complaint failed to state a cause of action, and suit was correctly dismissed. Bryant v. Arkansas Pub. Serv. Comm'n, 53 Ark. App. 114, 919 S.W.2d 522 (1996).

The trial court did not err in refusing to limit the plaintiff's proof of damages to $50,000 on the basis that neither the complaint nor amended complaint contained a demand for an amount in excess than that required for federal court jurisdiction in diversity cases since the plaintiff's response to the defendant's first set of interrogatories included a chart indicating a demand for over $180,000 in damages and the defendant could have sought removal to federal court at that time. Interstate Oil & Supply Co. v. Troutman Oil Co., 334 Ark. 1, 972 S.W.2d 941 (1998).

A complaint alleging illegal and unconstitutional acts by the state as an exception to the sovereign-immunity doctrine is not exempt from complying with the rules that require fact pleading. Arkansas Tech. Univ. v. Link, 341 Ark. 495, 17 S.W.3d 809 (2000).

Subsection (a) of this rule does not prevent a plaintiff who seeks an unspecified amount in liquidated damages from recovering in excess of the jurisdictional minimum at trial and does not limit recovery to an amount less than that required for federal court jurisdiction; thus, diverse defendants could defeat personal injury plaintiffs' motion to remand a removed action by establishing that the amount in controversy exceeded $75,000 by a preponderance of the evidence as of the time the action was removed. Haynes v. Louisville Ladder Group, LLC, 341 F. Supp. 2d 1064 (E.D. Ark. 2004).

Appellate court chose not to recognize a cause of action for educational malpractice in Arkansas and the trial court did not err in dismissing a mother's suit against a school for breach of contract, outrage, breach of fiduciary duty, negligence, and gross negligence where, even if the handbook was a part of the "agreement" that the mother had with the school, its terms were so vague and general that they were not enforceable. Key v. Coryell, 86 Ark. App. 334, 185 S.W.3d 98 (2004).

Trial court erred in granting doctor's motion to dismiss a complaint that alleged sufficient facts to state a claim for medical malpractice where the complaint alleged that (1) the doctor required plaintiff mother, after achieving maximum dilation, to go through over four hours of hard labor before performing a caesarean section, (2) the doctor's failure to timely schedule and perform a caesarean section was a breach of the applicable standard of care, and (3) the child suffered neurological damage and the mother suffered injury to her bladder and associated nerves. Thomas v. Pierce, 87 Ark. App. 26, 184 S.W.3d 489 (2004).

Provisions of subsection (a) of this rule regarding claims for unliquidated damage and the requirement of a demand for an amount in excess of the federal jurisdictional amount do not apply to cases that, for lack of diversity of citizenship, cannot be removed to federal court; thus, the provisions of subsection (a) did not limit the driver's recovery to $75,000 simply because she failed to include a demand for an amount in excess of the federal jurisdictional amount in her pleadings. Cox v. Vernon, 94 Ark. App. 112, 226 S.W.3d 24 (2006).

In an action by a county resident against officials of the Arkansas Game and Fish Commission, alleging that the Commission unconstitutionally entered into gas leases with private companies, the resident failed to state a claim upon which relief could be granted because the resident's allegations were conclusory in nature, lacking in specificity. Dockery v. Morgan, 2011 Ark. 94, 380 S.W.3d 377 (2011).

In a case alleging breach of contract and bad faith, there was no error in dismissing one party from the lawsuit because there was no showing that a contract existed, and the complaint failed to allege that the party at issue was an insurance company; the tort of bad faith could have only been brought against an insurance company. Moreover, the insured conceded that his complaint against this party was sufficient to avoid dismissal only if the summary judgment in favor of an insurer was reversed. Fulton v. Beacon Nat'l Ins. Co., 2012 Ark. App. 320, 416 S.W.3d 759 (2012).

Inmate's civil rights action was properly dismissed because the inmate failed to plead any facts in the complaint to establish that the statutes that the Arkansas Parole Board and Department of Correction used in determining the procedures for submitting requests for clemency were punitive in nature; the inmate therefore failed under subdivision (a)(1) of this rule to plead a basis to support a claim of an ex post facto violation. Holloway v. Beebe, 2013 Ark. 12 (2013).

In a case alleging negligence, breach of contract, breach of warranty, strict product liability, and violations of the Arkansas Deceptive Trade Practices Act based on a claim that a casket was defective, the complaint failed to include the elements of the causes of actions pled because it failed to state facts that linked the damages to the conduct or product supplied; there was no way of knowing the condition of the casket purchased since it had not been disinterred or inspected since its burial in 1996. Clayton v. Batesville Casket Co., 2015 Ark. App. 361, 465 S.W.3d 441 (2015).

Conclusions of Law.

Allegations by plaintiff that ballot fees collected under § 7-7-301 are unreasonably high, coupled with the fact that plaintiff did not know the total of ballot fees collected for the period in question, creates a conclusion rather than the statement of fact which is required by this rule; thus there was no basis for finding that § 7-7-301 was contrary to any principle of constitutional law. Moorman v. Pulaski County Democratic Party, 271 Ark. 908, 611 S.W.2d 519 (1981).

Ark. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) which tests the sufficiency of a pleading, must be read in conjunction with subdivision (a)(2) of this rule; accordingly, in a suit by a real estate broker against defaulting purchasers to recover the commission it would have recovered from the seller under the contract, a complaint containing allegations which were merely conclusions of law and failed to state facts upon which relief could be granted as required by subdivision (a)(2) of this rule was properly dismissed under Ark. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6). Thompson-Holloway Agency, Inc. v. Gribben, 3 Ark. App. 119, 623 S.W.2d 528 (1981).

A tort claim of outrage against various church members, which alleged only that they willfully and wantonly breached a contract for repair of a church organ which caused the repairers emotional distress, was not sufficient to withstand a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. The claim alleged mere conclusions and not facts. Rabalaia v. Barnett, 284 Ark. 527, 683 S.W.2d 919 (1985).

Where complainants' only allegation amounted to a conclusion of law and not a statement of facts upon which relief could be granted and complaint was dismissed without prejudice. Spire v. Members of Election Comm'n, 302 Ark. 407, 790 S.W.2d 167 (1990); McKinney v. City of El Dorado, 308 Ark. 284, 824 S.W.2d 826 (1992).

Heirs' malpractice and negligence claims against a doctor were properly dismissed where the complaint failed to allege how the doctor's actions, or lack thereof, had specifically caused the decedent's death. Worden v. Kirchner, 2013 Ark. 509, 431 S.W.3d 243 (2013).

Conditions Precedent.

The contention by insureds that the failure to file a proof of loss was an affirmative defense under subsection (c) of this rule and should have been specifically and particularly pleaded by the insurer under subsection (c) of this rule was unsupported by either convincing argument or citation to legal authority. Hill v. Farmers Union Mut. Ins. Co., 15 Ark. App. 222, 691 S.W.2d 196 (1985).

Construction.

Rule 12(b)(6) provides for the dismissal of a complaint and must be read in conjunction with this rule. Spire v. Members of Election Comm'n, 302 Ark. 407, 790 S.W.2d 167 (1990).

Trial court abused its discretion in strictly construing pleadings filed in response to a defamation action and striking the pleadings because they were improperly designated as cross-claims rather than counter-claims; the court should have liberally construed the pleadings as being counter-claims as required by this rule and allowed the pleadings to stand despite the misdesignation. Dodge v. Lee, 352 Ark. 235, 100 S.W.3d 707 (2003).

Arkansas is a state that requires fact pleading, and a pleading which sets forth mere conclusions is not sufficient; however, pleadings are to be liberally construed and are sufficient if they advise a party of its obligations and allege a breach of them. Thomas v. Pierce, 87 Ark. App. 26, 184 S.W.3d 489 (2004).

Although plaintiff lacked standing to sue when she filed the original complaint because she had not yet been appointed the administrator of decedent's estate and she was not the sole heir, upon being appointed administrator six days later, she was deemed to be a new party when she filed the timely amended complaint; the original complaint remained a document setting out allegations satisfying the fact-pleading requirements for a complaint set out in subdivision (a)(1) of this rule and the facts pled in the original complaint were adopted by reference under Ark. R. Civ. P. 10(c) into the amended complaint. Hackelton v. Malloy, 364 Ark. 469, 221 S.W.3d 353 (2006).

Construction of Pleadings.

Pleadings are to be liberally construed and are sufficient if they advise a party of its obligations and allege a breach of them. Bethel Baptist Church v. Church Mut. Ins. Co., 54 Ark. App. 262, 924 S.W.2d 494 (1996).

Dismissal of surgeon's breach of contract action against a hospital was reversed and remanded because the surgeon not only pled that he benefitted from the services contract between the hospital and the limited liability company (LLC), but he also pled sufficient facts from which a reasonable inference could have been drawn that LLC and the hospital intended to benefit him and other individual physicians. Perry v. Baptist Health, 358 Ark. 238, 189 S.W.3d 54 (2004).

Even though property owners' action was captioned as a declaratory judgment action, the pleadings were to be liberally construed because the relief sought was the appeal of the decision of the board of adjustment denying nonconforming use status; property owners were not attempting to have the board decide the issue anew, rather, they were simply trying to reinstate their appeal that had been improperly dismissed and the rules did not provide for such procedure. Wright v. City of Little Rock, 366 Ark. 96, 233 S.W.3d 644 (2006).

Trial court did not err in dismissing a patient's claim against a hospital for intentional interference with a business advantage under Ark. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) because the complaint, taken as true and construed liberally under subsection (f) of this rule, failed to allege improper interference; further, a conversion claim failed as the hospital's refusal to cash a draft did not equate to dominion over the funds. Alvarado v. St. Mary-Rogers Mem'l Hosp., Inc., 99 Ark. App. 104, 257 S.W.3d 583 (2007).

Judgment's entry was not reversible error as although the title of the judgment should not have been "default judgment" because an answer had been filed, all pleadings had to be liberally construed as to do substantial justice under this rule. Vill. Ventures Realty, Inc. v. Cross, 2011 Ark. App. 655, 386 S.W.3d 598 (2011).

It was not an abuse of discretion to deny a father's motion to dismiss a contempt citation because the motion for citation stated sufficient facts that, taken as true, established contempt by alleging (1) the existence of a properly registered child-support order, (2) accrual of an arrearage, and (3) willful refusal to comply, so the allegations were not conclusory. Williams v. State Office of Child Support Enforcement, 2015 Ark. App. 225, 459 S.W.3d 321 (2015).

Denials.

A denial of a material allegation is generally thought to be a denial of a material factual allegation, while avoidance of a claim because of operation of law is generally thought to require the filing of an affirmative defense. Kolb v. Morgan, 313 Ark. 274, 854 S.W.2d 719 (1993).

Effect of Failure to Deny.

Where a default judgment was entered against a defendant for money owed by defendant and plaintiff to a third party, failure to introduce evidence to establish the amount of the judgment was reversible error, since the amount of damages cannot, under this rule, be deemed admitted when not denied in the responsive pleadings, so that it must be established by proof, and this requirement is not changed by subsection (b) of Rule 55. Rice v. Kroeck, 2 Ark. App. 223, 619 S.W.2d 691 (1981).

It is well established that in Arkansas, a default judgment establishes liability but not the extent of damages. Tharp v. Smith, 326 Ark. 260, 930 S.W.2d 350 (1996).

After a default judgment has been entered, proof is still required to establish the amount of damages, and the defendant has the right to cross-examine the plaintiff's witnesses, to introduce evidence in mitigation of damages, and to question on appeal the sufficiency of the evidence to support the amount of damages awarded. Jean-Pierre v. Plantation Homes of Crittenden County, Inc., 350 Ark. 569, 89 S.W.3d 337 (2002).

Mere denial of a factual allegation by insurer that venue was proper in a particular county was not sufficient to raise the defense of improper venue; although insurer specifically mentioned the affirmative defenses listed in subsection (c) of this rule, it did not specifically mention the defense of venue or Ark. R. Civ. P. 12(b) and, thus, waived its venue objection. Gailey v. Allstate Ins. Co., 362 Ark. 568, 210 S.W.3d 40 (2005).

Fraud.

In suit by a charity concert promoter against a booking agent when a promised well known entertainer failed to perform at a benefit concert, an allegation of fraud was stated with sufficient particularity where the complaint alleged a material representation and its falsity, reliance on the representation, the right to so rely and resulting damages. Jim Halsey Co. v. Bonar, 284 Ark. 461, 683 S.W.2d 898 (1985).

Where a charity concert promoter amended the complaint to allege fraud and negligence in a suit against a booking agent when a promised performer failed to appear at a benefit concert, the amendments related back and there could have been no statute of limitations objection to the amendment without a showing of undue delay or prejudice. Jim Halsey Co. v. Bonar, 284 Ark. 461, 683 S.W.2d 898 (1985).

When evidence of fraud is admitted and the issue is tried without objection, the pleading is regarded as amended to conform to the proof; while evidence of fraud must be pleaded, the conclusion of fraud need not be. Tucker v. Durham, 285 Ark. 264, 686 S.W.2d 402 (1985).

Issue of Fact.

For an alleged issue of fact to be decided, there must be an appropriate prayer for relief; for an appropriate prayer for relief, there must be a genuine issue of fact extant. Walker v. Hyde, 303 Ark. 615, 798 S.W.2d 435 (1990).

John Doe Pleadings.

Status as an undocumented immigrant alone was not enough to permit a party to proceed anonymously because unlawful or problematic immigration status is simply not the type of personal information of the utmost intimacy that warranted abandoning the presumption of openness in judicial proceedings. Doe v. Weiss, 2010 Ark. 150 (2010).

Jurisdiction.

Jurisdiction must be determined entirely from the pleadings, and if jurisdiction is not established by the pleadings, the court is not to proceed further. McKinney v. City of El Dorado, 308 Ark. 284, 824 S.W.2d 826 (1992).

Limitations Plea.

The plea of limitations is personal to the party pleading it; therefore, it is not a common defense and cannot inure to the benefit of a party who does not plead it. Smallwood v. Ellis Gin Co., 10 Ark. App. 41, 661 S.W.2d 410 (1983).

The plea of limitations made by the bank in foreclosure action applied only to the issues between it and another mortgage holder and the plea of limitations made by the bank did not inure to the landowner's benefit. Smallwood v. Ellis Gin Co., 10 Ark. App. 41, 661 S.W.2d 410 (1983).

Response Unnecessary.

In action to set aside tax deed, failure of plaintiff to respond to defenses of laches, estoppel and abandonment was of no consequence since no response to such averments is required by the Rules of Civil Procedure. Garvan v. Potlatch Corp., 278 Ark. 414, 645 S.W.2d 957 (1983), superseded by statute as stated in Gilbreath v. Union Bank, 309 Ark. 360, 830 S.W.2d 854 (1992).

A rule-against-perpetuities argument raised to counter a defense raised in the answer in a partition action was not untimely, even though it was not raised until trial, since the plaintiffs were not required to file a responsive pleading to the answer. Nash v. Scott, 62 Ark. App. 8, 966 S.W.2d 936 (1998).

Statement of Grounds for Relief.

Where the direct complaint of the plaintiff against the third-party defendant did not state in ordinary and concise language that plaintiff was entitled to relief on the theory of negligence, the complaint was properly dismissed. Harvey v. Eastman Kodak Co., 271 Ark. 783, 610 S.W.2d 582 (1981).

Where both the complaint and the amended complaint in a tort action failed to make a statement in ordinary and concise language of facts showing that the pleader was entitled to relief because neither contained a factual allegation of any act of negligence, they were correctly dismissed under Ark. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) for failure to state facts upon which relief could be granted. Ratliff v. Moss, 284 Ark. 16, 678 S.W.2d 369 (1984).

Unlike the comparable federal rule, subsection (a) of this rule requires a statement of facts showing the pleader is entitled to relief. Treat v. Kreutzer, 290 Ark. 532, 720 S.W.2d 716 (1986).

Arkansas does not follow the federal rule which allows "notice pleading"; instead, this rule requires a statement of facts showing the pleader is entitled to relief. McKinney v. City of El Dorado, 308 Ark. 284, 824 S.W.2d 826 (1992).

Subdivision (a)(1) of this rule and Ark. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) must be read together in testing the sufficiency of a complaint; facts, not mere conclusions, must be alleged. Hollingsworth v. First Nat'l Bank & Trust Co., 311 Ark. 637, 846 S.W.2d 176 (1993).

The pleading requirements under subdivision (a)(1) of this rule were not met in a cause of action for malicious prosecution. Hollingsworth v. First Nat'l Bank & Trust Co., 311 Ark. 637, 846 S.W.2d 176 (1993).

Inmate's conclusory allegations that prison officials acted with malice toward him when they enacted and enforced a new prison grooming policy failed to entitle the inmate to relief. Fegans v. Norris, 351 Ark. 200, 89 S.W.3d 919 (2002).

Pursuant to subsection (a) of this rule, the Arkansas Department of Environmental Quality's (DEQ) complaint was bereft of any factual allegations that, at the time of disposal, any of the customers of the corporation, which had improperly disposed of hazardous substances, caused hazardous substances to be disposed of at a hazardous substance site or selected a hazardous substance site for disposal of the hazardous substances, and the general assembly, in enacting the Remedial Action Trust Fund Act (RAFTA), § 8-7-501 et seq., provided that no person, including the state, could recover under the authority of § 8-7-515(b) (now (2)) for any remedial action costs or damages resulting solely from an act or omission of a third party, in this case the corporation. Ark. Dep't of Env'tl. Quality v. Brighton Corp., 352 Ark. 396, 102 S.W.3d 458 (2003).

Trial court properly found that a complaint sufficiently alleged breach of contract where the complaint asserted the existence of an enforceable contract, the obligation of the defendant under the contract, a violation by the defendant, and damages resulting to the plaintiff from the breach. Smith v. Eisen, 97 Ark. App. 130, 245 S.W.3d 160 (2006).

Subsequent Claim by Non-Party.

In a personal injury action where the insured settled with the tortfeasor and the suit was dismissed with prejudice, and the insurer later sought a subrogation action against the insured, the court had no jurisdiction over the subrogation claim as the insurer was not a party to the litigation because it had not filed pleadings stating its claim. Carnathan v. Farm Bureau Ins. Co., 288 Ark. 399, 705 S.W.2d 885 (1986).

Supersession of Statute.

Section 16-63-208 [superseded], which sets forth the requirements for pleading actions on written obligations, does not conform with this rule, and therefore, § 16-63-208 [superseded] is deemed to be superseded by this rule. Borg-Warner Acceptance Corp. v. Kesterson, 288 Ark. 611, 708 S.W.2d 606 (1986); Griffin-Payne, Inc. v. Union Bank, 289 Ark. 182, 710 S.W.2d 201 (1986).

Rule 9. Pleading special matters.

(a) Capacity. It is not necessary to aver the capacity of a party to sue or be sued or the authority of a party to sue or be sued in a representative capacity or the legal existence of an organized association of persons that is made a party. When a party desires to raise an issue as to the legal existence of any party or the capacity of any party to sue or be sued or the authority of a party to sue or be sued in a representative capacity, he shall do so by specific negative averment, which shall include such supporting particulars as are peculiarly within the pleader's knowledge.

(b) Fraud, Mistake, Condition of the Mind. In all averments of fraud, mistake, duress or undue influence, the circumstances constituting fraud, mistake, duress or undue influence shall be stated with particularity. Malice, intent, knowledge and other conditions of mind of a person may be averred generally.

(c) Conditions Precedent. In pleading the performance or occurrence of conditions precedent, it is sufficient to aver generally that all conditions precedent have been performed or have occurred. A denial of performance or occurrence shall be made specifically and with particularity.

(d) Official Document or Act. In pleading an official document or official act, it is sufficient to aver that the document was issued or the act done in compliance with law.

(e) Judgment. In pleading a judgment or decision of a domestic or foreign court, judicial or quasi-judicial tribunal, or of a board or officer, it is sufficient to aver the judgment or decision without setting forth matter showing jurisdiction to render it.

(f) Time and Place. For the purpose of testing the sufficiency of a pleading, averments of time and place are material and shall be considered like all other averments of material matter.

(g) Special Damage. When items of special damage are claimed, they shall be specifically stated.

(h) Allocation of Nonparty Fault; Notice.

(1) In an action for personal injury, medical injury, wrongful death, or property damage, a defending party seeking to allocate fault to a nonparty pursuant to Ark. Code Ann. § 16-61-202(c) or any other statute providing a substantive right to do so shall give notice as provided in paragraph (2) of this subdivision. This requirement does not apply with respect to a nonparty who has entered into a settlement agreement with the claimant.

(2) Notice shall be given in the initial responsive pleading, if the factual and legal basis upon which fault can be allocated is then known, or in an amended or supplemental pleading subject to the requirements and conditions of Rule 15 after the party discovers that information. The pleading shall:

(A) sufficiently identify the nonparty to permit service of process, regardless whether service can be made or the court has in personam jurisdiction over the nonparty; and

(B) state in ordinary and concise language facts showing that the nonparty is at fault for the personal injury, medical injury, wrongful death, or property damage alleged by the claimant.

(3) A party served with a pleading that identifies a nonparty pursuant to this subdivision may, within 30 days after service, file an amended pleading pursuant to Rule 15 stating a claim against the nonparty.

(4) A party may not seek to allocate fault to a nonparty pursuant to Rules 49(c) or 52(a)(2) except by compliance with this subdivision (h). This subdivision does not prohibit a party from introducing evidence on any issue.

HISTORY: Amended August 7, 2014, effective January 1, 2015.

Reporter's Notes to Rule 9:

1. With certain exceptions, Rule 9 substantially follows FRCP 9. Few changes in Arkansas law are effected by this rule. Section (a) requires that any party desiring to raise an issue as to the capacity or authority of a party do so by specific, negative averment. This is closely akin to superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. 27-1121 (2) (Repl. 1962) which provided that an allegation as to the status of a party was taken as admitted unless specifically denied. While lack of authority or capacity is not treated as an affirmative defense under the Federal Rule, it is analogous to an affirmative defense in that the objection is waived unless specifically asserted. Summers v. Interstate Tractor & Equipment Co., 446 F.2d 42 (C.C.A. 9th, 1972); Carver v. Hooker, 369 F. Supp. 204 (D.C., N.H., 1973).

2. Omitted in Section (a) is the provision found in FRCP 9(a) which requires that capacity or status of a party be alleged when required to show the court's jurisdiction. This provision does not appear to be necessary under Arkansas practice, particularly in view of Rule 8(a)(1) which requires a statement of the grounds upon which venue and jurisdiction depend.

3. Section (b) adds the requirement not found in FRCP 9(b) that duress or undue influence be plead with particularity. This is in keeping with prior Arkansas law. Jansen v. Blissenbach, 210 Ark. 22, 193 S.W.2d 814 (1946); Ledwidge v. Taylor, 200 Ark. 447, 139 S.W.2d 238 (1940).

4. Section (c) is generally in accord with prior Arkansas law. Superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. 27-1147 (Repl. 1962) required that in pleading the performance of a condition precedent in a contract, a party need only state generally that he had performed all conditions on his part. This rule is broader in scope and applies to all actions, whether contractual or not. It should have the effect of removing such requirements as pleading notice of breach of warranty as a condition precedent to maintaining such a claim. L.A. Green Seed Co. of Arkansas v. Williams, 246 Ark. 463, 438 S.W.2d 717 (1969).

5. Section (e) is essentially the same as superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. 27-1146 (Repl. 1962) and does not affect any changes in Arkansas law.

6. Section (f) provides that the allegations as to time and place are material as opposed to the old common law rule which treated them as immaterial and thus subject to variance at the trial. The purpose of this provision is to enable a party to raise such defenses as statute of limitations and laches based upon dates alleged by the opposing party. See Wright & Miller, Federal Practice & Procedure, Section 1308. In short, a party is bound by the dates and places alleged in his pleadings.

7. Section (g) follows the common law rule that special damages must be pleaded specifically. Arkansas has recognized this rule, but has not always adhered to it. Arkansas Power & Light Co. v. Harper, 249 Ark. 606, 460 S.W.2d 75 (1970); Ark-La Gas Co. v. McGaughey Bros., Inc., 250 Ark. 1083, 468 S.W.2d 754 (1971).

8. Omitted from Rule 9 is Section (h) of FRCP 9 which deals with admiralty and maritime claims under federal law.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 2014 amendment:

New subdivision (h) creates the exclusive procedural mechanism for asserting the right to an allocation of nonparty fault created by Ark. Code Ann. § 16-61-202(c), as amended by Act 1116 of 2013, § 3, or by any other statute. Other states have placed similar provisions in their rules that govern the pleading of special matters. E.g., Mich. Ct. Rule 2.112(k); Utah R. Civ. P. 9(l). Subdivision (h) draws in part on those rules and on Section 2 of Act 649 of 2003, codified at Ark. Code Ann. § 16-55-202, which was held unconstitutional on separation-of-powers grounds in Johnson v. Rockwell Automation, Inc., 2009 Ark. 241, 308 S.W.3d 135.

Under subdivision (h), a defendant asserts a contribution claim for allocation of nonparty fault in an answer or amended answer. By contrast, a defendant seeking contribution for damages may bring a third-party claim against a nonparty under Rule 14 or a cross-claim against a co-party under Rule 13. The procedural section of the Uniform Contribution Among Tortfeasors Act, Ark. Code Ann. § 16-61-207, is inconsistent with Rule 9(h) and in some respects with Rules 13 and 14. Therefore, section 16-61-207 is superseded pursuant to Ark. Code Ann. § 16-11-301.

Notice under Rule 9(h) is necessary if a nonparty's fault is to be considered by the trier of fact. See 2014 Amendments to Rules 49 and 52. Under paragraph (h)(1), however, the notice requirement does not apply if a nonparty has settled with the claimant. When there has been a settlement, there is no need for notice in light of Ark. Code Ann. § 16-61-204(d), which provides that "the remaining defendants are entitled to a determination by the finder of fact of the released joint tortfeasor's pro rata share of responsibility for the injured person's damages."

Under paragraph (h)(2), notice must be given in the defending party's original responsive pleading, if the necessary information is then available, or in an amended or supplemental pleading under Rule 15. Unlike former section 16-55-202, under which notice could be given no later than 120 days before the trial date, paragraph (h)(2) contains no deadline. Although Rule 15 allows amended and supplemental pleadings as a matter of right, the court may, on motion, strike the amended or supplemental pleading or grant a continuance if it determines that "prejudice would result or the disposition of the cause would be unduly delayed."

Paragraph (h)(2)(A) requires that nonparties be identified in sufficient detail to permit service of process, even though service cannot be made and the court lacks in personam jurisdiction. This requirement guards against the practice of naming so-called "phantom tortfeasors." See Brown v. Wal-Mart Discount Cities, 12 S.W.3d 785 (Tenn. 2000). Paragraph (2)(B) parallels Ark. R. Civ. P. 8(a) in requiring the same fact pleading necessary in a complaint. The requirement in former section 16-55-202- "a brief statement of the basis for believing the nonparty to be at fault"-was uncertain in scope but well short of the factpleading standard.

Paragraph (h)(3) permits any party, within 30 days after being served with a pleading that identifies a nonparty, to amend his or her pleadings to assert a claim against the nonparty. Paragraph (h)(4) makes plain that the procedure set out in subdivision (h) is the exclusive method for allocation of nonparty fault under Rules 49(c) and 52(a)(2). It also emphasizes, as should be clear from the context, that subdivision (h) has nothing whatsoever to do with the admissibility of evidence. For example, defense counsel remain free to introduce evidence of proximate causation with respect to a nonparty in the course of raising the so-called "empty chair" defense.

CASE NOTES

Averments.

Appellant's argument for reversal, based upon the false premise that the circuit-court complaint, which failed to aver circumstances constituting the alleged fraud with particularity, raised claims in tort or fraud, held without merit. Wordlaw v. Laster, 323 Ark. 30, 912 S.W.2d 924 (1996).

Court of appeals did not need to decide whether appellants' claims for "economic loss" were covered by the Uniform Commercial Code, Ark. Code Ann. § 4-2-725, instead of the Arkansas Product Liability Act, Ark. Code Ann. § 16-116-103, because appellants failed to plead or present evidence as to its lost profits or lost goodwill, matters that had to be specifically pled under subdivision (g) of this rule. IC Corp. v. Hoover Treated Wood Prods., 2011 Ark. App. 589, 385 S.W.3d 880 (2011).

Capacity.

Although this rule provides that lack of capacity must be by specific negative averment, it does not provide that the defense is waived if not asserted in the first response to the complaint. Tribco Mfg. Co. v. People's Bank of Imboden, 67 Ark. App. 268, 998 S.W.2d 756 (1999).

Fraud.

Constructive fraud was insufficiently pled under this rule to establish venue pursuant to § 16-60-113(b). Evans Indus. Coatings, Inc. v. Chancery Court, 315 Ark. 728, 870 S.W.2d 701 (1994).

Where plaintiff alleged that he was not provided an accounting or paid funds, in violation of the terms of his agreement, that was an allegation of a broken promise, was clearly conclusory, and was insufficient as an allegation of actual fraud. Evans Indus. Coatings, Inc. v. Chancery Court, 315 Ark. 728, 870 S.W.2d 701 (1994).

Subsequent to entering into a release and retirement agreement with a store's employee, who was acting as a corporate officer, the store discovered that the employee allegedly misappropriated the store's cash and property; the allegations that the employee breached his fiduciary duty to the corporation, and that the agreement and the release were fraudulently induced, were sufficiently pleaded to withstand the employee's motion to dismiss. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v. Coughlin, 369 Ark. 365, 255 S.W.3d 424 (2007).

Property owners' fraud claims were properly dismissed where they failed to offer facts substantiating their theory that documents discovered in 2014 implicated a land surveyor's involvement in fraud nor did they allege how they relied on the survey. Watkins v. Ark. Dep't of Agric., 2018 Ark. App. 460, 560 S.W.3d 814 (2018).

Nonparty Fault.

In a medical malpractice action, the circuit court's order striking portions of the defendants' amended answers in which they sought to allocate fault to a nonparty, the infant's mother, pursuant to subsection (h) of this rule, was affirmed. The defendants did not amend their answers until one month before trial.

Their contention that both the factual and legal bases were unknown until the completion of discovery in the days leading up to the filing of the amended answers was not substantiated by the record. Johnson v. Bradley, 2019 Ark. App. 427, 586 S.W.3d 211 (2019).

Circuit court properly declined to impose a requirement that the legal basis to assert the fault of another person—a layperson—had to be established by expert testimony. The circuit court did not abuse its discretion by finding that the legal basis of an allegation of nonparty fault against the mother could be borne out of her own testimony and the testimony of the emergency-room physician that the mother failed to follow discharge instructions, both of which had been revealed early in discovery. Johnson v. Bradley, 2019 Ark. App. 427, 586 S.W.3d 211 (2019).

In striking portions of the amended answers of the hospital, doctor, and nurse, the circuit court properly found that prejudice would have resulted if they were allowed, that the disposition of the cause would have been unduly delayed, and that a conflict would have ensued only shortly before trial with respect to counsel for the child's estate. Johnson v. Bradley, 2019 Ark. App. 427, 586 S.W.3d 211 (2019).

Special Damages.

In a breach of warranty and contract action, defendant claimed the trial court erred in permitting evidence of plaintiff's lost profits because they were special damages which were required to be specifically pled, which plaintiff failed to do; however, assuming that lost profits were special damages, the parties tried the issue without objection and, thus, the complaint was properly amended to conform to the proof so as to allege special damages. Neste Polyester, Inc. v. Burnett, 92 Ark. App. 413, 214 S.W.3d 882 (2005).

Rule 10. Form of pleadings.

(a) Caption; Names of Parties; Contact Information. Every pleading shall contain a caption setting forth the name of the court, the title of the action, the case number and a designation as in Rule 7(a). In the complaint, the title of the action shall include the names of all the parties, but in other pleadings, it is sufficient to state the name of the first party on each side with an appropriate indication of other parties. To the extent the following information is available, all pleadings shall contain the name, bar number, mailing address, telephone number, fax number and email address of the attorney signing the pleading, or of the party if self-represented.

(b) Paragraphs; Separate Statements. All averments of claim or defense shall be made in numbered paragraphs, the contents of each of which shall be limited as far as practicable to a statement of a single set of circumstances; and a paragraph may be referred to by number in all succeeding pleadings. Each claim founded upon a separate transaction or occurrence and each defense other than denials shall be stated in a separate count or defense.

(c) Adoption by Reference; Exhibits. Statements in a pleading may be adopted by reference in a different part of the same pleading or in another pleading or in any motion. A copy of any written instrument which is an exhibit to a pleading is a part thereof for all purposes.

(d) Required Exhibits. A copy of any written instrument or document upon which a claim or defense is based shall be attached as an exhibit to the pleading in which such claim or defense is averred unless good cause is shown for its absence in such pleading.

HISTORY: Amended June 21, 2018, effective September 1, 2018.

Reporter's Notes to Rule 10:

1. Section (a) of Rule 10 is identical to FRCP 10(a) and generally follows prior Arkansas law. Superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. 27-1113 (Repl. 1962) dealt with captions in complaints and superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. 27-1121 (Repl. 1962) dealt with captions in answers. Also, the use of only one plaintiff, defendant or other party when there are multiple parties was previously permitted by superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. 27-1121 (1) (Repl. 1962).

2. Section (b) is identical to FRCP 10(b) with the exception of the omission of the phrase "whenever a separation facilitates the clear presentation of the matters set forth" found in the second sentence. This rule makes it mandatory that each claim founded upon a separate transaction or occurrence and each defense other [than] denials be stated in separate counts or defenses. This is consistent with the requirements contained in superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. 27-1114 (Repl. 1962) and superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. 27-1121 (4) (Repl. 1962).

3. The purpose of Section (c) is to permit the incorporation by reference of prior allegations and thus encourage short and concise pleadings.

4. Section (d) marks a deviation from FRCP 10 in that the attachment of exhibits is here made mandatory unless good cause is stated in the pleading to justify their absence. This provision is similar to superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. 27-1144 (Repl. 1962), except there is no requirement here that the best evidence of a written instrument be filed in the absence of the original. No attempt has been made by the Committee to define good cause which justifies the failure to attach an exhibit to a pleading; instead, the courts are given the discretion to make such determination. It is the intent, however, that exhibits should be attached to pleadings in all but exceptional cases.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 2018 amendment:

Rule 10(a) was amended by adding a new final sentence specifying that to the extent the information is available, all pleadings are to contain the name, bar number, mailing address, telephone number, fax number and email address of the attorney or the self-represented party signing the pleading. The rule does not apply to information the attorney or self-represented party may not have, for example a fax number, email address, or bar number (self-represented). The same information requirement also applies to motions and other papers. See Ark. R. Civ. P. 7(b)(3).

CASE NOTES

Adoption by Reference.

Although plaintiff lacked standing to sue when she filed the original complaint because she had not yet been appointed the administrator of decedent's estate and she was not the sole heir, upon being appointed administrator six days later, she was deemed to be a new party when she filed the timely amended complaint; the original complaint remained a document setting out allegations satisfying the fact-pleading requirements for a complaint set out in Ark. R. Civ. P. 8(a)(1) and the facts pled in the original complaint were adopted by reference under subsection (c) of this rule into the amended complaint. Hackelton v. Malloy, 364 Ark. 469, 221 S.W.3d 353 (2006).

Attachments.

Because a general contractor and its surety sought to hold a subcontractor liable for contractual obligations in a contract that was not attached to the complaint or amended complaint, but was attached only to the second amended complaint, and no good cause for failure to attach the contract was alleged, the requirements of subsection (d) of this rule were not met. Ray & Sons Masonry Contrs., Inc. v. United States Fid. & Guar. Co., 353 Ark. 201, 114 S.W.3d 189 (2003).

Trial court erred in awarding summary judgment to a debtor in a company's action to recover the balance due on a credit card account where the company did not violate subsection (d) of this rule by failing to attach to the complaint individual charge slips signed by the debtor; the complaint was accompanied by numerous documents on which its claim was based. Cavalry SPV, LLC v. Anderson, 99 Ark. App. 309, 260 S.W.3d 331 (2007).

Subsection (d) of this rule does not require a party to attach to its complaint each and every document that may lend support to its claim. Cavalry SPV, LLC v. Anderson, 99 Ark. App. 309, 260 S.W.3d 331 (2007).

In a nursing home negligence action, appellants preserved the right to plead arbitration, despite not attaching the arbitration agreement to their answer, because appellants did attach the agreement to their motion to compel, in accordance with subsection (d) of this rule, filed the motion to compel within three months of the commencement of litigation, and there was no prejudice to appellee. Advocat, Inc. v. Heide, 2010 Ark. App. 826, 378 S.W.3d 779 (2010).

Creditor's appeal was dismissed for the appellate court's lack of jurisdiction due to the absence of a final order because (1) the trial court conditionally ordered that the creditor's complaint and amended complaint would be dismissed if the creditor did not produce the parties' contract, so the court did not unequivocally dismiss the complaints, and (2) no subsequent order dismissed the complaints, so the complaints remained pending. Unifund CCR Partners v. Thornton, 2013 Ark. App. 92 (2013).

In a credit card debt dispute, a trial court erred by entering an order of dismissal because an amended complaint should have related back to the filing of the original complaint, thereby curing any defects by complying with the civil procedure rule that dealt with the attachment of a required document. The amendment to the complaint amounted to compliance with the rule, good cause did not have to be given for noncompliance, and it was error for the trial court to dismiss when there was no determination of undue delay or prejudice. Gemini Capital Group, LLC v. McFarland, 2014 Ark. App. 83 (2014).

Exhibits.

Trial court did not err by admitting documents to rebut the assertion that an estate had an interest in a partnership because the fact that the exhibits were not appended to a pleading did not mean that they were inadmissible; further, there was no showing that an executor was prejudiced by the trial court's decision to admit the documents. Harrison v. Harrison, 82 Ark. App. 521, 120 S.W.3d 144 (2003).

In a construction case, a trial court did not err by not dismissing a complaint for failure to attach a contract as an exhibit under subsection (d) of this rule because a construction company failed to act diligently, failed to timely file a motion, and waived its right by its own conduct to demand dismissal. No prejudice resulted from the failure to attach the contract as it was authored by the construction company. D & D Parks Constr., Co. v. Martin, 414 S.W.3d 402 (Ark. Ct. App. 2012).

Plaintiff failed to state a claim for invasion of privacy by public disclosure of private facts, arising from the release of juvenile investigative records, where he had not attached the investigative reports upon which his complaint was based as exhibits to the complaint, as required by subsection (d) of this rule; thus, there was no way to know what information was contained in the reports and whether they contained private facts. Duggar v. City of Springdale, 2020 Ark. App. 220, 599 S.W.3d 672 (2020).

Names of Parties.

Order granting judgment on the pleadings in favor of a city, county, and others in a 42 U.S.C.S. § 1983 wrongful death action was affirmed as, when the original complaint was filed, the plaintiff, the decedent's daughter, was not yet the administratrix of the estate and the caption did not list the heirs individually, as required by Fed. R. Civ. P. 10(a) and subsection (a) of this rule; the complaint did not identify the heirs as parties and did not meet the requirements of § 16-62-102(b), thus, the daughter lacked standing to sue. Williams v. Bradshaw, 459 F.3d 846 (8th Cir. 2006).

Status as an undocumented immigrant alone was not enough to permit a party to proceed anonymously because unlawful or problematic immigration status is simply not the type of personal information of the utmost intimacy that warranted abandoning the presumption of openness in judicial proceedings. Doe v. Weiss, 2010 Ark. 150 (2010).

Circuit court did not abuse its discretion in denying a qualified trust beneficiary's motion to dismiss the complaint brought by the trustee in a trust administration case, when the beneficiary argued that the caption failed to comply with this rule because it did not contain the names of the parties (the trustee and the beneficiaries), but only the name of the trust. Hamilton v. Bank of the Ozarks, 2019 Ark. App. 76, 571 S.W.3d 53 (2019).

Rule 11. Signing of pleadings, motions, and other papers; sanctions.

(a) Signature. Except as provided in Rule 87 of these rules, every pleading, written motion, and other paper of a party represented by an attorney shall be signed by at least one attorney of record in his or her individual name. A self-represented person shall sign his or her pleading, motion, or other paper. Except when otherwise specifically provided by rule or statute, pleadings need not be verified or accompanied by affidavit.

(b) Certificate. The signature of an attorney or party constitutes a certificate by the signatory that to the best of his or her knowledge, information, and belief, formed after an inquiry reasonable under the circumstances:

(1) the pleading, motion, or other paper is not interposed for any improper purpose, such as to harass, cause unnecessary delay, or needlessly increase the cost of litigation;

(2) the claims, defenses, and other legal contentions are warranted by existing law or by a nonfrivolous argument for extending, modifying, or reversing existing law or for establishing new law;

(3) the factual contentions have evidentiary support;

(4) the denials of factual contentions are warranted on the evidence or, if specifically so identified, are reasonably based on belief or a lack of information;

(5) when a party's claim or affirmative defense may only be established in whole or in part by expert testimony, the party has consulted with at least one expert, or has learned in discovery of the opinion of at least one expert, who (i) is believed to be competent under Ark. R. Evid. 702 to express an opinion in the action and (ii) concludes on the basis of the available information that there is a reasonable basis to assert the claim or affirmative defense; and

(6) the pleading, motion, or other paper complies with the requirements of Rule 5(c)(2) regarding redaction of confidential information from case records submitted to the court.

(c) Sanctions. (1) If a pleading, motion, or other paper is not signed, it shall be stricken unless it is signed promptly after the omission is called to the attention of the pleader or movant. If a pleading, motion, or other paper is signed in violation of this rule, the court, upon motion or upon its own initiative, shall impose upon any attorney or party who violated this rule an appropriate sanction.

(2) Sanctions that may be imposed for violations of this rule include, but are not limited to:

(A) an order dismissing a claim or action;

(B) an order striking a pleading or motion;

- (C) an order entering judgment by default;
- (D) an order to pay to the other party or parties the amount of the reasonable expenses incurred because of the filing of the pleading, motion, or other paper, including a reasonable attorney's fee;
- (E) an order to pay a penalty to the court;
- (F) an order awarding damages attributable to the delay or misconduct;
- (G) an order referring an attorney to the Supreme Court Committee on Professional Conduct or the appropriate disciplinary body of another state.

(3) The court's order imposing a sanction shall describe the sanctioned conduct and explain the basis for the sanction. If a monetary sanction is imposed, the order shall explain how it was determined.

(4) The court shall not impose a monetary sanction against a party for violating subdivision (b)(2), on its own initiative, unless it issued the show-cause order under subdivision (c)(6) before voluntary dismissal or settlement of the claims made by or against the party that is, or whose attorneys are, to be sanctioned.

(5) A motion for sanctions under this rule shall be made separately from other motions or requests and shall describe the specific conduct alleged to violate subdivision (b). It shall be served as provided in Rule 5 but shall not be filed with or presented to the court unless, within 21 days after service of the motion, or such other period as the court may prescribe, the challenged paper, claim, defense, contention, allegation, or denial is not withdrawn or appropriately corrected. If warranted, the court may award to the party prevailing on the motion the reasonable expenses and attorney's fees incurred in presenting or opposing the motion.

(6) On its own initiative, the court may order an attorney or party to show cause why conduct specifically described in the order has not violated subdivision (b). The order shall afford the attorney or party a reasonable time to respond, but not less than 14 days.

HISTORY: Amended July 1, 1986, effective September 15, 1986; amended November 18, 1996, effective March 1, 1997; amended October 23, 2008, effective January 1, 2009; amended February 26, 2015, effective April 1, 2015; amended December 14, 2017; amended June 21, 2018, effective September 1, 2018.

Reporter's Notes to Rule 11:

- 1. With minor changes, Rule 11 is substantially identical to FRCP 11. Omitted from Rule 11 is the provision in the Federal Rule which abolished the old equity rule as to quantum of proof required where an answer is under oath. Arkansas has not followed this rule; therefore, there is no need to have a provision which abolished it.
- 2. Superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. 27-1105 (Repl. 1962) required that a complaint, answer and reply be verified. Under Rule 11, only those few pleadings and motions specifically required by these rules to be verified need be verified. Under this and the Federal Rule, verification of pleadings is the exception and not the rule.
- 3. Under FRCP 11, the signature of an attorney to a pleading amounts to an affirmation

- that he believes the pleading to have merit. Russo v. Sofia Bros., Inc., 2 F.R.D. 1 (D.C. N.Y., 1941). It is a breach of an attorney's duty to file pleadings which create issues that counsel does not believe to have basis in fact. Arena v. Luckenbach Steamship Co., 279 F.2d 186 (C.C.A. 1st, 1960).
 - 4. Omitted from Rule 11 are the words "as sham and false" found in FRCP 11. These words do not add any particular import to the rule, hence their omission. Also, the word "served" as used in FRCP 11 has been deleted and the word "filed" substituted therefor.
- Addition to Reporter's Notes, 1986 Amendment:
- Rule 11 has been completely rewritten. It is now substantially identical to Federal Rule 11, as amended in 1983. As adopted in 1979, Arkansas Rule 11 was virtually identical to its federal counterpart, providing for the striking of pleadings and imposition of disciplinary sanctions to check abuses in the signing of pleadings. Experience under original Rule 11 in the federal courts demonstrated that the rule was not effective in deterring abuses, and confusion existed as to the circumstances that could trigger striking a pleading or taking disciplinary action, the standard of conduct expected of attorneys who sign pleadings and other papers, and the range of available sanctions. The amended rule is intended to reduce the reluctance of the courts to impose sanctions by emphasizing the responsibilities of the attorney and reinforcing those obligations by the imposition of sanctions.

As amended, Rule 11 expressly applied to pleadings, motions, and other papers. It therefore includes discovery requests, discovery motions, and any other paper that must be filed and served under Rule 5, Ark. R. Civ. P. Moreover, amended Rule 11 provides that, in addition to disciplinary sanctions, the trial judge may impose other sanctions upon an offending attorney, including a reasonable attorney's fee for the opposing party. The assessment of attorney's fees for violation of procedural rules is currently found in other Rules of Civil Procedure, e.g., Rules 37(a)-(d), 56(g), and 26(b) & (c).

Amended Rule 11 states that the signature of an attorney constitutes a certificate by him "that to the best of his knowledge, information and belief formed after reasonable inquiry, it is well grounded in fact and is warranted by existing law or a good faith argument for the extension, modification or reversal of existing law." This language is substantially stronger than in the former rule. In addition, the recently adopted Arkansas Rules of Professional Conduct emphasize that a lawyer may not ethically bring or defend a proceeding or an issue unless there is a basis for doing so that is not frivolous, which includes a good faith argument for an extension, modification or reversal of existing law. See Rule 3.1, Arkansas Rules of Professional Conduct.

Under the former version of Rule 11, the signature of an attorney certified that the suit or motion was not interposed for purposes of delay. The new rule is broader in stating that the pleading, motion or other paper "is not interposed for any improper purpose such as to harass or to cause unnecessary delay or needless increase in the cost of litigation." This provision is consistent with the newly adopted ethical rules. For example, Rule 3.2 of the Arkansas Rules of Professional Conduct provides that a lawyer "shall make reasonable efforts to expedite litigation consistent with the interest of the client."

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 1997 Amendment:

The rule has been amended by designating the former text as subdivision (a) and by adding new subdivision (b), which is based [on] Rule 11(c) (1) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, as amended in 1993. In addition, the second sentence of subdivision (a) has been revised to require a party not represented by counsel to provide his telephone number, if any, along with his address.

New subdivision (b) provides that requests for sanctions must be made as a separate motion, rather than simply be included as an additional prayer for relief in another motion. The motion for sanctions is not to be filed until at least 21 days, or other such period as the court may set, after being served. If the alleged violation is corrected during this period, the motion should not be filed with the court. This provision is intended to provide a type of "safe harbor" against motions under Rule 11 in that a party will not be subject to sanctions on the basis of another party's motion unless, after receiving the motion, it refuses to withdraw that position or to acknowledge candidly that it does not currently have evidence to support a specified allegation.

To emphasize the seriousness of a motion for sanctions and to define precisely the conduct claimed to violate the rule, the new subdivision provides that the "safe harbor" period begins to run only upon service of the motion. In most cases, however, counsel should be expected to give informal notice to the other party, whether in person or by a letter or telephone call, of a potential violation before proceeding to prepare and serve a Rule 11 motion.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 2008 Amendment:

Subdivision (a) has been amended by adding a new element to the certifications made by a pro se party or an attorney when that person signs a pleading, motion, or other paper. The attorney or party is now also certifying compliance with Administrative Order 19's mandate for redaction of necessary and relevant confidential information in the case record being filed. The incorporation of Administrative Order 19's mandate here gives the circuit court a ready method for enforcing this mandate.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 2015 Amendment:

The amendment reorganizes and clarifies the rule. Several revisions are based on language in Ark. R. App. P.—Civ. 11, which applies when frivolous appeals are taken or other misconduct occurs at the appellate level. Other changes are based on Fed. R. Civ. P. 11, but overall this rule differs significantly from its federal counterpart.

With the adoption of these revisions, section 21 of the Civil Justice Reform Act of 2003, codified at Ark. Code Ann. § 16-114-209, is superseded pursuant to Ark. Code Ann. § 16-11-301. The Supreme Court invalidated a portion of the statute in Summerville v. Thrower, 369 Ark. 231, 253 S.W.3d 415 (2007).

Subdivision (b) of the revised rule, which describes the certification made by the person who signs a pleading, motion, or paper, does not substantially change current law. It is based on the federal rule but modified to reflect the requirement of fact pleading under the Arkansas rules. Also, subsection (b)(5) makes plain that an attorney or a party certifies that he or she has consulted with and obtained an opinion from an expert, or learned the opinion of an expert in discovery, as to the reasonableness of a claim or affirmative defense, which may only be established, in whole or in part, by expert testimony. This provision replaces the affidavit requirement for medical injury cases invalidated in Summerville v. Thrower, supra, but is not limited to cases of that type.

As under former Rule 11(a), subdivision (c)(1) requires the trial court to impose “an appropriate sanction” upon finding that the rule has been violated. Subdivision (c)(2) sets out a non-exclusive list of seven sanctions, six of which are identical or analogous to those in Ark. R. App. P.—Civ. 11(c). The other sanction, referring counsel to the Committee on Professional Conduct, is clearly within the power of the trial court. See Ligon v. Stilley, 2010 Ark. 418, 371 S.W.3d 615. The introductory clause in subdivision (c)(2) is taken from Ark. R. App. P.—Civ. 11(c) and does not limit a sanction to that sufficient to serve as a deterrent. Compare Fed. R. Civ. P. 11(c)(4) (sanction “must be limited to what suffices to deter repetition of the conduct or comparable conduct by others similarly situated”).

In Crockett & Brown v. Wilson, 321 Ark. 150, 901 S.W.2d 826 (1995), the Supreme Court held that an order imposing monetary sanctions under Rule 11 must explain the basis for the trial court’s decision. This requirement, the court said, is necessary for effective judicial review. Id. at 159, 901 S.W.2d at 830. Because this rationale applies whether the sanction is monetary or nonmonetary, subdivision (c)(3) requires an explanation regardless of the sanction imposed. It also leaves intact the additional requirement from Crockett & Brown that the order must explain the manner by which the amount of a monetary sanction is determined. Id. at 159, 901 S.W.2d at 830-31 (listing the factors to be considered).

Under former Rule 11(a), the trial court could act “upon its own initiative” to impose sanctions, without waiting for a motion. However, the rule was silent as to the appropriate procedure. Subdivision (c)(6), which is based on Ark. R. App. P.—Civ. 11(d), fills this gap. See also Fed. R. Civ. P. 11(c)(3).

Addition to Reporter’s Notes, 2017 Amendment:

Subdivision (a) was amended to add, “Except as provided in Rule 87 of these rules,” upon the adoption of Rule 87.

Addition to Reporter’s Notes, 2018 Amendment:

Rule 11(a) was amended to delete references to addresses. Addresses and other contact information that are required to be stated in pleadings, motions and other papers are more appropriately addressed in Rule 10. See Ark. R. Civ. P. 10(a).

CASE NOTES

Applicability.

Allegations that petition filed in trial court was in disrespect of and disregarded supreme court’s authority and prior decisions must be addressed to trial court under this rule, and not in a motion filed with the supreme court for sanctions under RAP-Civ 11. Jones v. Jones, 329 Ark. 320, 947 S.W.2d 6 (1997).

Authority.

Appellant’s arguments were not warranted by existing law or a good-faith argument for the extension, modification, or reversal of existing law under this rule as appellant cited no authority to support its complaint that a judgment entered on a contempt motion created no condition on the use of the money. Vill. Ventures Realty, Inc. v. Cross, 2011 Ark. App. 655, 386 S.W.3d 598 (2011).

Discovery Violations.

Issue of whether sanctions for discovery violations would be appropriate was not reached in proceeding for sanctions brought under this rule, where court found appellants were not pursuing a claim not reasonably based in fact or law. Chlanda v. Killebrew, 329 Ark. 39, 945 S.W.2d 940 (1997).

Discretion of Court.

The trial court has discretion in determining whether a violation of this rule has occurred. Whetstone v. Chadduck, 316 Ark. 330, 871 S.W.2d 583 (1994); Caplener v. Bluebonnet Milling Co., 322 Ark. 751, 911 S.W.2d 586 (1995).

This rule contemplates some discretion on the part of the trial court in determining what the sanction shall be, but neither the language of the rule nor our prior holdings supports the proposition that a pro se litigant shall be subject to a lesser sanction. Whetstone v. Chadduck, 316 Ark. 330, 871 S.W.2d 583 (1994).

In deciding an appropriate sanction, trial courts have broad discretion not only in determining whether sanctionable conduct has occurred, but also what an appropriate sanction should be. Crockett & Brown v. Wilson, 321 Ark. 150, 901 S.W.2d 826 (1995).

Trial court did not err in admonishing husband about filing frivolous motions and warning him that future frivolous motions would result in an award of attorney's fees to his former wife where he had filed a number of motions and petitions in the instant case and in past proceedings; in fact, the trial court had awarded the wife attorney's fees on at least two prior occasions. Schueller v. Schueller, 86 Ark. App. 347, 185 S.W.3d 107 (2004).

Good Faith.

"Good faith" enters into an attorney error inquiry only when the law relied on is incorrect. Cortinez v. Brighton, 320 Ark. 88, 894 S.W.2d 919 (1995).

Where petitioner's interpretation of a visitation order was reasonable, if not prevailing, and even though she had other avenues of relief apart from filing a contempt motion, she had no improper motives or absence of a factual or legal foundation in making her motion, and therefore the award of attorney's fees as a sanction was improper. Jones v. Jones, 320 Ark. 449, 898 S.W.2d 23 (1995).

Pleadings Privileged.

Statements in pleadings in judicial proceedings are absolutely privileged, even if the statements are false and made maliciously, as long as the statements are relevant and pertinent to the issues raised in the case; the same privilege that extends to pleadings extends to the attorneys who prepare them. Thus, where pleadings charged defendant, a county judge, with misappropriation of county equipment, plaintiffs and their attorney were immune from liability for libel. Pogue v. Cooper, 284 Ark. 202, 680 S.W.2d 698 (1984).

Purpose.

The primary purpose of sanctions set out by this rule is to deter future litigation abuse, and the award of attorney's fees is but one of several methods of achieving this goal. Hodges v. Cannon, 68 Ark. App. 170, 5 S.W.3d 89 (1999).

Review.

Notwithstanding the language in Ark. R. Civ. P. 52 that makes findings of fact and conclusions of law unnecessary in decisions on motions, the better practice is for the trial court to give an explanation of its decision on motions filed pursuant to this rule sufficient for the appellate courts to review. Bratton v. Gunn, 300 Ark. 140, 777 S.W.2d 219 (1989).

The Supreme Court reviews a trial court's determination of whether a violation of this rule occurred under an abuse of discretion standard. Ward v. Dapper Dan Cleaners & Laundry, Inc., 309 Ark. 192, 828 S.W.2d 833 (1992).

Abstracts of the trial court's sanction ruling are required for an appellate court to determine whether the trial court erred in denying fees and costs pursuant to this rule; appellate courts will not review the record to make this determination. McPeck v. White River Lodge Enters., 325 Ark. 68, 924 S.W.2d 456 (1996).

The court would reject the contention that sanctions were improperly imposed for oral conduct that did not involve the signing of a pleading or document that must be filed, where the appellant filed several notices of appeal which were never perfected with the court of appeals and many postjudgment motions and pleadings while the plaintiff was attempting to execute on a judgment for which the appellant had no authority from his client to file. Williams v. Martin, 335 Ark. 163, 980 S.W.2d 248 (1998).

In challenging the denial of sanctions in a workers' compensation proceeding, appellant was ordered to submit a substituted brief that contained an abstract of the hearing denying his motion for sanctions because it was apparent that the hearing held on appellant's motion was not abstracted in accordance with Ark. Sup. Ct. & Ct. App. R. 4-2(a)(8); a copy of the transcript from the hearing was improperly included in the addendum. Calaway v. Dickson, 360 Ark. 463, 201 S.W.3d 931 (2005).

Debtor's cross-appeal of her denied motion for sanctions was dismissed because the appeal was permitted on an interlocutory basis only to address issues related to the denial of a motion to compel arbitration; the denial of a motion for sanctions does not fall within the purview of that type of interlocutory appeal, and thus, that issue was beyond the scope of the limited appeal. Asset Acceptance, LLC v. Newby, 2014 Ark. 280, 437 S.W.3d 119 (2014).

Appeal of an order imposing sanctions on a plaintiff and counsel was dismissed because under the particular facts the order was not final, as (1) the sanction was not reduced to a sum certain, and (2) the dismissal of the case was part of the sanction, as the case was dismissed when the trial court held that pleadings were submitted in violation of this rule, and thus there was no basis for dismissal independent of the sanction itself. McHughes v. Wayland, 2019 Ark. 143, 572 S.W.3d 861 (2019).

Sanctions.

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying motion for sanctions. Miles v. Southern, 297 Ark. 274, 760 S.W.2d 868 (1988); Jenkins v. Goldsby, 307 Ark. 558, 822 S.W.2d 842 (1992); Miller v. Leathers, 311 Ark. 372, 843 S.W.2d 850 (1992).

The imposition of sanctions is a serious matter to be handled with circumspection, and the trial court's decision is due substantial deference. Jenkins v. Goldsby, 307 Ark. 558, 822 S.W.2d 842 (1992).

Where counsel need only to have checked the pocket part of volume 16 of the Arkansas Code to discover that the prejudgment attachment provisions, §§ 16-110-104 to 16-110-111 [repealed], had been ruled unconstitutional, counsel failed to make a reasonable inquiry into the applicable law prior to signing plaintiff's petition for prejudgment attachment, and the trial court abused its discretion in denying defendant's motion for sanctions under this rule. Ward v. Dapper Dan Cleaners & Laundry, Inc., 309 Ark. 192, 828 S.W.2d 833 (1992).

When a violation of this rule occurs, the rule makes sanctions mandatory. Ward v. Dapper Dan Cleaners & Laundry, Inc., 309 Ark. 192, 828 S.W.2d 833 (1992).

Where the taxpayer obviously made reasonable inquiry into the law, but in arguing that law below and on appeal, the courts thoroughly disagree with his construction of the applicable constitutional and statutory provisions and the precedents interpreting them, he certainly had a right to urge reversal of certain decisions under this rule. Miller v. Leathers, 311 Ark. 372, 843 S.W.2d 850 (1992).

To obtain an attorney's fee pursuant to § 16-22-309(a)(1), a prevailing party must show there was a complete absence of a justifiable issue of either law or fact raised by the losing party or his attorney; to obtain an attorney's fee or other sanction pursuant to this rule, it must be shown that an attorney or party signed a pleading not grounded in fact, not warranted by existing law, without a good faith argument for a change in the law, or filed for an improper purpose. Cowan v. Schmidle, 312 Ark. 256, 848 S.W.2d 421 (1993).

Imposition of sanction upheld. Brough v. Brough, 41 Ark. App. 211, 850 S.W.2d 337 (1993).

Motions requesting sanctions under this rule are collateral to the merits of the underlying action and do not constitute "claims for relief" as that term is used in Ark. R. Civ. P. 54(b). Spring Creek Living Ctr. Ltd. Partnership v. Sarrett, 318 Ark. 173, 883 S.W.2d 820 (1994).

This rule does not require that the legal theory espoused in a filing prevail. A trial court should not impose sanctions for advocacy of a plausible legal theory, particularly when the law is arguably unclear. Crockett & Brown v. Wilson, 321 Ark. 150, 901 S.W.2d 826 (1995).

Sanctions were not appropriate against attorney who was representing client at the same time she was attempting to take his property by adverse possession. Kinthead v. Estate of Kinthead, 51 Ark. App. 159, 912 S.W.2d 442 (1995).

Sanctions imposed even though the single violation was not that egregious where the overall case had dragged on for twelve years and had been filled with vitriolic allegations, pleadings and hearings. Schwarz v. Moody, 55 Ark. App. 6, 928 S.W.2d 800 (1996).

The trial court properly assessed "additional punitive damages" in imposing sanctions against the appellant to deter future litigation abuse. Williams v. Martin, 335 Ark. 163, 980 S.W.2d 248 (1998).

Jail sentence for an attorney for the attorney's failing to pay a contempt order was voided where the judge plainly, manifestly, and grossly abused his discretion in using criminal contempt as a penalty for the failure to pay the sanctions imposed by the judge in the civil proceeding. Ivy v. Keith, 351 Ark. 269, 92 S.W.3d 671 (2002).

Because it was "patently clear" that the attorney's Pulaski County suit over disputed contingency fees from a former client's settlement with the insurer had no chance of success where the settlement was entered in Cleburne County and the proper venue was in Cleburne County, and because the attorney attempted to manufacture venue by claiming unwarranted costs and expenses, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in imposing sanctions against the attorney under this rule. Pomtree v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 353 Ark. 657, 121 S.W.3d 147 (2003).

Where attorney filed a complaint against county officials on behalf of a taxpayer, and the complaint was identical to a previously litigated complaint against the same parties that had failed, the later complaint was barred by the doctrine of res judicata and the trial court properly imposed sanctions on the attorney for filing a baseless complaint. Parker v. Perry, 355 Ark. 97, 131 S.W.3d 338 (2003).

Judge was required to recuse himself from the sanctions imposed on the attorney under this section because of the judge's obvious bias toward the attorney; among other things, the judge told the attorney that he was not up there to answer his questions, stated that he could do anything because he was the judge, and continuously cut off the attorney when he was speaking. Allen v. Rutledge, 355 Ark. 392, 139 S.W.3d 491 (2003).

Trial court was not justified in assessing sanctions against plaintiff as the issues presented by the litigation were not so simple that the result could or should have been readily ascertainable by plaintiff's counsel when the complaint was filed; although the trial judge ultimately ruled in respondent's favor, the answers to the factual and legal issues presented for the court's consideration were not foregone conclusions without thorough examination. Harrison v. Loyd, 87 Ark. App. 356, 192 S.W.3d 257 (2004).

While appellant did send a letter to appellee on March 17, 2004, which was more than 21 days before the motion for sanctions was filed with the circuit court, that letter was not sufficient to discharge appellant's duties under this rule; although the letter described the specific conduct alleged to violate this rule and was "served" by certified mail, subsection (b) of this rule specifically required that the motion itself be served. Calaway v. Dickson, 361 Ark. 346, 206 S.W.3d 807 (2005).

Award of fees as sanctions was reversed because oral representations could not be the basis for sanctions under this rule; further, in light of the uncertainty in the statutes, the trial court erred in finding that § 18-15-605(b) was inapplicable. City of Fort Smith v. Carter, 364 Ark. 100, 216 S.W.3d 594 (2005).

In a suit filed by an attorney against opposing counsel for sanctions, the trial court's award of sanctions in an amount less than what was proper as this rule did not require attorney's fees to be awarded, and the fees requested by the attorney were not for expenses paid by the attorney to another lawyer, but for his own time; while the attorney did not actually incur these expenses, he would have charged the client for the amount of time he expended defending his own lawsuit. Sanford v. Harris, 367 Ark. 589, 242 S.W.3d 277 (2006).

While an attorney denied ever being hired by a purported client, the purported client's current counsel did not determine whether a complaint against the attorney was well-grounded in fact; because the attorney properly complied with subsection (b) of this rule and was given a "safe harbor" in filing a motion for sanctions, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in granting the motion. Courier v. Woodruff, 2011 Ark. App. 659 (2011).

Trial court abused its discretion in awarding sanctions because its reliance upon the rationale offered in a dissenting opinion was misplaced because it represented an erroneous interpretation of the law as set forth by the Arkansas Supreme Court. City of Little Rock v. Nerhan, 2013 Ark. App. 672, 430 S.W.3d 203 (2013).

Circuit court abused its discretion by imposing sanctions on the attorney because there was no separate motion for sanctions and the attorney was not given notice that sanctions would be addressed. Swindle v. Southern Farm Bureau Cas. Ins. Co., 2015 Ark. 241, 464 S.W.3d 905 (2015).

Where the circuit court imposed a $10,000 penalty under this rule for the city's willful failure to comply with a scheduling order and filing of repeated motions for a continuance, and then in a second order found the city in contempt for failure to pay the penalty within the time prescribed, the city's voluntary payment of the $10,000 sanction rendered an appeal from the first order moot. The city never requested that the circuit court issue a supersedeas, hold the check pending resolution of an appeal of the first order, or anything else, and the city presented no argument that would allow reversal of the second order that was independent of the first order. City of Little Rock v. Circuit Court of Pulaski Cty., 2017 Ark. 219, 521 S.W.3d 113 (2017).

When a motion for sanctions was determined to be improper, the circuit court did not abuse its discretion in requiring counsel to pay attorney's fees under subdivision (c)(5) of this rule as the circuit court explained why the motion was not beneficial to the administration of the estate and was interposed for improper purposes, and it concluded that counsel's improper conduct warranted him bearing the entire cost. Stephens v. Wilson, 2020 Ark. App. 404, 609 S.W.3d 439 (2020).

Circuit court did not abuse its discretion in determining the amount of the attorney's fees (over $33,000) imposed as a sanction. Stephens v. Wilson, 2020 Ark. App. 404, 609 S.W.3d 439 (2020).

Signature by Different Attorney.

The appellants' notice of appeal was not defective because the signature of the attorney was entered by another attorney at the direction of the one whose name was signed, where there was no fraud on the court or any party and no prejudice whatever to the appellees. Sloss v. Farmers Bank & Trust Co., 290 Ark. 304, 719 S.W.2d 273 (1986).

Test.

There is no longer a subjective component to a review of attorney error; the test is an objective one: would the attorney have discovered the mistake of law or fact upon reasonable inquiry? Cortinez v. Brighton, 320 Ark. 88, 894 S.W.2d 919 (1995).

Unsigned Pleading.

Where the original emergency petition for guardianship was not signed, it was unnecessary for the trial court to follow the remedial procedures set out in this rule in this particular case because at the time of the final hearing, when the issue was first raised, the issues related to the facts pled in the unsigned pleading were properly before the trial court and were tried pursuant to the subsequently signed amended petition for guardianship. Reagan v. Dodson, 2016 Ark. App. 598, 509 S.W.3d 654 (2016).

Verification.

Where ex-husband argued that, although the signature on the entry of appearance and waiver, the waiver of corroboration of grounds, and the separation agreement appear to be his, he did not “sign” the waiver and entry of appearance because he signed the verification portion of the document and, therefore, the trial court never acquired jurisdiction over him, the husband still signed a valid entry of appearance when he signed the portion labeled “verification”; there was no requirement under Ark. R. Civ. P. 4(d)(8) or this rule that such entry of appearance be verified and, thus, the language of the verification portion of the document was mere surplusage. Morehouse v. Lawson, 90 Ark. App. 379, 206 S.W.3d 295 (2005).

Pursuant to subsection (a) of this rule and § 5-64-505(g)(4), a party in a civil forfeiture action is required to give a personal verification; therefore, a default judgment was properly entered for the state in a case where an owner’s answer was merely signed by his attorney. Solis v. State, 371 Ark. 590, 269 S.W.3d 352 (2007).

Violation Not Shown.

Where it was obvious from the parties’ arguments, the trial court’s thorough opinion, and the parties’ written briefs on appeal that the plaintiffs made a reasonable inquiry into the facts and law and a good faith argument that defendant had waived its defenses, the defendant failed in meeting the burden of proving a violation of this rule or showing its entitlement to attorney’s fees under § 16-22-309. Farm Bureau Mut. Ins. Co. v. Campbell, 315 Ark. 136, 865 S.W.2d 643 (1993).

Even though supreme court rejected arguments for extension of tort liability to landlords, petitioner had the right to advocate such a change in the law, and the trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying motion for sanctions. Bryant v. Putnam, 322 Ark. 284, 908 S.W.2d 338 (1995).

Fact that complaint was conclusory, standing alone, was not enough to conclude that the trial court abused its discretion in denying sanctions. Hunt v. Riley, 322 Ark. 453, 909 S.W.2d 329 (1995).

Where supreme court determined there were disputed issues of material fact, reversing trial court’s grant of summary judgment, it could not be said that plaintiffs were pursuing a claim not grounded in fact and that defendant was entitled to attorney’s fees under this rule or § 16-22-309. Chlanda v. Killebrew, 329 Ark. 39, 945 S.W.2d 940 (1997).

Although counsel for the opponent of the will should have known that she could not prevail on her complaint seeking to establish the existence of a contract to make a will, an award of sanctions would be reversed since (1) such claim was consolidated with a claim that the decedent lacked testamentary capacity at the time of the execution of the will at issue and such claim had some chance of success, and (2) the length of the trial and amount of attorney fees would not have been significantly affected if the contract claim was not made. Hodges v. Cannon, 68 Ark. App. 170, 5 S.W.3d 89 (1999).

In a dependency and neglect proceeding, the trial court abused its discretion in finding that the attorney for the mother of the child at issue violated the rule where (1) in a motion for recusal, the attorney stated that the trial court referred to the child’s mother as a “murderer” with respect to the bathtub drowning of another child in the family, based on the trial notes of another attorney and his confirmation of those notes through a conversation with that attorney, (2) the attorney retracted the assertion at the outset of the hearing on recusal after he learned that the trial court did not use the word “murderer” and, instead, referred the fact that the child had been “killed,” and (3) a professor at the University of Arkansas School of Law testified that use of the term “killed” rather than “murder” did not change his view that it was proper for the attorney to file a motion to recuse. Ver Weire v. Arkansas Dep’t of Human Servs., 71 Ark. App. 11, 26 S.W.3d 132 (2000).

Where injured person rejected driver’s offer and a jury later found the driver zero percent at fault, the appellate court held the driver’s offer of one dollar was not a bona fide or good faith offer as required to trigger an award of costs under Ark. R. Civ. P. 68 and the trial court erred in granting the driver’s post-trial motion for costs; however, because the law regarding what kind of offer was required to trigger costs was not settled at the time driver made the offer of judgment, injured person’s motion for sanctions was properly denied. Warr v. Williamson, 359 Ark. 234, 195 S.W.3d 903 (2004).

Trial judge abused his discretion by ordering sanctions where the allegations in a motion to recuse were held to be true; the trial judge had an interest in a radio station, which could have been a conflict of interest, the trial judge did not deny having an ex parte communication with a mayor, and the trial judge improperly took a statement regarding judge shopping out of context and relied upon it when making the decision to impose sanctions. Weaver v. City of West Helena, 367 Ark. 159, 238 S.W.3d 74 (2006).

Trial court erred in granting summary judgment and awarding attorney's fees to a caregiver because a beneficiary's affidavits all created a fact question about the testator's susceptibility to undue influence and the caregiver's opportunity to exert undue influence, and the beneficiary's petition to set aside the will was sufficiently grounded in fact and warranted by existing law to avoid the sanction. Beavers v. Williams, 2015 Ark. App. 140 (2015).

Circuit court did not abuse its discretion by denying the request for Ark. R. Civ. P. 11 sanctions where it found no improper motive; it found only that the partner seeking dissolution of the family partnership should have sought her relief in the present case rather than in the additional lawsuit she filed, and the circuit court was in a superior position to evaluate the partner's motives because of its familiarity with the facts and circumstances at play. Hitt v. Lyle, 2020 Ark. App. 124, 596 S.W.3d 540 (2020).

This rule could not support the circuit court's award of attorney's fees, because no motion under the rule was ever filed and the circuit court did not use the fee award as a sanction for a violation of the rule. Shonting v. Connor, 2020 Ark. App. 154, 597 S.W.3d 129 (2020).

Sanctions imposed even though the single violation was not that egregious where the overall case had dragged on for twelve years and had been filled with vitriolic allegations, pleadings and hearings. Schwarz v. Moody, 55 Ark. App. 6, 928 S.W.2d 800 (1996).

Sanction upheld where a series of errors, whether intentional or not, moved beyond mere negligence and entered the realm of harassment and intimidation, and this conduct was prejudicial to the administration of justice. Fink v. Neal, 328 Ark. 646, 945 S.W.2d 916 (1997).

It was an abuse of discretion for the court to award sanctions against the appellant in favor of his former client because the former client was not an "other party" within the meaning of the rule and because of the "safe harbor" amendment to the rule. Williams v. Martin, 335 Ark. 163, 980 S.W.2d 248 (1998).

Because motion to set aside a settlement order was frivolous, sanctions were properly imposed upon appellants and their counsel; appellants sought to set aside settlement order despite having put the settlement on the record of the lower court, agreeing that the entire settlement was on the record, and having the settlement order issued by the lower court track the language of the record. Reeve v. Carroll County, 373 Ark. 584, 285 S.W.3d 242 (2008).

As appellee was required to expend fees in defending an unwarranted breach-of-contract claim that appellant and her attorney should have known was barred by the doctrine of res judicata, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in ordering appellant to pay attorneys fees as a sanction under this rule. Crockett v. C.A.G. Invs., Inc., 2011 Ark. 208, 381 S.W.3d 793 (2011).

Trial court's imposition of sanctions under this rule on a neighbor for the neighbor's act in filing a motion alleging that the judge threw the neighbor's case against a property owner because the judge once dated the neighbor's ex-wife was proper as the motion was not based on belief formed after reasonable inquiry that was well grounded in fact; instead, it was based on the neighbor's subconscious belief that the judge did not like him because he once dated the neighbor's ex-wife. Strother v. Mitchell, 2011 Ark. App. 224, 382 S.W.3d 741 (2011).

Circuit court did not abuse its discretion in imposing sanctions under this rule against an employee for suing two former co-workers due to privileged statements the co-workers gave to their employer during its investigation or during depositions that implicated the employee in selling drugs because the employee could point to no actual damage the co-workers had caused her and, in the complaints and at the hearings, the employee's attorney used extremely inflammatory language about one co-worker that bore scant relation to the substance of the employee's claim for slander. Lancaster v. Red Robin Int'l, Inc., 2011 Ark. App. 706, 386 S.W.3d 662 (2011).

In a foreclosure case involving a construction loan, sanctions against the borrower and guarantor were warranted for asserting counterclaims that were clearly time-barred. Grand Valley Ridge, LLC v. Metro. Nat'l Bank, 2012 Ark. 121, 388 S.W.3d 24 (2012).

Trial court abused its discretion in denying plaintiff's motion for default judgment because the answer filed on behalf of defendant was a nullity under subdivision (a) of this rule and § 16-22-206 as it was not signed by defendant or a person authorized to practice law in Arkansas. Defendant's mother was not authorized to sign the answer on his behalf, and there was nothing in the record to show that she held a valid power of attorney. Because no valid answer was timely filed, a default judgment should have been entered in favor of plaintiff. White v. Clay, 2013 Ark. App. 166 (2013).

Order awarding defendants sanctions under this rule was affirmed because although he filed a timely notice of appeal with respect from the order awarding Rule 11 sanctions, plaintiff could not challenge the determination that he violated this rule because that determination was made in the earlier order from which there was no timely notice of appeal, and plaintiff did not contest the amount of the sanctions imposed, the only issue open to him. Dean Banks v. Riddle, 2013 Ark. App. 334 (2013).

Circuit court did not abuse its discretion in finding that an attorney had violated Ark. R. Civ. P. 11 when he filed a complaint against his client's stepfather where the allegation that a trust had become irrevocable and could only be amended by its own terms for the benefit of its beneficiary, the client, was incorrect, and the claim for conversion was defective because it did not allege that the client was the owner of the money held in an account. McDermott v. Cline, 2019 Ark. App. 472, 588 S.W.3d 144 (2019).

Rule 12. Defenses and objections -- When and how presented -- By pleading or motion -- Motion for judgment on the pleadings.

(a) When Presented.

(1) A defendant shall file his or her answer within 30 days after the service of summons and complaint upon him or her. A defendant served by warning order under Rule 4(g)(3) or (4) shall file an answer within 30 days from the date of first publication or posting of the warning order. A defendant incarcerated in any jail, penitentiary, or other correctional facility in this state shall file an answer within 60 days after service. A party served with a pleading stating a cross-claim or counterclaim against him or her shall file an answer or reply thereto within 30 days after service upon the party. The court may, upon motion of a party, extend the time for filing any responsive pleading.

(2) The filing of a motion permitted under this rule alters these periods of time as follows, unless a different time is fixed by order of the court: (A) if the court denies the motion or postpones its disposition until the trial on the merits, the responsive pleading shall be filed within 10 days after notice of the court's action; (B) if the court grants a motion for a more definite statement, the responsive pleading shall be filed within 10 days after service of the more definite statement. Provided, that nothing herein contained shall prevent a defendant summoned in accordance with Rule 4(f) from being allowed, at any time before judgment, to appear and defend the action; and, upon a substantial defense being disclosed, from being allowed a reasonable time to prepare for trial.

(3) When any case is removed to federal court and subsequently remanded, the plaintiff shall file a certified copy of the order of remand with the clerk of the circuit court and shall forthwith give written notice of such filing to all parties in accordance with Rule 5. Any adverse party shall have 30 days from the receipt of such notice within which to file an answer or a motion permitted under this rule.

(b) How Presented. Every defense, in law or in fact, to a claim for relief in any pleading, whether a claim, counterclaim, cross-claim or third party claim, shall be asserted in the responsive pleading thereto if one is required, except that the following defenses may, at the option of the pleader, be made by motion: (1) lack of jurisdiction over the subject matter, (2) lack of jurisdiction over the person, (3) improper venue, (4) insufficiency of process, (5) insufficiency of service of process, (6) failure to state facts upon which relief can be granted, (7) failure to join a party under Rule 19, (8) pendency of another action between the same parties arising out of the same transaction or occurrence. A motion making any of these defenses shall be made before pleading if a further pleading is permitted. No defense or objection is waived by being joined with one or more other defenses or objections in a responsive pleading or motion. If a pleading sets forth a claim for relief to which the adverse party is not required to serve a responsive pleading, he may assert at the trial any defense in law or fact to that claim for relief. If, on a motion asserting the defense numbered (6) to dismiss for failure of the pleading to state a claim upon which relief can be granted, matters outside the pleading are presented to and not excluded by the court, the motion shall be treated as one for summary judgment and disposed of as provided in Rule 56, and all parties shall be given reasonable opportunity to present all material made pertinent to such a motion by Rule 56.

(c) Motion for Judgment on the Pleadings. After the pleadings are closed, but within such time as not to delay the trial, any party may move for judgment on the pleadings. If, on a motion for judgment on the pleadings, matters outside the pleadings are presented to and not excluded by the court, the motion shall be treated as one for summary judgment and disposed of as provided in Rule 56, and all parties shall be given reasonable opportunity to present all materials made pertinent to such a motion by Rule 56.

(d) Preliminary Hearings. The defenses specifically enumerated (1)-(8) in subdivision (b) of this rule, whether made in a pleading or by motion, and the motion for judgment mentioned in subdivision (c) of this rule shall be heard and determined before trial on application of any party, unless the court orders that the hearing and determination thereof be deferred until the trial.

(e) Motion for More Definite Statement. If a pleading to which a responsive pleading is permitted is so vague or ambiguous that a party cannot reasonably be required to frame a responsive pleading, he may move for a more definite statement before interposing his responsive pleading. The motion shall point out the defects complained of and the details desired. If the motion is granted and the order of the court is not obeyed within 10 days after notice of the order or within such other time as the court may fix, the court may strike the pleading to which the motion is directed or make such order as it deems just.

(f) Motion to Strike. Upon motion made by a party before responding to a pleading or, if no responsive pleading is permitted by these rules, upon motion made by a party within 30 days after the service of the pleading upon him or upon the court's own initiative at any time, the court may order stricken from any pleading any insufficient defense or any redundant, immaterial, impertinent or scandalous matter.

(g) Consolidation of Defenses in Motion. A party who makes a motion under this rule may join with it any other motions herein provided for and then available to him. If a party makes a motion under this rule, but omits therefrom any defense or objection then available to him which this rule permits to be raised by motion, he shall not thereafter make a motion based on the defense or objection so omitted, except a motion as provided in subdivision (h)(2) hereof on any of the grounds therein stated.

(h) Waiver or Preservation of Certain Defenses.

(1) A defense of lack of jurisdiction over the person, improper venue, insufficiency of process, insufficiency of service of process, or pendency of another action between the same parties arising out of the same transaction or occurrence is waived (A) if omitted from a motion in the circumstances described in subdivision (g), or (B) if it is neither made by motion under this rule nor included in the original responsive pleading. Objection to venue may be made, however, if the action is dismissed or discontinued as to a defendant upon whose presence venue depends.

(2) A defense of failure to state facts upon which relief can be granted, a defense of failure to join a party indispensable under Rule 19, and an objection of failure to state a legal defense to a claim may be made in any pleading permitted or ordered under Rule 7(a), or by motion for judgment on the pleadings, or at the trial on the merits. The defense of lack of jurisdiction over the subject matter is never waived and may be raised at any time.

(3) Whenever it appears by suggestion of the parties or otherwise that the court lacks jurisdiction of the subject matter, the court shall dismiss the action. Upon a determination that venue is improper, the court shall dismiss the action or direct that it be transferred to a county where venue would be proper, with the plaintiff having an election if the action could be maintained in more than one county.

(i) Response to Motions; Reply. Any response in opposition to a motion under this rule and any reply to such a response shall be made as provided in Rules 6(c) and 7(b).

(j) Further Pleading. Attorneys will be notified of action taken by the court under this rule, and, if appropriate, the court will designate a certain number of days in which a party is to be given to plead further.

Publisher's Notes.

The Arkansas Supreme Court stated in its per curiam of May 16, 1983, that subsection (a) of this rule supersedes § 23-63-302. See In re Amendments to Rules of Civil Procedure, 279 Ark. 470, 651 S.W.2d 63 (1983).

Reporter's Notes to Rule 12:

1. Rule 12(a) is a revised and condensed version of FRCP 12(a). Its purpose is to prescribe the mechanics and timetable for filing responsive pleadings. Its substance is substantially the same as the Federal Rule.

2. The times prescribed in Section (a) for filing responsive pleadings are taken in part from the Federal Rule and in part from prior Arkansas law. Superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. 27-1135 (Repl. 1962) provided that a defendant must plead to a complaint or cross-complaint on the first day after the expiration of twenty days where service was made inside this State and thirty days where service was made outside the State. Thus, a defendant had twenty-one or thirty-one days within which to file a response depending upon where service was effected. Under Section (a), the "extra" day for filing a response is eliminated.

3. This rule allows a nonresident of this State a period of thirty days to plead regardless of where service was effected and regardless of whether service was effected through a resident agent in this State.

4. Where a defendant is served by warning order, the thirty day period commences upon the date of the first publication of the warning order. This compares with superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. 27-1135 (3) (Repl. 1962) which provided that an appearance must have been made after thirty days had elapsed from the making of the warning order and appointment of the attorney ad litem.

5. Rule 12 substitutes the word “file” for serve and requires that the responsive pleading be filed within the time prescribed by this rule as opposed to serving the pleading as is the case under FRCP 12. By using this terminology, it is believed that arguments can be avoided as to when a pleading was served.

5 [6]. Section (a) follows the Federal Rule and superseded Ark. Stat. Ann. 27-1135 and 27-1137 (Repl. 1962) by allowing a period of twenty days within which to file a responsive pleading to a cross-claim or counterclaim.

6 [7]. Section (a) follows the Federal Rule by permitting the trial court to extend the time for filing any responsive pleading. This is in accord with prior Arkansas practice.

7 [8]. Section (b) sets forth the defenses which may be raised by motion prior to filing a responsive pleading. These defenses are essentially the same as those previously raised by motions to quash service and demurrers. This section is identical to Section (b) of the Federal Rule with the exception of the addition of (b)(8) which is a defense previously allowed under Ark. Stat. Ann. 27-1115 (3) (Repl. 1962). One important feature of this section is that it abolishes the distinction between general and special appearances; thus, it is not (is not) necessary to make a special appearance in order to challenge the jurisdiction of the person, process or venue. Blank v. Bitker, 135 F. 2d 962 (C.C.A. 7th, 1943); Product Promotions, Inc. v. Cousteau, 495 F. 2d 483 (C.C.A. 5th, 1974).

10 [9]. Sections (c) through (h) track FRCP 12(c) through (h) with the exception that Section (h)(1) takes into account the additional defense designed as (8) in 12(b) relating to the pendency of another action between the parties.

Addition to Reporter’s Notes, 1984 Amendment:

Rule 12(h)(1) is amended to make it clear that the stated “waivable” defenses must be raised by motion pursuant to this rule or in the first responsive pleading or they are waived. The final sentence in this subsection excepts the objection to venue in the circumstances described in Ark. Stat. Ann. § 27-614 (Repl. 1979), which is now superseded.

Addition to Reporter’s Notes, 1987 Amendment:

Two new sections, based on provisions of the Uniform Rules for Circuit and Chancery [Chancery] Courts, have been added to Rule 12 in the interest of clarity and simplification. New section (i), which sets forth the time in which responses to motions must be filed, as well as the time period for the movants to file replies, tracks Uniform Rule 2(c) and (d). Though this requirement is also found in Rule 78(b) of the Rules of Civil Procedure, it is repeated here in a more conspicuous manner to assist users of the Rules. New section (j), borrowed from Rule 2(f) of the Uniform Rules, simply states that the court is to specify the time in which further pleading is allowed in the event the court grants a motion to dismiss and the deficiency can be remedied. These new provisions do not alter prior Arkansas practice.

Addition to Reporter’s Notes, 1997 Amendment:

Paragraph (3) of subdivision (h) has been amended by adding a new sentence authorizing the court to transfer the case in the event that venue is improper. Rather than dismiss the action, the court may transfer it to any county where venue would be proper, with the plaintiff having an election if venue would lie in more than one county. The revised provision is generally consistent with Arkansas case law and the practice in the federal courts. See Terminal Oil Co. v. Gautney, 202 Ark. 748, 152 S.W.2d 309 (1941); Goodwin v. Harrison, 300 Ark. 474, 780 S.W.2d 518 (1989); 28 U.S.C. § 1406(a).

Addition to Reporter’s Notes, 2000 Amendment:

The second sentence of subdivision (h)(3) has been amended by replacing the introductory phrase “whenever it appears” with “upon a determination.” This change eliminates the unintended suggestion in the original version of the sentence that a motion to dismiss for improper venue, like a motion to dismiss for lack of subject matter jurisdiction, can be made at any time. As subdivision (h)(1) of the rule makes plain, improper venue is a waivable defense.

Addition to Reporter’s Notes, [February] 2001 Amendment:

As adopted in 1987, the first sentence of subdivision (i) referred to “a motion made under this or any other rule.” The words “or any other” have been deleted because of the 2001 amendment to Rule 56(c) establishing time frames for summary judgment motions and responses. Other motions are covered by Rule 78(b).

Addition to Reporter’s Notes, [May] 2001 Amendment:

Paragraph (3) of subdivision (h) has been amended to reflect Constitutional Amendment 80, under which the circuit court is the single court of general jurisdiction in the state. A clause in the first sentence providing for transfer in the event that the court lacks subject matter jurisdiction has been deleted because there are no longer separate circuit, chancery, and probate courts. Left intact, however, is language directing the court to dismiss the action whenever it appears that subject matter jurisdiction is lacking. This provision comes into play when, for instance, the Constitution assigns original jurisdiction to another court. By way of example, the Supreme Court has original jurisdiction to determine the sufficiency of state initiative and referendum petitions and proposed constitutional amendments.

Furthermore, while state courts generally have concurrent jurisdiction with the federal courts to decide cases arising under federal law, state courts are without subject matter jurisdiction if Congress has made federal jurisdiction exclusive. See, e.g., 28 U.S.C. § 1338(a) (patent and copyright cases).

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 2002 Amendment:

Subdivision (i) of the rule previously included time periods for serving responses to motions and replies to responses. These matters are now governed by Rule 6(c), and subdivision (i) has been amended to provide a cross-reference to that provision. There has also been added a cross-reference to Rule 7(b), which governs the content of motions, responses, and replies.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 2003 Amendment:

Under revised subdivision (a), a person "incarcerated in any jail, penitentiary, or other correctional facility in this state" has 30 days in which to respond to a complaint. This additional time helps ensure that such a defendant has an opportunity to obtain counsel and to be heard in the action.

Subdivision (h)(2) has been amended to provide that the defense of lack of subject matter jurisdiction is never waived and may be asserted at any time. The new sentence simply restates settled law.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 2004 Amendment:

Subdivision (a) has been divided into three paragraphs and other stylistic changes made. The two departures from prior law appear in what are now paragraphs (1) and (3). Under the first paragraph, the time for an incarcerated defendant to file an answer has been increased from 30 days to 60 days. This change recognizes the role of prison employees under Rule 4(d)(4) in delivering the summons and complaint, the possibility that delays in such delivery may occur, and the likelihood that securing legal representation will take longer for incarcerated persons than for other defendants.

Paragraph (3) deals with an issue previously covered in Rule 55(f), i.e., the time period for responding to a complaint after a federal court has remanded a removed case to state court. The new paragraph expands that period from 10 to 20 days and states more clearly the point at which the time begins to run. See NCS Healthcare v. W.P. Malone, Inc., 350 Ark. 520, 88 S.W.3d 852 (2002). Because of new language in Rule 55(f), a defendant who filed an answer or Rule 12 motion in federal court while the case was pending there need not, following remand, take the same action in state court within the 20-day grace period to avoid a default judgment. See Addition to Reporter's Notes to Rule 55 (2004 amendment).

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 2011 Amendment:

Subdivision (a)(1) has been amended to require that both resident and nonresident defendants file a response within 30 days after service of the summons and complaint. The rule previously required that the resident defendant file the response within 20 days. On occasion the different response times led to the issuance of an incorrect summons by the clerk's office and subsequent issues as to the sufficiency of process. In addition, modern means of communication and electronic transmission diminish the need to distinguish between response times for resident and nonresident defendants. The amendment to subdivision (a)(3) extends to 30 days from the date of receipt of the remand notice the time within which a defendant must respond to a complaint when a case is remanded from federal court. Subdivision 12(f) similarly is amended to require that a motion to strike be filed within 30 days of service of the pleading upon a party.

Addition to Reporter's Notes, 2019 Amendment:

Subdivision (a)(1) has been amended to insert the correct cross-reference to Ark. R. Civ. P. 4(g)(3) or (4).

CASE NOTES

In General.

Pleadings are to be liberally construed and are sufficient if they advise a party of its obligations and allege a breach of them. Bethel Baptist Church v. Church Mut. Ins. Co., 54 Ark. App. 262, 924 S.W.2d 494 (1996).

Affirmative Defenses.

Although the preferred method to assert an affirmative defense such as res judicata is in an answer and not in a motion to dismiss, when raised in a motion to dismiss the defense of res judicata may be treated as if it were properly raised. Amos v. Amos, 282 Ark. 532, 669 S.W.2d 200 (1984).

Affirmative defense of intervening cause should have been specifically pled. Mercer v. Nelson, 293 Ark. 430, 738 S.W.2d 417 (1987).

There is no logical reason why a setoff should not serve as an affirmative defense to a counterclaim as well as to an original complaint, a crossclaim, or a third-party claim. Turner v. Eubanks, 26 Ark. App. 22, 759 S.W.2d 37 (1988).

Laches and limitations are affirmative defenses under Ark. R. Civ. P. 8(c), and are not listed as defenses that may be the subject of a motion to dismiss under this rule. Davenport v. Pack, 35 Ark. App. 40, 812 S.W.2d 487 (1991).

The defense of lack of capacity is not included in subsection (h) of this rule as a defense that must be asserted in the original answer in order to avoid the doctrine of waiver. Tribco Mfg. Co. v. People's Bank of Imboden, 67 Ark. App. 268, 998 S.W.2d 756 (1999).

Statutes of limitations can be raised and considered by the court on a motion to dismiss under subdivision (b)(6) of this rule. Martin v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc'y of the United States, 344 Ark. 177, 40 S.W.3d 733 (2001).

Although the buyer argued that the sellers' motion to strike the buyer's affirmative defense of fraud was untimely, an objection of failure to state a legal defense to a claim may be made at the trial on the merits under subdivision (h)(2) of this rule. Ison Props., LLC v. Wood, 85 Ark. App. 443, 156 S.W.3d 742 (2004).

Amendment.

In a case involving the Arkansas Civil Rights Act, § 16-123-101 et seq., a default judgment was not set aside under Ark. R. Civ. P. 55 because a motion for an extension was not timely where the request was not made to a trial court before the expiration of the period originally prescribed, the failure to respond in a timely manner due to one attorney being distracted by the birth of a child was not excusable neglect, an amendment to this rule was inapplicable, and an argument that the complaint failed to state a claim was rejected. The denial of illegal intent was insufficient in a first affidavit, a second affidavit was filed after the default was granted, and an individual supervisor could have been held personally liable for alleged acts of retaliation under § 16-123-108(a). Eusanio v. Tippin, 2013 Ark. App. 38, 425 S.W.3d 838 (2013).

Answer Filed by Codefendant.

It has been settled in this state for almost a century and a half that the answer of one codefendant inures to the benefit of the other codefendants. Aldridge v. Watling Ladder Co., 275 Ark. 225, 628 S.W.2d 322 (1982).

Answer Filed by Others.

A nonparty may not file a responsive pleading. Reynolds v. Guardianship of Sears, 327 Ark. 770, 940 S.W.2d 483 (1997).

Appearances.

The distinction between general and special appearances was abolished with the adoption of the Arkansas Rules of Civil Procedure in 1979. Arkansas Dep't of Human Servs. v. Farris, 309 Ark. 575, 832 S.W.2d 482 (1992).

The last vestiges of the distinction between "special appearance" and "general appearance" were abolished with the adoption of subsection (b) of this rule, which provides for raising various defenses, including "lack of jurisdiction over the person," by motion or in a responsive pleading at the option of the pleader; the distinction between special appearance and general appearance no longer exists. Fausett v. Host, 315 Ark. 527, 868 S.W.2d 472 (1994).

Appellate Review.

The denial of a motion for summary judgment is neither reviewable nor appealable. Amalgamated Clothing & Textile Workers Int'l Union v. Earle Indus., Inc., 318 Ark. 524, 886 S.W.2d 594 (1994).

Where the motion to dismiss was effectively converted to one for summary judgment under subsection (b) of this rule by the presentation of matters outside the pleadings, its denial was not subject to review on appeal. Amalgamated Clothing & Textile Workers Int'l Union v. Earle Indus., Inc., 318 Ark. 524, 886 S.W.2d 594 (1994).

In a case in which the trial court's order certifying a suit as a class action was reversed on appeal, the trial court's denial of defendant's motion to dismiss plaintiff's suit pursuant to subdivision (b)(6) of this rule was not an appealable order under RAP-Civ 2. Lenders Title Co. v. Chandler, 353 Ark. 339, 107 S.W.3d 157 (2003).

Applicability.

The Arkansas Public Service Commission in an administrative proceeding and an appellate court reviewing a Public Service Commission decision may look to this rule for guidance but are not required to do so. Brandon v. Ark. Western Gas Co., 76 Ark. App. 201, 61 S.W.3d 193 (2001).

Assertion of Defenses.

By specifically reserving his objections to jurisdiction and service of process and reserving the right to plead further in his original responsive pleading, the appellee "asserted" those defenses, as required by subsection (b) of this rule. Wallace v. Hale, 341 Ark. 898, 20 S.W.3d 392 (2000).

There is no reported Arkansas case that promulgates a specificity requirement with regards to a motion to dismiss based on insufficiency of process; therefore, a hospital's objection to the sufficiency of process and service of process in a responsive pleading was sufficient to raise and preserve the issues. Shotzman v. Berumen, 363 Ark. 215, 213 S.W.3d 13 (2005).

Although an answer generally requested dismissal of the complaint pursuant to subsection (b) of this rule, it did not specifically identify the subsection (b) defenses of insufficient process and insufficient service of process. Therefore, it did not meet the specificity requirement of Ark. R. Civ. P. 8(b) or subsection (h) of this rule, and the subsection (b) defenses were not preserved. Holliman v. Johnson, 2012 Ark. App. 354, 417 S.W.3d 222 (2012).

Generally pleading dismissal pursuant to subsection (b) of this rule, without further specificity, fails to preserve the defenses under subsection (b). Holliman v. Johnson, 2012 Ark. App. 354, 417 S.W.3d 222 (2012).

Class Certification.

Precertification dismissal was only binding on the named parties since those dismissals were less likely to unfairly prejudice either the unnamed members of the potential class or the defendants to the action and did not reflect a determination on the merits; because the resolution of motions under subdivision (b)(6) of this rule promoted the administration of justice and did not unfairly prejudice any of the parties to the action, such actions were proper prior to class certification. Speights v. Stewart Title Guar. Co., 358 Ark. 59, 186 S.W.3d 715 (2004).

Conclusions of Law.

Subdivision (b)(6) of this rule must be read in conjunction with Ark. R. Civ. P. 8(a)(2), which deals with the contents of the pleading; accordingly, in a suit by a real estate broker against defaulting purchasers to recover the commission it would have recovered from the seller under the contract, a complaint containing allegations which were merely conclusions of law and failed to state facts upon which relief could be granted as required by Ark. R. Civ. P. 8(a)(2), was properly dismissed under subdivision (b)(6) of this rule. Thompson-Holloway Agency, Inc. v. Gribben, 3 Ark. App. 119, 623 S.W.2d 528 (1981).

A tort claim of outrage against various church members, which alleged only that they willfully and wantonly breached a contract for repair of a church organ which caused the repairers emotional distress, was not sufficient to withstand a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. The claim alleged mere conclusions and not facts. Rabalais v. Barnett, 284 Ark. 527, 683 S.W.2d 919 (1985).

The facts constituting the cause of action must be pleaded in direct and positive allegations, not by way of argument, inference, or belief; statements of generalities and conclusions of law are not sufficient to state a cause of action. Big A Whse. Distribs., Inc. v. Rye Auto Supply, Inc., 19 Ark. App. 286, 719 S.W.2d 716 (1986); McKinney v. City of El Dorado, 308 Ark. 284, 824 S.W.2d 826 (1992).

Where complainants' only allegation was in actuality a conclusion of law and not a statement of facts upon which relief could be granted, complaint was dismissed without prejudice. Spire v. Members of Election Comm'n, 302 Ark. 407, 790 S.W.2d 167 (1990).

Complaint failed to state facts upon which relief could be granted pursuant to the respondent superior theory of vicarious liability, but did state facts upon which relief could be granted for negligent entrustment. LeClaire v. Commercial Siding & Maintenance Co., 308 Ark. 580, 826 S.W.2d 247 (1992).

Construction.

Subdivision (b)(6) of this rule provides for the dismissal of a complaint and must be read in conjunction with Rule 8, which sets out the requirements of a complaint. Spires v. Members of Election Comm'n, 302 Ark. 407, 790 S.W.2d 167 (1990).

Where the circuit court granted two motions to dismiss which contained motions for judgment on the pleadings, but it was unclear whether the circuit court entered a judgment on the pleadings pursuant to subsection (c) of this rule or a dismissal pursuant to subdivision (b)(6) of this rule, the appellate court concluded that the circuit court entered two subdivision (b)(6) dismissal orders; in reaching this conclusion the appellate court observed that judgments on the pleadings are traditionally not favored, and there was abundant use of language from subdivision (b)(6) by the trial court, including reference to a failure to state facts upon which relief could be granted, and use of the word dismissal. Poston v. Fears, 318 Ark. 659, 887 S.W.2d 520 (1994).

Dismissal of surgeon's breach of contract action against a hospital was reversed and remanded because the surgeon not only pled that he benefitted from the services contract between the hospital and the limited liability company (LLC), but he also pled sufficient facts from which a reasonable inference could have been drawn that LLC and the hospital intended to benefit him and other individual physicians. Perry v. Baptist Health, 358 Ark. 238, 189 S.W.3d 54 (2004).

Counterclaim.

A counterclaim or third party complaint is not a defense. Arkansas Game & Fish Comm'n v. Lindsey, 292 Ark. 314, 730 S.W.2d 474 (1987).

This rule allows a defendant to answer to the merits in the same pleading in which he raises the issue of venue, but it does not authorize a defendant to couple a counterclaim with a venue motion. Arkansas Game & Fish Comm'n v. Lindsey, 292 Ark. 314, 730 S.W.2d 474 (1987).

Where defendant attempted to preserve its defense of lack of service of process, by filing a permissive counterclaim, defendant entered its appearance. Arkansas Intercollegiate Conference v. Parnham, 309 Ark. 170, 828 S.W.2d 828 (1992).

Failure to File Answer.

Where defendants' attorney failed to answer complaint within 20 days as required by this rule, but alleged that he had mailed copies to the court clerk and both attorneys for plaintiffs, although the three denied receiving them, the court could properly excuse the failure under Ark. R. Civ. P. 6, even though Ark. R. Civ. P. 55 mandates a default judgment and gives the court no discretion. Hensley v. Brown, 2 Ark. App. 175, 617 S.W.2d 867 (1981).

The trial court did not err in striking an untimely answer where no evidence justifying the delay was presented in the trial court, and, even if defendant had made a threshold showing of mistake, inadvertence, or excusable neglect, she failed to show that she had a meritorious defense to the cause of action. Martin v. Jenkins, 320 Ark. 478, 897 S.W.2d 567 (1995).

Interlocutory appeal of a default judgment would not lie when seed company failed to answer farmers' and farming companies' complaint; seed company company had been properly served with the complaint, and had 30 days under subsection (a) of this rule, as a non-resident corporation, to respond. Tri-State Delta Chems., Inc. v. Crow, 347 Ark. 255, 61 S.W.3d 172 (2001).

Homeowner's belated answer was untimely to rebut the factual allegations in the complaint upon default regarding liability and, therefore, the factual responses were immaterial under subsection (f) of this rule; the harm levied against homeowner in striking his answer was the entry of default judgment, but he remained free to counter any proof of damages, which had to be proved by the worker at trial. Israel v. Oskey, 92 Ark. App. 192, 212 S.W.3d 45 (2005).

Failure to File Response.

Where estate failed to file its response to alleged pretermitted heirs' complaint within 20 days as required by this rule, the probate judge properly rejected heirs' motion for default judgment since the Probate Code's procedural sections, § 28-1-101 et seq., govern in cases concerning the filing of petitions for the determination of heirship. King v. King, 273 Ark. 55, 616 S.W.2d 483 (1981).

Dismissal under subdivision (b)(6) of this rule should be granted when taking all the facts alleged in the complaint as true, the complainant is not entitled to the relief sought. Brandt v. St. Vincent Infirmary, 287 Ark. 431, 701 S.W.2d 103 (1985).

An attempt by the executor of the will of a victim of a murder-suicide, to relitigate the issues adjudicated in the earlier phases of the case and affirmed in the first appeal, was dismissed for failure to state facts upon which relief could be granted. Luecke v. Mercantile Bank, 289 Ark. 477, 712 S.W.2d 306 (1986).

In considering a motion under subdivision (b)(6) of this rule for judgment on the pleadings for failure to state facts upon which relief can be granted, the facts alleged in the complaint are treated as true and are viewed in the light most favorable to the party seeking relief. Big A Whse. Distribs., Inc. v. Rye Auto Supply, Inc., 19 Ark. App. 286, 719 S.W.2d 716 (1986).

A party's failure to respond to a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim under Ark. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) does not entitle the moving party to dismissal. A dismissal must instead rest on the merits of the motion. Wine v. Chandler, 2020 Ark. App. 412, 607 S.W.3d 522 (2020).

Failure to State Claim.

Where the complaint of a voter who challenged the election results merely stated that voting machines malfunctioned and that election officials refused to supply paper ballots that could be used in place of the machines, and the complaint contained no allegation that the election result would have been different if the votes of the plaintiff and the class he represented had been counted, and no allegation that the malfunctions of the voting machines or the failure of the election officials to provide remedies were due to fraud on anyone's part, the complaint failed to state a cause of action and was properly dismissed by the trial court. Files v. Hill, 268 Ark. 106, 594 S.W.2d 836 (1980).

A pleading which merely alleges the conclusion that the contestant received more legal votes than the contestee without alleging facts which would disclose that the result of the election was actually different from that shown by the returns does not state a cause of action and may be subject to a motion to dismiss under subdivision (b)(6) of this rule. Files v. Hill, 268 Ark. 106, 594 S.W.2d 836 (1980).

Where both the complaint and the amended complaint in a tort action failed to make a statement in ordinary and concise language of facts showing that the pleader was entitled to relief because neither contained a factual allegation of any act of negligence, they were correctly dismissed under subdivision (b)(6) of this rule for failure to state facts upon which relief could be granted. Ratliff v. Moss, 284 Ark. 16, 678 S.W.2d 369 (1984).

When a complaint fails to state sufficient facts, an appellate court may recognize that flaw and sustain the trial court if its result is correct. Carter v. F.W. Woolworth Co., 287 Ark. 39, 696 S.W.2d 318 (1985).

When a complaint is dismissed under subdivision (b)(6) of this rule for failure to state facts upon which relief can be granted, the dismissal should be without prejudice; the plaintiffs then have the election to either plead further or appeal. Hollingsworth v. First Nat'l Bank & Trust Co., 311 Ark. 637, 846 S.W.2d 176 (1993).

Complaint alleging actual fraud and constructive fraud against the attorney for an opposing party in prior litigation dismissed for failure to state claim under subdivision (b)(6) of this rule. Wiseman v. Batchelor, 315 Ark. 85, 864 S.W.2d 248 (1993).

In reviewing a trial court's decision on a motion to dismiss under subdivision (b)(6) of this rule, the reviewing court treats the facts alleged in the complaint as true and views them in the light most favorable to the party who filed the complaint. Neal v. Wilson, 316 Ark. 588, 873 S.W.2d 552 (1994).

Where the complaint attempted to follow the elements of a negligent entrustment cause of action, but set forth virtually no facts which corresponded to those elements, the court's dismissal was proper. Mann v. Orrell, 322 Ark. 701, 912 S.W.2d 1 (1995).

Where amended complaint of teacher for Department of Correction School District, if taken as true, established a cause of action against the Department for violation of the Teacher Fair Dismissal Act, the trial court erred in dismissing the complaint under subdivision (b)(6) of this rule. Allred v. Arkansas Dep't of Cor. Sch. Dist., 322 Ark. 772, 912 S.W.2d 4 (1995).

Even when complaint was liberally construed, it alleged only conclusions and alleged no facts whatsoever, as required by Ark. R. Civ. P. 8(a)(1), and therefore failed to state a claim; although the complaint should have been dismissed under subdivision (b)(6) of this rule, the claim should not have been dismissed with prejudice. Malone v. Trans-States Lines, 325 Ark. 383, 926 S.W.2d 659 (1996).

Claim for tax refund under § 26-18-406 survived a motion to dismiss under subdivision (b)(6) of this rule. Little Rock Cleaning Sys. v. Weiss, 326 Ark. 1007, 935 S.W.2d 268 (1996).

Where complaint alleged that telephone company had been unjustly enriched by providing and charging customers for an optional service without authorization, but did not allege that the telephone company had violated any law, order, rule, or regulation of the Commission, the complaint failed to state a cause of action, and suit was correctly dismissed. Bryant v. Arkansas Pub. Serv. Comm'n, 53 Ark. App. 114, 919 S.W.2d 522 (1996).

In order to properly dismiss a complaint, the trial court has to find that the complaining parties either (1) failed to state general facts upon which relief could have been granted or (2) failed to include specific facts pertaining to one or more of the elements of one of its claims after accepting all facts contained in the complaint as true and in the light most favorable to the non-moving party. Bethel Baptist Church v. Church Mut. Ins. Co., 54 Ark. App. 262, 924 S.W.2d 494 (1996).

Despite the stringent grants of dismissals under subdivision (b)(6) of this rule, the trial court properly dismissed an action for breach of a contract for the sale of human organs because the contract was in violation of federal law. Wilson v. Adkins, 57 Ark. App. 43, 941 S.W.2d 440 (1997).

Municipal corporation has standing to challenge an annexation election as a property owner; therefore, a trial court erred in dismissing the case for failure to state a claim. City of Dover v. City of Russellville, 352 Ark. 299, 100 S.W.3d 689 (2003).

When a complaint is dismissed under subdivision (b)(6) of this rule for failure to state facts upon which relief can be granted, the dismissal should be without prejudice; however, because plaintiff, the Arkansas Department of Environmental Quality, appealed the judgment, it waived the right to plead further and the complaint was modified to be dismissed with prejudice. Ark. Dep't of Env'tl. Quality v. Brighton Corp., 352 Ark. 396, 102 S.W.3d 458 (2003).

Trial court properly granted the insurer's motion to dismiss appellants' personal injury action against the insurer for failure to state a claim where a prior decision relating to a fetus under the wrongful death statute was only applicable to actions arising after that decision became final, and appellants' action was brought before that time period. McCoy v. Crumby, 353 Ark. 251, 106 S.W.3d 462 (2003).

Motion filed under subdivision (b)(6) of this rule to dismiss taxpayer's class action challenging the constitutionality of a session law that enacted a compensation use tax was improperly denied where the law had already been found to be valid in previous litigation filed by taxpayers challenging the same law on the same bases. Barclay v. Waters, 357 Ark. 386, 182 S.W.3d 91 (2004).

Former client's legal malpractice claim against a former attorney and the attorney's firm was properly dismissed for failure to state a claim where the client's complaint was based on the attorney's court-approved withdrawal and the client had not appealed from the withdrawal order. Bright v. Zega, 358 Ark. 82, 186 S.W.3d 201 (2004).

Dismissal of owner's petition to set aside a statutory foreclosure sale of property by the bank was affirmed because an assertion that the land to be foreclosed on was primarily used for agricultural purposes was precisely the kind of claim or defense that must be raised prior to the sale or be forever barred and terminated, under § 18-50-116(d)(2), and the owner did not raise the agricultural-lands defense until well after the auction sale. Cockrell v. Union Planters Bank, 359 Ark. 8, 194 S.W.3d 178 (2004).

Appellate court chose not to recognize a cause of action for educational malpractice in Arkansas and the trial court did not err in dismissing a mother's suit against a school for breach of contract, outrage, breach of fiduciary duty, negligence, and gross negligence where, even if the handbook was a part of the "agreement" that the mother had with the school, its terms were so vague and general that they were not enforceable; in addition, the trial court did not err in dismissing mother's suit against a school for breach of fiduciary duty where that duty did not exist between a student and his teachers. Key v. Coryell, 86 Ark. App. 334, 185 S.W.3d 98 (2004).

Trial court erred in granting doctor's motion to dismiss a complaint that alleged sufficient facts to state a claim for medical malpractice where the complaint alleged that (1) the doctor required plaintiff mother, after achieving maximum dilation, to go through over four hours of hard labor before performing a caesarean section, (2) the doctor's failure to timely schedule and perform a caesarean section was a breach of the applicable standard of care, and (3) the child suffered neurological damage and the mother suffered injury to her bladder and associated nerves. Thomas v. Pierce, 87 Ark. App. 26, 184 S.W.3d 489 (2004).

Trial court did not err in dismissing a patient's claim against a hospital for intentional interference with a business advantage under subdivision (b)(6) of this rule because the complaint, taken as true and construed liberally under Ark. R. Civ. P. 8(f), failed to allege improper interference; further, a conversion claim failed as the hospital's refusal to cash a draft did not equate to dominion over the funds. Alvarado v. St. Mary-Rogers Mem'l Hosp., Inc., 99 Ark. App. 104, 257 S.W.3d 583 (2007).

In a wrongful death suit stemming from allegedly deficient nursing home care, the trial court properly granted the motion to dismiss of the corporation's chief executive officer (CEO) under subdivision (b)(6) of this rule because the complaint's allegations were silent with respect to the CEO's personal involvement in the operation of the nursing home and were likewise silent with respect to the CEO's personal involvement in the decedent's care. While the complaint alleged that the CEO was responsible for the overall corporate philosophy that caused deficient staffing and supplies that resulted in harm to the decedent, the administrator of the decedent's estate never produced any facts specifically relevant to the CEO's direct personal involvement with the level of staffing and supplies used or denied in the decedent's care. Bayird v. Floyd, 2009 Ark. 455, 344 S.W.3d 80 (2009).

Circuit court abused its discretion in twice dismissing a breach of contract claim where the two amended complaints identified the contract, defendant's obligations under the contract, how defendant breached the contract, and how plaintiff was damaged, and defendant's factual arguments regarding successor liability were not germane to a motion to dismiss under subdivision (b)(6) of this rule. Panhandle Oil & Gas, Inc. v. BHP Billiton Petroleum Fayetteville, LLC, 2017 Ark. App. 201, 520 S.W.3d 277 (2017).

Circuit court properly dismissed plaintiff's reformation claims where the complaint alleged that the parties made a mutual mistake as to whether other parties would be awarded drilling rights in the leased sections, which raised issues of fact. Panhandle Oil & Gas, Inc. v. BHP Billiton Petroleum Fayetteville, LLC, 2017 Ark. App. 201, 520 S.W.3d 277 (2017).

Circuit court did not abuse its discretion in dismissing the equitable accounting claims as that was a remedy, not a proper cause of action under Arkansas law. Panhandle Oil & Gas, Inc.

v. BHP Billiton Petroleum Fayetteville, LLC, 2017 Ark. App. 201, 520 S.W.3d 277 (2017).

Neighbor's claim of tortious interference with expectancy to inherit a transfer on death account from the decedent was properly dismissed as the Arkansas Supreme Court had expressly declined to recognize such a claim. Mickles v. Milam, 2020 Ark. App. 299, 603 S.W.3d 577 (2020).

Foreign Corporations.

Foreign corporations do not become Arkansas residents by registering to do business in Arkansas and they are entitled, as provided by this rule, to 30 days to respond to a complaint. Citicorp Indus. Credit, Inc. v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc., 305 Ark. 530, 809 S.W.2d 815 (1991).

Further Pleading.

Where a party was not given the chance to plead further, pursuant to subsection (j) of this rule, the dismissal of its complaint with prejudice was modified to a dismissal without prejudice. Hubbard v. Shores Group, Inc., 313 Ark. 498, 855 S.W.2d 924 (1993).

Where defendant elected the option of asserting the defense, pursuant to Ark. R. Civ. P. 4(i), of lack of jurisdiction of the person and insufficiency of service of process in its original responsive pleading, then under subsections (b) and (h) of this rule, it has preserved these defenses by including them in its original responsive pleading. Farm Bureau Mut. Ins. Co. v. Campbell, 315 Ark. 136, 865 S.W.2d 643 (1993).

Hearing on Motion.

Circuit court erred in granting the Department of Correction's motion to dismiss an inmate's complaint under § 12-28-604 for failure to state a claim under subdivision (b)(6) of this rule because the circuit court granted the motion without holding a hearing or considering the inmate's written response, which was timely filed under Ark. R. Civ. P. 6 and Ark. R. Civ. P. 78(b). Loveless v. Agee, 2010 Ark. 53 (2010).

Indispensable Parties.

In store's action to recover on a charge account, contrary to the store's argument, the customer's daughter who purportedly made the charges was not an indispensable party; the daughter's conduct was not relevant to the determination of the customer's obligations under the charge card agreement and the customer's declaratory action for a determination of whether she owed any amount of the alleged indebtedness on charges for which she did not sign charge slips was improperly dismissed under subdivision (b)(7) of this rule. Wilmans v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 355 Ark. 668, 144 S.W.3d 245 (2004).

Insufficiency of Process.

None of the circumstances which would have warranted granting the company and its officers' motion for reconsideration under Fed. R. Civ. P. 60 were present because although the company and its officers argued that despite the misstatement of law in their summonses, they complied with the form set forth in Ark. R. Civ. P. 4(b), the court did not believe that requiring the company and its officers to correctly state the response times clearly set forth in subsection (a) of this rule led to an absurd result or defied common sense; rather, the company and its officers were simply expected to accurately state the procedural rules as set forth in Ark. R. Civ. P. 4(b) and subsection (a) of this rule. Moreover, the fact that the LLC and its owner suffered no prejudice as a result of the error did not save the defective summonses at issue. Charkoma Res., LLC v. JB Energy Explorations, LLC, No. 09-02118, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 114336 (W.D. Ark. Dec. 8, 2009).

Circuit court did not abuse its discretion in granting appellees' motion to reconsider and vacating the default judgment where appellant's service through the Secretary of State did not effect valid service on appellees, a dissolved LLC and its sole owner, and sufficiency of service had been the issue to be determined at every stage of the proceedings below. Eliasnik v. Y&S Pine Bluff, LLC, 2018 Ark. App. 138, 546 S.W.3d 497 (2018).

Judgment on the Pleadings.

In considering a motion for a judgment on the pleadings for failure to state facts upon which relief can be granted, the facts alleged in the complaint must be treated as true and viewed in the light most favorable to the party seeking relief. Smith v. American Greetings Corp., 304 Ark. 596, 804 S.W.2d 683 (1991).

Motions for judgments on the pleadings are not favored by the courts. Such a judgment should be entered only if the pleadings show on their face that there is no defense to the suit. When considering the motion, the facts alleged in the complaint are viewed as true, and in the light most favorable to the party seeking relief. Estate of Hastings v. Planters & Stockmen Bank, 307 Ark. 34, 818 S.W.2d 239 (1991).

Resolution of a question of law is not the same as entering judgment as a matter of law. Little Rock Cleaning Sys. v. Weiss, 326 Ark. 1007, 935 S.W.2d 268 (1996).

Circuit court correctly granted the city's and city planning commission's motion on the pleadings as to the property owner's complaint where the owner waited over two years to file an appeal of the city's decision to the circuit court; the appeal was well outside the 30-day requirement of AICR 9 [now ADCR 9] and was thus untimely because those particular counts had to do with action by the city council and the circuit court did not have jurisdiction over those counts. Ingram v. City of Pine Bluff, 355 Ark. 129, 133 S.W.3d 382 (2003).

More Definite Statement.

Where the defendants argued that the plaintiff's complaint was conclusory but failed to move for a more definite statement under subsection (e) of this rule, and instead answered the original complaint, they could not later complain that they were prejudiced. White v. Welsh, 327 Ark. 465, 939 S.W.2d 299 (1997).

Motion to Dismiss.

Under the Rules of Civil Procedure the purpose formerly accomplished by a pleading called a demurrer is now accomplished by a pleading called a motion to dismiss. Farm Bureau Mut. Ins. Co. v. Southall, 281 Ark. 141, 661 S.W.2d 383 (1983).

Where insurer did not stand on its motion to dismiss and permit the entry of judgment for the insured, it was not entitled to a decision in Supreme Court, on petition for writ of review, about whether the plaintiff's complaint stated a cause of action. Farm Bureau Mut. Ins. Co. v. Southall, 281 Ark. 141, 661 S.W.2d 383 (1983).

It was improper for the trial court to look beyond the complaint to decide a motion to dismiss pursuant to subdivision (b)(6) of this rule unless it were treating the motion as one for summary judgment; even had the trial court treated the motion as one for summary judgment, it would have been incorrect to base the decision on allegations in briefs and attached exhibits. Guthrie v. Tyson Foods, Inc., 285 Ark. 95, 685 S.W.2d 164 (1985).

Trial court erred in granting judgment as a matter of law. Continental Ozark, Inc. v. Lair, 29 Ark. App. 25, 779 S.W.2d 187 (1989).

In an action to collect unpaid hospital bills, the trial court erred in entering judgment based on the statute of limitations under subsection (b) of this rule by considering facts not in the record without developing any factual record. University Hosp. v. Undernehr, 307 Ark. 445, 821 S.W.2d 26 (1991).

In considering a motion to dismiss under subdivision (b)(6) of this rule, the facts alleged in the complaint are treated as true and viewed in the light most favorable to the party seeking relief, and it is improper for the trial court to look beyond the complaint to decide a motion to dismiss, unless it is treating the motion as one for summary judgment. Deitsch v. Tillery, 309 Ark. 401, 833 S.W.2d 760 (1992).

The defendant government officials were not entitled to dismissal since they were not immune from suit under the doctrine of sovereign immunity as sufficient allegations of malicious conduct were alleged in the complaint where the plaintiff alleged that the defendants conspired to have him arrested for the malicious purpose of embarrassing him and damaging his professional reputation and with knowledge that no probable cause existed, that the allegations in the arrest warrant were false, and that no prosecution would ensue. Heigle v. Miller, 332 Ark. 315, 965 S.W.2d 116 (1998).

Refusal of the circuit court to grant the bank's motion to dismiss pursuant to subsection (b) of this rule and Ark. R. Civ. P. 13 was improper where the farmers' action involving conversion of wheat and oat crop arose out of the same set of circumstances as the bank's complaint; therefore, it must have been brought as a compulsory counterclaim. First Nat'l Bank of Dewitt v. Cruthis, 352 Ark. 292, 100 S.W.3d 703 (2003).

Circuit court properly dismissed the buyer's complaint for failure of valid process under subsection (b) of this rule; the dismissal was mandatory under the plain language of Ark. R. Civ. P. 4(i) and case law interpreting that rule because service of the summonses on the car dealership and its successor was improper. Smith v. Sidney Moncrief Pontiac, Buick, GMC Co., 353 Ark. 701, 120 S.W.3d 525 (2003), superseded by statute as stated in Powell v. Fernandez, 2013 Ark. App. 595 (2013).

Dismissal of the surety's declaratory judgment action against the State Highway Commission and the State Highway and Transportation Department was proper where it was barred by the doctrine of sovereign immunity; the surety was seeking to control the action of the state and a ruling on the surety's liability on the performance bond would have determined whether the state could seek damages based upon a breach of the performance bond. Travelers Cas. & Sur. Co. of Am. v. Ark. State Highway Comm'n, 353 Ark. 721, 120 S.W.3d 50 (2003).

Where taxpayers failed to file their protests on additional sales and individual tax assessments imposed against them by the Department of Finance and Administration until after more than a year had passed since said assessments were paid, dismissal of their complaint was warranted. Mac v. Weiss, 360 Ark. 384, 201 S.W.3d 897 (2005).

Trial court did not err in granting contractor's motion to dismiss subcontractor's action, based on a forum selection clause, and in dismissing subcontractor's unjust enrichment claim against property developer because subcontractor's lien was untimely under the 120-day time limit provided in § 18-44-117 and, thus, the lien was not perfected and the complaint could not have been an in rem action; further, once the contractor posted a bond pursuant to § 18-44-118, the lien had been discharged. Servewell Plumbing, LLC v. Summit Contrs., Inc., 362 Ark. 598, 210 S.W.3d 101 (2005).

There was nothing to indicate that insured or insurer intended chiropractor to be a third-party beneficiary to a personal injury protection provision in patient insured's policy; consequently, he did not have standing to bring suit directly against insurer for breach of contract, and, if anything, the chiropractor was merely an incidental beneficiary who did not possess the right to bring a direct action against the insurer. Elsner v. Farmers Ins. Group, 364 Ark. 393, 220 S.W.3d 633 (2005).

Circuit court abused its discretion in dismissing a daughter's complaint against a trustee for lack of standing where she alleged that she was a qualified beneficiary under the family trust terms, and nothing on the face of the complaint suggested that she lacked standing. O'Dell v. Peck, 2017 Ark. App. 532 (2017).

Order dismissing plaintiff's claim under the Arkansas Civil Rights Act (ACRA) arising from the release of juvenile investigative records was modified to reflect that the dismissal was without prejudice; although plaintiff elected to appeal the dismissal, he was not afforded the opportunity to plead the ACRA claim further because the circuit court dismissed the state complaint with prejudice. Duggar v. City of Springdale, 2020 Ark. App. 220, 599 S.W.3d 672 (2020).

Plaintiff's tort claims arising from the release of juvenile investigative records were properly dismissed with prejudice where those same claims were previously dismissed in federal court and were dismissed without prejudice. Duggar v. City of Springdale, 2020 Ark. App. 220, 599 S.W.3d 672 (2020).

Multiple Theories of Action.

A complaint that alleges facts to support a cause of action under more than one theory is not demurrable if a cause of action on at least one theory is stated; thus, where a complaint was sufficient to support an action for the breach of a timber sales contract, it was not open to a motion to dismiss for failure to state facts upon which relief could be granted merely because it also alleged some facts which would support a reformation theory. Williams v. J.W. Black Lumber Co., 275 Ark. 144, 628 S.W.2d 13 (1982).

Nonresident Insurers.

Section 23-63-302, governing service of process on the commissioner of insurance as process agent for an insurer, is deemed superseded by subsection (a) of this rule, which makes no allowance for requiring out-of-state insurers to answer in less time than other out-of-state defendants. In re Amendments to Rules of Civil Procedure, 279 Ark. 470, 651 S.W.2d 63 (1983).

Pendency of Another Action.

Appellate court could not reach the merits of the builder's claim that the city's claim in Benton County should have been dismissed because the builder failed to obtain a ruling from the circuit court on that issue; and Ark. Code Ann. § 16-60-106 dealing with a civil action against a city provided the basis for dismissing the builder's lawsuit as it was an impermissible attempt to litigate the parties' breach-of-contract dispute in Pulaski County rather than in Benton County. Twp. Builders, Inc. v. City of Gravette, 2022 Ark. App. 261, 646 S.W.3d 402 (2022).

Where a wife brought a divorce action in a county chancery court, without knowledge that her husband had filed a divorce action against her in Bolivia, where he was domiciled, the husband could not, under subdivision (b)(8) of this rule, have his wife's suit dismissed based upon the pendency of an action arising out of the same transaction, since that rule only applies where both courts have concurrent jurisdiction, which was not true as between the county circuit court and the Bolivian divorce court. Cotton v. Cotton, 3 Ark. App. 158, 623 S.W.2d 540 (1981).

When a case is dismissed because of pendency of another action, under subdivision (b)(8) of this rule, the pending action may be pursued. Cory v. Mark Twain Life Ins. Corp., 286 Ark. 20, 688 S.W.2d 934 (1985).

Where insurer initiated a second suit, in its own name and pertaining to the same underlying cause of action as the first suit, in which insurer had sought to intervene, prior to the dismissal of the first suit, the subsequent dismissal of the first suit before the trial court determined the sufficiency of defendant's motion to dismiss the second suit precluded the application of subdivision (b)(8) of this rule to second suit because there was no other action pending. Allstate Ins. Co. v. Redman Homes, Inc., 302 Ark. 335, 789 S.W.2d 454 (1990).

Dismissal held proper where appellee filed his complaint in one county while there was pending in the court of appeals an appeal from another county, initiated by appellee, concerning not only the same transaction or occurrence but three issues that were identical, involving alimony, child support, and disposition of marital home. Tortorich v. Tortorich, 324 Ark. 128, 919 S.W.2d 213 (1996).

Subdivision (b)(8) of this rule will not be applied to dismiss an Arkansas circuit court action on the ground that the action is simultaneously pending between the same parties in a federal court. National Bank of Commerce v. Dow Chem. Co., 327 Ark. 504, 938 S.W.2d 847 (1997).

It was error for the circuit court to dismiss a petition for habeas corpus on the basis of the pendency of a Rule 37 petition because the petition for habeas corpus was filed before the Rule 37 petition was filed and because the circuit court was not the sentencing court as to the charges. Armstrong v. Norris, 337 Ark. 169, 989 S.W.2d 157 (1999).

A paternity action filed in juvenile court was subject to dismissal where a divorce proceeding involving the child's mother, in which paternity was raised as an issue, was pending in chancery court. Patterson v. Isom, 338 Ark. 234, 992 S.W.2d 792 (1999).

Arkansas trial court did not err in refusing to dismiss a party's counterclaim under subdivision (b)(8) of this rule for preliminary injunction on the ground that there was a pending federal-court action between the same parties involving the same issues because: (1) subdivision (b)(8) of this rule only prohibited identical cases from proceeding in two different Arkansas courts, and (2) the two cases actually involved different parties and different issues. Potter v. City of Tontitown, 371 Ark. 200, 264 S.W.3d 473 (2007).

In the case of a retaliation claim where the statute of limitations had not run, it was error to dismiss the case with prejudice based on a pending federal lawsuit; this rule only applied when identical claims were pending in two state courts. Federal district courts and state courts were separate jurisdictions, and identical cases between the same parties could proceed simultaneously. Mullen v. Stant USA Corp., 2015 Ark. App. 180, 458 S.W.3d 755 (2015).

Ark. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(8) dismissal was unwarranted where the class action lawsuits at issue had different lead plaintiffs and different participants—there could be only one recovery per aggrieved party—and thus the parties were not the same. In addition, the issue was outside the scope of the appeal where the subsidiaries were appealing class certification under Ark. R. App. P. Civ. 2(a)(9). Seeco, Inc. v. Stewmon, 2016 Ark. 435, 506 S.W.3d 828 (2016).

Taxpayer's previously filed valuation case was no longer pending when the circuit court ruled on a motion to dismiss the taxpayer's refund action because the valuation case had been dismissed; although the taxpayer had appealed the dismissal and that appeal was still pending, an appeal from an order of dismissal does not generally detract from the force of that dismissal order. DeSoto Gathering Co., LLC v. Hill, 2018 Ark. 103, 541 S.W.3d 415 (2018).

Taxpayer's refund suit was not required to be dismissed under subdivision (b)(8) of this rule because the taxpayer's previously filed valuation claim and the refund claim were governed by separate statutory procedures and encompassed different issues. The taxpayer, in its refund action, alleged that it had discovered that a portion of its property had been erroneously assessed because it was either exempt from taxation or was not located in the county, while the taxpayer, in its prior valuation appeal, argued that an incorrect assessment method was used to value its property. DeSoto Gathering Co., LLC v. Hill, 2018 Ark. 103, 541 S.W.3d 415 (2018).

Probate Proceedings.

Where a petition for determination of heirship under § 28-53-101 was filed in July, 1980 and the executor filed his response in September, 1980, beyond the 20-day period provided for in this rule, but before the hearing, it was proper for the probate judge to deny petitioner's motion to strike the response since objections by the defendant are not governed by this rule in probate proceedings and may be made at any time, up to and including the day of the hearing, unless a special order or general rule of the court under § 28-1-110 requires a written objection as a prerequisite to the arguments being heard by the court. King v. King, 273 Ark. 55, 616 S.W.2d 483 (1981).

Reduction of Time to File Answer.

A trial court cannot set a trial date in a plenary proceeding, which would effectively cause a reduction in a party's time to file an answer. Foster v. Whitlow, 4 Ark. App. 319, 630 S.W.2d 559 (1982).

Release.

Release is not a defense mentioned in subdivision (h)(1) of this rule, pertaining to waiver. Trujillo v. TK Martial Arts Acad., LLC, 2015 Ark. App. 606, 474 S.W.3d 519 (2015).

Remand from Federal Court.

Given that a city filed an answer in federal court and then filed an amended answer, albeit outside the 30-day time period, to the specific claims raised in state court, a property owner did not demonstrate an abuse of discretion by the circuit court in declining to grant its renewed motion to strike; even assuming the city was still required to file an answer within 30 days of notice of remand from federal court, it was within the circuit court's discretion to grant the motion to strike. Convent Corp. v. City of North Little Rock, 2021 Ark. 7, 615 S.W.3d 706 (2021).

Removal to Federal Court.

The time period in which responsive pleadings are due in the state court is tolled from the time the federal court removal petition is filed until the case is remanded to the state court. Allstate Ins. Co. v. Bourland, 296 Ark. 488, 758 S.W.2d 700 (1988), cert. denied, 490 U.S. 1006, 109 S. Ct. 1640, 104 L. Ed. 2d 156 (1989), superseded by statute as stated in Hood v. Arkansas School Bd. Ins. Coop., 35 Ark. App. 1, 811 S.W.2d 1 (1991).

While there is no longer a need to comply with state court filing deadlines to avoid default if the case is removed to the federal court, removal is not effected unless the removal documents are filed promptly with the state court. Allstate Ins. Co. v. Bourland, 296 Ark. 488, 758 S.W.2d 700 (1988), cert. denied, 490 U.S. 1006, 109 S. Ct. 1640, 104 L. Ed. 2d 156 (1989), superseded by statute as stated in Hood v. Arkansas School Bd. Ins. Coop., 35 Ark. App. 1, 811 S.W.2d 1 (1991).

Following a remand from federal court, the effect to be given to pleadings filed in the federal court is a matter of state policy and is not subject to federal determination. Allstate Ins. Co. v. Bourland, 296 Ark. 488, 758 S.W.2d 700 (1988), cert. denied, 490 U.S. 1006, 109 S. Ct. 1640, 104 L. Ed. 2d 156 (1989), superseded by statute as stated in Hood v. Arkansas School Bd. Ins. Coop., 35 Ark. App. 1, 811 S.W.2d 1 (1991).

Responsive Pleading.

The arguments raised by the defendant and its directors, i.e., that it was too late to certify a class, were not ones required to be made in the initial responsive pleading. Arkansas County Farm Bureau v. McKinney, 334 Ark. 582, 976 S.W.2d 945 (1998).

Review on Defense Motion.

In considering a motion for judgment on the pleadings for failure to state facts upon which relief can be granted, under subdivision (b)(6) of this rule, the facts alleged in the complaint are treated as true and are viewed in the light most favorable to the party seeking relief. McAllister v. Forrest City St. Imp. Dist., 274 Ark. 372, 626 S.W.2d 194 (1981); Gordon v. Planters & Merchants Bancshares, Inc., 310 Ark. 11, 832 S.W.2d 492 (1992).

Service of Process.

Under this rule, the defense of insufficiency of service of process shall be asserted in the responsive pleading or, at the option of the pleader, it may be made by motion. The defense of insufficiency of service of process is waived if it is neither made by motion under this rule nor included in the original responsive pleading. Lawson v. Edmondson, 302 Ark. 46, 786 S.W.2d 823 (1990).

Plaintiffs' motion to strike and motion for a default judgment against a corporate defendant were denied where the plaintiffs failed to issue an appropriate summons in compliance with Ark. R. Civ. P. 4(d)(5). Thompson v. Potlach Corp., 326 Ark. 244, 930 S.W.2d 355 (1996).

Subdivisions (b)(5) and (h)(1) of this rule clearly set forth the procedure for raising an "insufficiency of service of process" defense. Sublett v. Hipps, 330 Ark. 58, 952 S.W.2d 140 (1997).

Debtor's motion to dismiss a bank's action to collect an unpaid account based on the bank's failure to effect service of the complaint within 120 days of filing, as required by Ark. R. Civ. P. 4(i), or to make a timely application for an extension of time was sufficient to allow the debtor to challenge a default judgment entered against the debtor for failing to respond to the bank's complaint within 20 days of service, as required by subsection (a) of this rule, because the judgment was void and the debtor could challenge the trial court's jurisdiction even
